Newe stirre came newes, that the King of Leco had slaine in battle Basilicke the sonne of the noble Balthazaradan, and destroyed Jerusalem, and all the Countrey round about. And because he had by Gods grace so ouercome contrary to his opinion, he became christened and 60000. men of his sect.

Parliament at London.

The Emperour of Constantinople hearing this, was very glad, and departed out of England, being honoured by the King with precious gifts. A Parliament was holden at London, after the feast of the Epiphanie, in the which Parliament a statute was enacted for Lollards, that wheresoeuer they were knowne to preach their false & corrupt doctrine (so termed at that time) they should be taken & deliuered to the B. of the diocelle, before whom if they would presume stoutly to defend their erro-mions, they should be disgraded, and committed to the secular iurisdiction to be executed which law was first put in practise vpon a Priest named Will. Sawtry, which was burnt in Smithfield, in the presence of many a man. Simon Burley, alias Beuerley was restored in blood and inheritance, except the Lands giuen to the Abbey of Grace, by the Tower of London, to S. Stephens at West, and the Friers at Langley.

The 8. day of Aprll deceased Thomas Beawchampe Earle of Warwicke, and shortly after deceased Iohn Botilsham Bishop of Rochester.

The fiue and twentieth day of July Isabell late wife to K. Richard not yet 12. yeres of age, departed from Douer towards Calcis, & so into France to her father, wel and honorably accompanied. Where when she was arriued, Huguenell that had beene sent for her into England, aduertised the comissioners then remaining at Boloigne. She was conueyed from Calcis by the Englishmen that accompanyed her to Lalingham, where the Earle of Saint Paul met her, and the French Ambassadours: she alighted from her horse beneath Lalingham, the French Ladies came to her, and brought her to the Chappell, before the Ambassadours of both Realmes, and there Sir Henry Percy protested, that the King of England his master had sent her to be deliuered to her father cleare of all bonds of Marriage or otherwise, and that he would take it on his soule, that she was found and intire, euen as she was the same day she was deliuered to King Richard, and if any would say to the contrary he was ready to proue it against him by Combat, but the Earle of S. Paul, saying hee beleeued it to be true, the Lord Percy take her by the hand and deliuered her vnto the Earle, and the Commissioners of France deliuered certaine letters of acquitall.

K. Henry escaped great danger. Tho. Wal. Additions to pol.

Owen Glendouerdew with his Welchmen did much harme to the Englishmen, and returned without receiuing any harme.

There was found in the Kings bedclothes an yron with three sharpe pikes, slender and round standing vpright, laid there by some traytor, that when the K. should haue laid him downe, he might haue thrust himselfe vpon them.

This time was vsed exceeding pride in garments, gownes with deepe and broad sleeues commonly called poke-sleeues, the seruants ware them as well as their maisters, which might well haue beene called the receptacles of the deuill, for what they stole, they hid in their sleeues, whereof some hung downe to the feete, and at least to the knees, full of cuts, and tagges, whereupon were made these verses.

An. reg. 3. Now hath this land little neede of Broomes, to sweepe away the filth out of the street:
T. Hoccline. Sen side sleeues of pennilesse groomes, will it vp licke be it dry or weete.
O England stand vpright on thy feete, so foule a waste in so simple a degree:
Banish, or it shall sore repent thee.

The Conduit vpon Cornehill in London was made, which before time had beene a prison, called the Tun in Cornehill, whereunto, night-walkers that were taken in suspition of felony, or other trespasses were committed.

From the Feast of the Epiphany til the midst of Aprill appeared a blazing Star, first betwixt the East and the North, and last of all putting fiery beames toward the North, foreshewing peraduenture the effusion of blood, about the parts of Wales and Northumberland.

1402. Owen Glendouerdew with his Welchmen, wasted the lands of the said Reignald Gray, tooke him prisoner, and slew many of his people.

Certaine men affirmed King Richard to be aliue, and that he should shortly shew himselfe openly, and reward them that were faithfull vnto him. But after a certaine Priest was taken at Maidwicke, who had written the names of many, which were the Authors of these troubles, both the hope and feare of this conspiracie vanished. The Priest was drawne hanged and quartered. Also Walter Waldocke late Prioure of Land a Priorye in Leicestershire, because he confessed he knew euill against the King and did conceale it, was likewise hanged and headed. Moreouer certaine gray Friers were taken, of the which one Richard Frisby Doctour of Diuinitie, being asked what he would doe if King Richard were present, answered, that he would fight in his quarrell against any man, euen to the death, wherefore hee was condemned, drawne, and hanged in his Religious habite and weede.

Conspiracie against K. Henry.

A Frost frozen.

At Danebury in Esser, vpon Corpus Christi day, the deuill appeared in likenesse of a gray Frier, who entring the Church, raged infolently, to the great feare of the Parishioners: and the same houre with a tempest of whirlewind and thunder, the toppe of the Steeple was broken downe, and halfe the Chauncell scattered abroad.

The diuell appeared in likenes of a Frier.

Shortly after Sir Roger Claringdon knight a bastard sonne of Edward the blacke Prince, and with him a Squire and a Yeoman were beheaded, and eight gray Friers hanged and beheaded at London, and two at Leicester, all which had published King Richard to be aliue. All Priories alians with their Possessions were resumed and seized into the Kings hands, except such houses as were conventuals.

Owen Glendouerdew, with a company of Welchmen inuaded all the Shires that bordered neere vnto him, whereof Sir Edmond Mortimer with many Knights and Esquires went out to encounter with Owen; stronger then he was of the Country; but when it came to martiall affaires, their owne Archers turned their handes against them whom they should haue defended. There was slaine a bone eleuen hundred of our men. Sir Edmond Mortimer was taken, and the Welch women, when the battaile was done lying the dead carcasses to shamefully to be spoken, would not suffer them to be buried without great ransome. This battaile was fought at Prlate in Wales. The K. was not hastie to purchase the deliuerance of the Earle of March because his title to the Crowne was well knowne, but suffered him to remaine in prison.

K. Henry went into Wales to pursue Owen Glendouerdew.

The king went with a great power into Wales to pursue Owen Glendouerdew, where hee profited nothing, but lost much, for the Welshmen conueyed themselues into vnknowne places: wherefore the king constrained by necessitie, returned into England, after he had spoyled and burnt the countrey.

Edmond of Langley Duke of Yorke deceased, and was buried at Langley, with his wyfe, more vnto his wife daughter to king Peter of Spaine.

The Scots entred England.

The same time the Scottes cruelly entred into England, for they supposed all the Lords beyond Humber to be occupied in the parts of Wales: but the Earles of Northumberland, Henry Percy, and his son Henry with the Earle of Dunbar, (that a good while agone hauing forsaken the Scottes, had sworne to be true to the King of England) with a number of armed men and plentie of archers, sodainly came to resist the Scottes, as they would haue returned home, after they had spoyled and brent the Countrey: but now vpon a sodaine their way was forestalled, so that they must needes abide and take a place to fight vpon: they chose therefore a mountaine neere to the towne of Wooler, called Halydowne hill, in the which they place themselues with their armed men and archers, which when our men beheld, leauing the way in which they stood against the Scots, they clime the hill that stood ouer against the Scots, and without delay of time, our Archers placed in the valley, set their arrowes against the Scottes battell, that they might by some meanes force them to come downe: on the other side, the Scottish archers let flie at our men, who yet after they felt the grieuous waight, & as it had beene a shower or tempest of arrowes, shot by the Englishmen, they stedde. The Earle Dowglas perceiuing his men so to flie (for he was their generall leader) take his speare, and manfully with a multitude came downe the hill, trusting doubtlesse in his armour, and armour of his complices that had beene three peeces in making, and forced himselfe to run vpon the archers, which when the archers saw, they stepped backe, and shotte so fiercely, that they pierced the armed mens bodies, stroke through their Helmets, riued their speares, and rent their armour with light aboe. E. Douglas himselfe was wounded in fiue places, the residue of the Scots that were not come beside the hill, turning backe frō the arrowes, stedde away, but their flight nothing auayled them whilst the archers followed them, that they were compelled to yelde themselues. Earle Douglas also was taken, and many drowned in the riuer Tweed, whilest they knew not the foordes, to the number of fiue hundred (as was said.) In this battell no Lord, nor Knight, no esquire, gaue any stroke to the enemies, but onely God gaue the victorie to the English archers, the Lords and armed men being onely lokers on.

Mortell at Halidowne hill.

That day the flowre of the Scottish Chiualry was taken, to wit, the Earle Dowglas, Murdake the eldest sonne of the Duke of Albanie, that was heyre apparant to the Realme of Scotland: the Earles of Murrey, Angus, and Orkeney, the Lords of Mountgomery, Erskeyne and Gram, with many other knights to the number of fourescore, besides Esquires, and yeomen, whose number was not knowne. There were slaine of Barons, the Lord Gordon, the Lord Iohn of Swinton that was false to both the realmes, &c. This battell was fought on the fourteenth of September.

Edmond Mortimer which before was taken by Owen Glendouerdew, now professed to take Owens part against K. Henry, and did contract marriage with the Daughter of the said Owen. An. reg. 4.

In the month of May died Katherine dutches of Lancaster, & is buried in Lincolne Minster.

Parliament at Kordon.

In a Parliament at London, which began the morrow after Michaelmas day, and lasted seuen weekes, there was granted to the King a tenth and a halfeof the clergie, a tenth of the boroughtownes, and a fiftenth of the communs through the Realme.

1403. K. Henry marrieth the Lady Ioane de Nauarre.

The messengers that had bin sent for Ioane, late wife to Iohn of Mountford Duke of Britaine returned with her in to England, and landed at Falmouth in Cornewall. The King met with her at Winchester the 7. of Februarie, where they were married in the Church of S. Swithen.

The 26. of Februarie, she was crowned at Westminster.

Monstrous sights at Bedford.

In the summer following, by the Townes of Bedford and of Bickleiward, monsters were seene oft-times mornings and euenings to come out of the woods, vnder diuers colours in the likenesse and similitude of men of warre, which met one with another, and seemed to fight cruell battels, which although they that were a farre off might see, yet they that were nere hand could not find, which thing deceiued many that coueted to approch and come nere.

Henry Percy the younger, did sodainly shew himselfe to be the Kings enemie, vnto whom ioyned Thomas Percy Earle of Worcester, vncle to the said Henry: and to make their conspiracy excusable, they did write vnto the shires about, that they pretended nothing against the allegiance nor fidelitie which they ought to the King, neither to gather to any other end an armie, but onely for the sauing of their persons, and for the better gouernment of the commonwealth, because the payments and talkes granted to the K. for the safe custodie of the realme, were put to such vses as they ought not to be, and were vnprofitably consumed and wasted.

Moreouer, they complained: that because of the cruell slaunders which their enemies had made of them, they durst not personally appeare in the K. presence, vntil the prelates and Barons had intreated for them, that they might bee he permitted to purge themselues before the K. and be lawfully iudged by their peres, so that many that saw these letters, did praise their diligence, and extoll their fidelity towards the common-wealth. But the King being disquieted with these doings, that he might appease the communaltie, he wrote to them, that he marueiled much, that seeing the Earle of Northumberland, and Henry his son had receiued the most part of the payments and sums granted to him by the clergy and communaltie, for the defence of the marches of Scotland, what occasion they had to make such manifest slaunders, &c. But the young Henry Percy putting his confidence in the aide of Owen Glendouerdew, and Edmond Mortimer Earle of March with the Welchmen, and men of Cheshire, published that king Richard was aliue, and was with them, whom if any man would see, they should without delay come in armour vnto the Castle of Leicester, which declaration made diuers variable motions in the hearts of many, and caused them to wauer.

Shrewsburie besieged.

King Henry considering all things wisely, gathered together as many as he could, & came sodainly into the parts where the rebels kept their rage, and when they saw vpon a sodaine the Kings banner, and was euen ready to haue scaled the towne of Shrewsbury, he straightwayes desisted from the assault of the towne, & said to his men, we must now needes turne our weapons vpon them that come against vs: ye see the Kings standert, neither can we, though we would, scape any flatting-hole: stand to it manfully therefore, for this day shall either bring vs all to promotion and honor, if we ouercome, or else if we be ouercome, it shall deliuer vs from the Kings malice. For it is a more comly thing to die in battell for the common-wealth, then after battel to die by the sentence of condemnation by the enemie: and with that, 14000. of the best men that were with Henry, made vow and promise to stand by him so long as breath would serue, & they take the field that was commodious for them, & the K. and his men law in the field right against them. The bowmen of H. Percy began the battel, whose arrowes fell not vpon the ground, but vpon the bodies of the Kings soldiers, and the K. Archers shot as fiercely against their enemies, so that on both sides many were slaine, and many thousands fled, thinking the King had beene slaine, but the Earle of Dunbar withdrew the K. from the place that he stood in, which was a good turne for him, for the aforesaid Henry Percy & E. Dowglas the Scot (then whom was neuer man more stout) raged so that the K. standert was ouerthrowne, and those about it slaine, among whom was slaine, Edmond E. of Stafford, Sir Walter Blunt the K. standert bearer, Sir Nicholas Langford, sir Iohn Cokayne, sir Iohn Caluerly, sir Iohn Massy, Baron of Podington, sir Hugh Mortimer, sir Iohn Clifton, and the two Worthen Nicholas and Robert Generels, with many other Knights & Gentlemen, and of the Commons on both sides about 500. slaine. Henry the Prince was wounded in the face with an arrow. In the meane season Henry Percy whilst he went before his men in the battell, pricking vpon his enemies, was sodainly slaine, which being knowne, the Kings enemies fled, but the E. Dowglas was taken, & also Thomas Percy E. of Worcester, with Sir Richard Vernon, and the Baron of Kinderton, and many other were taken. This battell was fought on Mary Magdalens euen nere vnto Shrewsbury, in a place called Oldfield, alias, Bulfield, not farre from a place called Barwike. On the Monday following, were condemned and beheaded at Shrewsbury, the Earle of Worcester, the Baron of Kinderton, and Sir Richard Vernon. The body of Henry Percy was deliuered to the Lord of Furniuale to be buried, but the King caused the same body to be taken vp, and to be reposed in twelue tunne Millions in the Towne of Shrewsbury, there to be kept with armed men, and afterward to be beheaded and quartered, commanding his head and quarters to be carried vnto diuers cities of the kingdome.

T. Walsingham.

The E. of Northumberland with a strong power was comming toward his son and his brother, (as men thought) ot at the least towards the King; but the Earle of Westmerland, and Robert Waterton, had gathered a great army, and had entred on their way to wrste him sodainely, but for taking none of them both to be his friends, returned vnto the castle of Warkworth.

When all thing were set in a stay at Shrewsbury the King went to wards Yorke, where, when he was setled, he sent to the Earle of Northumberland, commanding him to dismisse his company, and to come to him, and the Earle came to him on the morrow after S. Laurence day, but the King receiued him not friendly, but as one that sued for pardon, and pardoning him of his life, committed him to safe custodie.

Plimouth spoyled by the Britons. An. Reg. 5.

The Britons Armorikes, the Lord of Caskeis being their leader, inuaded the towne of Plimmouth, spoyled and brent it and went their way free, but immediately the westerne nauie, vnder the consent of William Wilford Esquire in the coast of Briton, take fortie ships laden with pyon, oyle, sope & wine of Rochell, to the number of a thousand tunne, and in returning backe againe, he brent 40 ships, & at Penarch the said William arrined with his men, and burned Townes and Lordships the space of fiue leagues, and set the towne of S. Mathew on fire, and their Villes about the said towne.

1404. French men inuade the Ile of Wight.

A little before Christmasse the French-men came into the Ile of Wight, boasting that they would keepe their Christmas there, and when a thousand of the French-men were entred into the Iland, and diuiding flockes of Cattell toward the Sea, sodainly there came vpon them a company of the Iland men, that forced them to leaue their pray behinde them, and to get them gone (with shame pnough to their ships, with no small losse of their men.

Parliament at Lon on and a great assaile.

In a parliament holden at London after the Octaues of the Epiphany, the Earle of Northumberland was restored to his former estate and dignity. And in this Parliament, was granted vnto the King an vnaccustomed taske, very heauy and painfull for the inhabitants, the manner of which taske, the granters thereof would haue to be kept secret for euermore: and vnder the condition only it was granted, that it should not be any example to them that should come after, and that there should remaine no record thereof, but the same forthwith to be burnt.

Frenchmen come to the Isle of Wight.

The Frenchmen, about that time, came before the Ile of Wight, with a great Nauy, and sent certaine of their men, to demand in the name of King Richard, and of Quéene Isabell, a tribute, or subsidy of the inhabitants: who answered, that King Richard was dead, and the Quéene, sometime his wife, was sent home to her parents, without condition of any tribute: but if the French mens minde were to fight, they willed them to come vp, and no man should let them for the space of fiue houres to refresh themselues, but when that time was expired, they should haue battell giuen them, which, when the Frenchmen heard, they went away and did nothing.

Dertmouth spoiled by the French.

The Lord of Cassells in Brittaine, arrested at Blackepoole, two mile out of Dertmouth with a great Nauy, where of the principall people whom he euer beheld, he was slaine. There were taken that day, three Lords, and twenty knights of name, and the vplandish people presenting their captiues vnto the King, returned with their purses full of gold.

In the moneth of Aprill, the Clergy granted vnto the King a tenth.

Owen Glendowerdew.

All the summer following, Owen Glendouerdew, and his Welshmen, rob, burne, and destroy the countries adioining vnto them: hee tooke many captiues, and slew many English men: he laid fiue certaine Castles that he had taken, and some he kept for his owne defence.

The Flemmings and Brittaines take certaine ships of ours, laden with merchandizes, and slew, or hanged all the Mariners.

The Countesse of Oxford reported K. Richard to be aliue.

The old Countesse of Oxford, mother to Robert de Vere, Duke of Ireland (who, as we said before, died at Louaine) did cause such as were familiar with her, to bruite throughout all the parts of Ester, that King Richard was aliue, and that he should shortly come and challenge his old estate and dignity. Shee caused many hearts of siluer, and some of gold to be made for badges, such as King Richard was wont to beare on his knights, Esquires, and friends, that distributing them in the Kings name, thee might the sooner allure the Knights, and other valiant men of the country, to be at her will and desire.

William Serle faigneth King Richards death to be aliue, and to haue returned vnexpected.

Also, the same and bruite which daily was blased abroad, by one William Serle, some-time seruant of King Richards chamber, that the same King Richard was in Scotland, and tarryed with a power of French & Scottishmen, caused many to beléeue that he was aliue. This William Serle had forged a priuie Seale in the said Richards name, and had sent diuers comfortable letters vnto such as were familiar with K. Richard, by which meanes, many gaue the greater credit to the Countesse, insomuch, that some religious Abbots of that country did giue credit vnto her tales, who afterward were taken at the Kings commandement and imprisoned, because they did beléeue and giue credit to the Countelle in this behalfe, and the Countesse had all her goods confiscate, and was committed to close prison: and William Serle, was drawn from Pomfret, through the chiefest Cities of England, and put to death at London.

About the feast of S. Iohn Baptist, at the Kings commandement, the Earle of Northumberland came to Pomfret, and brought with him his Nephewes and Nephewes sonnes, by which doing he mitigated the mindes of many which thought that hee had giuen the young men counsell to rebell. There came also with him Willi. Clifford knight, who brought with him that William Serle K. Richards chamberlaine before spoken of, whom by a wile he had apprehended, by which doing, the K. pardoned him, for that he had kept the Castle of Barwike against the Kings will and pleasure.

An. reg. 6. The Lay-mans Parliament at Couentry.

About the feast of Saint Faith, the King called a parliament at Couentry, & sent proclame to the Sheriffes that they should chose no Knights nor burgesses that had any knowledge in the Lawes of the Realme, by reason whereof it was called the Lay-mens Parliament. These picked-out Knights and Burgesses could deuise no other way to releéue the Kings lacke of money, but to depriue the Cleargie of their temporall lands and goods; by this occasion ginen, arose great alteration and variance between the clergie and the laitie. The knights affirming that they had oftentimes going forth with the King against rebels and enemies, not onely spent largely their goods, with, and for the King, but also had set their bodies in great danger and ieopardies, where in the meane season the clearkes sate idle at home, and helped the King neuer a whit. But Tho. Arundell Arch-bishop of Canterbury made answere, that the cleargie did alwayes giue the King as much as the lay people did, considering that they did oftner giue the King tenths, then the laytie gaue fifteenes. And moreouer, that more of their tenants did serue the King in his warres, then the tenants of the Laytie. And besides this, they prayed day and night for the prosperitie of the King, and of all them that faithfully serued him.

The Knights and Burgesses, require the temporall goods to be taken from the Clergie.

Tho. Arundell Arch-bishop of Canterbury his answer to the Burgesses.

And when the speaker of the parliament named Iohn Cheyney, said with a loude voyce and angry countenance, that he little regarded the prayers of the Church, the Arch-bishop of Canterbury answered: Oh (quoth he) now I perceiue plainly to what end the fortune of this Realme will come, when the Suffragues of the Church are excluded and little set by wherewith the goodhead is wont to be appeased: surely the kingdome neuer continueth firme & stable, ble, that is boyd of prayers deuotion: notwithstanding, thou which settest at naught the religion of the Cleargie, thinke not without punishment to take away the possessions of the Church, for if the Arch-bishop of Canterbury liue, thou shalt haue euill taking of any thing that is his. Then the Arch-bishop considering that the K. did winke at these things, rose vp, and kneéled downe before the K. desiring him to consider how gratiously, and by Gods fauor, hée had attained the kingdome, that he would consider his first promise, which was that hee would preserue vnto euery man their right and title so far as lay in him. He also willed him to remember the oath which hee voluntarily made, which was, that he would honour and defend the Church, and would cherish and maintaine the ministers thereof: he required him to consider the danger and dishonour of breaking an oth, wherefore he desired him to permit and suffer the Church to enioy the priuiledges and liberties, which in time of his predecessors it did enioy, and to feare that K. by whom all Kings do reigne. When the Arch-bishop had said these and like words, the King commanded him to goe againe to his seate, and said, that his intent and purpose was to leaue the Church in as good state or better then he found it. And then the Arch bishop speaking to the Knights and Burgesses, said: You, and such like as you be, haue giuen such counsell vnto our King and to his predecessors, to confiscate the goods and lands of the Cities which the French-men and Normans did possesse in England, and said, that by them he should heape vp great riches, as moued they were worth many thousands of gold. Notwithstanding, it is most true that the King at this day is not the richer thereby of halfe a marke; for you haue extorted, or at the least begged them out of his hands, and haue appropriated the said goods vnto your selues, so that it may be conceiued that your request to haue our temporalties, is not for the Kings profite, but for your owne couetousnesse: for without doubt, if the King (as God forbid he should) fulfill your wicked purpose, he should not bée one farthing the richer the next yeare following: and surely, I will sooner let my head be cut off, then that the Church should be destitute of the least right that pertaineth to it.

The Arch-bishop to the King.

Against to the Knights and Burgesses.

The Knights of the parliament hearing this saying of the Archbishop, and seeing the constancy of their Metropolitan, held their peace, but yet perséuered in minde to haue their purpose: which the Archbish. perceiuing (hauing his eye on each side to marke what was done) laboured to disappoint their doings, that he wanne the fauour of certaine of the temporall Lords to assist him, who constantly auouched by their consents, that the Church should neuer be spoyled of the temporalties. And here they acquite the Arch-bishop and Prelates, one pleasure for another, wich they had done for them before. When the commons in this Parliament required that all such lands and reuenues as sometime belonged vnto the crowne, and had beene giuen away, either by the King, or by his predecessors King Edward or Richard should againe be restored vnto the Crowne. Vnto which request the Arch-bishop and other the Prelates would in no wise condescend: and so it came to passe, that there was no more mention made afterwards of any exactions of the Temporalties But contrariwise, the knights of the Parliament, who had shewed themselues so importunate in that errour, confessed vnto the Arch-bishop their faulte and malice, desiring him to forgiue them.

The Answer of the Arch-bishop.

Moreouer, they gaue him thanks, for that through his stout courage the Church at that time recouered strength, reciting the saying of the Ethnike, That a vnder an hard Prince, and an euill time, art bold to doe good. Besides many things that were granted to the King in this Parliament, the Lay-people granted him two fifteenes, vpon condition, that the Lord Furnivall should receiue all the money, and see it to bee spent in the Kings warres.

Two fifteens granted to the King.

Also the Letters Patents that were giuen to sundry persons, for yeerely reuenewes by King Edward, and King Richard, were called in again, the knights of the parliament to adiudging it, although it redounded to the Kings dishonour. The Cleargy granted the King a tenth and a halfe.

A tenth and a halfe granted to the King.

The same time such abundance of Water brake ouer the banks in Kent sodainly, as was neuer séene the like in these parties, whereby were drowned beasts and cattell without number, neither did England onely bewaile their losses, but also Zealand, Flaunders and Holland, sustained the like by the great excesse of waters.

Great waters & floods.

This yeare dyed William Wickam Bishop of Winchester, by whose charges and trauell, the Cleargie of England was much increased, for he builded a Noble Colledge in Oxford, for the increase of learning, where hee placed the warden and his company, to the number of lxx. besides children, seruants, and ten Priests, to héepe daily seruice, endowing the said company with sufficient lands.

William Wickham Bishop of Winchester, his College in Oxford.

He began the foundation of a new Colledge at Winchester, and in fiue yeres finished the same, where he placed the like number of Schollers to learne their Grammar, and other principles, to be sent afterward to his other College at Oxford. These two Colledges are called, the new Colledges, dedicated to our blessed Lady.

His colledge in Winthester.

He builded the great body of the Church of Saint Swithens in Winchester, where the sermons are made, and where his bodie is entered, a very Princely worke: neither did he for all this diminith any thing of his ordinary houshold charges, and fed (as the writing ensueth) and cloathed the poore. He deceased at the age of lxx. yéres. He died rich, for beside that he gaue to his kinsfolke and to the poore, he gaue somewhat to euery Church in his Dioces. Hee gaue many things to the King, and to his owne seruants, and to his Colledges: neither doe I doubt but that is that the Lord is now with God, who I beseech to raise vp many like Bishops in England.

William Wickham borne at Wickham in Hampshire.

This William Wickham was borne at Wickham in Hampshire, of which place hee tooke his surname, I was of some called Long, because he was a tall man: one maister Woodale of Wickham brought him vp at Scholes, where he learned his Grammar, and to write faire. After this, the Constable of Winchester castle, at that time a great ruler in Hampshire, got Peter and Wickham of Wodall, and made them his Clerkes. Edward the third comming to Winchester castle, liked Wickham, & tooke him to seruice, and vnderstanding that he had minde to be a priest, made him first Parson of S. Maruins in London, and then Deane of S. Martins le Grand, and then Arch-deacon of Buckingham. He made him also surueyor of his buildings, as of Windsore, Dumbojew in Kent, & other places. After this, for preferment to be bearer of his great Seale, maister of the Wards and Forrests, and Treasurer of the Kings reuenues in France, Arch-deacon of Lincolne, then Bishop of Winchester, Chancellour and Treasurer of England.

Banishment of Wickham out of the Realme.

¶ This banishment out of the Realme whereof some haue written, I find no mention therof in Thomas Walsingham, Henry Knitton, and other Authors at that time liuing, nor more of his troubles, but only that by meanes of I. of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster, his goods were by Edward the third confiscate, and giuen to Richard Earle of Arundell and Surrey, and to Richard the sonne of the blacke Prince, in An. 1376. and by the meanes of Alice Pierce were againe restored to the said Bishop in the yeare next following, to wit, in Anno 1377 as more at large in those Annales I haue set downe: wherefore it is manifest, that if he had sustained the losse, all his goods, and seuen yeares banishment (as some haue fabled) it should haue beene hard for him, or rather impossible to haue bestowed so many great workes to perfection, as the world can witnesse to haue beene done at his charges. To him in that Bishopricke, succeeded Henry Beaufort, Sonne to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, by his wife Katherine Swinford, he was translated from Lincolne to Winchester, & Philip Repyngdon Abbot of Leicester, was at the Kings request made Bishop of Lincolne.

His goods confiscate, and restored to him a-gaine.

Henry Beaufort Bishop of Winchester.

The King kept his Christmas at Eltham in Kent.

About the Feast of Saint Valentine, the leaues of the Castle at Marth were taken out of the Castle of Windsore, and led away into Holland to Owen Glendourdew, but shortly after were recouered againe. The Smith that had the keyes, by the which they that conueyed them, got into them, had first his hands, and then his head cut off.

The Lady Spencer, Sister to the Duke of Yorke, and widow of Thomas Lord Spencer, beheaded at Bristow, being apprehended and committed to prison, accused her brother the Duke of Yorke to be chiefe Author in stealing away of the Earle of Marches sonnes, wherefore the said Duke was kept by Sir John Pelham in the Castle of Pemsey till the next Parliament.

After the feast of the Purification of our Lady, the King assembled his Barons at London, to treat of the gouernment of the Realme and to haue ayd of money to be giuen, but the Nobles would not at that time obey his request. In the Lent following therefore, the King caused the Cleargie and the Barons to assemble at S. Albones for the matter aforesaid, but by reason the Nobles stroue against him, there was nothing done, and so departed on Palme Sunday.

About the 19. of March, in a fight betwixt the English-men and Welch-men, the Sonne of Owen Glendourdew was taken, and 1500. with him were taken or slaine.

Conspiracy against King Henry by the Arch-bishop of Yorke and other.

Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, Richard Scroope Arch bishop of Yorke, Thomas Moubray Earle Marshall, Thomas L. Bardolph and other, conspiring against King Henry, assembled together the Citizens of Yorke, and many other, to stand with them for the commoditie of the Realme. And to animate the commons to be readier vnto this businesse, they set Articles vpon the doores of the Monasteries and Churches of the same Citie, written in English against the King, because he had put downe King Richard, offering themselues for those Articles to liue and dye, which caused great number of people to resort to them: but Ralph Neuell Earle of Westmerland that was not farre off, together with John Duke of Lancaster, the Kinges Sonne, being informed of these things, gathered an armie with speede to goe against the Arch-bishops company, but all was in vaine, for the Arch-bishops power was farre greater then theirs, whereuppon the Earle of Westmerland sent messengers, to enquire of the Archbishop the cause of so great an assembly in armour, contrary to the K. peace: whereunto the Arch-bishop answered, that he tooke nothing in hand against the Kings peace, and he was in armour, and munited with men onely for feare of the King whom he could not safely come vnto to speake: but his purpose (he said) was good and commodious both for the King and the realme, if happily they would know it: & then he shewed a Scedule, in which the Articles were contained, which when the E. of Westmerland had read, he with good and countenance praised the Bishops holy and vertuous intent, and promised, that he and his would prosecute the same with the Archbishop.

The Arch-bishop being glad of this, beleeued the Earles words, and perswaded the Earle Marshall, being vnwilling thereunto, to goe with him to a place appointed to talke together to whom he p with like number came, and the writting with the Articles was read ouer: straightway the Earle and they that were with him him gaue their assent to these Articles: then said the Earle being subtiller than the rest, behold the labour that we haue taken in hand is come to such end as we would haue it, and the people hath now beene long in armour, let some of your men beare word vnto the people to goe their way home, and to lay downe their armour, and euery man to fall to his occupation and accustomed labour: in the meane season, we, in token of concord will drinke together, that the people on both sides shall see it, and without delay, after they had taken each other by the hands, a Knight was sent on the Archbishops behalfe, to beare word to the people that it was peace, and to command euery man to lay downe their armour, and to goe to their owne home.

The people beholding signes of peace, and the Lords drinking together, being wearied with the vnaccustomed trauell of warre, turned the reines of their bridles homewards, and so it came to passe, that when the people of the Archbishops side went away, the number of the aduersaries increased, as before it was appointed, and the Arch-bishop did not perceiue that he was betrayed, vntill such time as the Earle arrested him: he arrested the Marshall also, and many other with him, to all which it was promised that they should haue no harme, but that promise was not kept, for both the Archbishop and the Earle Marshall were brought to Pontfract to the King, who in the meane while was aduanced thither with his power, and from thence he went to Yorke, whither the prisoners were also brought: others say that the King sojourning at Bishops Thorpe, the Archbishop was brought thither, where Sir William Fulford Knight learned in the lawes, sitting on an high stage in the hall, gaue iudgement that the Arch-bishop should be beheaded: he was therefore set on an ill fauoured Jade, with his face toward the horse taile, and carryed with great scorne and shame enough, to a field there beside, where with fiue strokes his head was smitten off on the morrow after Whitsonday: with him were condemned and executed the Earle Marshall, Sir John Lamplough, and Sir Robert Plompton. After the King had ransomed and otherwise punished by grieuous fines the Cittizens of Yorke, he departed from Yorke with an army of 17000. fighting men furnished with all prouision, marching northward against the Earle of Northumberland. At his comming to Durham the L. Hastings, the L. Falconbrige, Sir Iohn Colvile of the Dale, and Sir Io. Griffith, being conuicted of the conspiracie, were beheaded. The E. of Northumberland perceiuing the K. intent, got himselfe to Berwicke with 300. horse, and from thence into Scotland. The K. being bent against the Earle of Northumberland, went to Berwike, from whence the Earle fled into Scotland, and the Lord Bardolph with him, whom Dauid, Lord Fleming the Scot received in alliance. The K. vnderstanding that the Earle was fled, he commanded them in the Castle to render it vnto him, which when they refused to doe, the K. caused a great gun to be shot, which ouerthrew part of a Tower, whereupon they of the Castle gaue ouer, and submitted themselues to the King, who caused some of them to be beheaded, and the residue to be sent to prisons. After this, the Castle of Alnewike, and the rest of the Castles were with small adoe restored to his hands: with which successe the K. being incouraged, went straight into Wales, where contrariwise nothing prospered with him, wherefore he returned losing Chariots, Carts, and Wagons, to the number of fiftie, with his treasure, so that comming backe to Worcester, he sent for the Archbishop and Bishops, and declared to them his mis-fortune, desiring them to helpe him: to whom the Archbishop answered, that hee would talke with the Cleargie in that matter. In the meane season, the French-men came to succour the Welsh-men with 140. ships: they landed in Milford hauen, hauing lost almost all their horses for lacke of fresh water. The Lord Barkley and Hen. Pay burned fiftene of those ships in the same Hauen. These French-men besieged the Towne of Carmarden, and take it, graunting to the inhabitants all their moueable goods, and to goe whither they would.

Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe, by the counsell of David Fleming fled into Wales, for hee had declared to them, that the Scottes had resolued to deliuer them vnto their owne King, in exchange for other prisoners: and for this doing of David Fleming, the trayterous Scots slew him, and stirred such a ciuill warre amongst themselues, that in the end they were constrained to request truce for a yere, which when they had obtained, the Scots sent James King of the sonne of Robert King of Scots, being but six yeres old, towards France, there to be brought vp, and to be instructed in the pleasant eloquence of the French tongue, whom certaine Mariners of Cloe in Norfolke take on the Seas, and with him a Bishop, and the Earle of Orkney, to whom his father had committed him (and they brought him into England, and deliuered him to the K. who forthwith burst out into a laughter, and said, surely the Scots might haue sent him to mee, for I can speake French. The Bishop escaped and fled, but the Earle of Orkeney, and the said James the young lad, was sent to the Tower of London, where he remained Prisoner till the seconde yere of Henry the first, which was about 18. yeres.

This summer through corruption of the ayre so great a Plague was shed vpon mens bodies as was not seene the like in many yeres in this land, so that men might say. Pestilence.

The South winds warme did blow with heat pestiferous,
And pestilence did beare great rule in Cities populous.

For at London in short while it consumed about 30000. men and women, and in the countrey Townes great mortalitie fell among the Husbandmen, so that great housholds died cleane vp, and the houses were emptied.

In the time of this pestilence the King durst not come nere to the Citie of London, wherefore being at the Castle of Leedes in Kent, he departing from thence, take shipping at Quinborow in the Ile of Sheppey, to saple ouer into Offer, and so to goe to Platley, there to passe the time til the mortality were ceased.

But as the K. was on the sea, certaine French Pirates which lay lurking at the Thames mouth to watch for some prey, got knowledge of the K. passage, and thereupon, as he was in the midst of his course, they entred amongst his Fléte, and take foure vessels next to the Kings ship, and in one of the same vessels Syr Thomas Rampton, the Kings bee-Chamberlaine, with all his chamber stuffe and apparell. They followed the King so nere, that if his ship had not bene swift, he had landed sooner in France, than in Essex: But such was his good hap that hee escaped, and arrived at his appointed Port.

Bishops translated.

About the fifteenth day of August deceased Sir Robert Knowles Knight, at his Manno of Sconethorpe in Norfolke, he was brought to London, and there honourably buryed by the Lady Constance his wife, in the white Fryers Church which he had newly re-edified and builded. Sir Robert Knowles. John Leiland.

This Sir Robert Knowles hade beene a most valiant captaine in the warres of France during the raigne of Edward the third, and Richard the second, whose force the Realme of France both felt and feared, so did the Duke dome of Byptaine, and all the people from hence to Spaine. Of him in his life were made Register of Bermondsey. verses in Latine, which may bee Englished thus.

O Robert Knowles, most worthy of fame,
By thy prowesse France was made tame:
Thy manhood made tye Frenchmen to yeeld
By dint of sword in towne and field.

College & Hospitall at Pontfrait.

This Sir Robert Knowles founded in the Towne of Pontfrait a Colledge to the honour of the holy Trinitie, with an Hospitall toyned thereunto. In the which Colledge was placed a maister, and fiue or seauen Priests, and in the Hospitall 13. poore men and women. He was once minded to haue made this Colledge at his Manno of Sconthorpe, but at the request of Constance his wife (a woman of meane birth, and sometime of a dissolute life afore her mariage) he turned his purpose, and made made it in the very place of Pontfrait, where she was borne, endowing the same with 180. pound land by yere. He also builded the faire new great bridge at Rochester, ouer the riuer of Medway, with a Chappell and a Chaunterp at the east end thereof. In the which Chappell was sometime a Table hanging, wherein was noted the benefactors to that Bridge, as followeth.

A great part of this bridge was builded by Iob. Lord Cobham.

Thomas Boucher Cardinall.
John Morton Archbishop.
Henry Chicheley Arch-bishop.
Thomas Langley Bishop of Durham.
Iohn Langedon Bishop of Rochester.
Thomas Arundell Arch-bishop.
Sir Iohn Cornwall Lord Fanhap.
Richard Whittington Maior of London.
William Cromer Draper, Maior of London.
Geffrey Boleine Maior of London.
John Darby Draper, Alderman of London.
William Midleton Mercer of London.
Iohn Martin Iustice.
Sir William Nottingham chiefe Baron of the Exchequer.
William Wangford.
John Buckingham Bishop of Lincolne.
Iohn Kempe Bishop of London.
Sir William Richall.
Sir Iohn de Pole.

All these had given money or lands towards the building and repayring of the said Bridge.

Notwithstanding this Table, I finde in record as followeth: The bridge betwixt the Citie of Rochester, and the village of Strode was in the fourth yere of King Richard the second, sore decayed or broken downe by tempest of weather, and inundation of the riuer of Medway, whereupon William Basing master of the Hospitall at Strode, and Nicholas Hering, were licensed by the King to repaire the same. And in the eleuenth yere of the same K. Richard the second, Iohn Cobham and Robert Knowles begamne their charge towards the building of the said bridge, and in the eightenth yere of the same Richard, the said Io. Cobham founded a Chauntry in the chappell there of three Chaplaines, and gaue lands to the Bridge in the twenty-two yere of Richard the second: And thus much of the Record haue I noted.

An. reg. 9. I finde further by John Leiland, that one John Warner a Merchant of Rochester made the new coping of Rochester-bridge. And William Warham Arch-bish. of Canterbury made the yron pikes and barres aboue the same coping. But some say it was done by the Arch-bishop that made the yron workes.

Hospital at Rome for Englishmen.

This Robert Knowles, was also one of the founders of an Hospitall in the city of Rome, in manner following: for that there was no Nation of the world, but had some kinde of Hospitality in Rome, saue onely the people of England, certaine Englishmen being in Rome, procured license of the Pope to build an Hospitall, in place where Thomas Becket Archbishop of Canterbury had sometime builded a Chappell of the holy Trinitie. In this Hospitall which they builded, was to be relieued, a Gentleman three dayes, Bread, Wine, and Ware: a commaner eight dayes and nights, meate, drinke, and lodging. And if any Woman happen to be nigh her time of deliuerance, so that shee dare not take her iourney, shee to be honestly kept till she be purified: and if shee bs of power, to take her Child with her, if not, to bee kept there vntill it were seauen yeres old.

The founders of this Hospitall were Sir Robert Braybroke Bishop of London, Thomas Brampton Bishop of Rochester, Sir Iohn Philpot and his wife, Sir Robert Knowles, Sir Hugh Calueley, Sir John Hankwood, Sir Iohn Thornam, Knights, John Twiforde, John Shepard and Alice his wife, Robert Cristall and Agnes his wife, Robert Windleront, Walter Withers, Robert at Pyne, Adam Steple Henry Line Draper, and other Citizens of London in the yere of our Lord 1380. in the Raigne of King Richard the second: which Hospitall was againe new re-edified and made a goodly house in the yere of our Lord 1449. towards the charges whereof, was money gathered in euery Parish in England, but that came to small effect, the charges of collecting and conueying was such, that, there came towards the worke not past one thousand Duckets in one whole yere.

In November a parliament being called at London, a Tax of money was leuied of the whole Realme. Parliament at London.

This yere was a sore and sharpe Winter, and such aboundance of snow, which continued December, January, February, and March, so that almost all small birds died through hunger and colde. Whiles the King held a great Councell at London with the Nobles of the Realme, Henry Earle of Northumberland, and Thomas Lord Bardolfe came against into England, who after long tourneying, when they came to the Towne of Thirske, they caused to be proclaimed, that who so would haue libertie, should take vp armour and weapon and follow them, whereuppon much people resorted to them: but Sir Thomas Rokesley Sheeriffe of Yorkshire, with other Knights of that country went against them, and at Bramham Moore nere to Halewold, fought with them a great battell, and slew the Earle, whose head was straight-wayes cut off. The Lord Bardolfe was sore wounded and taken aliue, but died shortly after. This battell was fought on the viii. day of February. The Earls head was put on a stake, and carryed openly through the City of London, and set on London-bridge. The Bishop of Bangor was taken with the Lords, but pardoned of his life, because hee was not found in armour. The King went to Yorke, there conuemned such as transgressed, 1400 An. Reg. 10.

Edmond Holland E. of Kent wounded to death.

Upon the seuenth of September there were such floods of raine, as the old men of that age had neuer seene before. Edmond Holland Earle of Kent whilest he besieged the castle of Bytaine in Britaine, he was wounded with an arrow of a Crosse-bow in the head, notwithstanding he take the castle and destroyed it to the ground, and not long after his braines rotted, and he died.

The Countesse of Kent that was Daughter to Barnabe Viscount Lord of Millan, hauing no issue by her husband, was now moued by the King, after her husbands death to marry with his baſtard brother, the Earle of Dorset, but she chose for her husband, Henry Mortimer, a goodly young Bachelor, by whom she had issue Anne married to Sir John Aubemound.

About the feast of All-Saints the Cardinals of Burges came into England being sent from the Colledge of Cardinals to informe the King and Clergy of the inconstant dealing of pope Gregory, as also he had informed the French King and his Clergie and Realme, to the end that those two Kings might set to their helping hands, to induce the said Gregorie to obserue the oath he had made, and that by the magnificence of those 2 Kings, concord might be made in the Church, vnto the which busines the French King had gladly granted, and sent messengers vnto pope Gregorie, who notwithstanding was obstinate.

The King of England when hee vnderstood the Cardinalls message, he commanded that courteous and gentle entertainment should be giuen to him, and offered to beare his charges so long as hee would abide in England.

1409. The King with his Queen kept their Christmasse at Eltham in Kent.

After the feast of the Epiphany, the Archbishop of Canterbury caused to assemble at London, all the Clergie of the Realme, to chose personages meete to goe to the generall Councell holden at Pisa, whereunto were chosen Robert Holam Bishop of Salisbury, Henry Chiseley Bishop of S. Davids, and Thomas Chillingdon Prior of Christs Church in Canterbury, and the King had sent before John Colvile Knight, and maister Nicholas Rixton Clearkes, with letters to bee giuen to them. And in the letter to the Pope it was written.

K. Henry writeth to the Pope.

Most holy Father, our humble recommendations in filiall wise premised. The inscrutable wisedome of the high God doth sometime dissemble in some sort the sinnes of men, if at length they will yet amend, though not through feruent feare, but by their filiall conscience mouing or pricking them. And how much the longer he deferreth his ire in this life, so much the more grieuously will he punish in the life to come, as is to be feared. Wee therefore in our minde reuolving the long, and as it were the inueterate Schisme now in the Church of God being very hote, truely we feare, as by likelihood is to be feared, that it ought to bee imputed to all Princes of the Christian Religion before God and man, vnto a loathfull negligence, the cruelties of such an errour, nourished thus long: Therefore specially because the Clergy of euery Kingdome, either feare, or the blindnesse of auarice causing them, doe couer this wicked Schisme vnder the vaile of deuotion, and holinesse, so that those Princes, to whom the materiall sword is committed, for the defence and safegard of the Church, about this foresaid schisme, to be vtterly, extirped, they neither goe about to shew any great instance of courteous perswasion, nor to put in practise the sword for the purpose. Wherevpon, hauing heard often-times of many, and vnderstand now a good while agone by letters of the most reuerend in Christ, our Fathers the Lords Cardinalls of your Colledge, and by the report of the reuerend in Christ, the Lord Cardinall of Burdeaux our friend, worthily beloued on the behalfe of the Colledge, comming to the presence of vs, and of our first begotten sonne the Prince of Wales, and of the prelates and priors of our Realme, how that not onely hee, but also the Cardinalls of your said Colledge, by occasion of the continuance of this Schisme, contrary to the bowe and oath made by your holinesse, to renounce the Papacie, haue withdrawne from you all their obedience, and doe determine to hold a generall Councell in the feast of the Annunciation of our Lady now next to come at the Citie Pisa, a place indeed fitte, as it is taide, and honest, and by your holinesse commended for meete and conuenient, as it is affirmed, that this may be done, especially by force of a certaine obligation for occasion of the schisme to be extirped by your holinesse, whilest you were yet in minoritie, of your owne accord, and solemnly entred or made in the Conclaue with the Cardinalls afore-said, and after that you were receiued to the Papall dignity, by the superscription of your holy hands, openly roborated and confirmed, as by the view of a certaine publike instrument before vs and the states aboue-said exhibited, as it plainely hath to vs appeared, not knowing how the vnion of the Church may bee come vnto by any other way more commodiously. Whereupon the said Cardinall hath requested vs, vpon consideration of the premises, and other reasonable causes by him openly expressed, and in the same Letters euidently comprehended, which indeede greatly moued both the consciences of vs, and of the said States, that we should take care to imploy our Councell and ayde about the premises, to the said Colledge for the respect of the godly zeale and loue which thereto we beare, together with other Catholike Princes, and that we should send our Ambaſſadours and Prelates of our Realme by themselues, or by procurators to the said Councell. Wee therefore, desiring to shew the zeale and intent which wee beare and haue to the same vnion, and noting with more heed the wholsome and holy intention of the same Colledge in the premisses, as other princes doe note the same, as we feare at this present, willing also to farreas in vs lyeth, to the honour of GOD, and that wee may auoyd the sword-edge of his wrath, to doe our parts about the reformation of the same state of the Church, hauing taken with our said Sonne, and also with the Prelates and Nobles aforesaid, ripe deliberation, wee beseech with all humility and in the bowels of Jesus Christ, exhorting, doe require your clemencie, whole state and honour vpon diuers causes as a deuout Sonne of the Church, so farre as with GOD wee might, wee haue euer embraced, and doe embrace by the expresse and whole assent of the states aforesaid, that as well for the auoyding of the manifest slaunder of the Church, as of the Apostolike Sea, and for the desirefull consernation of your estate and honour, and also for the desire of the faithfull procurators that will come to the said place and day together, and with all quietnesse, for the respect of him especially that giueth grace to the humble, that yee will vouchsafe to bee present at the day and place before mentioned, in the Spirit of humblenesse, to fulfill the bowe together, and such manner othe effectuallly, as we trust you will. For wee holde for certaine, that as wee are informed, the Cardinals of both Colledges haue come together in one and the same consonancie of minde about the premisses, and as it were all the princes Christians sette forth themselues with glad mindes in their fauour and ayde, howeuer they seeke from else-where starting holes, the same Cardinalls by Gods helpe assisting them, shall obtaine the effect of such an vnion: neither doth it seeme to vs, or to the inhabitants of our Realme expedient, that wee should disagree from othe Catholike Princes in so holy a purpose in any thing, but rather that wee should cause our Ambaſſadours and Prelates of our Realme by themselues or their procurators, as we beleeue that other will doe the like, that the vniuersall Church may be nourished with the pleasant taste of a withfull vnion. Moreouer, most blessed Father, if the prouidence of the Apostolike Sea would vouchsafe to attend and marke, what great harme and danger is sprung vp throughout the whole world, not onely of bodies, but also of soules, redeemed by Christs bloud, haue hitherto chanced vnder pretence of the continuation of the said Schisme, and specially the slaughter of Christian people, which aboue the number (as men say) of two hundred thousand, are perished by the raging of diuers warres that haue risen in sundry parts of the world, and euen now of late, to the number of thirtie thousand, which (by reason of the dissention had vpon the Election of Rome betwixt two which doe striue and contende, the one in the authoritie of the true Pope, and the other by the authority of the anti-pope) were in slaughter field (a lamentable thing to bee spoken) slaine and destroyed. Truely, the Apostolike sea would be in great heauinesse of heart, and would rather forsake the honour of the Apostolicall Sea, then to see from henceforth such wicked slaughter to be committed, and would take example of the true mother, who before King Salomon, rather chose to giue place, than that the child should be cut in pieces. And albeit by the creation of the nine Cardinalles, against pont oath (that wee may vse other mens wordes) lastly by you made, of the which act a behement cause of admiration is rayſed, it may in some wise be presumed, that as is like to bee thought, your intention doth not bende to the ende of extirping the Schisme, yet God forbid that your holinesse should circumspectly be noised of such inconstancie of minde by any manner of person, wherevpon the lasse errour may be accounted worse than the first, not onely to be execrated of euery Christen soule, but also to be expulsed with all indeuour. These thinges which we write, of a pure heart and vnfained faith do proceede: and therefore, (be nigne father) if it please you, let these things with due consideration be well ved (most blessed father) let him incline your heart, and corroborate the same in this holy worke, happily to bee executed, who for peace sake when he was the King of all, endured the forme of a seruant. Written vnder our Signet, in our pallace at Westm. the 12. day of November.

Thus I set downe the Epistle which the king sent to the Pope, that it may appeare vnto all men how modestly he at length writeth vnto the Pope to performe his vow and th, to the end the fault should not appeare to be in him, that the vnity of the Church was not reformed.

According to appointment the Cardinalls of both Colleges, towit, of Greegory, and of Benet met at Pisa, effectually to intreat of the reformation of agreement, where almost all the Prelates of the whole Latin world, met together, and honorable men were elected to helpe the Cardinalls in this case, who calling for the grace of the holy spirit, agreed in one, and chose one to be head of the Church, refusing the other two, and called his name Alexander the fifth, and reiected both Gregory, and Benedict.

This yeere was a great play at the Skinners Well, more vnto Clerken Well, besides London, which lasted eight daies, and was of matter from the creation of the world: there were to see the same, the most part of the Nobles and Gentles in England: and forthwith after, began a royall Iusting in Smithfield, betweene the Earle of Somerset, and Seneschal of Hennault, Sir John Cornewall, Sir Richard of Arundell, and the sonne of Sir John Cheyney, against other Frenchemen.

Holbech Esquire: yet being now driuen to such miserie, that in maner despairing of all comfort, he fled into desert places and solitary caues, where, being destitute of all reliefe and succor, hreading to shew his face to any creature, and finally, lacking to sustaine nature, for pure hunger miserably pined away, and died.

A Parliament.

In a Parliament holden at London, in the Lent season, the Lords and Burgesses presented to the King a bill in this forme: To the most excellent Lord, the King, and all the Nobles in this present parliament assembled, your faithfull commons humbly do shew, that our Soueraigne Lord the King, may haue the temporall possessions and lands, which by the Bishops, Abbots, and Priors, are prouidly spent, and wasted in this Realme, which should suffice to find 15 0. Earles, and 1500. Knights, 6200. Esquires, and 100. hospitalls, more then now be, &c. But when they went about to declare out of what places those great summes were to be leuied, whereby the forsaid States should be endowed, they waxed in their account: wherefore the King commanded them, that from thencefoorth, they should not presume to vtter any such matter.

Sir Robert Vmfreuile sent against the Scots.

Sir Robert Vmfreuile Vice-admiral of England, annoyed the countries, on the sea coasts of Scotland: for comming into the Frith with ten ships of warre, and lying there 14. daies together, landing euery day on the one side of the Riuer, or on the other, taking preyes, spoyle, and prisoners notwithstanding the Duke of Albany, and the Earle Douglas, were ready there with a great power to resist him: he burnt the Cauet of Scotland, (being a ship of great account) with many other vessells lying the same time at the Blackneste ouer against Lithe. At his returne from thence, he brought with him 14. good ships, and many other great prizes of clothes, both woolen and linnen, pitch, tar, woad, meale, wheat, and rie, which being sold abroad, the markets were well holden thereby, and therefore he had giuen him the name of Robin Mend market: and shortly after his returne from the Sea, he made a roade into Scotland by land, hauing with him his Nephew, young Gilbert Vmfreuile Earle of Angus, being but 14 yeres of age, they spent at that time Jedworth, and the most part of Tiuidale.

An. reg. 12. Vpon the euen of Saint Iohn Baptist, Thomas and Iohn, the Kings Sonnes, being in Cate-cheape at London, at supper, after midnight, a great debate hapned betweene their men, and men of the Court, lasting an houre, till Maior and Sheriffes, with other Citizens ceased the same.

This yere, King Henry founded a College at Batt. li-field in Shropshire, in the place where he ouercame Sir Henry Percy, and other, suppressed the second of Edward the first, valued by the yere fifty foure pounds, two shilling and two pence.

1411. Iohn Wonderguift, Knight, and William Long, kept the Seas from Pirats and Rouers, so that the passage on the Sea was quiet, but by the ill writers, they were accused of theft and robbery themselues, wherevpon the Knight tooke Sanctuary at Westminster, where he could not haue an house or cottage to hide his head, for that the same was forbidden by the King, so that he was forced to lie in a tent which he set vp in the Church-porch, and to haue men to watch him in the night season for feare of his enemy: but his fellow William remained on the Sea, vntill the Admirall had prepared ships ready, and went in person to fetch him, which he could not doe till he promised him by his fidelity, that he should haue no harme, which promise notwithstanding, William was imprisoned in the Tower of London.

The Realme of Fraunce being disquieted with the 2. factions of the Duke of Burgoyne, and the Duke of Orleance, sonne to the Duke of Orleance lately slaine (at Paris) by the procurement of the Duke of Burgondy, the Kings of Nauarre, and Arragon, the Dukes of Bitturia, and Brittaine, the Gascoyners, and Aquitaines, the Earles of Hyms and Armenake, & many other ayding the D. of Orleance therein. The Duke of Burgoyne, whom the French King, and his eldest sonne, called the gouernour of France, fauoured, seeing that the contrary part was very strong, sent Ambassadours into England, desiring the Kings ayde against the Duke of Orleance, and promised many things, amongst the which, he promised his daughter in marriage to the prince and a great summe of Gold with her. To whom the King answered: we aduertise you not to fight with your enemie in this case, who iustly seemeth to vexe you, for the death of his Father by you procured: but as much as in you lieth, endeuour your selfe to mitigate the young mans wrath, and promise to make him reasonable satisfaction according to the accuse of your friends. And if then he will not cease from persecuting you, get you into the strongest place of your dominion, and there gather such power as may be able to put off his force. If then after this he will make warre against you, you shall haue the iuster occasion to fight with him, and in such case, we will shew you such fauour, as ye haue demanded. Thus there were sent ouer to his ayd Thomas Earle of Arundell, Gilbert Vmfreuile Earle of Angusse, or Earle of Ryme, Sir Robert Vmfreuile vncle to the said Gilbert, Sir John Oldcastle, Lord of Cobham, Sir Iohn Grey, and William Porter with 12. hundred Archers, they tooke shipping at Douer, and landed at Calice, from whence they went to Arras, where they found the Duke of Burgoyne, of whom they were ioyfully receiued, and from thence he appointed them to Parowne, where he assembled a power of his owne subiects, marched toward Arras, and so to Sanguion, where he lodges his Flemings. The Duke of Orleance had thirty thousand fighting men, drawing towards him, and laid siege about one part thereof, there were many skirmishes, but finally they within the towne abandoned it, and the Flemings destroyed it. From thence the Duke went to Noelle, and it was destroyed euen as it were passing by it, from thence they went before Roy, in Vermondois, which yeelded to them, from thence to Montdiden, &c. The Duke of Burgoyne went to Arras, from thence to Roy, from thence to Betaune, and after to Beauuais, the Earle of Arundell was with him in his aide, with 500. Englishmen, from thence hee went to Poitoise, from thence to Meulent to Paris. The Duke of Orleance was lodged at Saint Diones, and at Saint Clow, with a great power. About the tenth of November, Iohn, Duke of Burgoyne, issued out of Paris, and went to Saint Clow, where putting his people in order, the Earle of Arundell, and his people made a great assault, so that they within, were driuen to yeld to the will of the English men, wherefore they were bountifully rewarded by the Duke of Burgoyne, and then returned into England.

An. reg. 13. King Henry created his brother, Tho. Bewfort, Earle of Dorset, and his sonne, Thomas of Lancaster, that was Steward of England, and Earle of Annarele, he created D. of Clarence.

A Squire of Wales, named Rice ap Dee, which had long time rebelled against the King, was brought to London, and there drawne, hanged and quartered.

Parliament at London. New coyne of golde.

After the feast of All-Saints, a Parliament was begun at London. The King caused a new kind of Nobles to be made, which were of lesse value then the old by 4. pence in the Noble, so that 50. Nobles should weigh a pound of Troy weight.

1412. Colledge at Fodyngbey.

Edward, Duke of Yorke, this yere, began the foundation of the Colledge of Fodyngbey in Northampton-shire, for a Maister, 12. Preists, 8. Clerks, and 13. Choristers: Henry the fifth, gaue Lands thereunto of Priors aliens by him suppressed, and nought dispend yerely (as was valued at the suppression) 400. and nineteene pounds, eleuen shillings.

John Duke of Burgoyne, hauing now the gouernment, both of the French King and of his Realme, he so persecuted the Duke of Orleance and his complices, that at the last, the said Duke Charles was forced to send into England certaine persons, as his procuratours, to offer in his name vnto King Henry, and to his Sonnes, certaine conditions, which were concluded the eight day of May. The said Charles Duke of Orleance besought the King of England to send vnto him 8 thousand men to ayde him against the Duke of Burgoigne and his complices, which dayly procured the French King to make warre vpon them.

King Henry courteously entertained the messengers, and vpon consideration had of their offers, which seemed to make greatly both for his honour and profite, as Duke of Guyen, he take vppon him to succour and defend them against all men, as their Lord and Soueraigne, and so sending away the messengers, promised to send them ayde very shortly.

K. Henry nimbled a voyage into France.

Then said the King to the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor, doe you not see how the Almighty hath disposed for vs, behold now the acceptable time, let vs goe into France, to winne with small adoe, that which is our right: And surely it was thought hee would haue recouered France, at that time, if strength of body had beene answerable to his mind, but being oppressed with great sickneste, he could not endure, neither to goe nor ride, yet he commanded all those to come to him that held of him by Knights seruice, as if he had meant to goe ouer the sea, but the Lords of the Realme perswaded him to commit that iourney vnto his second sonne Thomas.

T. Otarborne

In the meane time Henry the Prince, sonne to the King, offended with certaine of his fathers family, which were said to sowe discord betwixt the Father and the Sonne, wrote vnto all the parts of the Realme, endeauouring himselfe to refell all the practises and imaginations of such detractors, and slaunderous people, and to make the matter more manifest to the world, he came to the K. his Father about the feast of Peter and Paul, with such a number of his friends and well-willers, as a greater had not beene seene in those dayes. Hee was straight-way admitted to his Fathers presence, of whom this one thing hee besought him of, that if such as had accused him might bee conuicted of vniust accusation, that they might be punished, not according to their deserts, but yet after their lies were proued against them, they might somewhat taste of that which they had meant, although not to the vttermost: to the which request the King seemed to grant, but hee told him that hee must tarry a parliament, that such might bee tried and punished by iudgement of their Peeres. Thus farre Thomas Otarborne. To the same effect (but in more ample manner) writeth the translator of Titus Liuius (who wrote an Historie of Henry the fift, and dedicated it to Henry the first) as he was informed by the Earle of Ormond, an eye-witnesse of the same, as followeth: During the sickneste of the King (saith hee) some euill disposed people laboured to make dissention betwixt the K. and the Prince his sonne, by reason whereof, and by the acts of youth which he exercised more then meanly, and for the great recourse of people vnto him, of whom his Court was at all times more abounddant than his Fathers, the King suspected that hee would presume to vsurpe the Crowne, hee being aliue, which suspicious iealousie was occasion, that he in part withdrew his affection, and singular loue from the Prince: but when the Noble Prince was aduertised of his fathers iealousie and mistrust, by some of his secret friendes of the Kings counsaile, he disguised himselfe in a gowne of blue Satten, or Damaske, wrought full of eyelet-holes, and at euery eyelet the needle wherewith it was made, hanging still by the silke: and about his arme hee ware a dogges Collar set full of S. S. of gold, and the streets of the same also of fine gold. Thus strangely apparelled, with a great company of Lords, and other Noble-men of his Court, he came to the King his Father who at that time lay at Westminster, where at his comming (by commandement of him) not one of his company pany aduanced himselfe further then the fire in the Hall, notwithstanding that they were greatly and oft desired to the contrary, by the Lords and great estates of the LYONS Court: and this they did not onely because the weather was colde, but because the Prince had so commanded them, to giue the lesse occasion of mistrust to the King his Father, but hee himselfe only accompanyed of the Kings Houshold, passed forth to the King his Father, to whom (after due salutation) hee desired to shew the intent of his minde in secret manner. Then the King caused himselfe to be borne in his chayze into his secret chamber (because he was diseased and might not goe) where in the presence of three or foure persons, in whom the King had most confidence, he commanded the Prince to shew the effect of his mind: Then the Prince kneeling downe before his father, said to him these words. Most redoubted Lord and Father, I am this time come to your presence, as your liegeman, and as your Sonne naturall, in all things to obey your grace as my Soueraigne Lord and Father. And whereas I vnderstand ye haue mis suspect of my behauiour against your grace, and that ye feare I would vsurpe your crowne against the pleasure of your highnesse, of my conuersation your grace knoweth that if ye were in feare of any man, of what estate soeuer he were, my duty were to the endangering of my life to punish the person, thereby to rase that feare from your heart: and then how much rather ought I to suffer death to bring your grace from the feare of that ye haue of me that am your naturall Sonne, and your liegeman. And to that intent I haue this day by confession of my sinnes and receiuing the Sacrament, prepared my selfe, and therefore most redoubted Lord and Father, I beseech you in the honour of God, for the easing of your heart, here before your knees to slay me with this dagger, and at that word with all reuerence hee deliuered to the King his dagger, saying, my Lord and Father, my life is not so deerous to mee, that I would line one day displeasure, nor I couet not so much my life as I do your pleasure and welfare, and in your thus doing, here in the presence of these Lords, and before God at the day of Iudgement, I clerely forgiue you my death. At these words of the Prince, the King taken with compassion of heart, cast from him the dagger, and imbracing the Prince, kissed him, and with effusion of teares said vnto him, My right deere and heartily beloued Sonne, it is of truth that I had you partly suspect, and as I now perceiue, vndeserued on your partie: but seeing this your humilitie and faithfulnes, I shall neither slay you, nor from henceforth haue you any more in mistrust, for any report that shall be made vnto me, and thereof I assure you vpon mine honour. Thus by his great wisedome was the wrongfull imagination of his fathers hate vtterly auoyded, & himselfe restored to the K. fauour grace and fauo.

About the 19. of August, K. Henry by determination of the Councell, sent his second sonne Thomas Duke of Clarence, Edward Duke of Yorke, and Thomas Earle of Dorset, and many baliant men, with a strong power to helpe the Duke of Orliance, against the Duke of Burgoyne, or euer all the other were returned, which a while agoe went ouer with the Earle of Arundell to ayde the Duke of Burgoyne, so that many men marueiled at the sodden change, that in so small a time the Englishmen did ayde the two contrary parts: notwithstanding the Nobles went forward and arriued in Normandie, where when the Duke of Orleance did not waite them at the time appointed, they burnt his townes, and spoyled the country, taking many holdes: at length, though late, the Dukes of Clarence, and Orliance met & talked together, and the matter was so entreated of betweene them, that our men should desist from ranging through the country, and refraine from robbery, which when our men had granted, they departed into Aquitaine, to winter there, and the D. of Orliance went home to his country.

T. Walsingham. K. Henry gaue ayde to the Duke of Orliance, against the D. of Burgoyne.

About this time the Lord Helle Marshall of France with many other Noble men, and men of armes, to the number of 4000. besieged a certaine hold in Aquitaine, which was in the keeping of John Blunt Knight, who with 300. that ayded him put to flight the whole armie of the French men, and toke of them 12. men of name, and other gentlemen to the number of 120. amongst other the said Monsier de Helle Marshall of France was one, who was sent ouer into England, and put in the Castle of Wisbich in Cambridge shire, but escaping thence, he got ouer into France, where he serued the Duke of Orliance, at the battaile of Agincourt, and was there slaine. Amyot. lib.

King Henry kept his Christmas at his manor of Eltham, being so sore sicke, that sometime men thought that he had beene dead: notwithstanding it pleased God that he recouered strength a little, and as ioyfully as he could, he celebrated that feast of Christmas. 1413.

After Christmas hee called the Nobles of England to a Parliament at London, which began the morrow after Candlemasse day, but hee liued not to the end thereof, for hee dyed shortly after in a Chamber belonging to the Abbot of Westminster, called Jerusalem, whereby the prophesie was fulfilled, as hee said, that he should die there. In the time of whose languishing the King gaue to the Prince his Sonne diuers notable doctrines & ensignements, that not onely of him, but of euery Prince are to be holden and followed: among the which erudition one is this: The King lying grieuously diseased, called before him the Prince his Sonne, and said vnto him: My Sonne, I feare me soze, after my departure from this life, some discord shall grow and arise by-betweene thee and my brother Thomas Duke of Clarence, whereby the Realme may bee brought to destruction and misery, for I know you both to bee of great stomache and courage, Wherefore I feare, that he through his high minde will make some enterprize against thee, intending to vsurpe vpon thee, which I know thy stomache may not abide easily. And for dread hereof as oft as it is in my remembrance I soze repent mee, that euer I charged my selfe with the Crowne of this Realme. To these words of the King, the Prince answered thus: Right vndoubted Lord and Father, to the pleasure of God your grace shall long continue with vs, and rule vs both: but if God haue so prouided that euer I shall succeed you in this Realme, I shall honour and loue my brethren aboue all men, as long as they bee to me true, faithfull and obedient, as to their Soueraigne Lord: but if any of them fortune to conspire or rebell against me, I assure you, I shall assone execute iustice vpon one of them, as I shall vpon the worst and most simplest person within this your Realme.

Parliament at London.

K. Henry his counsell to his sonne Henry.

The King hearing this answere, was therewith maruellously reioyced in his minde, and said: My deare and well-beloued Sonne, with this answere thou hast deliuered me of a great and ponderous agony: and I beseech thee, and vpon my blessing charge thee, that like as thou hast said, so thou minister Iustice equally, and in no wise suffer not them that bee oppressed long to call vpon thee, for iustice, but redresse oppressions, and indifferently and without delay, for no perswasion of flatterers, nor of them that bee partiall, or such as haue their hands replenished with giftes, deferre not Iustice till too morow, if that thou maiest doe Iustice this day, lest (peraduenture) God do Iustice on thee in the meane time, and take from thee thine authority: remember that the wealth of thy body, and thy soule, and of thy Realme, resteth in the execution of Iustice; and doe not thy Iustice so, that thou bee called a Tyrant, but vse thy selfe meanely betwixt Iustice and mercy in those things that belong to thee. And betweene parties doe Iustice truely and extreamely, to the consolation of thy poore Subiects that suffer iniuries, and to the punition of them that bee extortioners and doers of oppressions, that other thereby may take example: and in thus doing, thou shalt obtaine the Fauour of God, and the loue and feare of thy Subiects, and therefore also thou shalt haue thy Realme more in tranquilitie and rest, which shall be occasion of great prosperitie within thy Realme, which Englishemen naturally doe desire: for so long as they haue wealth and riches, so long shalt thou haue obeysance: and when they bee poore, then they be alwayes ready at euery motion to make insurrections, and it causeth them to rebell against their Soueraigne Lord: for the nature of them is such, rather to feare loosing of their goods and worldly substance, than the ieoparding of their liues. And if thou thus keepe them in subiection mixed with loue and feare, thou shalt haue the most peaceable and fertile Countrey, and the most louing faithfull and manly people of the world, which shall be cause of no small feare to thine aduersaries. My Sonne, when it shall please God to call me to the way decreed for euery worldly creature, to thee (as my Sonne and heyre) I must leaue my Crowne and my Realme, which I admise thee not to take rainely, and as a man elate in pride, and reioyced in worldly honour, but thinke that thou art more oppressed with charge, to purueye for euery person within the Realme, than exalted in vaine honour of the world. Thou shalt be exalted vnto the Crowne, for the wealth and conseruation of the Realme, and not for thy singular commodity and auaile: My Sonne, thou shalt be a Minister to thy Realme to keepe it in tranquillity, and defend it. Rule as the heart in the middest of the body is principall, and chiefe thing in the body, and seemeth to count and desire that thing that is most necessary to euery of thy members, so (my Sonne) thou shalt be amongst thy people as Christe, and Principall of them, to minister, imagine and acquire those things that may be most beneficiall for them. And when thy people shall be obedient to thee, to ayde and succour thee, and in all things to accomplish thy commandements, like as thy members labour, euery one of them in his office, to acquire and get that thing that thy heart desireth, and as thy heart is of no force and impotent without the ayde of thy members, so without thy people, thy raigne is nothing. My Sonne, thou shalt feare and dread God aboue all things, and thou shalt loue, honour, and worshippe him with all thy heart, thou shalt attribute and ascribe to him all things wherein thou seest thy selfe to be well fortunate, be it victorie of thine enemies, loue of thy friends, obedience of thy subiects, strength and activeness of body, honour, riches, or fruitfull generations, or any other thing, whatsoeuer it be that chanceth to thy pleasure. Thou shalt not imagine that any such thing should fortune to thee, by thine act, nor by thy desert, but thou shalt vnderstand that all commeth onely of the goodnesse of the Lord. Thus shalt thou with all thine heart, prayse, honour, and thanke God, for all his benefits that he ghostly vnto thee. And in thy selfe eschew all vaine glory, and elation of heart, following the wholesome Counsell of the Psalmist, which saith, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam, which is to say, Not vnto vs, Lord, not vnto vs, but to thy holy name be giuen laud and praise. These and many other admonishments and doctrines this victorious King gaue vnto this Noble Prince, his Son, who, with effect followed the same, after the death of his father: whereby he obtained grace of our Lord, to attaine to great victories and many glorious and incredible conquests, through the helpe and succour of our Lord, whereof hee was neuer destitute. The King his Father, drawing to his end, after due thankes giuen, and supplication made to God, gaue his benediction to the Prince his sonne, and so yalded to God his spirit, the twentieth of March, which was then violent Sunday. Anno 1412. after the account of the Church of England, the yere of his age 46. when hee had raigned thirteene yeres, fiue monethes lacking tenne dayes. His body was conueyed by water to Feuersham, and from thence by land to Canterburie, there buried by the Lady Mary his first Wife. in the Monastery of Christs Church vnder a pillar in the North Ile. This King Henry, with Thomas Arundell Archbishop of Canterbury had bene great benefactors to this Church in building a good part of the body thereof anewe: hee had Issue by Mary Daughter to Humfrey Bohune Earle of Hereford and Northampton, Henry that succeded him, Thomas Duke of Clarence, Iohn Duke of Bedford, Humfrey Duke of Glocester, Blanch Dutchesse of Bauiere, and Philip Queene of Denmarke: for by Ioane his second Wife, hee had no Issue. Issue of K. Henry.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING HENRY THE FIFT.

HENRY the Fift borne at Monmouth, began his Raigne the twentieth day of March in the yere 1412. This Prince exceeded the meane stature of men, he was beautifull of visage, his necke long, body slender and leane, and his bones small: neuerthelesse hee was of marueilous great strength, and pasting swift in running, insomuch, that he with two other of his Lords, without hounds, bow, or other engine, would take a wilde Bucke or Doe in a large parke: hee studied at Oxford in the new Colledge, vnder the gouernment of Henry Bewfort his Vncle on the fathers side, then Chancellour of Oxford, after Bishop of Winchester: he delighted in songs, meters, and musicall instruments, insomuch that in his Chappell among st other his priuate prayers, he vsed our Lords prayer, certaine psalmes of Dauid, with diuers hymnes and canticles, all which I haue seene translated into hexameter English meeter, by Iohn Lydgate Monke of Bury. Hee liued somewhat insolently, insomuch that whileste his father liued, being accompanyed with some of his young Lords and gentlemen, he would breake in disguised array for his own receiuers to distraine them of their money: and sometimes at such enterprises both he & his company were sorely beaten: and when his receiuers came to him there complaints how they were robbed in their comming vnto him, he would geue them discharge of so much money as they had lost, and besides that they should not depart from him without great rewards for their trouble and vexation, especially they should bee rewarded that best had resisted him & his company: and of whom he had receiued the greatest and most strokes, and for example Sir Thomas Elliot willeth thus. The renowned Prince K. Henry the fift, during the life of his father, was noted to be fierce, and of wanton courage. It happened that one of his seruants, whom he fauoured, was for felony by him committed, arraigned at the Kings Bench, whereof the Prince being aduertised, and incensed by light persons about him, in furious rage came hastily to the Barre where his seruant stood as prisoner, and commanded him to be vnginued and set at libertie, whereat all men were abashed, reserued the chiefe Iustice, who humbly exhorted the Prince to be ordered according to the ancient lawes of the Realme, or if he would haue him saued from the rigor of the lawes, that he should obtaine if he might of the K. his father, his gracious pardon, whereby no law or Iustice should be derogate. With the which answere the prince nothing appeased but rather more inflamed, indeuoured himselfe to take away his seruant. The Iudge, considering the perillous example and inconuenience that might thereby ensue, with a valiant spirit and courage commanded the prince vpon his allegeance to leaue the prisoner, and to depart his way: with which commandement, the prince being set all in a fury, all chafed, and in a terrible manner came vp to the place of iudgement, men thinking that he would haue slaine the Iudge, or haue done to him some damage, but the Iudge sitting still without moouing, declaring the maiestie of the Kings place of iudgement, and with an assured bold countenance, had to the Prince these wordes following: Sir, remember your selfe, I kepe here the place of the King your soueraigne Lord and father, to whom you owe double obeysance, wherefore eftsones in his name I charge you desist off your wilfulnesse and vnlawfull enterprise, and from henceforth giue good example to those which after shall be your proper subiects: and hold for your contempt and disobe- T. Elliots gouernour. William Gascoigne was chiefe Iustice of the Kings bench from the 1st of Henry the Fourth vnto the third of Henry the Fift.

dience, go you to the prison of the Kings bench, whereupon I commit you, and remaine you there prisoner, vntill the pleasure of the King your father be further knowne. With which words, being abashed, and also wondering at the marueilous grauity of that worshipfull Iustice, the prince laying his weapon apart doing reuerence, departed, and went to the kings bench as hee was commanded, whereat his seruants disdaining, came and shewed to the King, all the whole affaire. Wherat he a while studying, after, as a man all rauished with gladnesse, holding his hands and eyes towards heauen abraid with a lowd voice: O merciful God how much am I bound to thy infinit goodnesse, especially, for that thou hast giuen me a Iudge, who feareth not to minister Iustice, and also a son, who can suffer semblably, and obey Iustice. Now (saith Thomas Elior) heere a man may behold three persons worthy memory: first, a Iudge, who being a subiect, feared not to execute iustice on the eldest Sonne of his Soueraigne Lord, and by the order of nature his successor. Also a Prince, and sonne and heyre of the king in the midst of his folly, more considered his euill example, and the Iudges conscience in iustice, than his owne estate, or wilfull appetite. Thirdly, a noble king, and wise father, who contrary to the custome of parents, reioyced to see his sonne and the heyre of his Crowne, to be for his disobedience by his subiect corrected: wherefore I conclude, that nothing is more honorable, or to be desired in a Prince or Noble man, than placability, as contrariwise, nothing is so detestable or to be feared in such a one, as wrath and cruell malignity. Thus much of his youthfulnesse, but after the decease of his father (as he that should succeed in the kingdome) he called to him a certain monk of holy conuersation, to whom he confessed himselfe of all his offences, trespasses, and insolences past, and after his counsell in all things, at that time, hee reformed his life and manners, so that after his fathers decease, was neuer no youth, or wildnesse that might haue place in him, but all his acts were suddenly changed into gravity and discretion.

To this noble P. (by assent of the Parliament) all the estates of the Realme, after three dates, offered to do fealty before he was crowned, or had solemnized his oath, well & iustly to gouerne the common weale, which offer, before was neuer found to be made to any P. of Eng.

The King gaue them all generall thankes, for their good mindes towards him, and therewith exhorted them to the zeale of the publike prosperity and honour of the Realme. If any man had offended him, he pardoned their trespalle, and desired heartily of God, that he should rule, and doe all things well, to the honour of God, and the prosperous commodity of the Realme, that then God would suffer him to be crowned but if his fortune should be to doe otherwise, that then God should take him to his mercy, and suffer him rather to be buryed, than to interprise the charge of the Realme.

The ninth day of Aprill, he was crowned at Westminster, by Thomas Arundell, Archbishoppe of Canterbury, after which Coronation, hee called vnto him all those young Lords, and Gentlemen, that were the followers of his young acts, to euery one of whom he gaue rich and bounteous gifts, and then commanded that as many as would change their manners as he intended to doe, should abide with him in his Court, and to all that would performe their former light conuersation, hee gaue expresse commandment, vpon paine of their heads, neuer after that day to come in his presence.

Hauing auoyded these young and suspicious company from his presence, hee then attended to ghostly and worldly businesse. And first, hee commanded to edifie his royall mannor, that then was called Shene (and now Richmount) hee also founded two Monasteries vpon the Thames (not far from the said mannor royall) the one of the religion of the Carthusiens, which he named Bethlem: the other of religious men and women, of S. Brigets order, and that hee named Sion. In this house, there were 60. Sisters, 3. priests, 4. Deacons, & 8. lay brethren, those neuer wore linnen, but woollen, which two conents had but one Church in common, the Nuns had their church aloft in the roofe, and the brethren beneath vpon the ground, each conent seuerally incloled, and after their profession, might neuer come out, except by the Popes speciall licence: these ought to haue sufficient dowrie to sustain them without begging, he indowed them with rents and reuennues taken from the priores aliens, which he suppressed. Hee, by the best aduisement hee could, prouided, and ordained in euery part of his Realme, Iudges, and other officers, such as hee beleeued to be true and iust, and others that were known or suspect of couetousnesse, or partiality, hee cleerely auoyded from their former offices, and roomes. He also (as King Henry his father had done) vsed for cuil come euery day, when no feaste was kept, at after dinner, to haue a cushion laid on the cupboord, and there to leane the space of an houre or more, to receiue Bills, and heare complaints of whomsoeuer would come, and in those daies, if the King sate in the chamber, the steward of the houshold sate alway in the hall, vnder the cloth of estate, the same being rolled vp aboue his head, and such Knights sitting with him, as at that time waited on the King.

He also caused the corps of King Richard the second to be taken from the earth, whom King Henry the fourth had intumulated in the friers Church of Langley, and with due obseruance, to be from thence translated to the Abbey of Westminster, where, after solemne exequies for him done, hee was buryed in Saint Peters Church, in the said Abbey, on the south side of Saint Edwards Shrine, by Queene Anne his wife, as he himselfe in his life had desired, and had prepared his Monument in the 18 yeere of his raigne, B. and Godfrey of Woodstreete goldsmithes, made the Moulds and Images of King Richard and Queene Anne layd on them, the charges of gilding of them, exceeded 400. markes, King Henry founded perpetually one The body of Richard the second taken vp and buried. About this time Thomas Duke of Clarence, the Kings brother, came from the Coasts of Aquitaine, who (as we said before) was sent to ayde the D. of Orliance against the Duke of Burgoine.

Part of Norwich with the Friers there burned.

A great part of the Citie of Norwich was brent sodainly with fire, with all the house of the Friers Preachers and all to them belonging, and also two feries of that house.

Upon Trinitie sunday, the solemne srequies for King Henry the fourth were celebrated at Canterbury, King Henry his sonne being present at the same.

The same time the fauourers of Wiclifes doctrine, did naile vp scrodules vpon the church doores of London, which scrodules contained that there was an hundred thousand men ready to rise against all such as could not alway wish their lest, for meed (saith Wallingham) they trussed to the force, power, and wit of a certain knight called Iohn Old-Castle, of Cowling in Kent, who for the honour of a marriage which he had contracted with a kinswoman of a Noble-man, the Lord Cobham, obtained the name of the said Lordship, or seignorie of Cobham: this Iohn was a strong man, and a meetely good man of warre, but he was a most peruerse enemie to the state of the Church at that time. In a synod therfore being holden at London, the said Sir Iohn Old-Castle for diuers points touching the sacrament, before the archbishop of Canterbury, the bishops of London, Winchester and other, was conuict, and committed to the tower of London, out of the which he brake ouer the walls in the night, and escaped about the feast of Simon and Iude.

1414. Conspiracie gainst the K.

The K. keeping his Christmas at his manor of Eltham (seuen miles from London) was warned that certain had conspired against him, either to haue taken or sodainly slaine him and his brethren on Twelfth day at night, whereupon the King sent word to the Maior of London, that hee should arest all suspitious persons: the Maior therefore called euery Alderman in his warde to keepe great watch, and about ten of the clocke at night went himselfe with a strong power, to the signe of the Are without Wilhops-gate, where they apprehended the man of the house called Iohn Burgate carpenter and seuen other, one of them being an Esquire belonging to Sir Iohn Old-castle, and sent them to Eltham, where they confessed before the King that they were confederate with Sir Iohn Old-castle, to fight against him and his Lords in S. Giles field about Holborne. On the morrow after the twelfth day, the K. remoued priuily to Westminster, and because he had heard tell that the rude peoples intent was, if they did preuaile, first to destroy the monasteries of Westminster, Saint Albons, and Saint Pauls, and all the houses of friers in London: he minding to preuent such a mischiefe contrary to the minds of all that were about him, went into the field when it was little past midnight, with a great armie, for he was warned that Sir Iohn Old-Castle, and Sir Roger Acton, would in be the same field on the next day following with 25000. people: and the same night were taken more then fourescore men in armor of the same faction, for many that came from far, not knowing the Kings campe to be in the field, were taken by the same and sent to prison, and being demanded whom they sought, made answere the Lord Cobham. The rumour of this, comming to the eares of the captaines that were the Kings enemies, they were wonderfully discouraged, and that the more, because none came to them out of London, from whence they looked for many thousands, whereuppon they fled to saue themselues, and the Kings men following them take some, and slew others, but where their captaine was become would not be knowe, notwithstanding that the King by Proclamation promised to whomsoeuer could bring him forth, a thousand markes besides liberties to the Cities and Townes that would discloze him: but there was not one found that would detect him, so greatly was he fauoured. Also the K. being told of an ambushment gathered in Harengay parke, sent thither certaine Lords, who take many, among whom, was one William Murle, a rich mault-man, or brewer of Dunstaple, who had his two horses trapped with gold following him, and a paire of gilt spurs in his bosome, for hee thought to haue beene made Knight on the morrow by the hands of Sir Iohn Old-castle. The 12. of January, 69. of them were condemned of treason at Westminster, and on the morrow after 37. of them were drawne from the Tower of London to Newgate, and so to Saint Giles, and there in a place called Fickets field, were all hanged, and seauen of them brent, gallowes and all. The 17. of January, were drawne and hanged Sir Iohn Beuerley Preest, Iohn Burgate carpenter, a text-writer in Saint Iohns stræte and a glouer on London-bridge, and shortly after, Sir Roger Acton knight was taken, who on the tenth of Februarie, was drawne, hanged, and buried vnder the gallowes.

Many men hanged and some brent in Fickets field.

The twentieth of February deceased Thomas Arundell Arch-bishoppe of Canterbury. Henry Chicheley borne at Higham Ferries in Northampton-shire succeeded, being translated from Saint Dauids in Wales.

The King taking compassion vpon Henry Percie a young man (who by his grand-father Henry Percie Earle of Northumberland, was carried into Scotland, after the death of his father, who was slaine in the battell of Shrewsbury, when this young man was then but a child) commanded them that were of his kinred, and neere ffrien.s, to solicite for his reclaiming home againe out of Scotland, minding not onely to honour him by calling him home againe, but also to make him Earle of Northumberland.

T. Elsham. K. Henry builded at Kenelworth.

King Henry kept his Lent in the Castle of Kenel-kenelworth, and caused an harber there to be planted in the marish, for his pleasure, amongst the thornes and bushes: where a fore had harbored, which fore he killed, being a thing then thought to prognosticate, that he should expell the craftie deceit of the French King, before which also hee there builded a most pleasant place, and caused it to bee termed Le pleisant maries or the pleasant marsh. King Henry the eight bestowed great cost in repairing Kenelworth Castle, caused the said banketting house to be taken downe, and part of it to be set vp in the base Court at Killing-worth. In this Lent season, whilest the K. lay at Kenelworth, messengers came to him from the Dolphin of France named Charles, with a present of Paris balles, for him to play withall, but the K. wrote to him, that he should shortly send to him London balles, with the which he would break downe the roses of houses.

Tit. Liuius. Roger Wall. An. reg. 2.

King Henry, after that all dissentions and commotions in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales were appeased, so that concord and vnity were made and established in all parts of the Kings dominion, the King deliberated vpon the recouery of the Realme of France, which by iust title of inheritance was descended vnto him, and at that time was iniuriously withholden from him by the French K. And because hee would nothing proceede against the pleasure of God, he first demaunded aduice and counsel of all the discreet and learned men as well of the spiritualitie in both Vniuersities, as of the temporalitie through all his Realme, if he wought without offence to God lawfully recouer by Armes his Realme of France. Who after long deliberation thereupon among them had, of one assent, made report vnto the King, that in so iust a quarrell he wought lawfully vse armes, if he might by none other wayes attaine his purpose, and right of inheritance: whereupon the King, in all things insuing the aduice of his Counsell, sent Ambassadors into France, there to demand his right in the Councell of the French, & if peraduenture they would deny to accomplish his desire, his Ambassadors should giue them knowledge that hee would seeke his right by armes. These Ambassadors were honourably received in France, and for answere of their message there denounced, they brought with them nothing to report, except that within short time, the French-men would send their Ambassadors into England, to declare their intent to the K. of England vpon his demand.

Shortly after arrived in England William Bouratier Arch-bishop of Bourges, the Earle of Wandosme, Perce Frennall bishop of Liesur the Lords Iuery, and of Braquimount, Walter Cole Secretary to the French King, Ambassadors of France, these were men of great authority: amongst them the Arch-bishop was the chiefe, who in like manner were here receiued with great honour. At a time limited, the Arch-bishop of Bourges proposed their message, and in the end, offered to the K. lands, and a great summe of money with the daughter of the King their master in marriage, so that hee would desist from that warre that hee then intended to make in France. After which proposition and offer made, the Ambassadors dined with the King: and at another day limited, the King of England, by the mouth of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury made to them answere, to this effect: The proffers made, he said, were not sufficient recompence for the Kings rightfull inheritance in France, vniustly detained from him, wherefore for a finall answere, he would demand his right by force of armes in the best manner that he could, and that as briefly as to him were possible. Then the Arch-Bishop of Bourges, after licence obtained, said O King, with reuerence be it spoken, thinkest thou vniustly to depose the most Christian King of France? Thinkest thou that hee hath offered to thee these lands and money, with his owne daughter to wed thy wife, for any dread hee hath of thee? nay not so, but the same our Lord, indued with pitie, as the louer of peace, hath made to thee this offer, to the intent, that innocent blood be not spilt and destroyed: and therefore by the ayde of God, hee shall at all times defend himselfe, his lands, and subiects, from thy vniust inuasions. And as to vs that be his Ambassadors, wee desire thee, to make to vs safe conduct without damage through thy Realme, and also that thou write to our soueraigne Lord, this thine answere entirely vnder thy seale, and signe manuell: which request the King granted vnto them, and they returne into France.

In the moneth of May a Parliament was begun at Leicester, in the beginning whereof, there was a porter of the Tower of London, drawen, hanged, and headed, whose head was sent to London, and set ouer the Tower gate, for consenting to one that brake out of the Tower, named Whitlocke.

Parliament at Leicester. Porter of the Tower executed.

In this Parliament Iohn the Kings brother was made Duke of Bedford, Humfrey his brother Duke of Glocester, and Richard brother to the Duke of Yorke was made Earle of Cambridge. The priories aliens in England were giuen to the King, all their possessions to remaine to the King and to his heyres for euer, except land granted to the College of Fotheringhay, & after all priories were suppressed to the number of more then one hundred houses, Gold waights were appointed.

Priories suppressed to the number of 100.

In this Parliament were deuised diuers meanes to gather money of all the Commons of England, therewith to sustaine the Kings warres, and to make prouision of all things necessarie for the same, the summe whereof, leuied and gathered of the spiritualtie and temporalitie amounted to the summe of 300. thousand markes English. And hereuppon order was taken to gather a great host of men throughout all the Kings Dominions.

On Mary Magdalens day, in London, Iohn Nianser Esquire, with nine of his men, set vpon and slue Iohn Tibbey clarke, Archi-deacon of Huntington, and Chancellor to Q. Ioane late wife to Henry the fourth, for the which fact, the saide Esquire, and foure of his men fled to S. Annes Church within Aldersgate, where they were moued by with dread, and watched day and night till the 21. of August, on the which day they sodeine the land, and passed through the City towards Calice in their shirts & breches, each of them hauing a Crosse in his hand, and a purse about his necke, &c.

Our Ambassadours the Bishops of Durham and Norwich, returning now the second time out of France, declared to the King, that the French-men did but vse fraud and deceits, wherefore the King being stirred vp into anger, and also knowing well the discord betwixt the great Lords of France, whereof hath somewhat béene said before, determined to abate their leasings, and to teach them to vnderstand their folly in awaking of a sleeping dog: and forthwith the King commanded all the Prelates and Nobles of the Realme, to come to London, there to intreate of waighty affaires concerning the Realme. at the which time, the Arch-bishop of Canterbury helde a great councell, in the which were chosen certaine of the Clergy of England, to go to the generall Councell that should be holden at Constance, a City of Germany, and so there were sent the Bishops of Salisbury, Bathe, and Hereford, and with them the Abbot of Westminster, and the Prior of Worcester, and many other wise men, in company of the E. of Warwicke, whose presence did them much honour.

1415. Three schismaticall Popes put downe.

Ann. reg. 3.

In that Councell was put downe three schismaticall Popes, to wit, Balthasar Cossa late Pope, Iohn 23. of that name: Peter de Luna, called Clement the 13. and Ægelus Corraris, called Greg. the 12. which being done, one Otho Colombe a Noble Romane borne, was elected to the Papacie, and was named Martin the fift.

In the meane space the King like a prudent Prince thought good to take order for the resisting of the Scots, if according to their old manner, they should attempt any thing in his absence, and therefore hee appointed the Earle of Westmerland, and the Lord Scrope, the Baron Greystocke, Sir Robert Vmfreuile, and diuers other baliant Captaines to kéepe the frontiers and marches of Scotland: which Sir Robert Vmfreuile of the day of Mary Magdalen, fought with the Scots at the towne of Gedering, hauing in his company onely 300. Archers, and 140. men of armes, where after a long conflict hee slew of his enemies 60. and od, and tooke 360. prisoners, and put to flight 1000. and moe, whom he followed in chase aboue 12. miles, and so laden with preyes and prisoners, returned to the Castle of Rockesborough, whereof he was then Captaine. When the King had gathered his Nauie together, appointed his Archers, and men of armes, prepared his engines, and all things necessary for the warres, he leaning behind him for gouernment of the Realme, the Quéene his mother in law, he commaunded all that should goe with him, to be ready against the feast of S. Iohn Baptist, and to meet him at Hampton.

The eighteenth day of June, King Henry with many Lords and others rode from London towards South-hampton, the Maior, Aldermen, and crafts of the City accompanying him on his way to the Towne of Kingston vpon Thames: whilest the King lay at South-hampton, where he abode for his retinue, and stuffe belonging to the warres, fastings, prayers vnto God, and almes déedes of the King, and other supplications of the clergie and commons had before, hée mustered his vniuersall hoste vpon the sea bankes. In the which muster or view, on the last of July was discouered a great and perilous conspiracie against him by three Lords, in whom of all the rest, hee put greatest trust and confidence, the chiefest of them was Henry Scrope, Lord Treasurer: the second Richard Earle of Cambridge, brother to Edward Duke of Yorke, and Sir Thomas Gray, a Knight of the North, these had made Edmond Earle of March to sweare vpon a Booke, not to disclose their counsell, and then told him that they thought to slay the King, and to make the said Edmond King, the which if he refused to take vpon him, they would slay him: whereupon, the Earle prayed them to giue him one houres space to take aduisement what was best to doe, which being granted, the Earle went secretly and told the King thereof, who caused them forthwith to be apprehended, and brought before him, where they confessed the treason, for the which on the first of August they were arraigned in the Kings presence, and the same day all three beheaded. The Earle was buried head and all, but the other heads were sent, the one to Yorke, the other to Newcastle vpon Tine, and there set vp. It is to bee noted, that whatsoeuer hath béene reported of the confession of the Earle of Cambridge, certaine it is that hee was indighted by the name of Richard Earle of Cambridge of Conesburghe in the County of Yorke Knight, and with him Thomas Gray of Heton in the County of Northumberland Knight, for that they the twentieth day of July in the third yéere of King Henry the fift, at Southampton, and diuers other places within the Realme had conspired together, with a power of men to them associate, without the Kings licence to haue led away the Lord Edmond Earle of March into Wales, and then to haue procured him to take vpon him the gouernement of the Realme, in case that King Richard the second were dead: and herewith had purposed to set forth a Proclamation there in Wales, in the name of the said E. of March, as heyre of the Crowne against King Henry, by the name of Henry of Lancaster the vsurper, to the end that by such meanes they might, draw the more number of the Kings Liedge people vnto the said Earle. And further to haue conueyed a banner of the Armes of England, and a certaine crowne of Spaine set vpon a pallet, and laid in gage to the said Earle of Cambridge, by the K. together with the said E. of March into the parts of Wales aforesaid. And further that the said Earle of Cambridge, and Sir Thomas Gray had appointed certaine of the Kings liege people to repaire paire into Scotland, and to bring from thence, one Tho. Trumpington, also another resembling in shape, fauour and countenance K. Richard, and Henry Percie, together with a great multitude of people to fight with the K. and him to destroy in open field: besides this, that they had meant to win certaine Castles in Wales, and to kéepe them against the King, and many other treasons they had contriued, as by the inditement was specified, to the end they mought destroy the King and his brethren the Dukes of Bedford, and of Glocester, and other the great Lords and Péers of the Realm. And Henry Scrope of Waltham of Flaxlot, in the County of Yorke, was likewise inuited, as consenting to the premises, so that it appeareth their purpose was well enough then perceiued, although happily not much bruited abroad, for considerations thought necessary to haue it kept husht.

Roger Wall. Tit. Liuius.

King Henry hauing assembled his hoste at Southhampton, as is aforesaid, to the intent to passe the seas, for conueyance of whom, and of his victuals and artillery, were prouided and brought thither for his wages out of Holland and Zealand, shippes, hulkes, and other vessels to such a number, that his whole Nauie at his departing from the land amounted to sixtéene hundred sailes.

K. Henry saileth into Normandy.

On the thirteenth of August the King tooke shipping, and entred the Sea, and on the rising at night arriued at Redicaur in Normandie, which is betwixt Harefleete, and Honfleete, of whose comming, all the Cities, and States of those parts being aduertised, were stricken with great feare. The King, the Dukes of Clarence and of Glocester his Brethren, the Duke of Yorke his vncle, the Earles, Barons, Knights, gentlemen, and Souldiers, cast their Ankers there, and tooke land without any resistance, and the King forthwith falling to the ground vpon his knees deuoutly prayed to God that to his honor he would giue him iustice of his enemies. He had at his landing in his hoste fiue thousand speares, and 24. thousand footemen, besides gunners, and other engineers, artificers, and labourers, of whom the King had great abundance.

Tit. Liuius.

The King gaue to diuers gentlemen the order of Knighthood, and assigned the bearing of his Standards and banners to such men, as he knew to be of great strength and policie. All things being set in good order and array, the King with all his hoste ascended to the top of an high hill there nigh, and there hée rested the next day.

On the 16. day of August, the Duke of Clarence, leader of the forward in good ordinance entred his iourney toward a Towne called Harefleete, distant from Redicaur scarcely three leagues, where he lodged his hoste in a field before the Towne. The King at his comming, lodged himselfe nigh to the first ward, not far from the Towne in a plaine field. The Earle of Suffolke, Michaell at Poole, chiefetaine of the rereward, lodged on the other side before the Towne. Other Noblemen that had the conduct of the two wings, lodged them, one on the right hand, the other on the left hand of the whole hoste. Then the King commanded to be proclaimed through the hoste, that vpon paine of death, all Churches should be kept inuiolate, vnspoyled and vnharmed, that no man should presume to take any vessell or ornament whatsoeuer from the Church, that they should not hurt any man of the Church whom they found without armour, nor any woman or childe, and then forthwith were sent to the townemen of armes in great number, to see the setting thereof, who shortly returned with a great prey of Cattell, and informed the King all his demands.

Proclamation in the K. hoste.

Herfleete is the key of the Sea of all Normandie, and is situated vpon the Seaside, by the riuer Seine, betwixt two hils, and through the middle thereof runneth a Riuer, which not farre from the same Towne entreth into the Séene, and from thence, both those Riuers in one entered into the Sea. Whereas a great and goodly Hauen is, belonging to the same town, which hauen is garnished with the defence of two faire and strong towers: and in the same Hauen at right great Nauie of ships may ride in safety: and if the inhabitants of this towne in close and kepe within the Towne the course of the foresaid River by their sluces, as they may right well doe, then the River riseth without the Towne so high, that it forceloseth all entries to the wals, so that no man may approach the towne on that part. This Towne is also defended with high and thick walls and Towers, and is also enuironed with broad and déepe ditches. To this towne also belongeth only two gates for entries, the one called Caltaurances, the other Hostellier. In this towne, besides the inhabitants thereof, for the defence of the same, were some hundred men of armes deputed in garison, amongst whom were these Lords, Lord Dieuteuille, chiefe Captaine of the Towne, Lord Bianuile, Lord Hequeuile, Lord Harmanuile, Lord Bancourt, Lord Gaillard Bos, and diuers other Lords and men expert in Warre. These Lords caused their people to breake downe the causeway betwixt Hostrentiers and Herefleete, to impaire and hinder the Englishmens passage. Neuertheleste the Englishmen at their comming, by the good conduct of their King, were not so sore oppressed, by breaking of the causeway, but that they came so nigh as to lay their siege before the towne. When the King and all his hoste was come before the towne, all his tents and pauilions were set in the plaine fielde, wherewith that part of the towne was intirely inclosed: he also caused his great hall to be set vpon an hill, at the backe of his hoste, to serue as a Church, there to honor and serue God. This done the King commanding the Duke of Clarence to assiege the towne, he endeuored to conuey his people ouer the riuer, in the village where of he had a great skirmish with the inhabitants of the towne, but at the last his aduersaries being put to flight, recoiled within the walles. The D. conueyed ouer the River all his his ward and company, and because the River diuided the Kings campe from the Dukes, they ordained a ready and sure passage ouer the same riuer, betwixt both the Camps, to the keeping whereof, certaine Gentlemen were appointed, so that their enemies might not endomage them neither by water nor land.

Enguerant. In this meane time befell a great misaduenture to the French men, that were besieged, for the gun-powder and shot that was sent vnto them by the French king, was incountred vpon the sea by the English-men, and taken to their great displeasure and damage.

Tit. Liuius. The King gaue the charge of the field to his Brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester. On the same side and riuer that the King lay, was the Duke of Yorke, high Constable of England lodged with his band. When euery man was placed, the Towne was so straitly alleged, that all entries and issues of the Towne were stopped, so that they of the Towne were in despaire to haue any succour from the Realme of France. Many engins were raised by the English, which in short time should haue beene the destruction of the wals, if they of the towne had not the sooner stopped the riuer of the same Towne within, whereby the water gathered and raised without the towne betwixt the King and the Duke of Clarence, to the semblance of a little sea, which caused the Englishmen to withdraw their gunes; and other engins, whereby at that time the wals were rased. Then the King caused to be made vnder the water three great mines vnto the wals of the towne, which in like manner had beene the cause of their ruine, if the inhabitants had not countermined them, and letted their purpose.

Tit. Liuius. The inhabitants of the town perceiuing themselues thus foresighte assaged, as well by land as by sea, conuersed all their ships within their hauen, and bound them together with chaines and in the two towers that were made for the defence of the hauen, they put certaine garrisons and armed men, who oftentimes attempted to inuade the Kings nauy, but at all times they were by his ships beaten, and constrained to retire still within their Hauen: at the last, the Captaines and inhabitants considering that by such skirmishes (as well vpon the land as vppon the Sea) they gained nothing, tooke this appointment with the King, that if they were not refeued by the French men within certaine dayes limited, they should then deliuer into his hands the Towne, with thirty persons of the greatest and most noble within the towne, such as the King would desire, to be order'd at the Kings pleasure; and all the residue, as well men of warre, as the inhabitants of the same Towne, without armour, and leauing behind them their goods, should freely goe where they would, for the surety of which appointment to be kept, they deliuered vnto the King twelue of their greatest personages for pledges. The Captaines and inhabitants of the Towne seing their day of appointment to approch, and themselues vtterly desperate of any succours of their people, ordained to performe their couenant at their day prefixed, which was the xvii. of September, on which day came Sir Lionell Braquemount, Gouernour of the towne, vnto the King, and kneeling before him, said: Most victorious Prince, behold here the Keyes of this Towne, which after our promise I yeld vnto you, with the Towne, my selfe and my company. Then were brought to the king, the Lord Corcuile, the Lord Gangcourt and other to the number of 30. al the rest of the as well soldiers, as inhabitats, were suffered vnarmed to depart. When the gates of the towne were opened, and that the king approched vnto them, in purpose to enter Harlowne, he descended from his horse with out the gate, and from thence, without hosen or shoes in great deuotion, he went immediately to the Church of Saint Martine, Metropolitane of that towne, and there he made his prayers, and praised God his creator, for his good fortune: then he commanded to be brought before him, all those Lords and gentlemen that were yelded to him for prisoners, whose names he caused to be put in writing, and vpon their othes to yeld themselues prisoners at Calice vpon Saint Martins day next following, and so they were deliuered out of the town of Harflew, at the which day according to their appointment, they came to Calice, where they were receiued as prisoners, and after raunsomed at great finances. After the deliuery of this Towne, the foresaid two Towers that defended the hauen, and resisted the Kings power ten dayes space, at the end whereof, because they were in despaire of succour, yelded them to the King, and all the soldiers and inhabitants both of the Towne and Towers, were suffered to goe freely vnarmed, whither they would. The king constituted Captaine of the Towne Sir Thomas Beauford E. of Dorset his vncle, to whom he also committed two thousand Soldiers, chosen men of his hoste. Then considering that winter drew on, as also the losse of their men by reason of the fire then raigning amongst them, by which infirmity died Michael la Poole, Earle of Suffolke, the Bishop of Norwich, the Lord Beawmont, and others, and of the commons to the number of two thousand and aboue. King Henry created the son of Michael at Poole, E. of Suffolke, who liued not long after.

Tit. Liuius. After King Henry had remained at Harflete fiftéene dayes, after the deliuery of the Towne, and of the Towers, he departed from thence towards Calice, wherof, when his enemies were aduertised, and also by what way her intended to passe, all the people of the countrey, Cities, and Townes were marueilously oppressed with feare, wherefore they fained them to dee nobile places, and other that were apt to warre, tooke them to their hostes, and assembled them together in great number, with no smal company of footemen, and in all that they might they oppressed the English.

The Kings hoste kept an easie pace, without making any hast, and when they approched ched the Towne Eine, their enemies assailed them in the fields with great force and noyse, where on both parties it was foughten fore and bigorously: but the French-men reculed to the Towne, where they were in good sorety. From thence the King departed, and came to a passage of the riuer of Some, which the French-men call Blankebelloke, or Blanchtache. This passage, at the comming vnto it, was fired with sharpe stakes by their enemies, so that they could not passe there, but were constrained to goe further, seeking their passage, vntill they came directly to haue the City of Amiens, and the Castle of Gozby on their left side, where they of the said City began with them a new fight: but they were some forced by the English to returne to their Citie againe. The nineteenth of October the King passed the riuer of Some, at the passage of Vienna, and Bethew court, and went then to lodge him at Pouch-legach, from whence he aduanced him towards the River of Piraumont. In the meane time, the French King and the Duke of Guyen his sonne, then Dolphin, purposing to resist the English-men, came to Roane, from whence, they sent three Herraults to the King of England, to giue vnderstanding that he should not escape without battaile: vnto whom the King answered, All things be done at the pleasure of GOD, I will keepe the right way towards Calais: if our aduersaries doe attempt to disturbe vs in our iourney, wee thinke they shall not doe it without their owne great danger and perill. From thence King Henry remoued to a village called Forceuile, aduancing his hoste towards the River of Piramont, and the next day they passed by the Cheue, and the King lodged that night at Bonyers-leschallon. The next day the King remoued vnto Bangy. The next day late in the night the King came to a village named Agencourt, Enguerant saith Maisenicelles, where they lodged distant from the French hoste not aboue two hundred and fiftie spaces. The French-men fired their banners and standerts with the banner royall, whereof the Constable had the conduct in the field by them deuised and chosen, which was in the country of Saint Paul, in the ground of Agincourt, by which the day following, the Englishmen should passe to goe to Calais.

The battell of Agencourt. Tit. Linham.

The 25. of October, after prayers and supplications of the King, his Priests and people, done with great deuotion, the King of England in the morning very early set forth his hoste in array: he commanded that his Horses and other carriages should bee left in the village where hee had lodged. The order of his field was thus: The middle battell where of the K. was conducte, was set in the midst of the field, directly against the middle battell of his aduersaries. On the right side was the first Battell, and therewith the right wing: and on the left side of the last Battell, and the left wing. And these Battels ioyning nigh together, by the prouidence of God, prouided vnto this King a defensible place for his host, for the village wherein hee was lodged before, defended his hoste from all inuasions on the backe, and the field wherein hee was, was defended on both sides with two small riuers.

This Noble King was armed with sure and right beautifull armour: on his head a bright helmet, whereupon was set a Crowne of gold repleate with pearle and precious stones, marueilous rich: In his shield he bare the armes both of England and France. And thus armed, hee was mounted vpon a goodly great horse, and after him were led certaine noble horses, with their bridle and trappers of Goldsmithes worke, and vpon them also were beaten the armes of England and of France. Thus this victorious King prepared to battaile, encouraged his people to the field that approched at hand.

The night before this cruell Battell, by the aduice and councell (as it is said) of the Duke of Yorke, the King had giuen commandement through his host, that euery man should pursuey him a stake sharpe at both ends, which the English-men fired in the ground before them in the field, to defend them from the oppression of horsemen. The French-men had such confidence in great multitude of their people, and in their great horses, that many of their great Princes and Lords leauing behind them their souldiers, standerts and other ensignes, came towards the Englishmen in right great haste, as if they had beene assured of victorie.

The King of England forthwith aduanced his banners and standerts towards the French host, and he in person with his battaile in the same order wherein hee stood, followed, exhorting and encouraging euery man to Battell, notwithstanding he went to inuade his enemies, yet kept his accustomed order, that is, that the first battell went before, the second battell followed, and the third came immediately after. Hee commanded his Priests to abide in prayers, and diuine supplications, and his heraults in their cotes of armes to attend to their offices. Then euery man fell prostrate to the ground, and committed themselues to God, euery of them take in his mouth a little peece of earth, in remembrance that they were mortall, and made of earth, as also in remembrance of the holy Communion. Thus all their cariages and baggages left behind, onely charged with their harneys, weapons, and stakes, they marched toward their enemies, with great ioyit and noyse. They sounded their trumpets, and stroke vp their drums, which greatly incouraged the hearts of euery man. Their enemies seing them approach, aduanced themselues also, and met them in the fielde, betwixt whom was begunne a maruelous fierce and cruell Battell. The Battell of the English-men was as long as the fielde wherein they fought, which was greatly to their aduantage, for by that their enemies were letted to come vpon them at the sides and backe of the hoste. The Frenchmen had ordained their battels with two sharp fronts, like unto two bowes, which allwayes backeward was broader and broader: their sharpe Battels set upon the English middle ward, intending to have rome through the whole fielde, but the French-men were slaine and wounded by the English Archers, and by the helpe of the stakes, which the English men had fixed before them in the ground, whereby the horsemen were constrained to returne, or else to runne upon the stakes, where many of them were overthrowne and wounded, and many both horses and men slaine. The Battell and fight increased marvellously, by the space of three houres, in all which time no man was taken Prisoner, but an innumerable number were slaine, upon whose dead bodies they that followed were throwne and slaine.

Thus after a long and cruell battell, by the demerits of their great pride there approched no man of the French to battell, but to death, of whom after that an innumerable company were slaine, and that the victory surely remained to the English men, they spared to slay, and take prisoners of the French, both Princes and Gentlemen in great number. In this mortall battell, the Noble King of England never failed his men, for no danger of death, but fought with his enemies with an ardent heart, as a fauntlesse Lyon for his pray, receiving on his helmet and on the residue of his armour, many and great strokes.

In this field, as the puissant Prince Humfrey Duke of Glocester the Kings brother, fought with great courage and force, hee was sore wounded in the bonnches with a swoode, and overthrowne, insomuch, as he lay as halfe dead in the fielde, his head toward the Englishmen, and his feete towards his enemies: upon whom the King having a brotherly compassion, bestrode him, and with most strong battell and labour, not without his owne great perill, like a brother he defended, and succoured his brother from the enemies, and made the Duke to be borne out of the field amongst his owne men.

At the last, the victory obtained, and the great hoste of the French-men overcome, slaine, wounded, taken and vanquished, forthwith an other hoste of Frenchmen no lesse than the first, supposing the English-men to be wearied by their long travell and fight, dispoled them to beginne againe the battell anew. When the English-men (which had many moe prisoners than they were of themselves in number) saw this new field assembled to give them battell againe, fearing in this new fielde, lest they should fight both against their prisoners, and their other enemies, they put to death many of their said prisoners, both noble and rich men, among whom the Duke of Brabant, who at that field was taken prisoner, was one.

Tit. Livius. The prudent K. of England seeing the resemble of his adversaries sent his heraults unto them, commanding them, either forthwith to come to battell, or else immediately to depart the fielde, and if they delayde to depart, or to come to battell, both those of their company already taken prisoners, and also all they that should thereafter bee taken, without mercie or redemption should be put to death: which message when the French-men heard, fearing the strength of the English-men, and also the death, both of themselves, and also of their friends before taken prisoners, with great heaviesse, and with shame, they forthwith departed. Then the King of England being assured of the victorie, gave the greatest laud and prayse to God that might bee.

In this battell were slaine on the French part, the Noble Dukes of Alanson, of Bar, and Bauere, and the Lord Hely, the Lord Labret chiefe Constable of France, the Arch-bishop of Saunce, eight Earles, an hundred & one Barrons, 15. hundred knights, and above 10. thousand of all estates, whereof scarcely fifteene hundred were soulders or labourers, the rest were of coates armour (saith Enguerant:) but Thomas Emham saith, Archbishops, one, Dukes, three, Earles five, Barons, and such like, fourescore and twelve, Knights, fifteene hundred, of Esquires and Gentlemen, seven thousand, whereof hee nameth the Arch-bishop of Saunce, the Dukes of Barbant, Alanson, and of Bauere, the Earle of Nuers, Dampmartin, Marlenes, Grantper, Saunis, and of Dankemontense, the Lord of Bret, Constable of France. Frenchmen slaine.

T. Elmham.

In this battell were taken prisoners of the French-men, the Dukes of Orleance, and of Burbon Arthur Brother to the Duke of Brittaine, the Earles of Vandosme, of Ewe, and Richmount, and Sir Bomcicault Marshall of France, and many other to the number of 1500. Knights and Esquires: And of the English partie were slaine Edward Duke of Yorke, buried at Fodringhey, Michael de la Poole Earle of Suffolke, buried at new Elme, and to the number of an hundred persons in the vantgard, and of all estates in the English partie were not found dead above five hundred in the field. When night approached, the King of England returned with his hoste into the village, wherein they had harboured the night before, wherehe found his horses, and other baggages and carriages that he left behind him there before the field, to bee stollen and carried away by the Frenchmen: where amongst many other Jewels of great price, was stollen away a sword of great value, adorned with gold and pretious stones, which was after given to Philip Earle of Charlops sonne and heyre to John Duke of Brittaine. Frenchmen taken prisoners.

King Henry having gathered his army together, gave thankes to Almightie God for his so happy a victory, causing his Preists, and Chaplaines to sing the Psalme, In Exitu Israel de Aegypto, and commanding every man to kneele downe on the ground at this verse, Non nobis Domine, non nobis, sed nomini tuo da gloriam.

which done, he caused Te Deum, with certaine Anthems to be sung, giving laud and praise to God, not boasting of his owne force or any humane power. This night when the K. sate at his refection in the aforesaid village, hee was served at his bord, of three great Lords and Princes that were taken in the field. That night the King appointed good and sure watches throughout his hoste, for feare of sodaine invasions, but the French-men were utterly divided and gone without making or intending any new businesse, whereby the English men were suffered in peace to take their rest.

On the next day the King with his people entred his journey toward Calice: and as they passed through the fields, where they had fought the day before, they found all the dead bodies dispoyled, as well of their harneise, as of their array, by the inhabitants of the countrey, notwithstanding the bodies that might bee knowne for English-men of any reputation, the King caused to be interred according to their estates, and so continuing his journey, the King came to the Castle of Guines, and from thence he went to his Towne of Calice, with all his hoste and his prisoners, where he was received of his liege men, with great joy and due honour. After the Kings hoste was somewhat refreshed with meate, drinke, and sleepe, the King conferred with his wise counsellers, if it were good now to returne into France, and to pursue his enterprise begun, or els to returne with his hoste into England, there to refresh his people, among whom it was considered that the number of his people was right small, and many of them hurt with the flire, many sore grieved of their wounds which they had received at the field. Moreover, that their long staying at Calcis should cause scarcity of victuals there, whereas otherwise in their owne country the people should at more ease refresh themselves, and also be better cured of their wounds: finally, considering the time had not bene hitherto unfortunate, but that with honor they might returne with great game, which they had conquered, they doubted not, but by the ayde of God, the K. should right well obtaine his desire in time to come, for which causes they all condiscended upon their returne into England.

Then with all diligence the Navie was prepared, and by the Kings commandement, the Lords and great estates of the prisoners of France unto a great number, were brought into that ship, wherein the King was determined to passe the Sea. At this their passage the Sea was marvellously boysterous and rough, insomuch as two of the English shippes were perished in the floods, by reason whereof the French prisoners were so incombred and hurt, that the day of their passage seemed to them no lesse bitter and terrible, than that day wherin they were taken at Agincourt, nay they could not marvell enough, how the King should have so great strengthes, so easily to resist and induce the rage and boysterousnesse of the Sea, without accombrance and disease of his Navie. When the King had passed the Sea, and was come to arrive and to take land at Dower, innumerable people of religion, priests, and Noblemen, and of the Commons came running to mete the King in every way: and when hee was arrived on the 27. day of November, hee above at Dower by certaine dayes, to refresh and rest his Lordes, and his prisoners, after his troublesome passage and from thence he tooke his journey to ride the Citie of London, whereto the Maior of London, with the Aldermen and crafts, to the number of 4. hundred riding in red, with hundred and white, met with the King on the Blacke heath comming from Eltham, and so brought him through London to Westminster, with all his prisoners of France. Arrived at Dower.

The gates and streetes of the Citie were garnished and apparrelled with pretious clothes of Arras, containing the victories, triumphs and princely Acts of the Kings of England his progenitors, which was done to the end that the King might understand, what remembrance his people would to their posterity of these his great victories and triumphes. The Conduits through the City ranne none other but good sweete wines, and that abundantly. There were also made in the streetes many Towers and stages, adorned richly, and upon the height of them sate small children, apparelled in semblance of Angels, with sweete toned voyces singing prayses, and laudes unto God: for the victorious King would not suffer any Ditties to bee made and sung of his victory, for that hee would wholly have the praise given to God: neither would he suffer to be carried before him, nor shewed unto the people his helmet, wherupon his Crowne of gold was broke, and depoyed in the fielde by the violence of the enemie, and great strokes that hee had received, nor his other armour that in that cruell battaile was so sore broken, but as the faithfull constant Champion of God, hee eschewed all occasions of vaine glory, and refused the vaine praises of the people. On the next morrow, the Maior, Aldermen, and 200. of the commoners, presented the King with a 1000. l. in two basons of gold, worth 500. pound.

The first day of December, by the Kings commandement, a great number of the Bishops and Abbots of the Realme, were assembled at London, there to celebrate and keep the exequies for Edward late Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke, and of other both English and French, which died in parts beyond the sea: unto these solemnities came from Harflew, the Captaine of the same Towne, the kings uncle C. of Dorset, who a little before had made a roade into the borders of the Countrey next adioyning, and had put them to slight, and taken prisoners 800.

This yere the King kept his Christmas at Lambeth. 1416.

In the feast of the Purification, seven Dolphins of the sea came up the river of Thamis, and playde there whiles foure of them were hilde.

Halfe-pence of Jenua forbidden.

In a Parliament begun the 15. of March at Westminst. the halfe-pence of Jamua (commonly called Gallow halfe-pence) were forbid to be vsed as lawfull payment among the English people.

In the late warres in France betwéen King Henry the fift of England, and Charles the 7. of France: The French armie being in diuerse, one Captaine La-Hire a French-man was sent to declare vnto the said French-King the estate and affaires of the warre, and how for want of victuals, money, and other necessaries, the French had lost diuers Townes and battailes to the English. The French King being dispased to vse this Captaine familiarly shewed him such thinges as himselfe was delighted in, as his Buildings, his Banquets, faire Ladies, &c. and then asked the Captaine how he liked them: Truste me Sir, quoth the Captaine, speaking his minde freely, I did neuer know any Prince that more delighted himselfe with his losses then you doe with yours.

A carelesse King.

An. reg. 4. The first of May, Sigismond the Emperor landed at Doner, and the seuenth of May, the Maior, Aldermen, and crafts of London receiued him at Black-heath, and the King with his Lords met him at Saint Thomas Waterings, and so brought him through London to Westminster. The Emperour returned out of England the xvi. of August, after hee had laboured but could make no peace betwéne England and France.

Tho. Wal. Rodman beheaded.

John Bence Wol-man, who had in London scattered Scedules full of sedition, was drawne, hanged, and beheaded on Michaelmas day. The viii. day of October, was a Parchmentmaker of Trill-mell stréete, drawne, hanged, and headed, for that he had harboured Sir Iohn Old-castle.

King Henry of England, immediately after his returne from Caleis, sent his Legates to Constance, where was kept the generall councell, as yée haue heard, which with all other Legates, the Emperour being there present, laboured for the vnity and peace of their Mother the Church, and to reforme the Schisme that had long continued of the Popes, which councell tooke effect in this manner. The first deposed all the Popes, by whom the schisme was continued, and they with the Cardinals elected into the Papacie, the Cardinall of Colompne, borne in Rome, and was named Martin the fift, whose armes were a pillar of siluer crowned with gold, in a fielde gules. At this councell, by the assent of all nations there present, it was authorized, and ordained, that England should obtaine the name of a nation, and should be said one of the fiue nations, that owe their deuotion to the Church of Rome, which thing vntill that time, men of other nations, for enuy, had detained and letted.

In the Parliament at London, Thomas Bewfort Earle of Dorset was made Duke of Exeter, and had 1000. l. the peare giuen him.

King Henry kept his Christmasse at Kenelworth, at which time there was treason wrought against him, by a certaine Esquire of the complices of Sir Iohn Oldcastle. 1417.

The morrow after Christmas day, certaine seditious persons spread abroad purposed his raysing against all estates of the Church, almost in euery great house, and hospitall of the Townes of Saint Albans, Northampton, Reading, &c. but no man would be knowne to be the author of them: also one by his counterfeit name, called Fryer Tucke, with many other malefactors, committed many robberies in the countreys of Surrey and Sussex, whereupon the King sent out his writs for their apprehension. Record fryer Tucke.

On Easter-day in the afternoone, at a Sermon in Saint Dunstons in the East of London, a great fray hapned in the Church, whereby though many people were soze wounded, and one Thomas Perwarden Fish-monger, slaine out of hand, wherefore the Church was suspended, and the beginners of the fray (which was the Lord Strange, and Sir Iohn Tussell Knight, through the quarrell of their 2. wiues) were brought to the Counter in the Poultrie: the Archbishoppe of Canterbury caused them to be excommunicate, as well at Pauls Crosse, as in all other Parish-Churches of the Citie. Therri. of Aptill, the said Arch-bishop sate at S. Magnus, to enquire of the authors of that disorder, where he found the fault to be in the Lord Strange and his wife, who vpon the first Lord of May following, in Pauls Church before the Arch-bishop, the Maior of London, and other, submitted themselues to penance, which was iniopned them, that immediately all their seruants should in their shirts goe before the Parson of S. Dunstons, from Pauls to Saint Dunstons Church, and the Lord bare-headed, with his Ladie bare-foted, Reignold Kenwood Arch deacon of London following them, and at the hallowing of the Church, the Ladie should fill all the bellelles with water, and also offer an ornament of tenne pound, and the Lord Strange should offer a pire of fiue pound. An. reg. 5. A fray in S. Dunst. Church. Records of Cant. The Lord Strange and his wife doe pennance.

Carle Douglas of Scotland came into England, and promised amitie to the King, the which he assured by oath and writing sealed, yet notwithstanding hee after turned to the French, at the Battaile of Vernol in Perch, fought by the Duke of Bedford as shall bee shewed.

King Henry prepared his nauie, ordinance, and victuall for his people, and generally all other things behouefull for the warres, he assembled through England such men, as well Dukes, Earles, Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, and commons as he knew were good both for warre and peace: which being done, vpon Saint Markes day the Euangelist, hee tooke his iourney towardes Hampton, in purpose, when the wind and sea were fauourable, to goe into France: he rode through London, till he came at Paules, where he alighted and made Titus Liuius.

made his offering, and in like manner hee offered at Saint Georges in South-warke, and in all his way hee gaue the farewell to euery man, praying them all to pray to God for him.

In this meane time the French men, made couenant with the Citizens of Geane (a Citie in Italy) whereby the Italians were bound, at a certaine price for euery Caricke lented for the French-mens money, to prepare and furnish with armed men, as many of their greatest Carickes as the French should desire, and so prepared they should send them to the ayde of the French-men, against the English-men; many of there Carickes thus prepared, were of marueilous greatnesse, yea greater then euer were seene in those parts before that time, they sayled into the mouth of the Seine, where they strongly alleged Heresiarke by Water, whereof when the King of England was aduertised, he deliuered to goe into them in his owne person, to remoue them from this siege, but from that purpose hee was letted, by the aduise of his counsaile, wherefore he gaue that iourney to the right puissant Iohn, Earle of Huntington, who entred the Nauie, departed from the land, and had such fauourable winde, that in short time he was brought vnto the enemies, who assailed each other by great vigor and strength. Their Ships were grapled and fought together, the more part of a Sommers day, but at the length the Italians oppressed by the strength of the English-men, were vterly discomfited and ouercome, their greatest Carickes, and also the greater part of their men were taken, the residue of the Genowaies seeing their fellowes slaine or taken, were stricken with feare, and their chaines or cables broken, or brewed asunder, they departed their Carickes from the English ships, and escaped by helps of the wind and streame. This victorie obtained, the Noble Earle returned to Hampton, whereof when the King was aduertised, he gaue laud and praising for this victorie vnto God: and for the fauor he inhanced the Earle his Nephewe with honour, and also with rewards, hee had fought with nine Carickes and taken foure of them with their Patrons, and the Admirall of them all that was called the Bastard of Bourbon, with all the treasure that they all should haue béene waged with for a quarter of a yere.

The xviii. day of July the puissant King Henry (his Nauie of 1500. ships being prepared) assembled his armie to passe the Seas, of his owne company and purueyance 16400. armed men, and besides that number came to him to Douer, Lords and Gentlemen with their retinues, and the day and place for the same prefixed: first the D. of Clarence with 240. speares, and 720. Archers in his retinue: and the Duke of Glocester with 100. speares, and 300. Archers, and Sir Carles with 4. hundred and 70. speares, and 1410. Archers, to wit, the Earle of Marche 100. speares, and 300 Archers, the Earle of Warwicke 100. speares, 300. Archers, the Earle of Huntington 40. speares, and 120. Archers, the Earle of Suffolke 30. speares, and 90. Archers, and the Earle of Salisbury 100. speares, and 300. Archers, and after these Earles followed 13. estates of the Realme, with 506. speares, and 1590. Archers, that is to say, the Lord Burgoumy, the Lord Matrauers, the Lord Fitz-Hughe, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Gray, the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Talbot, the Lord E. Courtney, the Lord Boureher, the Lord Rosse, the Lord Loue, the Lord Ferrers of Chartley, the Lord Harrington.

After came 87. Knights, and their retinue, 940. speares, and 2852. Archers. Of Carpenters and other artificers the K. had with him in wages to the number of a 1000. and so the Kings whole hoste besides labourers and Artificers amounted to the number of 25527. fighting men, of whom euery fourth man was a horseman. Those things thus ordered, and the Nauy for their conueyance ready apparelled, the King entred his ship, which was royally and sumptuously adorned: the sale thereof was of purple silke, right beautifully embroydered, both with the armes of England and of France, and this ship they called the Kings chamber. He had also another the second, a Caricke of like apparell, which by the Kings commandement they called the Kings Hall, and these two he ordered to be the principall of all the Nauy. Before he departed the Realme, he constituted Iohn Duke of Bedford his brother, to be protector of his Realme of England in his absence.

On the first day of August, the whole fléete arriued in Normandie, not farre from the Castle of Touque, where the King dubbed fortie eight Knights, such as were worthy of that order. Now; when all the ships were discharged of their carriages, the K. sent them againe into England, except such ships as were deputed for the carriage of guns, and other engins and habiliments of warre.

This being done, the King sent men of armes on horse-backe to spie the situation & strength of the Castle of Honflew, and other nigh vnto those parts, which Gentlemen with warie prisoners returned, and great preyes of beasts. Their enemies stricken with feare, euery man conueyed their goods and beastes into the Cities, Townes, and Castles, not knowing which the King would first besiege: they strengthened their Townes and Walles with stones, guns, and other things necessary for their defence. The King toke his enterprise to assiege the Towne of Touque, whose Castle was marueilously defensible, the assiege whereof was giuen to the Duke of Glocester, chiefetaine of the Kings auant guard, who constrained the French-men so soze, what with assaults, with gunnes and other engines, that within short time, to wit, the fourth day of the fréate, and the ninth day of August, they yeomsed to yéeld the Castle to the Duke, if the same were not shortly relieued by the French: but when they heard no word of succour, they yéelded the Castle to the King, and he made Sir Castle of Touque taken by the English.

John Kikeley Captaine there.

Caſtle of Dumbelliers ſeized to the Engliſh.

Alſo the Earle of Salisbury conductor of the Kings ſecond battell whiles the Duke of Gloceſter, aſſieged the Caſtle of Conque, wanne the Caſtle of Dumbelliers, and put out the Frenchmen thereof, which Caſtle ſo taken, with all that belonged thereunto, the King gaue to the ſame Earle. And thus this Noble Earle was the firſt that had any land giuen vnto him of the KINGS liberalitie in this Conqueſt.

K. Henry beſerged Caen.

The Earle Marſhall was ſent to the Caſtle of Louers, which in thoſt time he ſubdued, and after it was giuen to him be the King.

The eighteenth day of Auguſt, the King placed himſelfe with his Army before the Citie of Caen, on the South ſide neere vnto the Monaſtery of Saint Stephen, and the Duke of Clarence the Kings brother was ſent before with one thouſand horſemen to ſcape the ſuburbes of the Towne, that the Townſmen ſhould not burne them, the Duke thus lodged on the North ſide, by the Monaſtery of Nuns of the holy trinitie: the Earle Marſhall lay on the left hand of the King, and the Lord Maltrauers hard by him, and by him were placed the Lords Talbot and Vrſtreule: and next to them the Lords Neuill and Willoughby. On the right hand of the King lay the Earle of Warwicke and the Lord John Grey, and by them the Earles of Huntington and of Salwbury, and the Lord Gren-Cornewall.

The Kings Armie thus placed and ſet in order: the Abbey of Saint Stephen being manned with Frenchmen, when they ſaw themſelues too weake to reſiſt the Kings force, they tooke and carried away both victuailes and Jewelles of the houſe, and brought them into the Towne next adioyning, and deuiſed how they might ſet the Abbey on fire: but a certaine Monke of the place boldly put himſelfe in jeopardy in the dead ſeaſon of the night, to creep on handes and feet till he came to the D. of Clarence, whom he found lying in compleate harneſſe, in a garden vpon the graſſe, with his head vpon a ſtone, whom he beſought to preuent the ruine of his place, which elſe ſhould be deſtroyed. For, ſaid he, it doth ſpecially pertaine to you to preſerue our Monaſtery, which are deſcended of the K. which founded our place, builded it, and indued it with poſſeſſions, wherefore take mine aduiſe and I will bring you into the place, and the Duke following the Monks counſell, take ſcaling ladders, and came to the ſide of the Abbey, which the Monke knew was not manned. The Duke hauing by this meanes gotten the place, brought the King into it. Not farre diſtant from this place was another monaſtery of women, right ſtrong and defenſible, which alſo that worthy Duke had receiued vnder his tuition.

The fourth day of September at the breake of the day, the King cauſed all his trumpets to be ſounded, and forthwith the ladders were raiſed to the walles of the Towne, they fell to ſcaling them with great diligence, but many of them were caſt backe-wardes into the Ditch, their ladders with them: the French caſt great ſtones vpon the Engliſhmen, they powred on their heads ſcalding water, molten lead, boyling pitch, and oyle, all which could not make the Engliſhmen forſake the aſſault, amongſt whom Edmond Springes lately made Knight, in his armour went vpon the walles of Caen, and fought very ſore, bothgiuing and receiuing many wounds, and yet at length was ouercome and yeld. Notwithſtanding the Kings men ceaſed not to aſſault and ſet vpon the enemies ſo fiercely, on that one ſide, that they that were on the other ſide the Towne to keepe and defend the ſame, were forced to leaue their ſtanding, and to come to that ſide that the King aſſaulted. And thus when that ſide of the Towne was voyd of defence, the Duke of Clarence, in the place which was thoughtmoſt ſafe, ſcaled the walles and came vpon the backes of the Frenchmen, which ſo ſodainly aſtonied them, that they knew not whether it were better to goe on forward againſt the King, or to turne backe to withſtand the Duke.

Caen in Normandy ſwon by K. Henry.

Thus great deſtruction and ſlaughter was made of the Frenchmen, for the King meeting them in their forward, and the Duke of Clarence comming on the Rereward, tooke all hope of ſafegard from them, and thus the King gotte the Towne, and entered the ſame by the gates, that the Duke had opened for him. After which entry of the King, he went with great deuotion to the principall Church of the Towne being of Saint Peter, there to giue laudings and prayſes to the Almighty God, for the obtaining of this ſo great a victorie. All they that intended to prayſes were maruelouſly inriched, for the inhabitants of that Towne were men of great ſubſtance: but there was no man ſo hardie that durſt preſume to robbe any Church, for feare of the Kings Iuſtice which was extreame in that caſe, no women in the Towne were rauiſhed by the Engliſhmen, but ſhortly after the King commaunded all women and children to be auoyded out of the Towne, and ſo the Towne was inhabited of new poſſeſſors. The King made Sir Gilbert Vmtreuile Earle of Ayme, captaine there and Sir Gilbert Talbot, and Sir Iohn Popham Bayliffes. Neuer theleſſe the Caſtle of Caen was not yet gotten, they held it three weekes after the taking of the Towne. After the taking of this Towne of Caen, the ſiege yet enduring before the Caſtle, the Puiſſant Prince the Duke of Glocester, with his battell before Bayeux, they of the Towne and caſtle yelded vnto him.

The 20. day of September the Caſtle of Caen was deliuered vp to King Henry: and in thoſt time the Engliſhmen had taken the citie of Liceux, and the caſtle of Pewbr: and not long after all the fortifications, were it Town, Caſtle, or City, within a great circuit about them, were taken and reduced to the Kings obeyſance.

Whileſt theſe things were in doing in Normandie, the fauourers of Sir John Old-caſtle began begunne to rage in England, who with great proffers and promiſe of money, ſtirred vp the Scots to inuade the Realme in the Kinges abſence, affirming that the ſame would be eaſily wonne, and it was ſayd that Sir Iohn Old-caſtle talked with William Dowglas the Scot at Pontfract, promiſing him a great ſumme of money, to perſwade the people to come with him, and to bring with them, him, who was falſely called King Richard, and to ſet him out as King. Alſo indentures, and other writings were found, made betwixt Sir Iohn Old-caſtle and the Duke of Albany, in the which the Scots were inuited to beſiege Rorbrough and Berwike: whereupon the duke of Albany beſieged Berwike by water and land on each ſide: and the Earle Dowglas did alſo beſieg Rorbrough tarrying there 15. dayes, vnderminting to ouerthrow the walles, but it happned at the ſame time Thomas Beauford duke of Exceſter, came to Biddington vpon deuotion to that place, who ſtraight wayes aſſoone as he heard tidings thereof, went into thoſe parts, gathering by the way as he went men of armes and Archers. On the other ſide Iohn Duke of Bedford protector of the Realme, and other Nobles, to wit, Ralph Earle of Weſtmerland, and Henry Percy Earle of Northumberland, with 6000. warriers, the Arch-biſhoppe of Yorke Henry Bewer, which for great age might not indure to ride vpon an horſe, cauſed himſelfe to be brought to the Engliſh hoſte in his chaire, there to comfort and encourage the hearts of the people, that there ſhould more ardently defend their Countrey, his Clearge being there with him, and other, remoued thoſe ſieges: for the Scots in the night leauing their tents, ladders, and other engins, with ſhame returned in Scotland.

The Scots beſieged Berwike & Rorbrough.

When theſe things were in good ſuretie toward the North, the Duke of Exceſter with a choſen company of men of warre, tooke his ships, and ſayled into Normandie, where he landed, and tooke his iourney towards Roane to the Kings, in the which iourney, hee wan the City of Gyſors.

The Lantus

King Henry hauing deputed in all his townes and forces, Captaines and gouernours, into whoſe hands all the French men that ſhould returne into the Kings obeyſance, ſhould giue their othes of true allegiance. The firſt of October he departed from Caen with his people, leauing behinde him a ſufficient garriſon, and tooke his iourney to the Caſtle of Courſey which on the third day after was yelded vnto him. The 6. of October he went to aſſiege Argentine, which towne was very defenſible and ſtrong with a Caſtle of great ſtrength, but the inhabitants of this towne anſwered the Kings Heraulds, that if they were not ſuccoured by the Frenchmen by a certaine day limited, they would deliuer both the Towne and Caſtle vnto the King vnder condition, to depart with their goods: and when the time limited was come, the Towne and Caſtle were deliuered. After this, daily reſorted to the King much people of Normandie, to do fealty vnto him, and to liue vnder his Empyre. The city of Sees which was right well peopled, and wherein were two Abbots marueilous ſtrong and defenſible, yeelded vnto the King: likewiſe many other Townes in that Prouince yeelded them vnto the K. without aſſault or battell. Theſe things thus done, the King take his voyage toward Alanſon, to recouer into his dominion the Towne of Semule, in which iourney hee ſent a great part of his hoſt to 2. ſtrong Abbeis, whereof the one was called Bonnitunne, and the other Effey, which, if they had made reſtrance, hee commanded to bee taken by force, but they ſubmitted themſelues to the Kings authoritie. The King came to Alanſon on the 15. of October, where he firſt cauſed his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester to pitch his tents before the Caſtle, & the reſt of the towne himſelfe aſſieged. This Towne and Caſtle was likewiſe yelded to the King in manner as the reſt. The Engliſh men after this tok the Towne of Boloine, and the Towne and Caſtle of Freſney: and ſhortly to recount, all the countrey by a great circuit, cities, townes and caſtles were brought vnder the Kings ſubiection. I this time, the Duke of Britteine accompanied with many great eſtates of his countrey, came to K. Henry, with whom he accorded a peace from the 17. day of October, vntill the laſt day of September, in the yere following. The Dolphine of France alſo deſired to treat with the King of England for peace, to whoſe Ambaſſadors the King appointed the Towne of Conque, whereunto they might ſafely reſort for the ſame treaty, but there was no good done.

The King beſieged Phalbeys, which the French, to their power reſiſted right manfully, and made with them many battailes, and ſkirmiſhes: but in the end the inhabitants, ſeeing the Engliſhmen more coueious of honour then weary of paine, made couenants with the King. That if by the ſecond day of January they were not holpen or reſcued from the ſiege, they ſhould freely deliuer into the King their Towne. In this meane time was taken in England Sir Iohn Old-caſtle, in the territories of the Lord Powes, not without danger and hurt of ſome that tooke him: neither could hee himſelfe be taken before he was wounded. At the which Parliament time all the eſtates of the Realme were called to a Parliament at London, there to prouide the K. of a ſubſidie and aide of money, who tooke great paines beyond the Seas. Theſe Lords and other when they heard tell that the publike exchequer was taken, they agreed all, not to diſſolue the Parliament vntill he were examined, and heard to anſwere in the ſame: wherefore the Lord of Powes was ſent to fetch him vp with power, who brought him to London in a litter, wounded, and alſo a Clearke with him that was of counſell in all his ſecrets. As ſoone as the ſaid Sir Iohn Old-caſtle was brought into the Parliament before the Duke of Bedford, Regent & gouernour of the realme, and the other eſtates, his inditement was read before him, of his facible inſurrection againſt the King in Saint Giles fielde, and other treasons by him committed, the question was asked how he would excuse himselfe, and shew why hee should not be deemed to die: but he seeking other talke, began to preach of the mercies of God, and that all mortall men that would bee followers of God, ought to preferre mercie aboue iudgement, and that vengeance pertained only to the Lord, and ought not to be practised by them that worthily God, but to be left to God alone: with many other words to detract the time, vntill the chiefe Iustice admonished the Regent not to suffer him to spend the time so vainely, in molesting of the nobles of the Realme: whereupon the Earle of Bedford Regent commanded him to answere formally vnto the matter laid to his charge. The said Sir Iohn being thus urged, at the last after deliberation taken, he said, it is the leaſt thing that I account of, to be iudged by you, as of mans iudgement: and againe, he began not to talke, but nothing to the purpose, vntill the chiefe Iustice commanded him againe to answere finally, and to informe them if he could, Answere of Sir Iohn Oldcastle. why he should not suffer death. To the which he stoutly answered, that he had no Iudge amongst them, so long as his liege Lord King Richard was aliue, no in the Realme of Scotland, which answere when he had made, because there needed no further witnesse, hee was commanded to be drawne and hanged vpon a gallowes, and to be burned, hanging vpon the same, which iudgement was executed vpon him on the xiiii. day of December in S. Giles field, where when many honourable persons were present, the last words that he spake, was to Sir Thomas Erpingham, admiring him, that if he saw him rise from death to life againe, the third day, he would procure that his sect might be in peace and quiet: he was hanged by the necke in a chaine of iron, and after consumed with fire.

1418. King Henry kept his feaſt of the Nativitie of Christ at Vaiaur in Normandy, where when the day limited was come, they of Pharois, with gates open deliuered the Towne to the King, and shortly after the Castle was yelded to him also.

The D. of Clarence with his armed power conquered in this time the Townes and castles of Harecourt, Fagnon, Mewit, Caumpise, Coneton and diuers other, and also the strong Abbey of Bikilroun, all which places, the mightie Duke, with assieges, assaults, oppressions, and large promises, especially obserued, in short time hee subdued, to the Kings Empire.

The Duke of Glocester was sent to the Ile of Constantine, in the first entry of which ouney, he obtained the strong Castle of Cauey, from whence he went to the Towne and Castle of Aire, the inhabitants whereof yelded them with all their goods, to liue vnder the Kings obedience: the Castle of Mouney yelded to the Duke: the Towne of Lew, the Castle of S. Sauiour le Vicount, Valeiges, Breckcourt, & Mhy: all these submitted them to the Duke for the King.

King Henry during this time, sent of his owne company the Earle of Huntington to suruey certaine defensible places, which in short time he manfully reduced vnder the Kings obeysances. The King sent also the Earle of Warwike with another company of men of warre, to assiege the Castle of Donfront, which Castle vnto him was deliuered on the 22. day of June.

When the Duke of Glocester (after he had done with the King) had repised his iourney towards Sharbrough, the Captaine of the same hauing knowledge of his purpose, and other Noblemen that were deputed by the French-men, for the defence of that place, assembled out of all parts the strongest men of warre, in marueilous great number, for the resistance of the Englishmen, and for the defence of the Towne: the Duke approached nigh vnto the Towne, but ere vnto he laid his siege, but not in all places, for the inhabitants had broken the bridge without the Towne, whereby the Englishmen were depriued of their passage ouer.

Now to returne to the King, who had persevered the whole Lent, and also the solemnitie of Easter in prayers, fastings, vigils, almes-deedes, and other workes of mercy, within the towne of Vaiaur: from whence after Easter he went to Caue, where he solemnized the feaſt of Saint George, at which feaſt he made 15. Knights of the Bathe, fiue of them were Sir Lewes Robsart, Sir Roger Saluine, Sir Iohn Stewart, Sir Iohn Shotebroke, and Sir Iohn Montgomery, whom he sent to beliege diuers places thereabouts. This being done, hee deliuered to go to Roane, the chiefe and principall Citie of Normandie, notwithstanding that his company was greatly minished by the absence of the Duke of Glocester, that then lay at Sharbrough, as is afore shewed, and of the E. of Warwicke that then besieged the castle of Donfront. Neuertheleſſe the King departed from Caue the ninth of June, and take his voyage withall his people towards the citie of Roan: in which iourney, because it was not farre out of his way, he first laid siege to the Towne of Louars, and compelled them within to yeld to him vpon conditions, on the eucn of S. Iohn Baptist.

Then the King on the 22. of June, remoued his armie towards Pontlarche, where he laid his siege on the other side of the Towne, by the middle whereof, the riuer of Seine hath his course, but could haue no passage ouer thether to lay siege on the other side; for the bridge which was without the Towne was defended with a strong Tower and a garrison: but King Henry commanded to make boats of wickers, and those to bee closed in hralls skinnes, by which boates on the 31. of July, the Duke of Clarence with his company passed ouer secretly in great number, and then besieged the other side of the Towne: but because the riuer of Seine diuided his hoste, whereby if either part should haue need of other, they could not come together for the River, the King caused to bee made so many small square boates of the wicker aforesaid, that being tyed together, and cast into the riuer, hee made of them a bridge. When the inhabitants and garrisons perceiued themselues thus enuironed in all parts, they agreed with the K. that if within fiftene dayes they were not deliuered from this siege, they should deliuer to the King the Towne and Castle, and when the day was come, they performed promise: and this was the first bridge ouer the riuer of Seine that the King subdued to his power.

K. Henry besieged Roane.

After the King had thus obtained that bridge ouer the River of Seine, and that there was none other riuer or flood might let his iourney, with all the haſt hee might, hee entred his iourney towars Roane. The Citizens hearing the approch of their enemies, and fearing leſt they should be lodged in the suburbs, which were much larger then the Citie was within the walles, and was also much replenished with Monasteries, Churches, and Towers, burned the same, and made all euen with the ground. To this Citie on the 30. day of July this victorious King approched, against whom came the Citizens with their garisons and men of warre, where the more part of all that day they continued in battell, and fought sore on both parts, but the French-men were faced to seeke their succour within the walles of the Citie, whom in their recoile the King pursued still before the Citie, where he ordered his siege in this manner. First, the King with a Noble company of young and hardie menne lodged himselfe before the gate of S. Hilarie. The Duke of Clarence with his power was lodged before the gate of Caulx. The Duke of Excester, after he was come to the King, was lodged with his people before the gate of the Castle, called Beauuice. Earle Marshall was lodged before the gate called Martenuile. The Earle of Warwicke, after he was come from the castle of Donfrount, was lodged vpon the hill, where the strong Monastery of S. Katherine was. The Earles of Salisbury and Huntington, were lodged there vpon the other side of the riuer of Seine: vpon whom their enemies made many assaults: and because the riuer of Seine diuided the English hoste in two parts, the King caused to bee made a strong bridge of timber ouer the same riuer, that when need should require, they might haue free passage on foote and horse: and because their enemies should not approach vnto it, with their Ships or gallies, the King caused to be made a great chaine to be drawne ouer the riuer, betwixt the Citie and the bridge. At that time the King of Portugale cousin to the King of England, sent a Nauie of ships well manned vnto the Kings aid, whom the King commanded to lie betwixt the City and the Sea, to enclose the Citie from all succours by Water. The Towne of Caudebecke fearing the danger of the time, couenanted with the King of England, that when the Citty of Roane were taken and deliuered into the Kings obeysance, they in like manner would yeld them to him, without any assault, and vnder the same appointment accoyed with the King, fourteene other defensible Towns and Castles that were nigh borderers vnto Roane. After many cruell battels and assaults, the Cittizens fearing at length to be famished, daily put out of the Citie a great number of poore people and other, but the hunger increasing, they were forced to eat their Horses, Dogges, Cats, Rats, and Mise: and when such and other like thinges were consumed and eaten, then the plague of famine entred the Citie, so that the people for default of reliefe died, that the liuing might scarcely bury the dead, whereby that Noble Citie was brought into so much misery, that it was not lesse marueil than pittifull to heare.

In this meane time during this Siege of Roane, the Duke of Excester besieged the City of Cherops: also about the fourthy of August King Henry had three marueilous victories in Normandie. The first was that 300. Englishmen tooke three great Lodes at a place called Billebuse, and put to flight 1800. persons besides. The second was 400. of his enemies entred within the suburbes of the Towne of Cheresens, and 11. Englishmen chased them away and tooke twelue of them, and slew twelue, and tooke fortie of their horses. The third was, the enemies would indeed haue taken the Towne which was called Louers, but the Captaine of the same with an hundred of our men went out against 1500. of them, and ouercame them, and take 180. Gentlemen of the enemies. About this time also Captaine de la Bouche take the Towne of Pontoyse by Paris.

When the Citizens of Roane, perceiued themselues maruelously afflicted by famine, (as is before shewed) and also to bee in despaire of succour, from the French-men, now after halfe a yeres siege and more, vpon certaine conditions, they deliuered to the King of England their Citie, Castle, Tower, Abbeyes, Churches, Houses, Citizens, Captaines, Garrisons, and generally all things that were within the Citie, whatsoeuer they were. The xix. day of January, there had dyed within this Citie (as was said) for default of victuals during this siege, more than thirty thousand people. This Noble King the rather to relieue this oppressed Citie, ordained the same to be the chiefe chamber of all Normandie, and ordained his Exchequer, his Treasurie, and his coinage to be kept in the same; he also edified a strong Tower behinde the Castle. Whilest the King ordered his businesse at Roane, he sent diuers Lords with strong puissance of people, to receiue the Castles and Townes bordering vpon Roane, amongst whom the Duke of Clarence in short time reduced to the King, the mighty Castle of Galiard, the Towne of Vernon, the Towne of Maunt, the Castle of Bandoncunt, and many other strong places and holds.

the towne of Mounstrell de Oistlers, the towne of Crewe, the Towne of Gurney, the new Castle, and generally all the places in that port.

This yere Qu. Ioane mother to the Duke of Britaine, and the Kings step-mother being defamed of some wicked practise, by Witchcraft or Sorcery, that shee had deuised the K. death, by the counsell of Iohn Randolph Doctor of Diuinitie, of the order of the Fryars minors, then of the conent of Shrewsbury, her confessor, forfeited all her lands and goods by Parliament; and hauing all her seruants put from her, was committed to the custodie of I. Pellam, and by him sent to the Castle of Leeds in Kent, he appointed nine seruants to attend her, and to bring her into the Castle of Pemsey, there to bee governed vnder his prouidence. Fryar Randolph, being apprehended in the Ile of Jersey, was conueyed to Thirlyngthe and there imprisoned, and from thence was sent to the tower of London, where at length to wit, in the yere of Christ, 1429. on the 6th of June, hee was flame by the Parish of S. Peters Church in the tower, talking out at words with him, and after Qu. Ioane was deliuered of her imprisonment.

King Henry sent his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester, accompanyed with the Earle Marshall, and a great power of armed men, to lay siege before the Towne and castle of Ivory, which towne after many assaults and battels the Duke tooke by force: but the Castle therof was not yelded, till the thirteene of May. The King also sent the Earle of Huntington with a power from Mount, to the Towne of Pontois, by which, if it were taken, he might haue the more sure and safe passage to Paris. Those which were sent, at the entry of the night were come nigh vnto Pountois, where, in a Wood they left their horses, and that done, in the darknesse of the night they went on foot to the ditches of the Towne, which then were drie, where part of them lay on the bankes of the ditches, with their ladders in their hands ready to scale the walls, when time would serue, and the residue lay them in the vines, where they might be ready to enter the Towne at the opening of the gates. At the breake of the day, they of the Towne changed their watch, at the which change, the Walles were left without watches for the time. But the English-men seing time to accomplish their intent, rapsed their ladders, and scaled the walles, and by that means entred the Towne: where, some of them forthwith brake the gate, and made entry for the rest of their company, which when the Garrisons of the Towne perceiued, as men amazed, they turned them selues to slight. But not long after, they armed them, and assayled their enemies, but to the English-mens great auaile, the Earle of Huntington with his company set spurs to their horses, and hasted them to the succour of their first company, whereby the French men as all discouraged and in despaire to saue the Towne, at the sight of these new resreues that came to the Englishmen, leauing behinde them all their riches & substance, endeuoured themselues to escape by slight, and so the townes of Pointois, auoided of all French men, was free to the English. After these enterprises thus atchieued, the King with all his company came to the Towne of Pointois, where hee abode a certaine time, from whence hee sent the Duke of Clarence with a chosen power of men to Paris, to view the situation & strength therof, before which Citie, when hee had tarried certaine dayes, and had seene all that him liked, and that none of the Frenchmen would issue out of the City to fight with him, hee returned to the King, and ascertained him of all that he had seen.

On the xviii. of August, King Henry with all his hoste departed from Pointois. And Wokmuillers yelded. because the Castle of Wokmuillers had done certaine inhumane cruelties to the kings lawes that bordered thereabout, to the intent to repelle their malice, the King lodged himselfe not farre from thence, & sent certaine to assault the same castle, where both the inhabitants and garrisons feared so much the King, that as men desperate of all succours, they yelded both castle and goods. And then all the Townes, Castles, and holdes within a great circuite, without abiding battaile, yelded them to the King: but that strong and mighty Towne of Gysors, whereof the Castle is much more defensible than the Towne, would not submitte to the King, wherefore on the last day of August, the King with all his hoste tooke his iourney thither, and enclosed the Towne with his pauilions and tents. Betwixt him and them of the Towne, were many that pe battailes and cruell assaults, but at all times the Englishmen put the Frenchmen to slight, wherefore the inhabitants and garrisons of the Towne and Castle deliuered the same to the king in the xviii. day of September.

In the meane time the Dolphin assembled Enguerant.
an host of 20000. men at Monstrey Faulcien, in purpose to fight with the English-men, & for the same by his letters he sent to Troyes in Champeigne for the Duke of Burgoine, desiring him to haue his company in his iourney. At whose request the same Duke incontinent vpon sight of his letters, and vpon the suretie of the Dolphins oath, falsely to goe and come, came vnto him to the place afore said, where notwithstanding his former oath, against both Gods Law and mans law, the Dolphin caused him at his comming, abhominably and cruelly to bee murdered. After whose death the Dolphins seruants dispoiled him of his array, and cast his naked body into a vile pit. The Duke being thus murdered, Phillip his Sonne, who had married the Lady Micquiell the Dolphins sister, entred into all his Fathers possessions: and shortly after, hee ioyned in amity with the king of England, promising him in marriage his sister in law the Lady Katherine, and to bee heire to king Charles: king Henry promised to deliuer to him so many of thew as were pitty of his Fathers murthering, as came into his hands, and the Dolphin should bee for euer excluded Titus Liuius.

excluded from all title to the crown of France. The Earle of S. Paul was Gouernour of Paris although he were but xviii. yeres of age, hee gouerned the Citie wisely, to the Duke of Burgoines behoofe, who had put him into that charge. The Dolphin would haue excused himselfe of the murder lately committed, but could not, for he was ruled and governed by them that had committed it. Emonde diuers of them had their friends killed, in the murder of Paris, when the Earle of Erminake and the other prisoners were killed there, and therefore to be reuenged on the Duke they cared not in what danger they put the Realme, nor in what blame the Dolphin came, who notwithstanding hee put them from him, and they went out of the Realme, all this would not appease the matter, nor reconcile the Dolphin to the Duke Philip.

King Henry with his whole Armie returned to Maunts, where, of his hoste hee made three battailes, whereof the one hee deliuered to the D. of Glocester, whom hee sent to subdue the strong towne called S. Germaines, which after many battailes and skirmishes, in short time was yelded to him for the King. The second battaile he sent to the Castle of Mount Dye, which in like maner fearing the English mens puissance, yelded them to the King. And with the third of the said battailes, the King in his owne person went to allege Meulance which aboue all other was most strong. The situation of this Towne was in a plentious Ile, betwixt two armes of the Sea, no man mought approch nigh to assault it by land, but onely by the bridge: and by water no beseell might come nigh vnto it, for the infinite multitude of piles that were fixed and hid in the riuers. This Towne was also defended with high and strong walles, within it also there were people in great number, as well of the inhabitants as of garrisons of men of warre, that were purposely deputed for the defence thereof. Wherefore the King considering the strength, and defence of this place, assembled diuers ships and other small vessels, wherein by right great labour, he first auoided and cleansed the riuer of the foresaid piles, which being done, he made all those vessels to be fastened together with chaines, and then he commanded to be made certaine small Castles & Towers of timber, which when they were finished, he entended by strength of men in those ships to assault the walles of the Towne, but the garrisons and inhabitants being feared at the sight of these towers, before they were all finished, they sent their Captaines to the King to treate with him for peace, which was granted them vpon condition, that if they were not ayded by the last of Nouember, by the French-men, they should deliuer the Towne to the King, and when the day came they according to couenant deliuered the Towne to the King, and then the King returned to Maunt, and sent the Duke of Excester to besiege the Castle of Galiard, which to him was yelded the twenty of December.

King Henry, solemnized the feast of the Natiuity of our Lord, in the City of Roane: hee sent the Earle of Salisbury to take the Towne of Fresca, which in short time was deliuered to him. The Earle Marshall, and the Earle of Huntington, were sent to subdue the Prouince of Shenen, where the Dolphine had deputed 8 Captains with a strong power, which Captaine met the two Earles, and gaue them battell, but the Englishmen remained Conquerours, and thus the two Earles subdued the Prouince of Shenon, without any great resistance. 1422.

Whilest these and, many other victories were atchiued, the King continuing in the City of Roane, landing God, the Ambassadours of Charles, King of France, and of Philippe, Duke of Burgoygne, came to treate of peace, where, of the King they were honorably receiued, and he sent backe with them to the French King, and the Duke of Burgoygne, his Ambassadors, with full authority to conclude this long sought peace, of which Ambassadours, the Principall was the Earle of Warwick in compuny of certaine Bishops, and other discrete men, accompanyed with a strong power of armed men. These Ambassadours were first brought to the Duke of Burgoygne, because hee was next vnto them, and after they tooke their iourney, vntill they came to the City of Troys, where they found King Charles of France, with the Queene his wife, and that beautiful Ladie Katherin their Daughter: And entering into communication of peace with the Kings Councell of France, the way of peace was found betwixt those two Kings by aliance, that is to say, by a marriage to be made betwixt the most victorious King of England, and the Lady Katherine, daughter to the King and Queene of France: but because they perceiued that many things might not be done, without the presence of the King, as well for the apposition of their Seales, for the ratifying of the Articles of this peace, as for the solemnization of the matrimony, and also that King Charles was a man of many yeeres, they condescended that the King of England at a certaine day amongst them limited, should come to the foresaid Citty of Troyes, with as great an armed power as he would: at which day appointed, if hee failed to be there, all his communication of peace should be as voyde. These things thus concluded, and set downe in writing, the Earle of Warwicke, with his company returned to the King of England, to whom they declared by order, what they had done, who was content in all things to perfourme their appointments, and prepared for his iourney. Hee called together Knights, men of armes, and Archers to the number of sixteene thousand, of them the more part were Archers: and when the time came, that hee would depart towards Troys (as hee was customed) hee deuided his people in three parts and battells, and two wings, and in that manner the eighth day of May, hee entred his iourney towards Troys in Campaigne where hee was mette by the Duke of Burgoygne accompanyed with many Noblemen, Acts reg. 8.

men, two leagues without the Towne, whom hee receiued with great honor and due obseruance. Then this most victorious King accompanied both of English and French-men of euery estate and degree, entered the foresaid City of Troys, the streets whereof without any abiding hee passed vntill hee came to the Kings pallace, where King Charles and the Quéene his wife abode the comming, of whom he was receiued goodly and after a Princely manner. When the King of England was thus royally receiued, after the due reuolutions on his part made to King Charles and the Q. hee departed from them, and by the Duke of Burgoine and other great estates as well of England as of France, he was conueyed to his lodges. The Cittie was diuided into two parts, whereof the one halfe was assigned to the French men and Burgonians, and the other halfe to the English-men: and because that part assigned to the English-men, sufficed not to receiue them all within the walles, but that a great part of them must be lodged in the suburbes, the King of England, because his people lie on that part should haue free concourse together, he caused the wall on that part of the City where he was lodged, to be cast downe to the ground. K. Charles gaue authozitie and power to Isabel his wife and Quéene, to Philip Duke of Burgoine, and to certaine other of his Counsell vlterarily to conclude the peace with King Henry, for him, and for his Realme of France, vnder such conditions as should be deuised, and also to proue, ratifie, and confirme the same, by oath solemnised in the person of King Charles, without fraud, in all things to be obserued vnto the said King Henry, his heyres and successors, by the said King Charles his heyres & successors, &c. In the 21. of May, in the vi. yeere of the raigne of King Charles, in the Cathedrall Church of Troys, the King of England with the Duke of Clarence his brother, and other Dukes, Earles, Bishoppes, Barons, Lords of estate, and other prelates of England, and Isabel the Quéene of France, with the Duke of Burgoigne, and other of the Kings Counsell of France, and in that part his speciall Commissioners, for and in the name of the King of France, and also for themselues, and in their proper names, in a great assembly of the three estates of France, vulgarly called their Parliament, concluded a peace betwixt the two Realmes of England and France, and the same ratified and approued with the conditions and Articles that in part shall follow, whereupon writings were made, sealed with the broad seale of the said King Charles. Then immediately Isabel the Quéene and the Duke of Burgoigne, in the name of King Charles, made a solemne oath vpon the holy Euangelists that the same Charles his heyres and successors should obserue and kéepe, without fraud, the peace made betwixt the two Realms. And the same oath the Quéene and the Duke of Burgoigne in their own names and for themselues, their heires and successors, made vnto the King for him, his heyres and successors, and after them as many as were there present both of the K. Counsell, and also of the Parliament, as Bishops, Lords, Knights, and Commons, made the same oath to the King. And the 23. and 24. day of May the Chancellor of France, and many other Lords, Bishops, Prelates, and Noble-men gaue the like faith and oath to K. Henry of England. Roger Wall.

The third of June, being present the Counsell of King Charles, Isabel Quéene of France, the Duke of Burgoigne, and the Parliament of France, and also the Duke of Clarence, with many Bishops, Lords, and Knights of England, with King Henry, the Matrimonie was solemnized betwixt the most victorious K. Henry of England, and the excellent and the glorious Lady Katherine, daughter to Charles of France and Isabel his Quéene. The peace that was confirmed betwixt the said two K. and their Realmes was read as followeth.

King Henry from now-forth during the life of King Charles, shall not name or write himselfe King of France, nor shall not suffer himselfe of his people so to bee named or written. After the death of King Charles, King Henry shall bee King of France peaceably with his heires and successors. And because K. Charles by reason of his infirmity is vnable to gouerne the common weale, King Henry during the life of Charles, shall rule and gouern the realme of Foyce, to the profit and honour of the same King Charles. King Charles in all his writings shall name the same King Henry our sonne and heyre of France, during the life of the said King Charles. King Henry shall bée written, Henry king of England, and heyre and regent of France, and in the like manner he shall write himselfe in all things that shall be authorised vnder his owne seale. King Henry shall call King Charles his Father, and Quéene Isabel his mother, and shall honour them. Nor King Henry shall not prohibite, withhold, nor defeate K. Charles his Father of the Crowne of France, nor the iiues or reuennes thereof. And the Quéene his mother at all times during her life hee shall kéepe in due estate as belongeth to her maiestie, &c. with diuers other articles, which for brenitie I set not downe in this place.

After the finall end and accomplishment of this marriage, couenants and conditions, ratified in all parts, King Henry accompanied of King Charles and of his counsell, of the two Quéenes Isabel and Katherine, and of the Duke of Burgoigne, departed from Troys, and tooke his iourney to Paris, and from Paris not many dayes after they all went to lay siege to the Cittie of Sens, which was to them contrary, but before the whole hoste were settled in their places, the captaine, Cittizens and garrisons submitted their bodies and Cittie with all that they had to the King. Then they hasted to Monstreau, which Towne they tooke by force. K. Henry besieged Sens. T. Walsingham.

On the 10. of July, they went to the City of Melune, and entrenched the same with a strong siege, for there were the Kings of England, land, of France, and Scotland, the Dukes of Burgoigne, Lanier, Clarence, Bedford and Exceter, the Earles of Marth, Warwike Huntington, and Somerset, &c. This siege continued fourtéene weekes and od dayes, from the feast of Mary Magdalen, to the feast of All Saints, not without, in a manner euery day, a conflict and sore skirmish, but at length for want of victuals the besieged yelded themselues to the Kings of England and France from whence the foresaide Kings with a great part of their army went to Paris.

1421. Titus Liuius. King Henry kept his Christmas in the City of Paris, in the Castle of S. Anthony. And after he had holden a Parliament there he went to Roane, and there with his Normans, and Englishmen held a Parliament. And then when he had established sure guard for his Realme of France, and Duchy of Normandy, he passed through Picardy to Calcis, and so to Douer, where with his Quéene he landed on Candelmas day.

The 14. of February Quéene Katherine was Crowned at Westminster, vnto whom the king assigned to her dowry 10000. marks: also hee consented to the deliuery of the K. of Scots, who had béene long prisoner into England, with condition, that before his departure out of England, he shall take to wife the Duke of Somersets sister, néece to the Cardinal of Winchester.

An. reg. 9. The 22. of March being Easter éeue, Thomas Duke of Clarence, the Kings brother, the Lord Hale Marshall, and his brother Gilbert Vmfranuile Earle of Kime, and Iohn Gray made Earle of Tankeruill in Normandy, with many other Lords, were slaine beyond the water of Leire in France, and many Lords were taken prisoners, of the which were the Earle of Huntington and the Earle of Somerset and his brother the Lord Fits Walter, and other, the bastard of Clarence, with strength, got his fathers body, brought it into England and buried it at Canterbury, besides King Henry the fourth his father.

In a Parliament at Westminster it was ordained that no man should proffer gold paiment, but if it held waight whereof were ordained balances and weights. The King suppressed the French houses of religious monks and Fryers, and such like in England, because they thought ill of the conquest ouer France, their lands were giuen by him and Henry the first, to Monasteries and Colledges of learned men. French Denizens in England suppressed.

In this Parliament was demanded a subsidy. The Bishop of Winchester lent the K. 20000. pound to restraine the matter. The King hauing disposed all things in order concerning the Realme of England and the warres in Scotland, leauing in England his Quéene with a great power, to the number (after Enguerant) of thirty thousand, returned into France, where after he had visited the King and Quéene of France at Paris, hee tooke the castle of Dreux by assault. And when he heard that his enemies prepared themselues to battaile, he approched the flond of Loyre, about which flond it was sayde his enemies were: but against him came no man. Titus Liuius.

Wherefore the King led his host to lay siege to the City of Sens, commonly called the Kings new towne, which towne for lacke of victuals yelded themselues and the towne to the King.

John Lord Mortimer brake forth of the tower of London, and being afterwards taken, he was drawne and hanged: as shall be shewed in the 2. yeere of the raigne of King Henry the first.

In the moneth of October, when King Henry had deliuered the City of Paris from all annoyances, he with his host went to besiege the City of Meaux in Brie, to which City nigh adioyning, is a place called the Market of Meale, betwixt which two places floweth the riuer of Marne, which also enuironeth both the same places. Titus Liuius.

This City was besieged all the Winter, wherein were so many, and so great stormes and floods of raigne, that the Kings host was often annoyed with hunger and cold.

The first of December, at 4. of the clocke in the afternoone, Lady Katherine Quéene of England, brought forth her first begotten son in the Castle of Windsore, and his name was giuen him Henry: for there receiued him at the font, Iohn Duke of Bedford his vncle, Lord Warden of England, and Henry the Kings vncle Bishop of Winchester, and Iaquelyn Dutchesse of Holland that remained then in England. Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterbury, doing the office of Baptisme.

King Henry helde his feast of Christe Natiuitie at the siege before Meaux, for he would not giue ouer his siege. 1422.

In the moneth of February the knights that were in garrison, and the principall of the City of Meaux perceiuing that the sommer comming should cause the siege to be more light, and lesse painefull to the Englishmen, and difficill vnto themselues, departed the City, and went into that place, that is called the Market of Meaux. An. reg. 10. as to the more defensible hold, after whose departing the common people hauing none ability to resist the Kings power, yelded themselues and the City to the King. After this in the moneth of May, when the King had sore beaten the foresaide Market of Meaux, he constrained the Frenchmen that were besieged, to condescend vnto certaine couenants, and to deliuer the place vnto him: and thirtie after were deliuered to the King the Towne of Dzepp in Valois, the Castle of Pier Pount-meralaw Offemount and many others. After the rendring of these Townes and Castles, the King sent ouer into England prisoners 150. which landed at Hampton on the first of July, from whence they were brought in carts to the Tower of London, and the King returned to Paris.

In the moneth of Aprill Katherine Quéene of England shipped at Hampton, and sayled ouer into France with a strong power, vnder the conduct of Iohn Duke of Bedford the Kings brother, Humfrey Duke of Glocester being appointed Warden of England, in the Duke of Bedfords place: when the comming of Quéene Katherine sailed into France.

Quéene Katherine was knowne to King Henry her husband, and to Charles King of France, both these Kings, and with them the Quéene of France, accompanied with many great Lords and estates as well of England as of France, went to méete her at Boys de Vincenne, where she was joyfully received of them, as if she had beene an Angell sent from God. The 30. day of May the two Kings of England and France, with their Quéenes departed from Boys de Vincenne, and went to Paris: the King of England and his Quéene were lodged in the Castle of Loure, and the King of France and his Quéene were lodged in the pallace of S. Paul.

King Henry returneth to the siege.

King Henry hearing that the Dolphin with a great power besieged the towne of Gulney, he determined to go himselfe to the raising of the siege, and so came to the Toune of Corbeil, and to Senlis, where he waxed so sicke, of an hot burning ague, with a vehement flixe, that he was constrained to tarry and send his brother John Duke of Bedford, Thomas Beawford D. of Exceter, the Earles of March, and Warwicke, to reskew them of Gulney: but the Dolphin raised his siege and departed thence. King Henry his disease increasing, made his Testament, appointed his treasure and iewels to be solde, his debts to be payed, as well to the pleasance of his souldiers as to other unto whom he ought god, either in England or in France: he ordained his brother John Duke of Bedford to be Regent and Governor of France and Normandy, and committed the keeping of Henry his son, to Henry Beawfort Bishop of Winchester, and to Thomas Pewfort, Duke of Exceter, he departed this life in the Castle called Boys de Vincenne, not farre from Paris, on the last of August, in the yere 1422. when hee had raigned nine yeres, fiue monethes, & od dayes. There was present at his death, King Charles of France and the two Quéenes: but before his death this most prudent King disposed the guard of the young Prince his sonne, and the defence of the Realme of England, to his brother Humfrey Duke of Glocester, but the custody of the body of this young Prince, the King committed to his vncle the Duke of Exceter, to méetre him in all good manners: and the reuenues of the Dutchy of Normandie, he bequeathed to his brother John Duke of Bedford, for the gouernance of the saine Dutchy and of the Realme of France: he appointed his debts to be paid out of his treasurie, and of his Iewels. In his life time he réedified the Castle of Kenelworth, he builded there a most pleasant place, and called it to be termed le pleasant marish. King Henry the eight, caused the saide banqueting house to be taken downe, and part of it to be set vp in the base Court at Kenelworth: he réedified his royall manor that then was called Sheene, now Richmond: he founded two Monasteries vpon the Thamis not far from Richmond, the one of Carthusians, which hee named Bethlem, the other religious men and women of Saint Brigets, and that he named Sion. He founded Garter, principall King at armes of all Englishmen, and also the brotherhood of S. Giles without Creples gate of London. He gaue 1000. marks to the Workes of Westminster Church, more he gaue to the same Church a faire Pialter, within another booke called Flores Historiarum, both very faire written, and enlumined, and a royall Sceptre of gold for the Quéene. The King that King Richard the second gaue vnto Saint Edwards Shrine, being taken away, this King Henry restored againe, in the which ring there was a Ruby, esteemed worth a thousand markes in value: he gaue to the Colledge of Windsore, a Chappell of Knights, of Saint George and of the Garter, an Image of massy siluer to the honor of our blessed Virgin Mary, the Mother of Christ. Executors of his Testament were Henry Fitz Hugh, Walter Hungerford, Walter Bewchampe, Lewes Robsart, William Porteil, and Robert Rabthorpe Knights, and John Woodhouse, and John Lauenthorpe Esquiers: his goods, cattels, iewels, and money came to 40000. marks, as appeareth by the record of Henry the first, the first yeare. Shortly after his departing, his bowels were enterred in the Church of S. Pons de Fosseo, and his corps well enbaulmed and seared, was closed in lead: and accompanied with all the Lords, estates, and commons of England that were there present, with also many Lords and great estates, as well of France, Normandy, Burgondy, and Picardy, was brought with great honour to Paris, and set in the Church of our Lady, where were done for him right solemne exequies, with distribution of money and great almes to the poor. From thence he was brought to Roane, where hee abode long. When all things necessary were prepared for the conueyance of the dead King into England, his body was laid in a Chariot which was drawne by foure great horses: and aboue the dead corps they laid a figure made of boiled hides or leather, representing his person as nigh to the semblance of him as could be deuised, painted curiously to the similitude of a liuing creature: vpon whose head was set an Imperiall diademe of gold and precious stones, on his body a purple roabe furred with ermine, and in his right hand he holde a Scepter royall, and in his left hand a Ball of gold, with a crosse fixed thereon. And in this manner adorned was this figure laid in a bed in the said Chariot, with his visage vncouered toward the heauens: and the couerture of his bed was red like beaten with gold: and besides that when the body should passe through any good towne, a Canapy of marueilous great value, was borne ouer the Chariot, by men of great worship. In this manner accompanyed of the King of Scots, and of all Princes, Lords, and knights of his house, he was brought from Roane to Abuile, where the corps was set in the Church of Saint Ostrane. From Abuile he was brought to Vedin, and from thence to Mentkreuil, so to Bulloigne, and to Calice. In all this iourney were many men about the Chariot clothed all in white, which bare in their hands Torches, burning, after whome followed al the household seruants in blacke, & after them the came Princes, Lords,

John Rouse.

Lords, and estates of the Kings blood, adorned in beriall mourning: and after all this, from the said corps the distance of two English myles followed the Quéene of England right honorably accompanyed. In this manner they entred Calice, from whence after a few dayes they departed, and continued their iourneyes by water and land vntill they came to London, where they arrived about the tenth of November, and so were conueyed by London bridge, through Cheape to the Cathedrall Church of S. Paule vpon the couering of the formost of the foure horses, that conueyed the Chariot, were imbrodered the ancient armes of England: vpon the couerture of the second horse were the armes of England and France, in one shield quarterly: vpon the couerture of the third horse was imbrodered the armes of France, without any manner of difference: and on the foure horse were the Armes of King Arthur, which was thre crownes gold in a field azure. When his exequies were solemnized at Saint Pauls Church in London, he was brought from thence to bee interred in the Abbey of Saint Peter at Westminster amongst his Noble ancestors, at the feet of King Edward the Confessor, a royall Image of siluer and gilt was laid vpon his Tombe, which Quéene Katherine his wife caused to bee made for him, but about the latter end of King Henry the eyght, the head of the Kings Image being of massie siluer, was broken off, and conueyed cleane away, with the plates of siluer and gilt that conered his body. Thus this most victorious and renowned King entred the way decreed for every creature. In the flower and most lusty time of his age, to wit, but fiue and thirty yeres old, when hee had raygned nine yeres, ten monethes, and odde dayes. The first of Henry the first, Quéene Katherine had assured for her iointer, Castles, lands, tenements, named and deliuered vnto the summe of 40000. scuts, euery two scuts worth a noble.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING HENRY THE SIXT.

An. reg. 1. Thes Louis

HENRY the first, borne at Windsore being an infant of 8. monethes olde, began his raygne the last of August, in the yere 1422. continuing the time of his youth, the gouernance of the Realme was committed to Humfrey Duke of Glocester, and the guard of his person to Thomas Duke of Exceter: and to John Duke of Bedford was giuen the regiment of France, who right wisely and nobly ruled the same so long as he liued. This Henry was of nature gentle and meeke: he loued better peace than warre, quietnesse of minde than businesse of the world: honesty than profit: rest and ease, than trouble and care: all iniuries that euer happed to him, which were many, he suffered patiently, and reputed them to be worthily sent of God for his offences.

Bishop of Lyons Duke of Orleance. Charles le bieu King of France dyed.

The 21. of October, Charles King of France passed out of this world, and was buried at Saint Denis in France, after hee had béene crowned King 46. yeres. He was greatly beloued of his people all his life time, and therefore was called Le Roy Charle le bieu ame: but he had a sickness the more part of his raigne, that being out of his wit, hee would fréthe all that came nére him: it tooke him first in the City of Pans shortly after hee had béene in Flanders to reuoke the Flemings to obedience. There was by reason here of great trouble in France, because those that were nére to him in linage, sought euery one to haue the chiefe gouernment in their hands. When hee thus dyed, the Realme was left in miserable state, for people of each strange Nation were gouernors in the Realme. First, the Englishmen had conquered a great part, and sought to haue the rest: and the Duke of Burgoigne, with many other great Lords alied with him, sought to conquer all, for the young King Henry of England, who claimed then to be King of France, and likewise in all the money that was coyned, the armes of both Realmes were quartered. The Crownes that were stamped in the time of Charles, and all other money more, were forbidden to bee current, and called to the Mint. King Henry caused a péece to bee stamped called a Salus, worth two and twenty shillings, and Blans of eight pence a péece, and so in no place of France where King Henry was obeyed, any other money was receiued, but such as had the armes of France and England stamped on it.

be right inheritor to the Realme of France by the ancient edicts and customes of the saide Realme, as was alledged, proclaimed himselfe King after the decease of his Father, notwithstanding, by the agreement made at the marriage of his sister to the King of England. It was otherwise concluded (as before is recited) and so there were two Kings in France, Henry and Charles, both which strowng for the crowne, the Realme was in wap of perdition.

A Parliament at Leyster.

A Parliament at London began the ninth of November, wherein was granted to the King a subsidy for three yeres, five nobles of every sacke of wooll that should passe out of land.

King Charles of France began now to advance himselfe into the Duke of Burgoignes lands, and the Constable of Scotland, accompanied with many Lords and men of warre of King Charles side, laid siege to the Towne of Carnens, but the Marshall of Burgoigne assembled men of warre to rayse the siege, with whome went Thomas Mountacute Earle of Salisbury, a valiant man, and now being come together, fought with their enemies, won the field, toke the Constable, whose sonne was slaine in the field. Many of King Charles men were slaine and taken to the number of seven or eleven hundred god men of war. After which victory, the Earle of Salisbury laid siege to Pontagnillon in Champaigne, and continued there an eight moneths before he could have it rendred, and then caused the same to be raced and thrown downe. Then the Earle of Salisbury besieged the Castle of Gonnes, which at length was yeelded to him, this Castle he also raced and beat downe, which was the strongest place in all Champaigne, it was after repaired by King Charles.

The Earle of Salisbury wan diuers holdes in France, and raced them. Ann. Reg. 2.

Duke of Bedford married the Duke of Burgoines sister. Phil. Com.

About the same time the Duke of Burgoine gaue his sister the Lady Anne in marriage to the Duke of Bedford, and so the alliance was made more strong betweene the English and the Burgonians.

Phillip de Comines writeth, that John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France for the Englishmen, his monthly allowance in that office amounting to twenty thousand Crownes at the least.

Thomas Langley Bishop of Durham was made Chancellor of England.

The Dukes of Burgoyne, Bedford, and Baytaine, met in the towne of Amiens, there was also the Earle of Richmont, brother to the Duke of Baytaine, and many other great Lords, which Earle of Richmont had married Margaret, the Duke of Baytaines eldest sister, sometime wife to the Duke of Guyen, and Dolphin of France. These three Dukes were five or six dayes together in Amiens, in great friendship and reuerence each to other, promising perpetuall amitie to continue. After this, the Duke of Baytaine returned into his countrey, the Duke of Bedford (regent of France) to Paris, and the Duke of Burgoine to Arras: but within a while after, the Earle of Richmont revolted to King Charles, upon some mislliking he had conceiued against the Duke of Bedford: King Charles received him topfully, and made him Constable of France.

About the same time the Duke of Bedford caused Crotoy to be besieged both by Water and by land, which after foure or five moneths siege, was both Towne and Castle deliuered to the Duke, where he ordained Ralph Butler to be Captaine. At that time the Duke of Bedford was obeyed as regent in all places beyond Vimeu, Pontieu, and Picardy, from Paris to Reins, Chalons, and Troyes vp to the water of Loyre.

About the feast of Saint Andrew the Captaines of King Charles assembled their forces about le Fere, and Nelle, and toke by night the Towne of Campeigne, and spoyled the inhabitants of all their goods. Shortly after came the Duke of Bedford to Pontoidier with twelue hundred fighting men, and requested the Lord of Saueuses to lay siege to Campeygne, and he would finde him men and money to wage them, whereunto hee granted, and after fifteene dayes siege had the same deliuered.

In this meane time, to wit, about 17. of November, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein the young King was set in his maiestp among his Lords. And the 27. day of November the King with the Queene removed from Westminster vnto Waltham holy Crosse, and from thence to Hertford, where he held his Christmas, and the King of Scots with him: and the saide Parliament was adiourned vnto the twentieth day after Christmas: In the which Parliament, among other acts, was ordained that what prisoner that for grand or petty treason was committed to ward, and after wilfully brake or made an escape from the same, it should be deemed pettie treason, and the goods of him so escaping should be forfeited to the Lord of the soyle that they were found in.

In the moneth of Februarp, James Stewart the young King of Scots, who was taken by the Englishmen in the eight yeere of King Henry the fourth, and had remained in England prisoner till this time, was now according to couenant, deliuered out of Pomfret Castle vpon pledges, to wit, Dauid Okliffe sonne to the Earle of Athole, Alexander Earle of Crawford, Alexander Lord of Gordon, John de Lyndesey, Patricke Donne and heire to Sir John Lyon, Andrew Grey of Sonles, Dauid de Ogleby, Sir William de Rothie, Dauid Mogresse, and William Olifant: the same King of Scottes was then married in the priory Church of Saint Mary Queries in Southwarke, to the Lady Ione the Duchess daughter of Clarence, by her first husband John Earle of Somerset, cosin to King Henry, and they kept their marriage feast in the Bishop of Winchesters place, by the saide Church of S. Mary Queries.

King of Scots released of imprisonment.

The 14. day of Februarp, the foresaid Parliament being againe holden at Westminster, for breaking of the foresaid act of escaping out of of prison, Sir John Mortimer was accused, by a yeoman named William King of Wilmelton in Kisdale, in Yorkeshire, seruant vnto Sir Robert Scot Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, of diuers points of treason as followeth: First, that hee counselled with the saide William King, to the end to breake out of prison, and promised to him for the same ten pound in his purse, an habergeon, and a doublet, the verely value of forty pound land, and in prouesse an Earledome. Also, that the said Mortimer should say, that hee would goe into Wales, vnto the Earle of the Marches, and there hee would raise forty thousand men, and with that power hee would enter the land, and strike off the heads of the Lord Protector, and of the Bishop of Winchester, to the intent that he might tell or play with some of his money. And furthermore he accused him, that the said Mortimer should say, that the Earle of March was but a dawe, saue that hee was the greatest, noblest, and worthiest of bloud, and should bee King by right inheritance, and that he himselfe was next rightfull heire to the said Crowne after the said Earle of March, wherefore if the said Earle would not take vpon him the Crowne and rule of the land, he saide that he els would. And ouer this, the saide William alleaged to the saide Sir John Mortimer, that hee should say, that if he failed of his purpose, and might not ioyne vnto the Earle of Marches, that then he would ioyne vnto the Dolphin, and ayde and take his part, where hee knit well he should be accepted, and haue god ayde of him to bring about his purpose. All which matter this William would proue vpon the same Mortimer with his body: or as the Lords and commons should award. Which John Mortimer, after the Statute aforesaid escaped out of the tower, and was taken againe vpon the toiner wharfe sore beaten and wounded, and on the morrow brought to Westminster, and by the authority of the saide Parliament, he he was after drawne to Tyborne, hanged, and headed, of whose death (saith Hall) no small clamor arose: his body was buried in the gray Fryers Church.

Mortimer accused of treason for escaping out of the Tower.

The Lord Stanton and the Lord Hoo created.

Richard Wooduill was created Baron Wooduill: John Sturton Knight, Baron Sturton for him and his heires: and Thomas Hoo Knight, Baron Hoo and of Hastings.

The battell of Vernole in Perch.

King Henries people besieging the Castle of Dury in the marches of Normandy, they within compounded to yeld at a day assigned, if the Englishmen were not fought withall before the same day by the Frenchmen: whereupon as well King Charles as the Duke of Bedford made great leuies of men to keepe the day appointed, and herewith they drewe both towards Durie. But when King Charles heard how the Duke of Bedford was comming towards him with such a puissance, hee was counselled to draw backe, and so he did towards Vernole in Perch, whome the Duke of Bedford followed, so that hee found his army neere to Vernole. And when either army was in sight of the other, they put themselues in order of battell, and the Englishmen made a lodge of their horse behind their battell, because the French should not strike in among them on the backes: and the Frenchmen ordered themselues in battell array, making a great battell of footemen, in the which they put the flowre and chiefest men. They appointed their horsemen to set on the Englishmen a trauerse, the battels on foote came vpon and ioyned, where was a sore fight betwixt them, continuing two houres together that no man might Iudge which way the victorie would incline: but at length, the men of King Charles beganne to breake, and then the Englishmen beganne to thrust in among them, and did so much, that they discomfited their enemies. There were slaine the Earle Dowglas Duke of Turon, Iames Dowglas, Earle of Wightor, John Earle of Bougham, with the Vicomt Nerbon and many other, to the number of tenne thousand (saith Fabian) foure thousand saith mine Author; (a Frenchman) who sayeth, that the Duke of Bedford bare himselfe most valiantly, fighting with an axe so fiercely, as he had the praise of al other. The Earles of Salisbury and Suffolke governed themselues also right valiantly. Rob. Fabian.

The Lord of Dosby and other Lords of Normandie, which before had taken part with the Englishmen, this day turned to the French, hoping that the Englishmen should have lost the battell. True it is, that the Frenchmen would neuer suffer their King Charles to be present in person at any battell, but when they thought to pitch a field, they sent him into some strong Towne. By the losse of this battell fought on the seuenteenth of August before Vernole in Perch, King Charles was put to great hinderance, so that he was not able in puissance to giue the Englishmen any battell hauing enough to doe to defend and keepe his townes and fortresses against them. Ann. reg. 2.

The Duke of Bedford returned into Normandy, where hee punished many that fledde from him in the day of battell. Then went hee to Paris, where he found the Duke of Burgoyne, who received him, and the Dutches of Bedford his wife, the said Duke of Burgoynes sister, right ioyfully, and made to them a great feast, at which feast also were the Earles of Salisbury and Suffolke, the old Queene of France, mother to King Charles, and many other great estates, diuers Nations, resort amongst the which, the Dutchesse of Bedford was holden for the most gallantest Lady of all other, and with her, the Countesse of Salisbury a very fayre Lady. The Duke of Bedford that had never lusted before, lusted there.

The Duke of Burgoyne and Countesse of Salisbury, wherof came great displeasure and losse to England, by the breach of amity between the Burgoignons.

The Duke of Burgoyne was a very godly and amiable man of personage, doing excellently well whatsoeuer hee toke in hand, and especially in daunsing and iusting he exceeded all other of his country. At this feast, he became destrous of the Countesse of Salisbury, & some messages passed betwixt them, which came to the Earle of Salisburies eare, whereof he was

be right inheritor to the Realme of France by the ancient edicts and customes of the saide Realme, as was alledged, proclaimed himselfe King after the decease of his Father, notwithstanding, by the agreement made at the marriage of his sister to the King of England, it was otherwise concluded (as before is recited) and so there were two Kings in France, Henry and Charles, both which striving for the crowne, the Realme was in way of perdition.

A Parliament at London.

A Parliament at London began the ninth of November, wherein was granted to the King a subsidy for three yeres, five nobles of every sacke of woll that should passe out of the land.

King Charles of France began now to advance himselfe into the Duke of Burgoignes lands, and the Constable of Scotland, accompanied with many Lords and men of warre of King Charles side, laid siege to the Towne of Carneus, but the Marshall of Burgoigne assembled men of warre to rayse the siege, with whome went Thomas Mountacute Earle of Salisbury, a valiant man, and now being come together, fought with their enemies, won the field, tooke the Constable, whose sonne was slaine in the field. Many of King Charles men were slaine and taken to the number of seven hundred good men of warre. After which victory, the Earle of Salisbury laid siege to Montaguillon in Champaigne, and continued there an eight moneths before he could have it rendred, and then caused the same to be raced and thrown downe. Then the Earle of Salisbury besieged the Castle of Gerbroy, which at length was yeelded to him, this Castle he also raced and beat downe, which was the strongest place in all Champaigne, it was after repaired by King Charles.

Thomas Langley Bishop of Durham was made Chancellor of England.

The Dukes of Burgoyne, Bedford, and Bytaine, met in the townes of Amions, there was also the Earle of Richmont, brother to the Duke of Bytaine, and many other great Lords, which Earle of Richmont had married Margaret, the Duke of Bytaines eldest sister, sometime wife to the Duke of Guyen, and Dolphin of France. These three Dukes were five or six dayes together in Amiens, in great friendship and reuerence each to other, promising perpetuall amitie to continue. After this, the Duke of Bytaine returned into his countrey, the Duke of Bedford (regent of France) to Paris, and the Duke of Burgoine to Arras: but within a while after, the Earle of Richmont revolted to King Charles, upon some misliking he had conceiued against the Duke of Bedford: King Charles received him topfully, and made him Constable of France.

About the same time the Duke of Bedford caused Crotoy to be besieged both by Water and by land, which after foure or five monethes siege, was both Towne and Castle deliuered to the Duke, where he obtained Ralph Butler to be Captaine. At that time the Duke of Bedford was obeyed as regent in all places beyond Vimeu, Pontieu, and Picardy, from Paris to Reins, Chalons, and Troyes vp to the water of Loyze.

About the feast of Saint Andrew the Captaines of King Charles assembled their forces about le Fere, and Nelle, and toke by night the Towne of Campeigne, and spoyled the inhabitants of all their goods. Shortly after came the Duke of Bedford to Pontoiser with twelue hundred fighting men, and requested the Lord of Saueuses to lay siege to Campeygne, and he would finde him men and money to wage them, whereunto hee was granted, and after fifteene dayes siege had the same deliuered.

In this meane time, to wit, about 17. of November, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein the young King was set in his majesty among his Lords. And the 27. day of November the King with the Queene removed from Westminster vnto Waltham holy Crosse, and from thence to Hertford, where he held his Christmas, and the King of Scots with him: and the foresaide Parliament was adiourned vnto the twentieth day after Christmas: In the which Parliament, among other acts, was ordained that what prisoner that escapeth or petty treason was committed to ward, and after wilfully broke or made an escaped from the same, it should be deemed petite treason, and the goods of him so escaping should be forfeited to the Lord of the soyle that they were found in. Parliament at Westminster. 1439

In the moneth of February, James Stewart the young King of Scots, who was taken by the Englishmen in the eight yere of King Henry the fourth, and had remained in England prisoner till this time, was now according to couenant, deliuered out of Pomfret Castle vpon pledges, to wit, David Okliffe sonne to the Earle of Athole, Alexander Earle of Crauford, Alexander Lord of Gourdon, John de Lyndesey, Patricke Sonne and heire to Sir John Lyon, Andrew Grey of Sonles, David de Ogleby, Sir William de Rothie, David Mogresse, and William Olifant: the same King of Scottes was then married in the priory Church of Saint Mary Queries in Southwarke, to the Lady Ione the Duches daughter of Clarence, by her first husband John Earle of Somerset, cosin to King Henry, and they kept their marriage feast in the Bishop of Winchesters place, by the same Church of S. Mary Queries. King of Scots released of imprisonment.

The 14. day of February, the foresaid Parliament being againe holden at Westminster, for breaking of the foresaid act of escaping out of prison, Sir John Mortimer was accused, by a yeoman named William King of Wimolton in Kisoale, in Yorkeshire, seruant vnto Sir Robert Scot Knight, Lieutenant of the Tower of London, of diuers points of treason as followeth: First, that hee counselled with the saide William King, to the end to breake out of prison, and promised to him for the same ten pound in his purse, an habergeon, and a doublet, the yerely value of forty pound land, and in prouende in Carlesome. Also, that the said Mortimer should say, that hee would goe into Wales, vnto the Earle of the Marches, and there hee would raise forty thousand men, and with that power hee would enter the land, and strike off the heads of the Lord Protector, and of the Bishop of Winchester, to the intent that he might tell or play with some of his money. And furthermore he accused him, that the said Mortimer should say, that the Earle of March was but a daw, sauc that hee was the greatest, noblest, and worthiest of bloud, and should bee King by right inheritance, and that he himselfe was next rightfull heire to the said Crowne after the said Earle of March, wherefore if the said Earle would not take vpon him the Crowne and rule of the land, he saide that he els would. And ouer this, the sayde William alleaged to the sayde Sir John Mortimer, that hee should say, that if he failed of his purpose, and might not ioyne vnto the Earle of Marches, that then he would sayle vnto the Dolphin, and ayde and take his part, where hee writ well he should be accepted, and haue good ayde of him to bring about his purpole. All which matter this William would prooue vpon the same Mortimer with his body: or as the Lords and commons should award. Which John Mortimer, after the statute aforesaid escaped out of the tower, and was taken againe vpon the tower wharfe fore beaten and wounded, and on the morrow brought to Westminster, and by the authority of the saide Parliament, he was after drawne to Tyborne, hanged, and headed, of whose death (saith Hall) no small clamor arose: his body was buried in the gray Fryers Church. Mortimer accused of treason for escaping out of the Tower.

The Lord Sturton and the Lord Hoo created.

The Duke of Burgoyne enamoured with the Countesse of Salisbury, wherof came great displeasure and losse to England, by the breach of amity betwixt the Englishmen and the Burgoignons.

The Duke of Burgoine enamoured with the Countesse of Salisbury.

The Duke of Burgoyne was a very godly and amiable man of personage, being excellently well whatsoeuer hee take in hand, and especially in dauncing and inlking he exceeded all other of his country. At this feast, he became deuteous of the Countesse of Salisbury, some messages passed betwixt them, which came to the Earle of Salisburies eare, whereof he was nothing contented with the Duke, and therefore sought to doe him displeasure afterward.

This feast being ended, the Duke of Burgoyne went into his country of Burgoyne, and there take to wife the Dutchesse of Neuers which had bene wife to his uncle the Duke of Neuers, and had by her two children. Shee was halfe sister to the Duke of Burbon, but she lived not long with him. The Duke of Burgoyne also gaue his sister, the youngest, named Agnes, in marriage vnto Charles de Burbon Earle of Clermont, for the which, the Duke of Bedford and other Englishmen were wroth, for that he made such aliance with the enemies without their accord.

The second cause of breach of amity betwixt England & Burgoyne.

This yeere the Frenchmen repayred the Castle of Pount in Campaigne, which had bene a little before destroyed by the Englishmen, and now it was well stuffed with victuals and men, which began to make some war to the countrey, but shortly after the Earle of Salisbury besieged them, and with him Mesire John de Luxenburg, who did so much, that the Castle was yelded to him. The Duke of Bedford with his wife the Dutchesse, lay for the most part in Paris, leading there a pleasant life with the Lady whom he greatly loued, and was lodged in the house of the Tournelles nere to the Castle of S. Anthony, where he made faire buildings, and his men still made some warres against the French towards the riuer of Loyre, and other places, vpon base Normandie, and toward the Dutchie of Alanson.

Earle of March sent into Ireland.

This yere in England Edmond Mortimer Earle of March with many other Lords, and a great retinue, were sent into Ireland, where the saide Earle of March ended his life without issue, whose inheritance descended to Richard Plantagenet, Son and heire to Richard Earle of Cambridge, beheaded at Southampton, as is afore shewed.

Iaqueline Dutchesse of Henault.

This yere the warres began in Henault, by reason of Iaqueline Dutchesse of Henault, daughter to Duke William of Henault, vncle to Phillip Duke of Burgoyne, and also daughter to Duke John of Burgoynes sister, wife to the forenamed William, and so double cosin german to Phillip, Duke Phillip now liuing. This Iaqueline was married to John duke of Bzabant her cosin german, and cosin german also to duke Phillip of Burgoyne, and before that, shee was married to the Earle of Pontione, sonne to King Charles le bien aime, eldest brother to King Charles now liuing, but notwithstanding that shee was thus married to the Duke of Brabant, yet was shee conueyed by Sir Robert sart Knight, and brought into England to the Duke of Gloucester, and there married to the said Duke of Gloucester: and so she had two husbands alliue at once, Bzabant and Gloucester, a thing thought vnreasonable, both against God, the world, and the Church, for they had bene foure or fiue yeres in company with the Duke of Brabant, but there had fallen some variance betwixt them, and so she was come from him into Henault.

Iaqueline married to the Duke of Gloucester.

About the last of Aprill began a Parliament at Westminster, wherein was granted a subsidy of twelue pence in the pound of all manner marchandize comming in, or passing out of this Realme, three thillings of a tunne of Wine for the terme of three yeres to be holden. And furthermore it was enacted, that all marchant strangers should be set to an English hoste, within fifteene dayes of their comming to their port sale, and to make no sale of any marchandize ere they were so lodged: and then within forty dayes following to make sale of all they bzought, and if any remained vnsold at the said forty dayes end, that then all such Marchandize vnsold to bee forfeited. Also that all strangers that carried any wooles out of this land, should pay three and forty thillings foure pence for a sacke custome, where the English marchants and denizons payed but fiue Nobles, &c.

After the marriage had bene solemnized betweene the Duke of Gloucester, and Iaqueline Dutchesse of Holland, as is aforesaid, within a moneth after the Duke of Gloucester assembled an army of twelue hundred fighting men at the least, all Englishmen, and taking the Dutchesse with him in company, passed ouer to Calice, and straight from thence to Lens in Artois, and so into Henault, making no outrage as he passed through Duke Phillips countreyes. At their comming into Henault, many Townes obeyed them, and other refused so to doe: likewise were the Nobles diuided.

The Duke of Gloucester.

Holland.

The duke of Burgoyne hearing of this, was sore offended for the iniury done to his cosin of Bzabant, the dishono; of his cosin the dutchesse Iaqueline, and the euill dealing of the Duke of Gloucester, and therefore, to ayde the Duke of Bzabant hee appointed many of his Captaines with twelue hundred fighting men of Picards, to goe against the Duke of Gloucester. The duke of Bzabant was a man but of weake complexion, and therefore by the Councell of Bzabant it was ordained, that his ponger bzother Phillip Earle of Saint Pol, should bee chiefe Captaine of the warre against the duke of Gloucester. He had a great army, as the more part of the Nobles of Bzabant, of Henault, and of Burgoine, in all fifty thousand. Piere de Luxenburg, Earle of Conuarson, his nere kinsman, had the leading of the army, for himselfe was but young. The Duke of Gloucester had put off his men in garrison within the Towne of Bzayne, in the county of Henault, who made soze warre to the countrey about, but the Earle of S. Pol, and Conuarson did come and besiege Bzayne, continuing alwaies it twelue dayes before they within yelded, compounding to depart with bodies and goods saued. These hauing wonne Bzayne, destroyed it vtterly, and that done, take the field with all puissance, which was great, and the Duke of Gloucester likewise came into the fields, so that they approched nere together, and the vantcurrers skirmished, but the battell ioined not. The Duke of Gloucester had sent his Herault, Third cause of the enmitie to be broken betwixt England and Burgoyne, and the yeres of many townes in France.

Herault, and written to the Duke of Burgoyne, calling him traytor, and disloyall to the King of England and France, for that he had sent men in ayde against him in ayde of the Duke of Bzabant, and therefore offered him the combate: whereunto the Duke of Burgoyne answered, that he would accept the combat willingly, denying that euer hee had failed of his promise: but contrariwise, that the Duke of Gloucester had done great wzong to the Duke of Bzabant to haue bereft him of his wife, contrary to the ordinance of God, and of holy Church, and for other words which the Duke had vttered against the Duke of Burgoines honour, he gaue him the lie, and so for the matter went in wozds betwixt them, that the day was appointed for the combate, and the Duke of Burgoine chose for iudge of the combat, the Emperor of Almaine, and the Duke of Burgoyne sent the Duke of Gloucester a safe conduct, to depart safely into England, to prepare himselfe of things necessary for the combat, whereupon both the campes brake vp: the Duke of Gloucester went to Pons in Henault, to the Dutchesse his wife (so termed) and gaue her to vnderstand that he was desirous to trie the combate with the Duke of Burgoyne, and many other things he told her, which hee performed not; for within foure dayes after, he take all his power with him, and returned into England, doing no hurt by the way to the Duke of Burgoynes countries, and left the Dutchesse in Pons, finally accompanied with the people of that country. Shortly after his departure the Duke of Burgoyne sent the Lord Lilladem to the towne of Pons to receiue Iaqueline the Dutchesse, who being deliuered vnto him, he conueyed her to Gant, where the Duke and she made great semblance of loy together, she promising to be gouerned alwayes by his aduise, but to goe to her old husband the Duke of Bzabant she would not: but what semblance soeuer she made, she had another thought in her head, as it appeared afterwards, for when she espyed her time, shee stale away into her countrey of Holland, where she was well receiued of many Lords, and began forthwith to maintaine war against Duke Phillip of Burgoyne, and sent to the Duke of Gloucester for ayde, who sent to her a thousand fighting men, vnder the conduct of the Lord Fitz waters, who landed them in a place called Bzewers hauen. During these troubles in Henault, diuers Lords of the countrey, held with the Duke of Gloucester, and therefore had their lands soze wasted. Also Mesire Englebert Denguien held on the party of Phillip Duke of Burgondy: and hee, when he take any of the Englishmen, would cause one of their thombs to be cut off, and so sent into England.

Humfrey Duke of Gloucester challengeth the combate with Phillip Duke of Burgoine.

The Duke of Burgoyne fearing lest Iaqueline would deliuer the country of Holland into the possession of the Duke of Gloucester, he assembled his power, and went into Holland, to put the countrey into obeysance. At his comming thither, Iaqueline accompanyed with many Nobles of the countrey, and the Lord Fitz waters, would haue defended his landing, but notwithstanding all the defence they could make, he entred vpon them, and there neare to the Towne of Bzielles, they ioyned in battell, the Duke of Burgoyne and his people against the Englishmen and Hollanders, taking the Dutchesse Iaquelines part: there was a fierce battell on all sides, but in the end, the Hollanders and Englishmen were all discomfited, and there lyed in that place aboue seuen or eight hundred, besides those that were taken prisoners: the Lord Fitzwaters hardly escaped.

After this battell got by the Duke of Burgoyne, diuers Townes of the country reuolted to him against Iaqueline the Dutchesse, as Doozdrecht Sericzee, and many other. Shortly after, the Duke of Burgoyne leauing garrisons in those Townes that obeyed him, to make resistance against the Dutchesse that lay in the Towne of Gaut hee returned into his countrey of Flanders and Artois, there to prepare such abilliments as were necessary for him to vse at the combate appointed betwixt him and the Duke of Gloucester. The Duke of Gloucester likewise in England made his prouision of his abilliments and furniture, but the Duke of Bedford bzother to the Duke of Gloucester, tooke great paines to make them friends: and also the counsell of the yong King of England, were nothing content with this variance, doubting lest it might bee occasion that the Duke of Burgoyne might withdraw himselfe from their amitie, whereby their business in France should be hindered. The Duke of Bedford therefore take his iourney from Paris to Calice, and so into England, to the end to agree the saide Duke.: hee take with him the Dutchesse his wife, and not past a foure or fiue hundred men.

When Humfrey Duke of Gloucester vnderstood that Pope Martine the fift had giuen sentence, that the first marriage with the duke of Bzabant and Iaqueline was good and effectuall, and the second espousalles celebrated with the Duke of Gloucester and the sayd Iaqueline to be vnlawfull, he began to waxe weary of her, by whom he neuer had profit, but losse, and tooke to his wife by a second marriage Elianor Cobham, daughter to Reignold Cobham Lord of Sterbozow, which Elianor before was his yonker paramour, to his great repzoch, as was then noted. Humfrey D. of Gloucester married Elianor Cobham.

The morrow after Simon and Iudes day, when the Maior of London had bene at Westminster to take his charge, as the custome is, at such time as he was, holding his great dinner, he was by the duke of Gloucester Lord protector sent for in speedy manner, and when he came to his presence, he gaue to him commandement, to see the City were surely watched in the night following and so it was done. Rob. Fabian. Debate betweene the Duke of Gloucester and the Bishop of Winchester.

On the next morrow about 9. of the clocke, certaine seruants of the Bishop of Winchester, vnto whom the said Protector, would haue entred the City by the Bridge, but the warders or keepers thereof, kept them out by force, as before they were commanded, wherewith they being grieuously discontented, gathered to them a greater number of Archers, and men of armes, and assaulted the gate with that and other meanes of war, insomuch, that the commons of the City shut in their shops, and sped them thither in great number, so that great bloudshed would haue followed, had not the wisedome of the Maior & Aldermen stayed the matter in time.

The Archbishoppe of Canterbury with the Duke of Quinbze called the Prince of Portugall and other, toke great labour vpon them to pacifie this variance betwixt the Vncle and the Nephew, the Protector and the Bishop, insomuch, that they rode betweene them eight times, ere they might bring them to any reasonable conformitie, and lastly they agreed to stand to the rule of the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, or of such as he would assigne, whereupon the City was set in more quiet, and the Bishop of Winchester wrote a letter to the Duke of Bedford, Lord Regent, as followeth.

Right high and mighty Prince, and right noble, and after one lowest earthly Lord, I recommend me vnto your grace with all my heart: and as yée desire the welfare of the King our soueraigne Lord, and of his Realmes of England and of France, and your owne weale, with all yours, hast you hither, for by my troth, and ye tarry long, we shall put this land in ieopardy with a field, such a brother yée haue here, God make him a good man. For your wisedome knoweth well, that the profit of France standeth in the welfare of England. Written at London, the last of October.

Bishop of Winchesters letters to the Duke of Bedford.

On the tenth day of January next ensuing, the said Duke of Bedford with his wife, came vnto London, and with them also came the said Bishop of Winchester, and the Maior and Citizens receiued him at Berton, and conueyed him through the City vnto Westminster, where hee was lodged in the Kings pallace, and the Bishoppe of Winchester was lodged within the Abbots lodging. On the morrow following, the Maior presented the Regent with a payre of basins of siluer, and ouer-gilt, and in them a 1000. markes of golde. The twentie one of February, began a great Councell at Saint Albons, which was afterward remoued to Northampton; but for that no due conclusion might be made, on the 15. of March, was called a Parliament at Leicester, the which endured till the 25. day of June. This was called the Parliament of Battes, because men being forbidden to bring swords or other weapons, brought great battes and staues on their neckes, and when those weapons were inhibited them, they take stones and plomets of lead. During this Parliament, the variance betwixt the two Lords was debated, insomuch, that the Duke of Glocester put a bill of complaint against the Bishop, containing fiue articles, all which articles, were by the Bishop sufficiently answered, and finally, by the counsell of the Lord Regent, all the matters of variance betweene the fayde two Lords, were put to the examination and iudgement, with the assistance of the Lords of the Parliament, Henry Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Duke of Excester, John Duke of Norfolke, Thomas Bishop of Durham, Phillip Bishop of Worcester, John Bishop of Bathe, Humfrey Earle of Stafford, Ralph Lord Cromewell, and maister William Alenewike, then keper of the priuy seale, which Lords made a decree and award, so that either party toke other by the hand with friendly and louing words, none hauing aduantage of other. Vpon Whitsonday following, was a solemne feast holden at Leicester aforesaid, where the Regent doubbed King Henry Knight, and then forthwith the King dubbed Richard Duke of Yorke, that after was Father to King Edward the fourth, and other to the number of forty.

The Earle of Cambridge was made Duke of Yorke, and the Earle Marshall D. of Norfolke.

After the Parliament, the King went to Killingworth Castle.

On Saturday the euen of Saint Michaell the Archangell, in the morning before day, betwixt the houres of one and two of the clocke, began a terrible earth-quake, with lightning and thonder, which continued the space of two houres, and was vniuersall through the world, so that men had thought the world as then should haue ended, and the generall doome to haue followed. The vnreasonable beasts roared and drew to the Townes, with hideous noyse. Also the fowles of the ayre likewise cryed out: such was the woorke of God, at that time to call his people to repentance.

About the purification of our Lady, the Duke of Bedford Regent of France, with his wife and family passed the seas vnto Caleis, and so through Picardy into France: but ere he departed from Caleis, to wit, vpon the feast day of the Annunciation of our Lady, the Bishop of Winchester, within the Church of our Lady of Caleis, was created Cardinall, and after the solemnity done, the Regent take him on his right hand, and so conueyed him vnto his lodging. 1426.

This yere was vnseasonable weathering, for it rained most part continually from Easter to Michaelmas. Ro. Gagu.

This yere the Duke of Alanson, that before was taken prisoner at the battell of Vernoile in Perch, was deliuered for a raunsome of 200000. scutz of gold, which was 50000. marks sterling. Rob. Fabian.

This yere also, the Earle of Salisbury accompanied with the Earle of Suffolke, the L. Talbot, and other, laid a strong siege vnto the City of Orleance, and held the Citizens very straight, and maugre the Duke of Orleance, and the Marshall of France, the Englishmen wanne from them diuers strong holdes adioyning to the City, and forced them to burne a great part of their suburbes: but one day as the saide Earle of Salisbury, Thomas Mountagew, rested him at a bay window, a gunne was leuelled out of the City, the shot whereof thiered so the bars of the pyon grate, that one of the same barres stroke the Earle on the head, bearing away one of his eyes, and the one side of his cheke. Sir Thomas Gargraue was likewise stricken, and dyed within two dayes. The Earle was conueyed to Meun on Loyre, where, after eight dayes he likewise departed the world, whose body was conueyed into England with all funerall pompe, and buried at Bisham in Barkeshire by his progenitors, leauing behinde him one onely daughter named Alice, married to Richard Neuill Son to Ralph Earle of Westmerland. The domage that the Realme of England receiued by the death of this notable man manifestly appeared, in that immediately after his death the prosperous god successe which the Englishmen had hadde, began to decline. In his place was appointed the Earle of Suffolke to bee Lieutenant and Captaine of the siege, ioyning with him the Lord Scales, the Lord Talbot, Sir John Fastolph, and diuers other valiant Captaines.

An. reg. 6. Earle of Salisbury slaine.

Parliament. Subsidy.

In a Parliament at Westminster was granted to the king a subsidy of euery tunne of wine three shillings, and of other marchandise, except Woll, fell, and cloth, twelue pence of the pound. Also of euery Parish through the Realme (exceptrd Cities and Boroughs) the benefice being in value ten markes, ten of that Parish should pay fiue shillings and eight pence, euery man eight pence: and of euery benefice that were ten pound, ten parishioners to pay thirteene shillings and foure pence, and so rate and rate-like of euery benefice from the lowest to the highest. And for the inhabitants of Cities and Boroughs, euery man being in value twenty shillings, aboue his houshold stuffe, and the apparell of him and his wife, should pay foure pence, and so after that rate vnto the richest. 1427. 1428. An. reg. 7.

Verses of stout dames to checke a great Duke in open Parliament.

In this Parliament there was one mistris Stokes with diuers other stout women of London, of good reckoning, well apparrelled, came openly to the vpper Parliament and deliuered letters to the Duke of Glocester, and to the Archbishops, and to the other Lords there present, containing matter of rebuke and sharpe reprehention of the Duke of Glocester, because he would not deliuer his wife Iaqueline out of her grieuous imprisonment, being then holde prisoner by the Duke of Burgondy, suffering her there to remaine so vnkindly, and for his publike keeping by him another adultresse, contrary to the law of God, and the honourable estate of matrimony: but what good successe their labours toke, my Author reporteth not.

Cardinall of Winchester.

On the first of September the Cardinall of Winchester being returned from beyond the seas, was met by the Maior and his brethren, and certaine citizens of London on horsebacke without the City, and so brought to his pallace in Southwarke.

Duke of Norfolke escaped drowning.

The night of November the Duke of Norfolke was like to haue bene drowned, passing from S. Mary Ouery stayres through London bridge, betwixt foure and fiue of the clocke at night, his barge being set vpon the piles ouerwhelmed, so that to the number of 30. persons were drowned, and the Duke with two or three other that escaped were drawne by with ropes. 1429.

King Henry kept his feast of Christs nacluitie at Eltham.

The 21. of February Richard Neuill was made Earle of Salisbury.

King Henry kept his Easter at Hartford.

So it fell out, that in the Lent season, diuers ordinance and artillery about Orleance began to ware scant in the English campe, wherefore the Earle of Suffolke appointed Sir John Fastolph, Sir Thomas Rampstone, and Sir Philippe Helle, with their retinues, to ride to Paris to the Lord regent, to informe him of that lacke, who incontinent prouided victuall, artillerie and munitions necessary, and loaded therewith many Chariots and Carts: and for the safe conueyance of the same, he appointed Sir Simon Morbrier prouost of Paris, with the guard of the City and other, to accompany Sir John Fastolph to the army lying at the siege of Orleance: they were in all to the number of 1500. men: these with great difficultie came to the English Campe before Orleance, where they were ioyfully receiued, & commended for their valiant withstanding of enemies by the way, as they marched. The Earle of Suffolke being thus victualled, continued the siege, and euery day almost skirmished with the Frenchmen, who at length offered to create to saue themselues and their City from Captiuitie, they submit the City, themselues and all theirs vnder the obeisance of the Duke of Burgoine, because he was extract out of the blood royall of France. The Duke with thankes certified them againe, that he would gladly receiue them, if the Duke of Bedford Lord Regent would therewith be contented. Whereupon messengers were dispatched to the Regent, who thought it neyther conuenient nor honourable, that a City so long besieged by the King of Englands power, should be deliuered to any other forraine Prince. Whereupon the Regent answered the Burgonian Ambassadors, that sith the King of Englands had bene at all the charges about the siege and winning of the Citie, it was not consonant to reason, that the Duke should enioy the fruits of another mans charge: hereof followed a double mischiefe to the English proceedings in the Realme of France, for both the Burgoine conceiued an inward grudge against the Englishmen, for that he supposed them to enuy his glory: and againe, a time, the Englishmen left the siege of Orleance, which by this treaty they might have recouered out of their enemies hands, and putte their friends in possession of it.

While this treaty was in hand, Charles of France studied daily how to prouide a remedy by the delinery of his in Orleance out of present danger. And euen in the same time, a monstrous woman, named Ieanne la pucelle de Dieu, was presented vnto him at Chinon, whereas then he solourned, of which woman, her birth, qualities, and estate, the French Hystories make mention at large, but to bee short, so much credit was giuen vnto her, that she was honoured as a Saint, and so she handled the matter, that she was thought to be sent from God to the ayd of the French K. Charles, the seuenth of that name. This woman being armed at all points like a valiant Captaine, rode from Poictiers to Bloys, and there found men of warre, victuall and munitions ready to bee conueyed to Orleance. Here was it knowne that the Englishmen kept not so diligent watch as they had beene accustomed to doe, and therefore this Maid with their French Captaines, comming forward in the dead time of the night, and in a great rayne and thunder, they entered into the City with all their victuall, artillery, and other necessaries. The next day the Englishmen boldly assaulted the towne, but the Frenchmen defended the walles so, as no great feate chaunced that day betweene them. The Bastard of Orleance gaue knowledge to the Duke of Alanson in what danger the towne stood without his present helpe, who comming within two leagues of the City, gaue knowledge to them within, that they should be ready the next day to receiue him, which accordingly was accomplished: for the Englishmen suffered him and his army to enter. On the next day in the morning, the Frenchmen all together issued out of the Towne, and wanne the bastell of Saint Low by assault, and set it on fire. And after they likewise assaulted the tower at the Bridge foote, and toke it ere the L. Talbot could come to the succours, in the which William Gladesdale also Captaine was slaine, with the Lord Molins and the Lord Poynings also.

The Maiden by God so called by the French.

Lord Molins slaine.

The French men with this good lucke, fetched a compasse about toward the bastell, which was in the keping of the Lord Talbot, the which like a good Captaine, without all feare issued forth against them, and gaue them a sharpe encounter, that they fled againe into the City with great losse of men and small artillery: of Englishmen were lost in the two battelles to the number of fiue hundred men, of there about. The Earle of Suffolke, the Lord Talbot, the Lord Scales, and other Captaines assembled together in councell, where it was amongst them determined to leaue their fortresses and bastels, and to assemble in the plaine fielde, there to abide all the day to see if the French men would issue forth to fight with them. But when the Frenchmen durst not come forth, the Englishmen set fire on their lodgings, and departed in good order of battell from Orleance. And the next day which was the eight of May, the Earle of Suffolke rode to Iergeaux with foure hundred men, and the Lord Talbot with another company turned to Pewn: and after he had fortified that Towne, he went to the towne of Louale, and wan it together with the Castle.

The siege of Orleance broken vp.

Thus when the Englishmen seuered themselues into garrisons, the Duke of Alanson, the Bastard of Orleance, Ieanne la pucelle, the Lord Sancourt, and diuers other Captaines of the Frenchmen came on the 12. of June before the Towne of Iergeaux: where the Earle of Suffolke and his two brethren solourned, and gaue to the Towne so fierce an assault on three parts, that Poiton de Sentrailes perceiuing another part voyde of defence, scaled the walles on that side, and without difficulty toke the Towne, and slew Sir Alexander Poole, brother to the Earle, and many other to the number of two hundred, but the French lost three hundred good men. Of the Englishmen were taken 40. with the Earle of Suffolke and his brother Iohn. The Frenchmen as they went to Orleance, slew their prisoners all sauing the Earle and his brother. Shortly after the same French army came to Mahun, where they toke the Tower at the bridge foote, and put therein a garrison: from thence they remoued to Bangeney, and constrayned them in the Towne to yeeld. At this place there came to the Duke of Alanson, the new Constable Arthur of Britaine, and the Lord Dalbert with other, also the Earle of Tankeruile came to them, so that they were now ioyned to the number of 23000. men, the which shortly after fought with the Lord Talbot, neere to a village in Beause, called Patay, at which battell, the Lord Talbot was sore woonded at the backe, and taken, and the rest put to flight: in which fight were slaine aboue 1200. and sixty taken, of whom the Lord Talbot, the Lord Scales, the Lord Hungerford, and Sir Thomas Ramston were chiefe. This ouerthrow did so much abash the Englishmen, that immediately thereupon the Townes of Januile, Mahun, Fyst, and diuers other returned from the English part and became French. Charles the French King perceiuing fortune to smile vpon him, determined to conquer the City of Reimes that he might be there Crowned, in his iourney thitherward he besieged the City of Aurerre, and had it. From thence hee went before Troyes which was deliuered to him, and then Chalons, &c. In semblable deede they of Reimes yeeld themselues: in the which Towne the said Charles (in the presence of the Dukes of Loraine, and Barre, and of all the Noble men of his faction) was sacred King of France, by the name of Charles the seuenth.

Alexander Poole slaine. Earle of Suffolke taken by the French.

The Duke of Bedford aduertised of all these doings, assembled his power about him, and hauing together 10000. men, besides Normans, departed out of Paris in warlike fashion, and passing through Vry to Monstereau Fault Yone, sent by his Herault Bedford, letters to the French King, signifying to him, that where he had contrary to his finall conclusion, accepted otherwise his brother King Henry the first, and King Charles the first, by allurement of a diuelish witch, taken vpon him the name, title, and dignity of the king of France, and further, had by murther, death, craft, and deceitfull meanes diuelently gotten, and wrongfully kept diuers Cities and Townes belonging to the King of England his Nephew: for proofe whereof he was come downe from Paris with his army, into the country of Vry, by dint of sword to proue his writing and cause true, willing his enemies to chose the place, and in the same he would giue him battell. The new French king being come from Reimes to Dampmartine, studying how he might compasse them in Paris, was halfe abashed at this message, but yet to set a good countenance on the matter, he answered the Herault that hee would sooner seeke his master, than his master should neede to pursue him. The Duke of Bedford hearing this answere, marched toward the King, and pitched his field in a strong place. The French King though at the first he meant to haue abiden battell, yet when he vnderstood that the Duke was equall with him in number of people, he changed his purpose, and turned with his army a little out of the way. The Duke of Bedford perceiuing his faint courage, followed him by Hils e Dales, till hee came to a Towne not farre from Senlis, where he found the French King and his army lodged: wherefore he ordered his battels, setting the Archers before, and himselfe with the Noble men in the maine battell, and put the Normans on both sides for wings. The French King also ordered his battels to the most aduantage. Thus these two armies lay two dayes and two nights, either in sight of other without any great doing, except a few skirmishes. At length in the dead of the night, as priuily as might be, the French King hyde by his campe, and fled to Vry. The Duke of Bedford had much adoe to stay his people in the morning from pursuit of the French Kings army: but for that he mistrusted the Parisians, he would not depart far from that City: and so returned thither againe.

An. Reg. 8.

In this season Pope Martine the fift, meaning to subdue the Bohemians that dissented from the Church of Rome in matters of faith, and religion, appointed Henry Bewford Bishop of Winchester, Cardinall of S. Cussby to be his Legate in an army to inuade the kingdome of Bohemie, and to bring a power of men with him out of England, and because the warre touched the Religion, he licensed the Cardinall to take a tenth of the spiritualitty, the Bishop gathered the money, and assembled 4000. men and more. As this Bishop was come to Douer, ready to haue passed the Seas into Flanders, the Duke of Glocester (hauing receiued Letters from the Duke of Bedford, containing an earnest request to release him with men of warre) writ to the Bishop of Winchester, willing him to passe with all his army toward the Duke of Bedford. The Cardinall, lest hee should runne into the note of infamy, if he refused to ayde the Regent of France, passed ouer with his power, and brought the same into his coasts to the City of Paris, where he remayned not long, but passed on his iourney towards Boheme, from whence in short time he returned into England.

The first of November, King Henry being about the age of 9. yeres, was solemnly crowned in Saint Peters Church of Westminster, at whose Coronation were made 26. Knights of the Bath, and after solemnization in the Church finished, an honourable feast in the great hall of Westminster was kept, whereof pee may read a large discourse in Robert Fabian. After which feast great preparations was made for the Kings iourney into France.

King Henry crowned.

Richard Duke of Yorke was constituted Constable of England in absence of Iohn Duke of Bedford Regent of France, hee was made Constable, for, and because of a battell to bee fought betweene Iohn Vpton, and Iohn Downe; he was confirmed Constable of England for terme of life, so that he did no wayes derogate Iohn Duke of Bedford, that was beyond the sea, dated the 22. of January. 1430.

Combat fought in Smithfield.

The foure and twentieth of January a battel was done in Smithfield within the lists before the King, betweene two men of Feuersham in Kent, Iohn Vpton notary appelant, and Iohn Downe Gentleman defendant; Iohn Vpton put vpon Iohn Downe, that he and his compiers should imagine the Kings death, the day of his Coronation: when they had long fought, the King tooke vp the matter and forgaue both parties.

The 27. day of April the King tooke shipping at Douer, and landed the same day at Caleis, hauing in his company the Dukes of Yorke and Norfolke, the Bishops of Bath, Ely, and Rochester, the Earles of Huntington, Stafford, Warwicke, Oxford, Deuonshire, Pontaine of Ewe, and of Dymond, and Barons, the Lord Boucher, Beaumond, Typtoft, Fitz water, Roos, Arundale, Audley, Fauconbridge, Gray, Cordner Scroope, and Wels.

While the King remained at Caleis, many skirmishes were fought betweene the English men and the French in diuers parts of France, and the Frenchmen preuailed greatly by helpe of a woman which they named, The Mayden of God. So that lastly shee with her company came to the towne of Champaigne, to the end to remoue the siege laide thereunto by the Duke of Burgoyne and other of the English Captaines, and the 22. of May shee gaue battell to the Englishmen, and fought with them a long time, but in the end by the manhood of a Burgonian Knight named Sir Iohn Luxemborough, shee was taken aliue, and her company discomfited, shee was conueyed to the citty of Roane, and there kept a season, where shee fayned her selfe to be with child, but when the contrary was knowne, shee was condemned and burnt.

La pucelle de Dieu.

After this, King Henry by small iourneyes into into France, came to Paris, where hee was honorably received of the Citizens and taken for their soueraigne Lord and King, whiles he there remained (saith Gagwine) the Frenchmen wanne many holdes of the Englishmen, and the Burgonians in the countrey of Bry.

The third of August died Ioan Countesse of Armond, and was buried at Saint Thomas of Acres in London:

Iohn Duke of Norfolke take againe the Townes of Dampmartine, and the Chace Mongay with diuers other townes. The Earle of Stafford take the towne of Bryn, County Robert, and from thence foraged all the countrey to Sens, and after take Duesney in Bry, Grand Pury, and Rampilon.

1431. Conspiracie at Abington.

Some after Easter the Lord Protector was warned of an assembly of certaine lewde persons, vnder pretence of religious minded men, to bee assembled at Abington, wherefore hee sent thither certaine persons, and also rode thither himselfe, and there arrested the Baily of the Towne named William Mardeuil a weauer, the which was appointed for a Captaine, who had named himselfe Iacke Sharpe of Wigmore laud in Wales, who being examined, confessed that he meant to haue done many misse chiefes, especially against Priests, so that he would haue made their heads as cheape as sheepes heads (that is to say) three or foure a penny (or as some write, ten for a penny): many of his complices were taken and sent to diuers prisons. Their Captaine was drawne, hanged, and headed at Abington, and his head was sent to London, and set on the bridge: his other fautors were executed in diuers places and countries to the terror of other. Also the thirteene of July, Richard Russell Woolman, was drawne, hanged, and quartered for that he would haue made Dukes and Earles at his pleasure.

They ordered many things against the clergy to make them odious.

Richard Roos Lord Boucther deceased, and was buried at Westminster.

King Henry remaining still in France, the Earle of Arundale accompanyed with 2000. Englishmen, sent certaine of his company vnto a Towne, called Beaumont, to prouoke the Frenchmen to issue out of the Towne, which small company, when Boyssicant and Sentrailes then Captaines beheld, they with their souldiers sped them forth to take the said Englishmen, the which by little and little gaue backe, till they had coiled the Frenchmen a good space from the Towne, and then set vpon them with a stout courage, and held them on hand till the Earle with his company rescued them: then betwixt them was a cruell fight, but in the end the Frenchmen were chased and the said Sentrailes with many soldiers of the said Towne were slaine.

In the moneth of November, King Henry by small iournies went into France, remoued from Roan to Monteuile, and so to S. Dionesse, and from to Paris, where he was received with great honour by the Citizens, and taken for their soueraigne Lord and King. There were in his company of his owne nation, his vncle the Cardinall of Winchester, Iohn Kempe Cardinall and Archbishop of Yorke, the Dukes of Bedford, of Yorke, and Norffolke, the Earles of Warwicke, Salisbury, Oxford, Huntington, Dymond, Pointaine, and Suffolke. Of Gascoigne there were the Earles of Longueuile, and March, besides many Noble men of England, Gwine, and Normandie: and the cheefe of the French Nation, were the Dukes of Burgoyne and Lewes of Luxemburg Cardinall and Chancellor of France for King Henry: the Bishops of Beauoys and Noyne both peeres of France, besides the Bishop of Paris, and diuers other Bishops, the Earle of Vantemount and other Noble men. And he had a guard of 3000. Archers some on horsebacke, some on foote. To speake of the honour, wherewith he was receiued into the City of Paris, what pageants were prepared, and how richly the gates, streets, and bridges on euery side were hanged with costly clothes of Arras and tapestry, it would be too long a processe.

On the seuenth day of December King Henry was Crowned in Paris, by the Cardinall of Winchester, at the which Coronation was present, the Duke of Burgoyne, the Duke of Bedford Regent, and diuers other Nobles of France. After the solemnity of this feast was ended, the King departed from Paris, and so came to Roane, where he held his Christmas, and that done he returned to Caleis, where when hee had soiourned a season, hee take shipping and returned into England, and landed at Douer the eleuenth of February, and then riding toward London, hee was met on Barham Downe, betwixt Douer and Canterbury, by a great company of Gentiles and commons of Kent, all clad in a liuery with red hoods, the which accompanied him till hee came to Blackheath, which was on the one and twentieth day of February, where he was mette by the Maior of London, who rode in a Gowne of crimson Veluet, his Aldermen in scarlet, and the Citizens all in white gownes and red hoods, with diuers workes or cognisances broidered vpon their sleeues after the faculty of their mysteries or crafts: and after due obeysance and saluting of the King, they rode on before him towards the City. And when the King was come to the bridge, there was deuised a mighty Giant, standing with a sword drawne in his hand, hauing written certaine speeches in meeter of great reioycing and welcomming of the King to the City, on the middest of the bridge, and in diuers other places of the City, were diuers faire and sumptuous pageants replenished with goodly and beautifull personages, the order and speeches whereof, are set downe by Robert Fabian in his Chronicle. Thus being conueyed to his pallace at Westminster, the Maior with the Citizens returned to London, and on the 24. day of February, the Maior and Aldermen rode to the King, and presented him with a Bampire of golde, and therein a thousand pound of Nobles.

King Henry crowned at Paris. 1432.

This

This yeere, by reason of the souldiers of Caleis, a restraint was made there of the Wooll, for they were not content of their wages: wherefore the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, came downe thither in Easter weeke, at which time, many souldiours were arrested: and rode againe to Dirwine. And hauing not long since buried the Lady Anne his late wife, Sister to the Duke of Burgoigne, hee married there the Lady Iequet, the daughter to Peter, Earle of Saint Paul, and shortly after, returned to Caleis, where he caused foure of those Souldiours to be beheaded on the 11. of Iune, and 120. souldiours to be banished the Towne, besides, 120. that were banished before that time. And vpon Mid-sommer eeuen, the Lord Regent, with his new wedded spouse came to London, and remained there till the latter end of August, and then returned againe to Paris.

The Duke of Burgoigne was nothing pleased with this new aliance contracted by the Duke of Bedford, with the house of Lutzenbourgh, but the marriage was consummate ere hee could finde any meane to preuent it.

The Frenchmen raised a crue, and suddenly take the Towne of Saint Valary in Normandy, neere to the Riuer of Some, and another army vnder the leading of Sir Ambrose de Lore, walled all the Countrey about Caue.

The Duke of Bedford not minding to be idle, sent the Earle of Arundel, Henry the Earle of Warwicks sonne, the Lord Lisle, Adam Partball of France for King Henry, and 1200. men at war, with ordinance and munitions to beseege the Towne of Laigny vpon the Riuer of Parne, the Earle with the shot of a Canon, brake the Arch of the bridge, and got from the Frenchmen their bulwarke, and set it on fire, diuers assaults were made, but the Towne was well defended by eight hundred men of armes, besides other souldiours. The Duke of Bedford hereof aduertised, gathered an army of 6000. men, whereof were Captaines, Robert, Lord Willoughby, Sir Andrew Ogard, Chamberlane to the Duke, Sir Iohn Saluaine, Bayliffe of Roane, Sir Iohn Mountgomery, Bayliffe of Caux, Sir Philip Hall, Baliffe of Vernanele, Sir Richard Ratcliffe, deputy of Caleis, Sir Ralph Neuil, Sir Ralph Standish, S. Ioh. Handford, Sir Richard Enthin, Sir Richard Harington, Baliffe of Eureux, Sir William Fulthrope, Sir Thomas Griffith of Ireland, Dauid Hall, Thomas Strangwish, Leonard Ormstone, Esquires, and Thomas Gerard. The Duke of Bedford with his Army came to the siege before Laigny, where hee made a Bridge of Boats, and brought his Ordinance to neere the Towne, that to all people it seemed not long able to resist: but the bastard of Orliance Earle of Dunops, with other hardy Captaines, valiantly defended it. At the length, the French King perceiuing this Towne to be the Key betweene the Territorie of Burgoigne, English and French, and that the losse thereof should returne him to irrecouerable damage, sent the Lord of Rieux, Poyton, the Hire, the Lord Gawcourt, and 6000. men, with plenty of victuals, to the intent, either to raise the siege, or at the least to victuall the Towne. The Frenchmen framed themselues in order of battell, as though they would doe much, but did nothing in effect: but that whilest part of them maintained a Skirmith, another part conueyed into the Towne thirty Oxen, and other victuall. In that Skirmith were slaine diuers valiant Frenchmen, and the rest considering how the English men were planted, being now the beginning of August, they remooued and went into Foyt vnder Perre, where, by a Bridge made of empty pipes, they passed into the Ile of France. The Duke of Bedford not minding to lose the moze for the lesse, raised his siege, and returned to Paris, nothing moze minding, then to trie his quarrell by dint of sword against his enemies, if they would thereto agree. And thereupon, he sent Bedford his Herault to the Lord Gawcourt and other Captaines of the French army, offering them battell within a conuenient time, and where they would appoint. To which Officer at armes, the Captaines answered, that battell they feared not, nor the English force they much regarded, but they said there was time to gaine, and time to lose, of the which they doubted not, to espie the one or the other, to their gaine or losse.

Anno Reg. 1

The 25. of November, the Lord Fitzwater was drowned on the Sea, and many other harmes were done by tempest.

The Regent, sent Peter of Lerenbourgh, Earle of Saint Paul, and Robert, Lord Willoughby, with a competent number of men to beseege the Towne of Saint Valary, which the French men a little before had taken, theis valiant Captaines inuironed the Towne with a strong siege. Within the Towne, were Sir Lewes de Vicount, Sir Philip de la Towre, and Sir Reignold de Verseiles, Captaines, with three hundred good fighting men, which by the space of three weekes, manfully defended the same. But then perceiuing the fiercenesse of the English-men, and the weakenesse of themselues, and hauing no hope of reliefe, rendered the Towne, their Horse and Harneise, onely saued.

After this Towne was thus gotten, the Earle of Saint Paul, and the Lord Willoughby returned to the Regent, where they were well welcommed, and after the said Earle departed from Paris, to lay siege to the Castle of Monches, but being incamped neere to the Towne of Blangy, hee by a sudden malady finished his daies, and departed this life, leauing his seignories to Lewes his sonne and heyre.

On the 8th day of July, King Henry began his Parliament at Westminster, continued it till Lammas, and then adiourned it vntill Saint Edwards Tide. Parliament.

This yeere, in the South-West appeared a blazing starre.

During the raigne of this King Henry the first, were Lieutenants ouer the Realme of Ireland, Edmond, Earle of March, and Iames Earle of Ormond his vncle: Iohn Sutton

Iz Knight

Knight, Lord of Dudley, and Sir Tho. Strange his deputy: Sir Thomas Stanley, and Sir Christopher Planket his deputy: Lyon, Lord Welles, and the Earle of Ormond his deputy: James, Earle of Ormond, the Kings Lieutenant by himselfe: John, Earle of Shrewsbury, and the Archbishop of Dublin, Lord Justice in his absence: Richard Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, father to Edward the fourth, and Earle of Ulster, had the Office of Lieutenant by Letters Patents, during the space of ten yeeres, who deputed vnder him at seuerall times, the Earles of Dublin, Richard Fitz Eustace, Knight, James, Earle of Ormond, and Thomas Fitz Morris, Earle of Kildare: to this, Richard then resident in Dublin, was borne within the Castle there, the second Sonne, George, Duke of Clarence, afterward drowned in a Butte of Malmesey.

1434. John, Lord Talbot.

John, Lord Talbot, gathered a crew of chosen men of warre in England, to the number of 800. and about the beginning of the moneth of March, sayled into Normandy, and passed by Roane towards Paris, and in his way, hee tooke the strong Castle of Jeing, betweene Beaubois and Gysors, and caused all the Frenchmen within, to be hanged on the walls, and after rased the Castle, and came to the Regent, Duke of Bedford at Paris. The presence of which renowned Captaine, so encouraged the hearts of the English-Nation, that they thought nothing able to resist their puissance, and so discouraged the hearts of the French-men, that they were in doubt, whether it were better to fight or to flie, for hee was a chosen Captaine, and in martiall feats fully instructed. When this hardy Baron had communed with the Regent, hee departed from Paris with his army, and besieged the Castle of Beaumont vpon Oise, whereof was Captaine Sir Amadour de Vigulolies, brother to the Hire: which Castle was soone rendered vpon condition. After that, he recouered, without long siege, the Townes of Creile, the Bridge of Saint Varens, the new Towne of Cmay, Crispy in Valoys, and Clearmount in Beaubois: and so with great riches, and rich prysoners, hee returned againe to Paris.

The Towne of Saint Denis, which is within two English miles of Paris, was gotten by the practice of one John Norice, a Knight of Picardie, from Matthew Gougly, alias Gowgh, and Thomas Kiriel, Captaines, they slew there many Englishmen, and tooke many prisoners, but soone after, the Captaines with strength taken from Paris, layd such a strong siege about Saint Denis, that finally they agreed to deliuer the Towne to the English men.

In the same season, the Earle of Arundell tooke the Castle of Boneline, and raced it to the ground: and after tooke the castle of Dorle, and from thence came to Saint Selerine, where the Lord Ambrose de Lore was Captaine, issued out and fought with the Englishmen so eagerly at the first, that hee drove them backe an arrow shoot: but the Earle so incouraged his men, that they tooke new courages to them, and set so fiercely on the Frenchmen, that they slew a great number, and drove the remnant into the Towne. After this victory, hee besieged Louiers, whereof was Captaine the Hire, and his brother, which rendered the Towne without stroke. Then the Earle environed the Towne of Saint Selerine with a strong siege, when hee had lyen heere almost 3. moneths, euery day attempting somewhat, for the performance of his enterprise: in conclusion, at the three moneths end, hee gate so fierce assault, that by force he entred the Town, and slew John Almaine, and Guilaam Saint Aubine the chiefe Captaines, and 8. hundred of their men of warre, and the children of Loire were taken prisoners: he replenished the towne, and made Captaine Sir John Cornewall. Then he besieged the strong Towne of Silly, and the inhabitants deliuered pledges vpon condition, that if the Towne were not rescued within 30. daies, they should render the Towne into his possession: which offer was taken, and when the time was expired, the Towne was deliuered, where leaving a Garrison, the Earle departed to Pons, and in the meane way tooke the Castle of Pelley and Saint Laurence.

The Lord Willoughby, and Sir Thomas Kiriell returning with great victories out of the parties of Burgoigne, tooke in their way the Towne of Louiers, and furnished it both with men and munition.

The Earle of Arundell intending to haue besieged the Towne of Rey, was there slaine with Ralph Standish: the Earle of Arundell was buried at Beaubois, in the gray Fryers there.

The Earle of Arundell wounded to death.

Anno Reg. 13. Great frost.

Through a great frost, that lasted from the 25. of November, vnto the tenth of February, the Thames was so frozen, that the marchandise which came to the Thames mouth, was there landed, and carryed thorow Kent, to London.

1435.

When the Pope Eugenius the fourth, and his Cardinals after long labour could make no peace betwixt King Henry of England and France, and Charles, also named K. of France, they at length made a peace betwixt the said Charles, and Philip, Duke of Burgoigne whereby the said Duke of Borgoigne became bitter enemy to the King of England, and soone after, the said Duke began the order of the Lilly, and the golden fleece, and ordained certaine Knights of that order, and made thereunto many statutes, whereof some of them were like vnto the statutes of the Garter.

The Duke of Bedford dyed. E. Hall. Anno Reg. 14.

This yeere, on the 14th of September, dyed John, Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, a man as politike in peace, as hardy in warre, and yet no more hardy then mercifull, when hee had the victory, whose body was with all solemnitie pompe, and solemne exequies buried in the Cathedrall Church of our Lady in Roane, on the North side of the high Altar, vnder a sumptuous and costly Monument: which Tombe when King Lewes the 11. by certaine vndiscreete persons was counselled to deface, affirming that it was a great dishonour, both to the King

King and to the Realme, to see the enemy of his father, and theirs, to haue so solemne and rich memoriall: he answered, saying, what honour shall it be to vs, or to you, to breake this Monument, and to pull out of the ground the dead bones of him, whom in his life time, neither my father nor your progenitors, with all their puissance, were once able to make flie one foote backeward: but by his strength, wit, and policie kept them all out of the principall dominions of the Realme of France, and out of this Noble Dutchy of Normandy: wherefore I say, first, God saue his soule, and let his body now lie in rest, which when hee was alive, would haue disquieted the proudest of vs all: and for the Tomb, I assure it you, is not so decent, nor conuenient as his honour and acts deserued.

I worthy saying of a King against defacers of monuments.

Richard, Duke of Yorke, made Regent of France.

After the death of the Noble Prince, the Duke of Bedford, the Frenchmen began not onely to withdraw their obedience, which they had by oth promised to the King of England, but also tooke sword in hand, and expelled the Englishmen: but the Englishmen appointed for Regent in France, Richard, Duke of Yorke, sonne to Richard, Earle of Cambrige (beheaded at Hampton.) This Richard, now Regent, was so disdained of Edmond, Duke of Somerset, being cousen to the King, that by all meanes possible hee sought his hinderance, by reason wherof, ere the Duke of Yorke could get his dispatch, hee was constrained to linger till the City of Paris, and diuers other the chiefest Townes of France, were gotten by the French King.

The Duke of Yorke perceiuing his euill-will, openly dissembled that which he inwardly minded, and thus either of them wrought things to the others displeasure, till at length, by mortall warre they were both consumed, with almost all their whole lines and of-springs.

The Normans of the Countrey of Caux, being heartned by the death of the Duke of Bedford, began a new rebellion, slew diuers Englishmen, robbed many Townes that were vnder the English obeysance, and tooke the Towne of Harfleet by assault, and diuers other Townes. But the new Lord Regent being aduertised, sent forth the Lord Scales, Sir Thomas Kiriell, and the Lord Hoo, which so afflicted those rebels of Caux, that they slew aboue 5000. persons, and burnt all the Townes and Villages in the country, not being walled, so that in that part was neither habitation nor tillage, for all the people fled into Britaine, and all the beasts of the Countrey were brought to Candebecke, where a good Sheep was sold for an English penny, and a Cow for twelue pence. Daily was skirmishing in euery part, in so much, that the Lord Scales discomfited at the Rye beside Roan, the Bird, and 1500. valiant Frenchmen, of the Irish, aboue three hundred were taken prisoners, beside 7. goodly fayre courtiers. Amongst other of the prisoners, were Sir Richard Reignald de Fountaines, Sir Alaine Gerund, Alaine de Mounfey, and Geffrey Gram, Captaine of the Scots. But yet this victory and others the like, stayed not the Frenchmen from working treason daily, in so much, that diuers Townes turned to the part of King Charles, and some were taken by practice: as Drappe, Boys de Vincent and other.

3 Cow for 12. pence, and a Sheep for a penny

Here is one chiefe point to be noted, that either the discorde among the chiefe Peeres of the Realme of England (as we haue heard) or the negligence of the Kings Councell, was the losse of the whole dominion of France, betweene the River of Seine and Marne, and in especiall of the Noble City of Paris: for where before were sent ouer thousands for defence of the holds and fortresses, now were sent hundreds, yea, and scores, some rascalls, and some not able to draw a Bow, or beare a Bill: for the Lord Willoughby, and the Bishoppe of Terromanne, which had the Gouernment of the Cittie of Paris, had in their company not passe 2000. Englishmen. Which weaknesse King Charles well perceiuing, hee appointed the Constable, Arthure of Baytaine, the Earle of Dunoys, the Lords De la Roch, and Lisle Adam, with other valiant Captaines, and men of warre, as well Burgonians as French, to goe before Paris, trusting by fauour of certaine Citizens with whom hee had intelligence, thoitly to be Lord of the City, without great losse or battell: so these Captaines came before the City of Paris, but perceiuing that all things succeeded not according to their expectation, they returned to Mount Martyr, and the next day set on the Towne of Saint Diones, where they slew two hundred Englishmen, and vpon composition, permitted the other to depart to Paris.

Thomas Lord Beaumont taken prisoner.

Thomas, Lord Beaumont, which of late was come to Paris with 800 men, issued forth of the City with 600. souldiours, intending to view the doings and number of the French Army, but being espied, hee was suddenly compassed about, so that hee was discomfited and taken, and with him 80. prisoners, besides 200. which were slaine in the field, and the remnant chased to the gates of the City. The Partisans, especially the Master of the Hals, and some of the Vniuersity, and Michael Lellier, and many other Burgesses of the City, perceiuing the weakenesse of the Englishmen, and the force of the Frenchmen, signified to the French Captaines their minds, willing them with all diligence to come, that they might receiue so rich a prey to them to be deliuered. The Constable delaying no time, came with his power, and lodged by the Charterhouse, and the Lord Lisle Adam, approaching to the walls, shewed to the Citizens a Charter, sealed with the great Seale of King Charles, by the which hee had pardoned them their offences, and granted them their old liberties, so that they would be to him true and obedient: which being to them declared, they ranne about the Towne, crying Saint Denis: Viue King Charles. The Englishmen perceiuing this, determined to keepe the gate of S. Diones, but the chaines were drawne, and women and children cast downe stones and scalding water on their heads, and the Citti-zens slew them, the Bishop of Tirwin, the Lord Willoughby, and Sir Simon Morniher, withdrewto the battle S. Anthony whileft this rumour was in the Towne, the Earle of Dunois, and other scaled the walls, and some passed the River by boats, and opened the gate of Saint James by the which the Constable with his banner displayed, entered. The Bishop, and the Lord Willoughby, defended their fortresse ten dayes, and yeelded. Thus was the Citty of Paris brought into the possession of Charles the French King, &c. Now when Paris, Saint Denis, Saint Germaine, and diuers other Townes in France were taken for lacke of succo, the Duke of Yorke, Regent of France, came ouer into Normandy, with 8000. men, and in his company the Earles of Salisbury and Suffolke, the Lord Falconbridge and other, but this Regent never did good in France, as appeareth by the histories.

Paris yeelded to the French.

The 19. day of July, the Duke of Burgoyne, with a great multitude of Burgonians and Flemmings, appeared before Caleis, and there pight his Pauilions and Tents, at which season was Lieutenant of Caleis, Sir John Ratcliffe Knight, and of the Castle was Lieutenant the Baron of Dudley: this siege endured about three weekes. in which season many knightly Acts were done and exercised on both parts.

Caleis beseeged by the Duke of Burgoyne.

On the second day of August, the Duke of Gloucester, Protector of England, with 500. saples (as some write,) landed at Caleis, and entended vpon the third day following, to haue issued out of the Towne, and to haue given battell to the Flemmings, but (as our English writers testifie) so soone as the Duke of Burgoyne was ware of the great power of the Lord Protector, he tooke with him of his ordinance that hee might lightly carry, and the other that were cumbersome hee left behinde. When the Duke with his hoste was thus fled, the Lord Protector with his people followed him into the Countrey by the space of eleuen daies, in which season, he brent the two townes of Popering and Bell, and returned to Caleis, and so into England.

This yeere, was the Castle or Towne of Rockesborough in Scotland, beliegd by the King of Scots, but when hee heard that Sir Ralph Gray, Knight, was comming thither with a competent number to remoue the siege, an on hee departed, leauing some part of his ordinance behind him, to his great shame and dishonour.

Anno reg. 15.

The third of January, Queene Katherine late wife to Henry the fift, and Mother to King Henry the first, departed out of this transitory life at Bermondsey, and on the eighth of February, her body was brought to Saint Katherins by the Tower, from thence to Saint Pauls, and so was buryed at Westminster in our Ladies Chappell, and her Coopes being taken vp againe in the raigne of King Henry the seuenth when hee laid the foundation of his new Chappell there, shee was neuer since buried, but remaineth still aboue ground in a Coffin of boords, behind the East end of the Quire. This Queene Katherine (saith Hall) after the death of King Henry the 5th her husband, being young and lusty, following more her owne appetite, then friendly counsell, and regarding more her priuate affection, then her owne honour, take to husband (saith he) a goodly Gentleman, named Owen Tewther, by whom shee conceiued and brought forth three sonnes, Edmond, Iasper, and another which was a Monke of Westminster, and a Daughter which liued not long. After whole death, King Henry, because they were bis brethren, of one wombe descended, created Edmond, Earle of Richmond, and Iasper Earle of Pembrooke: which Edmond had by Margaret, Daughter and sole heyre to John, Duke of Somerset, Henry, which after was King of this Realme, called King Henry the seuenth.

Shee procured him 100. marks a yeere to liue vpon: read the Records of the Tower, and after, that he had much more gotten land.

The Dutches of Bedford, Sister to Lewes, Earle of Saint Paul, without counsell of her friends, married a lusty Knight, called Sir Richard Wooduile, to the great displeasure of her Uncle, the Bishop of Turwine, and the Earle her brother. This Sir Richard, was made Baron of Riuers and after Earle, and had by his Lady, many Noble sonnes, and faire daughters, whereof one was Lady Elizabeth, after Queene of England, married to King Edward the fourth.

This yeere the 14. of January, at none, the great stone gate at London Bridge, with the Tower vpon it, next to Southwarke, fell downe in the Thames, and two of the fairest arches of the same Bridge, and yet no man perished in body, which was a great worke of God.

Ralph, Lord Cromwell, and Matild his wife, erected a Colledge of the Trinity at Tatshall in Lincolnshire, which Colledge at the suppression in the 28. of Henry the eighth, was valued to spend yeerely, 384. pounds, fiue shillings.

College of Tatshall founded.

Also this yeere the 9th of July, Iane, late Queene of England, and before Dutches of Bytaine, Daughter to the King of Nauarre, and wife to King Henry the fourth, died in the Mannor of Hauering, a Bowre in Esser, from whence shee was remooued to Bermondsey, and from thence conueyed to Canterbury, where shee was solemnly enterred by King Henry the fourth her husband.

Queene Iane deceased.

This yeere, the King gaue licence to Humfrey, Duke of Glouceste, and Elianor his wife, to build and embattell his Mannor house, at Greenewich, to enclose two hundred acres of ground, parkes, wood, and heath, and to embattell his Tower in the same parke, &c.

Receyte. Tower of Greenewich.

In the meane time, John, Duke of Somerset, accompanied with the Lords of Fauconbridge, Talbot, Sir Francis Surien, Arragonois, Mathew Gough, Thomas Powlet, Thomas Hattington, Walter Limbroke, John Geding, William Vatton Esquires, and Thomas Hilton, Bayliffe of Roan, with a puissance of the English party, belieged the Towne of Partlew, both by water and by land. The Captaine taine within the Towne was called Sir John de Stocuile, and Sir Robert his brother, with other, to the number of 600. fighting men. The Assaylants made trenches, both to assault the Towne, and to let the French from succours, that they should neyther approach nor aide the Towne: men belieged: diuers assaults were giuen, and great ordinance was laid before the gate of the Towne, which ouerthrew buildings: the siege endured long, to the great discomfiture of them within, whereof they aduertised the King, who sent thither the Earle of Ewe, the Earle of Dunoys, the bastard of Burbon, the Lord Gaincourt and other, with 4000. men, these passed the River of Some betweene Amias and Corby, came before the Towne, and daily skirmished with the Englishmen, but nothing preuailed, and therefore returned. The Captaines of the Towne rendred the Towne to John, Duke of Somerset, who made Captaines there, Thomas Pawler, William Limbrike, Christopher Barker, and George S. George, which, many yeeres, had manfully defended the Towne and Hauen, but afterward when the said Duke was Regent, hee not onely lost the Towne, but also the City of Roane, with many other Cities.

This yeere was a Parliament holden at Westminster, in which were diuers notable conclusions ordained, as well for the preseruation of peace at home, as for the maintenance of warre in outward regions: and an act was made for buying and selling by strangers, very profitable to the publike weale, if it were obserued.

Parliament at Westminster. Anno Reg. 16.

On the first of Nouember, the Earle of Warwicke, as Regent of France, passed the Sea, after hee had beene seuen times shipped and vnshipped, and landed at Harflew. with 1000. fresh souldiers, and came to Roane, and then the Duke of Yorke returned into England.

1438. The Earle of Warwicke hearing, that the Duke of Burgoyne belieged the Castell of Croytie, sent the Lord Talbot, the Lord Fauconbridge, Sir Thomas Kiriell, Sir John Mountgomery, Thomas Limbroke, Thomas Chandos, Dauy Hall, and other Knights and Esquires, and in all 5000. men. When the Duke of Burgoyne was enformed of the approach of the Lord Talbot, and other, he with all his power, sauing 400. left in a bastle by him there newly builded, fled to Abbeuile, which battle was soone gained, and the men either slaine, or taken. After this, the Lord Talbot sent to the Duke of Burgoyne, signifying to him, that except hee would come forth, and giue him battel, hee would vtterly waste his countrey of Picardy, and according to his promise, hee brent townes, spoyled and slew many people in Picardy, but for all this deings, the Duke of Burgoyne appeared not, but got him from Abbeuile to Ambois, so that the Lord Talbot abode twenty daies in Picardy and Artois, destroying all afore him, and returned without impeachment.

Owen Tewther fouly hurting his keeper, brake out of Newgate, but was taken afterward by the Lord Beaumond, and brought againe to Newgate, and againe escaped. This Owen was thus imprisoned by the Duke of Gloucester, for that hee had foure children by Queene Katherine, late wife to Henry the 5th, as is afore shewed. This Owen was many yeeres afterward taken at a skirmish about Wigmore, and brought by Sir Richard Vaghan, Grandfather to great Vaghan the Sergeant at armes, to Hereford, and there beheaded, and buried: but afterward Iasper, sonne to Owen, suddenly tooke Sir Richad Vaghan in his house, or as some say, at Cheptstow Castle, and caused his head to be smitten off. In the moneth of June, the Earle of Huntington (as Steward of Guine) who with two thousand Archers, and foure hundred Speares, was sent into Gascoigne, as a supply to the Countrey and Commons of the same. Also Sir Richard Wooduile, Sir William Chamberlaine, Sir William Peres, and Sir William Story with 1000. men, were sent to succour the Townes in Normandy, which at that time, had need of great helpe, for the French captaines had small confidence in the Normans, and not so much in some of their owne Nation, for bribery with couetousnesse ran fast abroad with French crownes, that vnneth any creature could hold his hands close, or purses shut.

Owen Leuelan her husband and after beheaded.

1439. Rich. Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke deceased.

This yeere, the Towne of Wico Malbanke, or Nantwich, in the County of Chester, was pitifully consumed with fire. Anno Reg. 17. The Town of Nantwich burnt.

This yeere, by reason of great tempests, immeasurable waues and raines, there rose such a scarsity, that Wheat was sold in some places for two shillings six pence the bushell, Wine for twelue pence the gallon, bay salt for foureteene pence the Bushell, &c.

In this moneth followed such a frost, and after that so deepe a snow, that all the ground was couered therewith, and all the ditches frozen, which weather put the English-men in hope to recouer again the Towne of Pontheise, by the French King gotten before, by corrupting with money diuers Burgesters of the Towne, wherefore the Englishmen being clothed all in white, with John, Lord Clifford their Captaine, came in the night to the ditches, and passed them without danger, by reason of the frost, scaled the Walls, slew the watch, and tooke the Towne, with many profitable prisoners.

After the regaining of the Towne of Pontheise, Richad Beauchamp, Earle of Warwike, Lieutenant Generall of France, and of the duchy of Normandy, died in the Castle of Roane in Normandy on the last of April, the yeere of his age 58. And on the fourth of October next following his Corpes was honourably conueyed, as well by Water, as by Land, from Roane in Normandy, to Warwicke in England, and was laid with full solemnities in a faire chest made of stone in the West doze of the Colledge of our Ladies Church, by his Noble ancestors, till a Chappell by him deuised in his life were made, which Chappell founded on the rocke, and all the members thereof, his executors did fail ly make and aparrell, by the authozity of his said last Will and Testament: And there after by the said authozity, they did translate the said body into the vault above said, where hee is intombed right Princely, and pozttured with an Image armed of Copper and gilt, hooped ouer with staues of Copper and gilt, like a Chariot.

About the beginning of Lent, John, Duke of Somerset, and the Lord Talbot, with other Captaines and men of warre, to the number of 2000. marching towards Picardy, passed ouer the River of Some, and thozow the Towne of Monterueill, came before the fortresse of Fullueuill, which the Duke besieged, whilest the Lord Talbot entred further into the Countrey. After that the Duke had mounted his great artillery, and began to batter the hold, the Captaine within being slaine with a shot thereof, and the battery being still continued, the place was peeled in the which the Duke left a competent garison of souldiours, which afterward sore indomaged the countrey.

This done, the Duke followed the Lord Talbot, who was already entred a good way within the countrey of Sauthois, and now inopening their powers together, they came to a Fortresse called Lyhons in Sauthois, which was also rendered vnto them, after they had brent the Church, which the countrey people kept against them, and would not yeeld it, till they were fired out, and brent, and slaine, to the number of 300. The fortresse being by composition delinered into their hands, the Duke with his power, lay there about ten daies, sending diuers troupes of his men abroad into the countrey, which spoyled the same, tooke the fortresse of Barbonners, and the Lord thereof within it, who for his ransome, and to haue his subiects and house saued from spoyle and fire, compounded with his takers for 1000. saluz of gold, which he payed to them: finally, after the Duke of Somerset, and the Lord Talbot, with their power, had tayne in Lyhons about ten daies, they returned into Normandy without any impeachment.

1440. This yeere, Wheat was sold at London for three shillings the Bushell, Malt for thirteene shillings the quarter, Oates for eight pence the bushell, which forced men to eat Beanes, Pease and Barley, more then in an hundred yeres before: wherefore Stephen Browne Maior of London, sent into Pruse, and caused to be brought to London, many ships laden with Rie, which did much good to the people, for bread corne was so scarce in England, that poore people made them bread of Ferne roots.

Parliament at Reding. In a Parliament at Reding, it was ordained, that all Marchant straungers should goe to host with Englishmen, and to make sale of their merchandises, and buy againe what they would within the space of fire moneths, giuing their hosse for euery twenty shillings worth two dence, except the Osterlings. And that euery poulholder that was alien, should pay to the King thirteen pence the yere, and euery seruant alien fire pence.

Order for straungers.

King Henry created Edmond Hamden, Earle of Richmond, and Iaspar de Hatfielde, Earle of Pembrooke, these were the Kings brethren by mothers side: Iohn Sutton Knight, was created Baron of Dudley, the last day of the Parliament at Reding. Sir Richard VVich, Vicar of Hermetlworth in Esser, or Middleser, sometime vicar of Dertford in Kent, who had before abiured, was brent on the Tower hill the 17. of June. After whose death was great murmure among the people; for some said hee was a good man, and an holy, and put to death by malice: and some said the contrary, so that many men and women went by night to the place where hee was burnt, and offered their money, images of ware, and other things, making their prayers, kneeling and kissing the ground, bare away with them the ashes of his body for holy reliques, &c. This endured eight daies, till the Maior and Aldermen ordained men of armes, to restraine the people, who apprehended many, and sent them to prison, amongst whom, was taken the Vicar of Working Church beside the Tower, in whose Parish all this was done, who had received the offering of the simple people. And to excite them to offer the more feruently to the fulfilling of his false couetousnesse, hee had meddled ashes with the powder of spices, and strewed them in the place where the Priest was burnt, and so the simple people were deceiued, weening the sweete sauour had come of the ashes of the dead Priest: all which the said Vicar of Working Church confessed in prison. This haue I noted the more at large, because some haue written the Vicar of Working to be brent, which is false, for he was not brent, though hee beter deserued then the other. Richard Wich brent on the Tower hill.

After the death of the Earle of Warwicke, the Duke of Yorke was againe made Regent of France, which being accompanied with the Earle of Dxford, the Lord Bourcher called Earle of Eue, Sir Iames of Dymond, the Lord Clinton, Sir Richard Wooduile, and diuers other Noble men, on the fifteenth of May shipped at Portesmouth, and sayled thence into Normandy, before whose arriuall, the French King sore grieued with the Towne of Pontoise, assembled a great Army, and besieged the said Towne himselfe in person, enuironing it with bastiles, trenches, and ditches, beating the walls and bulwarke with the shot of great ordinance, giuing thereunto diuers other assaults, but Iohn, Lord Clifford, like a baliant Captaine defended the Towne so manfully, that the Frenchmen rather lost, then won. The Duke of Yorke Regent of France.

The Duke of Yorke at his landing, sent for the Lord Talbot, and a great number of souldiours, and so came neere to the Towne of Ponthoise, and there incamped himselfe, and sent word to the French King, that, thither he was come to giue him battell, if hee would come out of his strength and bastiles, but the French King determined not to venture his person with men of so base estate, but meant to keepe his ground, bidding the Lord Regent to enter at his perill: and in the meane season, did what he could to stop the passage of the riuer Dise, Dise, so that no victuall should be brought to the English army by that way.

The Duke of Yorke perceiuing that the French king minded not to fight, purposed to passe ouer the riuer of Dise, and so to fight with him. Whereupon he remoued his campe and appointed the Lord Talbot and other to make countenance, as they would passe the riuer by force at the port of Beaumont, and appointed another company in boates of timber and lether, and bridges made of cords and ropes to passe ouer beneath the abbey, Whilest the Lord Talbot made a crie as though he would assault the gate, certaine Englishmen passed the water in boates, and drew a bridge of cords ouer, so that great number of them were got to the other side, ere the Frenchmen were aduised what had hapned, When they saw the chance, they ran like mad-men to haue stopped the passage, but it was to late, for the most part of the Englishmen were got ouer, insomuch, that they chased their enemies backe, and slue Sir Guilliam de Castell, and diuers other. The Frenchmen seing their euill hap, returned to their king, and tolde him what had happened, whereupon he doubting to be assailed to his disaduantage, thought not good longer to tarry, but with all speede, removing his ordinance, into the bastile of Saint Martin, which hee had newly made, dislodged in the night from Pontoyllon, and went to Poysle, leauing the Lords de Cotigni Admirall of Fraunce with 3000. men, to keepe the bastile. The Englishmen the next day come before the towne of Ponthois, thinking there to haue found the French king, but he was gone, and in his lodging they found great riches, and much stuffe, which hee could not carrie away for feare of the sodaine inuasion. The Duke with his power entred the towne, repaired the wals, and diuers times assaulted the bastile of the Frenchmen. After this the Duke intending once againe to offer the French king battell, left behinde him at Ponthois, Sir Geruais Clifton, Sir Nicholas Curdet, Henry Chandos, and a thousand souldiers, and therewith removing with his whole army, came before Poysle where hee set himselfe and his men in order of battell ready to fight. There issued out some Frenchmen, but to their losse: for diuers of them were slaine, and fowre valiant horsemen taken. The Duke perceiuing the Frenchmen durst not encounter in field with the English power, dislodged from Poysle, and came to Maunt and from thence to Roan.

An. reg. 19. When the Regent and the Lord Talbot were returned againe into Normandy, the French king considering how much it should redound to his dishonour to let rest the towne of Ponthois, in his enemies hands, hee ettsones returning sodainly againe vnto Pouthois, hee first by assault gat the Church, and after the whole towne, take the captaine and diuers other Englishmen, and slue to the number of three hundred, amongst the which Sir Nicholas Burdet chefe butler of Normandy was one. Sir Nicholas Burdet slaine.

After this, King Henry, and King Charles agreed to send Ambassadors to commune of peace: King Henry sent Henry Beufort Cardinall of Winchester, with diuers other Noble men to Caleis, with whom was also sent Charles Duke of Orliance yet prisoner in England, to the end he might bee both author of the peace, and procurer of his owne deliuerance. The French King sent the Archbishoppe of Reimes, and the Earle of Dunois, and the Duke of Burgoigne sent the Lord de Creue-Cure, and diuers other: all these met at Caleis where the Duke of Orliance curteously received the Earle of Dunois (his bastard brother) thanking him greatly for his paines taking in gouerning his lands and countrey, during the time of his captiuitie and absence. Diuers communications were had, as well for the deliuerance of the Duke, as for a finall peace, but nothing was concluded, sauing that another meeting was appointed. The Duke of Orliance was set at libertie, paying for his ransome 300000. crownes.

The 26. of November was a challenge in armes done before King Henry within lists, in Smithfield, betweene Sir Richard Wooduile, a Knight of England, and a Knight of Spaine, but the King toke vp the matter into his hands, after the third stroke.

The Kings College in Cambridge. This yeere king Henry being of himselfe alwayes naturally inclined to doe good, and fearing lest hee might leaue vnthankefull to Almighty God for his great benefits bestowed vpon him, since the time he first toke vpon him the regiment of his Realme, determined for his primar notable worke, to erect and found two famous Colleges in the honour and worship of his holy name, and for the increase of vertue, the dilation of cunning, and establishment of Christian faith, whereof the one in Cambridge, to be called his Colledge Royall of our Lady, and Saint Nicholas: and the other at Eaton, beside Windsore, to bee called his Colledge of our Blessed Ladie. And for the performance of this his deuout purpose, he enfeoffed certeine Bishops with other noble and worshipful personages, by his letters pattents, with lands and possessions, parcell of his inheritance of the Dutchie of Lancaster, to the cleere value of twelue score pound and 30. hundred pound by yere, which letters pattents he after confirmed by his acte of Parliament, declaring also by his will vnto his said Feoffes, his intent and meaning: how the same should be imployed vpon the edifications of his saide two Colledges, whereof in my iudgement the deuice is so excellent, and the buildings so princely and apt for that purpose, as I cannot omit to set forth vnto you the very plat of the whole Colledge in Cambridge, euen as I finde mentioned, almost Verbatim, in his said will, supposing, that if the rest of the house had proceeded according to the Chappell already finished (as his full intent and meaning was) the like Colledge could scant haue beene found againe in any Christian land. This Colledge was begun in his time, and finished so farre, that in Anno. 1443, (which was the 21. of his raigne) the cemitery or Church-yarde, the alter, &c. (as the manner was) were consecrated by the Bishoppes of Salisbury and Lincolne. The wordes of the Will are thus: As touching the dimensions of the Church of my said Colledge, of our Ladie and Saint Nicholas of Cambridge, I have deuised and appointed, that the same Church shall containe in length 288. foote of assise, without any Iles, and all of the wideneese of foztie foote. And the length of the same Church from the West ende vnto the altars at the Quire doze, shall containe 120. foote And from the Pzouosts stall, vnto the greece called Gradus Chori, 90. foote, foz 36. stals on either side of the same Quire, answering to xx. fellowes, and ten pziests conduits, which must be de prima forma, And from the saide stals vnto the East ende, of the said Church, 22. foote of assise. Thus much I haue inlarged by occasion of reading this good Kings will: the cunning deuise whereof I leaue to the considerate iudgement of such as be expert in architecture, heartily desiring almighty God to put into the heart of some noble Pzince of this land, one date to make perfect his royall wozke so charitably begun.

1441. A combate was fought at Totehill betweene two theues, the appealer and defendant, the appealer had the fielde of the defendant within three strokes.

Roger Bolinbrooke a great Astronomer, with Thomas Southwell a Chanon of Saint Stephens Chappell at Westminster, were taken as conspiratours of the Kings death, foz it was said, that the same Roger should labour to consume the kings person by way of Negromancie, and the said Thomas should say Masses in the lodge of Harneseypark beside London, vpon certaine instruments, with the which the said Roger should vse his craft of Negromancie, against the faith, and was assenting to the said Roger, in all his wozkes. And the 5. and twentith day of July being Sunday, Roger Bolinbrooke, with all his instruments of Negromancie, that is to say, a chayre painted wherein he was wont to sit, vpon the 4. cozners of which chayre stode foure swozdes, and vpon euery swozd an image of copper hanging, with many other instruments: he stode on a high Scaffolde in Paules Churchyard, before the crosse holding a swozd in his right hand and a sceptet in his left, arrayed in a mertellons attire, and after the Sermon was ended by maister Low Bishop of Rochester, he abiured all articles longing to the crafte of Negromancie oz misbowning to the faith, in presence of the Archb. of Canterbury, the Cardinall of Winchester, the bishop of London, Salisbury, and many other.

Roger Bolinbrooke.

On the Tuesday next following, dame Eleanor Cobham, daughter to Reginald Cobham Lozd of Sirbzough, Dutchesse of Glocester, stode by night into the Sanctuary at Westminster, which caused her to be suspected of treason.

Eleanor Cobham appeales herselfe.

In the meane time Roger Bolinbrooke, was examined before the Kings Counsaile, where he confessed that he wrought the saide Negromancie at the stirring and procurement of the said Dame Elianor, to know what should befall of her, and to what estate she should come, wherupon she was cited to appeare before Henry Chicheley Archbishop of Canterburie, Henry Beaufort bishoppe of Winchester Cardinall, John Kempe Archby. of Yorke Cardinall: William Alcocke bpshop of Salisburie, and other in Saint Stephens Chappell at Westminster, there to answere to certaine Articles in number 28. of Negromancie, witch-craft, sozceric, heresie, and treason, where when she appeared, the foresaide Roger was brought foth to witnes against her, and said, that she was cause and first stirrer him to labour in the sayd Art. Then on the 11. of August, she was committed to the ward of Sir John Steward, Sir William Wolfe Knights, John Stanley Esquier, and other, to be conueyed to the Castle of Ledes, there to remaine till 3. wekes after Michaelmas.

Shortly after, a commission was directed to the Earles of Huntington, Stafford, Suffolke and Northumberland, the treasurer sir Ralph Cromwell, John Cornwall Lozd Fanhope, sir Walter Hungerforde, and to certaine Iudges of both Benches, to enquire of all manner of treasons, sozceries, and other things that might be hurtfull to the Kings person, before whome the sayde Roger, and Thomas Southwell, as principals, and Dame Elianor as accessary, were indicted of treason in the Guilde Hall of London.

There was taken also Margery Gurdemaine a witch of Eye besides Westminster, whose sozcerie and witchcraft the said Elianor hadde long time vsed and by her medicines and drinkes enforced the Duke of Glocester to loue her, and after to wedde her, wherefoze, and foz cause of relapse, the same Witch was brent in Smithfield, on the twentie-seuen day of October. An. reg. 20. The witch of Eye brent.

The 21. of October, in the Chappell before-said, before the Bishops, of London Rob. Gilbart, of Lincolne William Ainewike, of Norwich Thomas Brouns, the sayde Elianor appeared, and Adam Molins Clarke of the Kings Counsell read certaine articles obiected against her of Sozcerie and Negromancy, wherof some she denyed, and some she confessed.

The three and twentith of October, Dame Elianor appeared againe, and witnesses were brought foth and examined: and she was conuict of the saide Articles: then was it asked if she would say any thing against the witnesses, whereunto shee answered, nay, but submitted her selfe. The 27. day of October shee abiured the articles, & was adiopned to appeare againe the ninth of November. In the meane tyme, to wit, on the 26. of October Thomas Southwell yped in the Tower of London, as himselfe had prophesied that he should neuer die by Iustice of the Law.

Elianor Cobham, did penance.

The 9. of November Dame Elianor appeared before the Archbyshop and other, in the sayde Chappell, and receiued her penance, which thee performed.

On Monday the 13. of November, she came from Westminster by water, and landed at the Temple bridge, from whence with a taper of ware of 2 pound in her hand, she went through Flete-streete, Fludsselle (saue a Kerchefe) to Pauls, where she offered her taper at the high Altar. On the Wednesday next she landed at the Swan in Thamis streete, and then went through Bridge-streete, Grace church streete, straight to Leaden Hal, and so to Christ church by Aldegate. On Friday she landed at Queene Hyue, and so went through Cheape to Saynt Michaels in Cornehill, in foyme afozesaid: at all which times the Maioz, Sherifes, and crafts of London, receiued her and accompanied her. This being done she was committed to the ward of sir Thomas Stanley, wherein she remained during her life in the castle of Chester, hauing yerely 100. markes assigned foz her finding, in the 22. of Henry the first, she was remoued to Kenilworth, there to be safely kept whose pride, false couetise, and lechery, were cause of her conuiction.

The 18 of November Roger Bolingbroke, with Sir Iohn Hum prieste, and William Woodham Esquier, were arraigned in the Guild hall of London, where the said Iohn and William hadde their Charters, but Roger Bolingbroke was condemned, and had iudgement of sir Io. Hody, chiefe Iustice of the Kings Bench, and the same day he was drawne from the Tower to Tyborne and there hanged and quartered: and when the said Roger should suffer, he said that he was neuer guilty of any treason against the Kings person, but hee had presumed to far in his cunning, wherof he cryed God mercy: and the Iustice that gaue on him iudgement, lined not long after.

Henry Beauchampe Earle of Warwicke.

Henry Beauchampe succeeded in his fathers inheritance, who being kept two yeres in the Kings handes, was restored to all his liuings with great glory, foz he was crowned, king of Wight, by the Kings owne hands, and nominated chiefe Earle of England.

The Duke of Orliance being deliuered (as afoze shewed) and speaking now better English than French, after his arriuall in France, repaired to the Duke of Burgoigne, and according to his promise, married the Lady Mary Cleue in the towne of S. Omers, on whom hee begat a sonne, which after was French King by the name name of Lewes the twelfth.

Richard D. of Yozke regent of France and gouernoz of Normandy, sent the Lozd Willoughby with a great number of souldiers to destroy the county of Amiens, and Iohn Lozd Talbot appointed to besiege the towne of Diepe: and the regent himselfe, accompanied with Edmond Duke of Somerset, set fozward into the dutchie of Aniow. The Lozd Willouby entred the country of his enemies vpon such a sodaine, that a great number of people were taken ere they could withdraw into any place of safegard. The Frenchmen in the garrisons adioyning, astonied with the clamos and crie of the people, issued out, and man-fully fought with the Englishmen, but in the end the French men slaine in the foze-front, they turned their backes and fled, the Englishmen followed and slew many, and such as escaped the swoz were robbed by the Earle of Saint Pole, which was comming to aide the Englishmen: in this conflict were slaine aboue 600. men of armes, and a great number taken.

The Dukes of Yozke and Somerset entred into Aniow and Maine, and there destroyed townes, and spoiled the people, and with great prayes and prisoners repaired againe into Normandy, whither also the Lozd Willoughby withdrew after his enterprise atchieued. The Duke of Somerset entred into the marches of Britaine, and toke by assault a Towne named la Gorch, appertaining to the Duke of Alanson, spoyling and burning the same, from thence he went to Pontray, where hee soiorned two moneths, sending foozth daily bands of war, to destroy the countries of [illegible] Britannois, and Chatragonnois. The French King sent the Marshall Loyacq with foure thousand men to resist the inuasions of the Duke of Somerset, but the Duke discomfited him, slew 100. of his men, and tooke 67. prisoners of the best of them. The Duke after this incounter toke the Towne of Beaumont le Vicount, and manned all the foztresses on the frontiers of his enemies, and with rich bootes and prisoners returned to the Duke of Yozke.

In the meane time the Lozd Talbot besieged the towne of Diepe, enuironing it with deepe trenches and rampiers, building also vpon the mount Pawlet a strong bastile, but at length perceiuing the towne to be strongly defended, he deliuered the custody of the bastile to his bastard sonne a valiant yong man and departed to Roan foz aide, money and munition.

The French King sent his sonne the Dolphin of Vienne with the Earle of Dunois and 15000. men to raise the siege from Diepe: thze dayes they assailed the bastile, on the which sir hundzed Englishmen were inclosed: at length the Frenchmen wan it, and take the bastard Talbot prisoner with Sir William Poitow, and Sir Iohn Reply which thozly after were redeemed. The other Englishmen, seeing the bastile won, but the Frenchmen stood a day in order of battaile, and in the night following returned to Roan.

Whilest these things were in doing, Philip Duke of Burgoigne made sharpe war against the Earle of Saint Pole in taking from him townes and Castles, so that hee was constrained to renounce his allegiance, promised ans swoone to the King of England, and returned to the French party.

The

1 combat in Smithfield.

The 26. of January, a challenge was done in Smithfield within lists, before the King, the one, Sir Philip de Beawie of Aragon a Knight, and the other an Esquire of the Kings house, called Iohn Ansley oz Astley, these comming to the field, toke their tents, and then was the Knights sonne made Knight by the King, and so brought againe to his fathers tent. Then the Heralds of Armes called them by name to doe their battell, and so they came both all armed with their weapons: The Knight came with his sword drawne, and the Esquire with his speare, which speare the Esquire cast against the Knight, but the Knight auoyding it with his sword, cast it to the ground, then the Esquire toke his ore, and went against the Knight suddenly, on whome hee stroke many strokes, hard and soze vpon his basenet, and on his hand, and made him loose and let fall his arc to the ground, and drasf vp his bubez thze times, and caught his dagger, and would haue smitten him in the face, foz to haue slaine him in the field: and then the King cryed hw, and so they were departed, and went to their tents, and the King dubbed Iohn Astley Knight foz his valiant foznes, and the Knight of Aragon offered his armes at Windoz.

Acts Reg. 21. Duke and Earle created.

John Beauford, Earle of Somerset, was made Duke of Somerset: and Lozd John Talbot foz his approoued pzowesse shewed in France, was created Earle of Shzewsbury, and his sonne Lozd Talbot, and then with a company of 300. men sent againe into Normandy, foz defence of that Countrey the 25. of May.

1443. Commotion at Norwich.

The Citizens of Norwich vpon against the Pzioz of Thetfs Church, within the same City, and would haue stored the Pziozy, they kept the Towne by strength, against the Duke of Norfolke, and all his power, wherefoze the King sent thither the chiefe Iudge, Iohn Fortescue, with the Earles of Stafford and of Huntington, who indicted many Citizens, and the Pzioz also. The liberties of the City were seised into the Kings hand, and Sir John Clifton made Captaine there, and many of the Citizens fled ouer the Seas, and into vnknowne places.

John Holland, Earle of Huntington, at Windsoze was created Duke of Exceter, Iohn Beauford, Duke of Somerset deceased, and was buryed at Winborne.

College and hospitall at Bigham Ferres.

Also this yeere deceased Henry Chicheley, when hee had sate 29. yeeres Archbishoppe of Canterbury. This Archbishop in his life time, to wit, in Anno 1425. began the foundation of a godly College and Hospitall at Bigham Ferres in Northamptonshire of eight secular Pziests fellowes, foure Clerkes and fiue Choristes: And an Almes-house, oz Hospitall foz pooze people, and obtained many godly benefits and preferments, which hee gaue to the said Towne, which house foz the pooze by him founded, his brethzen, Robert Chicheley and William Chicheley, Aldermen of London, augmented with godly legacies, foz the sustentation of the pooze, which Colledge at the suppression, was valued by the yeere in Lands 156 pound, two shillings, &c.

This Archbishop also founded two Colledges in Oxford, the one All soules Colledge (vnto the which, King Henry the first gaue Lands lately belonging to the Pziozs aliens, to wit, foure Pziozies, Alberbery in Salop, Rumney in Kent, Langtuinth in South Wales, and Wooden Pinkney in Northamptonshire, and therefoze the said King in the Charter, is called founder:) The other Barnard Colledge, since suppressed by King Henry the eight, now by Sir Thomas White againe reedified, repaired and named Saint Johns Colledge. He also reedified the new Library at Canterbury, and furnished the same with bookes, builded a great part of their steeple, repaired their Church, and gaue to the extent of the church many ornaments and rich Iewels: he caused his owne Tombe in the same Church to be builded, during his life, he was the new builder, oz speciall repairer of the faire large Parish Church of Croodolme, as appeareth by his armes grauen on the Walls, Steeple, and Porch of the same Church.

John Stafford, borne at Yoke, in the Parish of Abbotesbery in Dozsetshire, Doctor of Lawes, Deane of Saint Martins le Grand in London, after Bishop of Bath and Wels, about the 12th of Henry the 6. made Chancellour of England, was by Eugenius the fourth, made Archbishop of Canterbury. Annals Eliz.

Also Lewes Luthebrughe, Bishop of Ely, deceased at his Mannoz of Hatfield, and was buried at Ely, to whom Thomas Bourchar succeeded, being translated from Worcester.

Anno Reg. 22. All Christian Princes labour to appease the troubles in France, Whilst England was disquieted, and France by spoyle defaced, all Christendome lamented the continuall destruction of so noble a Realme, and the effusion of so much Christian blood: wherefoze to agree the two puissant Kings, all the Princes of Christendome trauelled so effectually by the Oratozs and Ambassadozs, that a diet was appointed to be kept at the City of Towys in Towaine, where, foz the King of England appeared, William de la Pole, Earle of Suffolke, Doctour Adam Molins, Bishop of Chichester, keeper of the Kings priuy Seale, Sir Robert Ros, and other: and foz the French King, were appointed Charles, D. of Oliance, Lewes de Borbon, Earle of Vandosme, great Maker of the French Kings houshold, Pierce de Bresse, Steward of Poytowe, and Bartran Bearnan, Lozd of Precigni.

There were also sent Ambassadozs from the Empire, from Spaine, from Denmark, from Hungary, to be mediatozs bet wixt the 2. Princes, many meetings were about this business, but no finall concozd could be agreed vpon, more then a certaine tzce foz 18 moneths, which after was prolonged to pze 1449. but in the meane time broken, as pze shall heare afterward.

In this treaty, William de la Pole, Earle of Suffolke, imagining with himselfe, that the next way to come to a perfect peace, was to inioyne some marriage bet wixt the French kings kinswoman, the Lady Margaret, daughter to Reyner, D. of Aniow, and B. Henry of England: this Duke Reyner named himselfe King of Sicill, Naples and Ierusalem, hauing only the Title of thole Realmes, without any profit. This marriage was at the first made strange to the Earle, and one thing seeming to be a great let to it, to wit, because the King of England possessed a great part of the Duchy of Anjow, & the whole Countrey of Maine, which pertained (as they said) to Duke Reyner. The Earle of Suffolke condescended, that the Dutchie of Anjow, and the County of Maine should be delivered to the Duke, demanding with his daughter for her marriage nothing. And to the intent that of this truce might ensue a finall concord, a day of enterview was appointed betweene the King and the Duke, in a place convenient, betweene Chartres and Roane.

When these things were concluded, the Earle of Suffolke with his company returned into England, where he declared what an honorable truce hee had taken, through the which there was great hope of a finall peace, by meanes of the honorable marriage which he had concluded. But though this marrige pleased well the King, and diuers of his Councell, yet other some were against it. For the performance of the conclusions, the French King sent the Earle of Vandosome, great Master of his house, and the Archbishop of Reims, first Pere of France, and diuers other into England, where they were honourably entertained, and after that the Instruments were sealed, and delivered on both parts; the said Ambassadours returned with great rewards.

When these things were done, the King created Humfrey, Earle of Stafford, Duke of Buckingham: and Henry Beauchamp Earle of Warwicke, King Henry heartily tendering him for his Parents sake, bestowed upon him the Dukedome of Warwicke: vnto whom also the King gaue the Castle of Bridlow, with all the appurtenances, which King John had kept in his hands, and his successours after him: he gaue vnto him also the Iles of Gernsey and Jarnsey, Serke, Orne, and Aurney, with all the Pryories Aliens in the same. The Earle of Dorset was created and made Marquesse of Dorset, and William de la Pole. Earle of Suffolke, was created and made Marquesse of Suffolke: also Iohn Talbot Knight, sonne of John, Earle of Shrewsbury, was created Viscount Lisle, for him and his heyres males, on the 26. of July.

Dukes, Marquesses and Earles created.

Anno Reg. 23.

In the moneth of November. William de la Pole, Marquesse of Suffolke, with his wife and many honourable persons, both men and women richly apparelled, sayled into France, for the conueyance of the Lady Margaret, nominated Queene in the Realme of England. This Nobles company came to the City of Towers in Touraine, where they were honourably received and entertained, both of the French King, and of the Duke Reiner, where the Marquesse of Suffolke as Procurator for King Henry, espoused the said Lady in the Church of Saint Martin. At which marriage were present, the father and mother of the bride, the French King which was vncle to the Duke Reiner, and the French Queene Aunt, to the Dutches his wife: there were also the Dukes of Orleance, of Calabre, of Alanson, and of Bretaine, seuen Earles, twelue Barones, twenty Bishops, besides Knights and Gentlemen. When the Feast, Triumphs, Banquets and Iusts were ended, the Lady was delivered to the Marquesse of Suffolke, which in great estate conueied her thorow Normandy vnto Diepe, where a while they remained.

On Candlemas euen, in diuers places of England, was great weathering of wind, hayle, snow, raine, thunders with lightning, whereby the Church of Baldock in Hertfordshire, and Church of Walden in Esser, and diuers other were sore shaken, and the Steeple of S. Pauls in London, about two of the clocke in the afternoone was set on fire in the middest of the Shaft, first on the West side, and then on the South, and the people espying the fire, came to quench it in the Steeple which they did with vinegar, so farre as they could find, so that when the Maior, with much people came to Pauls, to haue holpen if nede had beene, they returned againe euery man to his home, trusting to God, all had beene well, but anon after, betwen eight and nine of the clocke, the fire brake against out of the Steeple, more feruent then before, and did much hurt to the Lead and Timber thereof, but the Maior and much people came thither, and with vinegar quenched the fire that was feruent, so that no man was perished. The Steeple of Waltham in Esser, and of Kingstone in Surrey, was also fired by the same lightning. The fire at Pauls being quenched, a Standart of tree being set vp at Leaden Hall, in Cornehil of London, made fast in the midst of the pauement, and decked with Holme and Iuy, for disport of Christmas, to the people of the City, it was tayne and cast downe with such violence, that the stones of the pauement were cast about in the streete, and into diuers mens houses, to the great terrour of the people that never had seene so strange a tempest.

The Lady Margaret being transported from Diepe, landed at Portchester, from whence she was conueyed by water to Hampton, and rested there in a place called Gods house, from thence she went to Southwicke, and was married to the King in the Abbey of Tichfield on the 22. of Aprill, and from thence she was honourably conueyed by the Lords and estates of this Land, which met with her in sundry places, with great retinues of men in diuers liueries, with their sleeues imbroydered, and some beaten with gold-smiths worke in most costly manner and especially of the Duke of Gloucester, who met her with 500. men in a liuery, and so was conueyed to the Blacke-Heath, where she was met by the Maior, Aldermen and Sheriffes of the City in Scarlet, and theycrafts of the same, all riding on horse-backe, in blue goownes, with imbroydered sleeues, and red hoods, on the 28. of May, who conueyed her with her traine thorow Southwarke, and so thorow the Citty of London, then beautified with pageants of diuers Histories, and other showes of welcome, marueilous costly and sumptuous, which Queene Margaret crowned.

On the 30. of May she was solemnly crowned at Westminster. This woman excelled all other, as well in beautie and fauour, as in wit and policie, and was of stomacke and courage not inferiour to any: her badge was the daisie flower. This marriage seemed to many both vnfortunate and vnprofitable to the Realme of England, and that for diuers causes: first, the King had with her no dowry, and for the fetching of her, and other charges about her, the Parques of Suffolke demanded a whole fifteenth in open Parliament: and also there was deliuered for her the Dutchie of Anjou, the City of Mans, and the county of Maine. Furthermore, the Earle of Armiake toke such displeasure with the King of England for the marriage, that he became bitter enemie to the Realme of England, and was the chiefe cause that the Englishmen were expulsed out of the Dutchie of Aquitaine.

An. reg. 24. Parliament. 1446.

A Parliament was summoned, in the which it was concluded, that by good foresight Normandy might be so furnished for defence before the end of the truce, that the French King should take no aduantage through want of timely prouision: hereupon money was granted, and an armie leuied, the Duke of Somerset appointed to be Regent of Normandy, and the Duke of Yorke discharged of that office.

The Parques of Suffolke in the second of June in the first session of this Parliament, before the Lords spirituall and temporall in the high house assembled, eloquently declared his paine and diligence sustained in his legacy as well for the concluding an abstinence of warre, as in making of the marriage, opening also to them, that the saide truce expired the first of Aprill next comming, except a finall peace, or a further truce were concluded in the meane season, and therefore hee aduised them to foresee and prouide things necessarie for the warres, lest happily the French perceiuing them vnprouyed, would take the aduantage, and agree neither to peace nor amitie. Likewise on the next morrow, he descended into the common house, accompanied with certaine Lords, and there declared the same matter to the Knights, and bourgesses, praying the commons for his discharge, that as well all his doings and proceedings in the Kings affaires, beyond the sea, as also his aduertisements and counsaile opened to the Lords and commons now together assembled, might be by the King and them enacted, and enrolled in the records of the Parliament. Whereupon on the next morrow William Burley then speaker, and the company of the lower house, repayred to the Kings presence then sitting amongst the Lords, and there humbly required that the request of the Parquesse might be granted, and so likewise the Lords made the like petition, kneeling on their knees, and the king condescended to their desires, and so the whole matter was enacted and recorded for his acquitall.

Henry Beauchamp Duke of Warwike, chiefe Earle of England, Lord Spencer and Burgauenie, king of the Ile of Wight, & Cornsey and Jarnsey, and Lord of the Castell of Bridlow, married Cicely daughter to Richard Neuill Earle of Salisbury, and had issue a daughter named Anne, who died at the age of fiue yeere, hee at the age of 22. yeres died in the Castell of Hanley, and was buried at Theorbury.

Thomas fitz Thomas Prior of Kilmaine appeached sir Iames Butler Earle of Ormond of treasons, which had a day assigned to fight in Smithfield, the lists were made, and the field prepared, but when it came to the point, the king commanded they should not fight and take the quarrell into his hands, which was done at the instance of certaine preachers and doctors of London, as master Gilbert Worthington, An. reg. 25. and Doctor of S. In which meane space, to wit on the 10. of February began a Parliament at S. Edmondsbury in Suffolke, at which time for feare of the Duke of Glocester, all the wayes about the same towne were kept with armed men both day and night, so that many died with colde and waking. Humfrey, Duke of Glocester, being at the Castle of the Vies in Wiltshire, came from thence to the Parliament, and was lodged in the hospitall, where shortly after hee was arrested by John, Lord Beamount high Constable, the Duke of Buckingham, the Duke of Somerset and other, who appointed certaine of the kings houshold to wait upon him: but on the 24. day he died for sorow, as some saide, that hee might not come to his answere: his body was shewed to the Lords and commons, and seemed to die of a palsey, or of an impostume: he was honourably buried at S. Albons: 22. of his principall servants were arrested and sent to divers prisons and five of them were arraigned at London, and condemned, whose names were sir Roger Chamberlaine knight, Richard Middleton, Thomas Herbert, Arthur Tursey Esquires, and Richard Nedam gentleman, which were all five drawn from the Tower of London to Tyborne, and there hanged, let downe quicke, stript naked, marked with a knife for to bee quartered, and then a charter shewed for their lives by the Duke of Suf. but the yeoman of the crowne had their liverie, and the hangman had their cloths, or wearing apparrell. The Pardon for lives was obtained though the earnest sute and labor of master Gilbert Worthingchon, then parson of S. Andrewes in Holborn, a doctor of Divinitie a famous man and a great preacher in those daies, Thomas Wild of Greenwich Esquire serving the saide Duke being, amongst other, pardoned, the course of his pardon in the patent runneth to this effect, for being amongst many other traytors against the king with Humfrey Duke of Glocester, they went about and practised to deliver Elianor, late wife to the Duke from out of prison, and gathered a great power, and number of men, to come to the Parliament at Bury, and there to have practised the destruction of the King, &c. An. reg. 26.

In this 26. yeere of the raigne of this King I finde no great matter worth the recitall, but that the Marques of Suffolke, by great favor of the King and Queene, was created Duke of Suffolke, which dignity he long enioyed not: for Richard Duke of Yorke being greatly allied by his wife, to the chiefest Peeres and the States of the Realme, ouer and besides his owne progenie, perceiuing the King to bee a ruler, and not to rule, but the whole burthen of the realme to rest in the ordinance of the Queene, and the Duke of Suffolke, began secretly to allure his friends of the nobilitie, and priuily declared vnto them his title to the Crowne, and likewise did hee to certaine gouernours of Cities and Townes, which priuie attempt was so politikly handled and secretly kept, that his proution was ready before his purpole was opened.

John Sturtun was made Baron of Sturton.

After the death of Henry Beauford Bishop of Winchester, the affaires in France were neither well looked to, nor the gouernours of the countrey well aduised, for an English Captaine, called sir Frances surnamed de Aragonoys, tooke a towne named Fogars, vpon the borders of Normandie belonging to the Duke of Byptaine. For the which he complained him to the French King, and hee at the said Dukes request sent vnto the King of England, to aske restitution of the harme. The which messengers were answered of the Kings Counsell, that the deede was right displeasant vnto the King, and that sir Frances of Aragon had enterprised the feat of his owne presumption. Whereupon it followed shortly after, that the French by like policie tooke the Towne and Castell of Pountallarche, and after that many other, so that the taking the foresaide towne of Fogiars by the Englishmen, was the occasion by the which the French after got all Normandie.

Anreg. 28.

This peere the Frenchmen got many Townes in Normandie out of the possession of the Englishmen. Also the Citie of Roane was yelded to the French with condition that the Captaines and garrisons might depart with armour and goods, and not long after was rendred (with the like condition as of Roane) the townes of Harflewe, and Honnflewe. of France called Sir Lewis de Breyll, challenged an Esquire of England, named Ralph Chalons, of certaine feats of warres, the which to prowe, a day to them was given to meete at a Towne in France, named Paunce, where the French knight at that day was present: but Chalons ranne the French knight thorow the body with his speare, whereof the said Lewis dyed.

An. Reg. 27.

About the same time also began a new rebellion in Ireland, but Richard, Duke of Yorke being sent thither to appease the same, so asswaged the fury of the wilde and sauage people there, that hee wan such favour among them, as could neuer be separated from him and his linage.

Richard, Duke of Yorke wan favour of the Irish.

Barons created.

John, Vicount Beamount, was made Chamberlaine of England, Henry de Bromefield, Lord Vescy, William Bourcher, knight, Lord Bunuile, William Beauchampe, Lord S. Amond, Thomas Percy, Lord Egremonde, these were created the 6. of November.

The French King assembled an army royall, and comming before Cane, besieged it on all sides, and assaulted the walls, but the Duke of Somerset, and the other Captaines within the Towne, manfully withstood their enemies, beating backe the assalants. The French King with his great Ordinance shot daily at the walls, and did some hurt, but to the Castell which stood on a rocke, and in it a dungeon, vnable to be beaten downe, bee hid no harme at all: Though the Duke of Somerset were the Kings Lieutenant, yet Sir Dauy Hall, as Captaine of this towne, for his Master, the Duke of Yorke, owner thereof, tooke vpon him the chiefe charge: Sir Robert Vere was Captaine of the Castle, and Sir Henry Radford, Captaine of the dungeon: daily the shot was great, but more terrible then hurtfull, saving that one day, a stone shot into the Towne, fell betweene the Dutches of Somerset and her children, which being amazed with this chance, besought her husband, kneeling on her knees, to haue mercy and compassion of his small infants, that they might be deliuered out of the Towne in safety. The Duke moued with the sorrow of his wife, and loue of his children, rendred the Towne, with condition to depart with all their goods. Sir Dauy Hall, with diuers other departed to Cherbrough, and from thence sailed into Ireland, to the Duke of Yorke, making relation to him of all these doings, which thing kindled so great a rancour in the Dukes heart, that he never left persecuting the Duke of Somerset, till he had brought him to his fatall confusion After the obtaining of the strong towne of Cane, the Earle of Cleremont, besieged the Citie of Silesiur. Whereof was Captaine Mathew Gough, with 300. Englishmen, who in the end deliuered the Towne vpon condition to depart. Then was Falaise besieged, whereof were Captaines, for the Earle of Shrewsbury that was owner, Andrew Tropole, and Thomas Cotton Esquires, which agreed to deliuer it on conditions. The Towne of Donfront was likewise rendered, so that there rested now onely English, the Towne of Chirburgh, whereof was Captaine, one Thomas Gonuile, which as long as victuals serued, defended the Towne right manfully, but in the end, vpon composition yeelded the Towne, and went to Caleis, where the Duke of Somerset and many other English-men then soiourned. Thus was Normandy lost clearely out of the English mens hands, after it had continued in their possession, the space of 30. yeeres, by the conquest of Henry the fift. In which Dutchy were an 100. strong Townes and fortresses to be kept and holden, besides them that were destroyed by the warres, and in the same is one Archbishoppicke, and five Bishoppricks. Whilest the French made these conquests in the Dutchy of Normandy, the common people make exclamations against the Duke of Suffolke, affirming him to be the onely cause of the deliuery of Anion, and Mayne, the chiefe procurer of the Duke of Glocesters death, the losse of Normandy, &c. Whereupon the Queene doubting not onely the Dukes destruction, but also her owne confusion, caused the Parliament begunne at Westminster, after Christmas adiourned to the Blackefriers in London, then to be adiourned to Leycester, thinking there to haue suppressed the malice conceiued against the Duke and her, at which place, few of the Nobility would appeare: where it was againe adiourned to Westminster, where was a full appearance. In the which session, the commons of the nether-house put vp to the King and the Lords, many articles of treason, impittion, and euil demeanour against the Duke of Suffolke, as ye may read in Hall. The Queen therefore, doubting some commotion to arise, caused the said Duke to be committed to the Tower, where he remained not past a moneth, but was restored to the kings favour. This doing so much displeased the people, that in sundry places of the Realme, they assembled together in great companies, and chose to them a Captaine, but were ouercome, as shall be shewed.

After this little rage asswaged, about the Octaues of Easter, the Parliament was adiourned to Leicester, whither came the King and Queene in great estate, and with them the Duke of Suffolke, as chiefe Counsellour, where the commons of the lower house, besought the King that such persons as assented to the release of Anion, and deliverance of Mayne, might be duely punished. And to be privy to that fact they accused as principall, the Duke of Suffolk with John, Bishop of Salisbury, sir James Fines, Lord Say, Daniel Trimilian, and other whom they inoited of treason, and many other matters touching the King, and his commons, as it appeareth by the verdict of their inquest, to to the number of a thirtie persons, whereupon the king to appease the commons, first depriued the Lord May, being treasurer of England, and other from their offices, and names, and after banished William de la Pole Duke of Suffolke, for fiue yeres, who taking ship, at Ipswich in Suffolke, on the third day of May, sailed towards France, but was encountred with a ship of warre, appertayning to the Duke of Exceter, Constable of the tower of London, called the Nicholas of the tower. The Captaine of which barke, with small fight entred into the Dukes ship, and perceiuing his person present brought him to Douer Roade, and there on the hoof of a coche boate, rased his head to be stricken off, and left his body with the head lying there on the sands, which corps being there found, by a chaplaine of his, was conueyed to Wingfield colledge in Suffolke, and there buried saith Hall: but Thomas Walsingham saith that he was buried in the Charterhouse of Kingston vpon Hull.

Liber fundationum.

The death of the Duke of Suffolke brought not the Realme in quiet, for these that fauoured the Duke of Yorke, and willed the crowne vpon his head, procured a commotion in Kent in this manner.

Iacke Cade Captaine of the rebellion in Kent.

In the month of May, the commons of Kent in great numbers assembled, hauing to their captaine Iacke Cade, who named himselfe Mortimer, referring to the Duke of Yorke: as he was named of some John Amendall: this captaine brought a great number of people to the Blacke heath, and there kept the field more then a moneth, pilling the country about, to whome the City of London at that time was full fauourable. And the saide Captaine (as I finde recorded) sent for such Citizens of London as it pleased him to command to repayre vnto him, vnder letters of safe conduct as followeth.

The safegard and signe manuell of the Captaine of Kent, sent to Thomas Cocke draper of London, by the Captaine of the great assembly in Kent.

BY this our writing sealed we grant and will permit truely, that Thomas Cocke of London draper, shall come in good surety and in safegard to our presence, without any hurt of his person, and to auoid from vs againe at his pleasure, with all other persons assigned at his denomination with him comming in likewise.

The commandement by the Captaine of Kent, sent vnto Thomas Cocke aboue said.

FOr your instruction, first ye shall charge all Lumbards and strangers, being marchants, Jenewes, venetions, Flozentines, and other this day to draw them together, and to ordaine for by the Captaine 12. harnisses, compleat of the best fashion, 24. brigandines, 12. battaile axes, 12. glaues, fir hogles with saddle and bridle completely harnessed & 1000. markes of ready money: and if this our demand bee not obserued and done, we shall haue the heads of as many as we can get of them.

What answer to this demand was returned I finde not, but like it is the same was granted and performed, for I finde not the said Captaine and gentlemen, at their being in the City, to haue hurt any stranger.

In the meane time the King sent notable men to the said Captaine and his fellowship, to know the purpose and the cause of their insurrection: vnto whom the Captaine answered, that hee and his company were assembled there to redresse and reforme the wrongs that were done in the Realme, and to withstand the malice of them that were destroiers of the common weale, and to amend the defaults of them that were chiefe Counsellors to the King, and shewed vnto them the Articles of complaints touching the misgouernement of the Realme, wherein was nothing contained but seemed reasonable, wherevpon a copie was sent to the parliament holden that time at Westminster, with also one other Bill of requestes by them made, of things to be reformed, and to haue answere thereof againe, but hee had none. The bill of Articles they intituled.

The complaint of the commons of Kent, and causes of the assembly on the Blackheath.

1. Inprimis, it is openly noysed that Kent should be destroyed with a royall power, and made made a wilde Forrest, for the death of the Duke of Suffolke, of which the commons of Kent were neuer guiltie.

2. Item, the King is stirred to liue onely on his commons, and other men to haue the reuenewes of the crowne, the which hath caused pouerty in his excellency, and great payments of the people, now late to the king granted in his Parliament.

3. Item, that the Lords of his royall blood haue bin put from his daily presence, and other meane persons of lower nature exalted and made chiefe of his priuy counsell, the which stoppeth matters of wrongs done in the realme from his excellent audience, and may not bee redressed as law will, but if bribes and gifts be messengers to the hands of the said counsell.

4. Item, the people of his realme be not paid of debts owing for stuffe and purueiance taken to the vse of the kings houshould, in hindering of the saide people, and the poore commons of this Realme.

5. Item, the kings meniall seruants of houshould, and other persons, asked daily goods and lands, of suspeached or indited of treason the which the king graunteth anon, ere they so endaungered, be conuict. The which causeth the receiuers thereof to enlarge labours and meanes applied to the death of such people so appeached, or indited, by subtile meanes, for conuise of the said grants: and the people so impeached or indited, though it be vntrue, may not be committed to the law for their deliuerance, but held still in prison to their vttermost hindering and destruction for couetised of goods.

6 Item, though diuers of the poore people and commons of the Realme, haue neuer so great right, truth and perfect Title to their Land, yet by vntrue claime of inselfement, made vnto diuers Mates, gentiles, and the Kings meniall seruants in maintenances against the right, the true owners dare not hold claime, nor pursue their right.

7 Item, it is noysed by common boyces, that the Kings Lands in France, haue bene aliened and put away from the Crowne, and his Lords and people there destroyed with vntrue meanes of treason, of which it is desire, enquiries thzough all the Realme to be made, how, and by whom, and if such traytours may be found guilty, them to haue execution of Law, without any pardon, in example of other.

8 Item, Collectors of the 15. peny in Kent, be greatly hered and hurt in paying great summes of money in the exchequer, to sue out a writ, called Quorum Nomina, for allowance of the Barons of the ports, which now is desired that hereafter in the lieue of the Collectors the Barons aforesaid may sue it out for their ease, at their owne costs.

9 Item, the Shrieues, and vnder-shrieue, let to ferme their offices and Baylimikes, taking great surety therefore, the which causeth extorcion done by them and by their Bayliffes to the people.

18 Item, simple and poore people that vse not hunting, be greatly oppressed by inditements fained and done by the said Sheriffes, vndersheriffes, bayliffes, and other of their assent, to cause their increase for paying of their said ferme.

11 Item, they returne in names of Enquests in writing into diuers courts of the Kings, not summoned nor warned, where thzough the people daily lese great summes of money, well nye to the vttermoste of their liuoing: and make leuy of amercements, called the Greene Wax, more in summes of money, than can be found due of record in the Kings bookes.

12 Item, the Ministers of the court of Doner in Kent, ber and arrest diuers people thzough all the Shire, out of Castle ward, passing their bounds and liberty vsed of old time, by diuers subtile and vntrue meanes and actions falsely fained, taking great fee at their lust in great hurt of the people in all the Shire of Kent.

13 Item, the people of the said shire of Kent, may not haue their free election in the chosing knights of the Shire, but letters haue bene sent from diuers estates to the great rulers of all the Countrey, the which enforceth their tenants and other people by force to chose other persons then the common will is.

14 Item, whereas knights of the Shire should chose the Kings Collectors indifferently, without any bribe taking: they haue sent now late to diuers persons notifying them to be Collectours, whereupon gifts and bribes be taken, and so the Collectours office is bought and sold extortionously at the knights inne.

15 Item, the people be sore vexed in costs, and labour, called to the Sessions of peace in the said Shire, appearing from the farthest, and vttermost parts of the West into the East, the which causeth to some men fiue daies iourney, whereupon they desire the said appearance to be diuided into two parts, the which one part to appeare in one place, another part in another place, in relieuing of the grieuance and intollerable labors and vexations of the said people.

The requests by the Captaine of the great assembly in Kent.

INprimis, desireth the Captaine of the Commons, the welfare of our Soueraigne Lord, the King, and all his true Lords, spirituall and temporall, desiring of our said soueraigne Lord, and of all the true Lords of his Councell, he to take in all his demaines, that he may raigne like a King royall, according as he is borne our true Christian King anoynted, and who so will say the contrary, we all will liue and dye in the quarrell as his true liege-man.

2 Item, desireth the said Captaine, that hee will auoyde all the false progeny and affinity of the Duke of Suffolke, the which hath bin openly knowne, and they to be punished after the custome and Law of this Land, and to take about his Noble person, the true Lords of his royall blood of this his Realme, that is to say, the High and mighty Prince, the Duke of Yorke, late exiled from our said soueraigne Lords presence (by the motion and stirring of the traiterous and falſe diſpoſed the Duke of Suffolke and his affinitie) and the mighty Princes and Dukes of Exceſter, Buckingham, and Norfolke, and all the Earles and Barons of this land: and then ſhall he be the richeſt King Chriſtian.

3. Item, deſireth the captaine and commons punniſhment vpon the falſe traitors, the which contriued and imagined the death of the high and mightfull excellent Prince the Duke of Glouceſter, the which is too much to rehearſe, the which Duke was proclaymed as traitour. Vpon the which quarrell, wee purpoſe all to liue and die vpon that it is falſe.

4. Item, the Duke of Exceſter, our holy father the Cardinall, the Noble Prince Duke of Warwicke, and alſo the Realme of France, the Dutchy of Normandy, Gaſcoine, and Guien, Anioy and Maine, were deliuered and loſt, by the meanes of the ſaid traitors, and our true Lords, Knights, and Eſquiers, and many a good yeoman loſt and ſolde ere they went, the which is great pitie to heare, of the great and grieuous loſſe to our ſoueraigne Lord and his Realme,

5. Item, deſireth the ſaid Captaine and commons, that all the extortions vſed daily among the common people, might bee layed downe, that is to ſay, the graine May the which is falſely vſed, to the perpetuall deſtruction of the kings true commons of Kent, Alſo the kings-bench, the which is to greeteuill to the ſhire of Kent without prouiſion of our ſoueraigne Lord and his true Counſell. And alſo in taking of wheat and other graines, beefe, mutton, and all other victuall, the which is impoſtable to the ſaid commons, without the brefe proviſion of our ſaid ſoueraigne Lord, and his true Counſell, they may no longer beare it. And alſo vnto the ſtatute of labourers and the great extortioners, which is to ſay, the falſe traitors, Sleg, Crowmer, Iſle and Robert Eſt.

These Bils when the Counſell had well peruſed, they did not onely diſalow and condemne them and the Authors, as proud and preſumptuous, but alſo perſwaded the King rather to ſuppreſſe theſe rebels by force, than by faire promiſes, Whereupon the king remoued from Weſtminſter vnto Greenewich, from whence he would haue ſent certaine Lords with a power to haue diſtreſſed the Kentiſh men, but the men ſaid to their Lords, they would not fight againſt them that labour to amend the Common-weale: whereupon the Lords were driuen to leaue their purpoſe. And becauſe the Kentiſhmen cried out againſt the Lord Say the kings chamberlaine, he was by the king committed to the tower of London.

Then went the king againe to London, and within two daies after went againſt the kentiſhmen with fifteene thouſand men well prepared for the warre, but the ſaid kentiſhmen fled the night before his comming into the wood countrie neere vnto Senocke, whereupon the King returned againe into London, and ſent Sir Humfrey Stafford knight, with Wil. Stafford Eſq. his kinſman (faith Pigot,) other Gentlemen, to follow the kentiſh-men, who finding them at Senocke, ſet vpon the rebels, and fought with them a long time, but in the end both the Staffords were ſlaine, with many other of their people, When Iacke Cade had thus ouercome the Staffords, hee forthwith apparelled himſelfe with the knights apparell, and after he had refreſhed his people, he returned to the Blacke-heath, and there pight againe his field, and lay there from the 29. of June till the firſt day of July, in which ſeaſon came vnto him the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and the Duke of Buckingham, with whome they had a long communication, and found him right diſcreete in his anſwers. Howbeit they could not cauſe him to ſubmit himſelfe and lay downe his people, except the King would doe Iuſtice, executing thoſe traitors, whereupon the K. cauſed the L. Say to be arreſted and brought to the Tower by the Duke of Exceſter.

King Henries power ouercome.

In the meane while, the King and Queene hearing of the increaſing of his rebels, and alſo the Lords fearing their owne ſeruants, leſt they would take the Captaines part, remoued from London to Killingworth, leauing the citie without ayde, except onely the Lord Scales, which was left to keepe the Tower, and with him a manly and warly man named Matthew Gough. Then the Captaine of Kent thus hauering at Blacke-heath, to bring himſelfe the more in fame, that he kept good Iuſtice, beheaded there a pettie Captaine of his named Paris, for ſo much as he had offended againſt ſuch ordinances as he had eſtabliſhed in his hoſt: and hearing that the King and his Lords were thus departed, drew him neere vnto the Citie, ſo that vpon the firſt of July, hee entred the Borrough of Southwarke, then being Wedneſday, and lodged him there at the Hart, for hee might not bee ſuffered to enter the Citie.

King Henry went to Killingworth.

Captaine of Kent enabis Kentiſhmen entred into Southwarke.

And vpon the ſame day, the commons of Eſſex in great number pight them a field vpon the plaine of Miles end.

Rob. Fabian. Rebels of Eſſex pight their field on the Miles end.

And vpon the ſecond day of the ſaid moneth, the Maior called a common counſell at the Guildhall, to puruey for the withſtanding of theſe rebells, in which aſſemblie were diuers men of ſundry opinions, ſo that ſome thought good that the ſaid rebells ſhould be received into the Citie, and ſome otherwiſe. Among the which Robert Horne Stockfiſhmonger then being an Alderman, ſpake ſore againſt them that would haue them enter. For the which, the commons were ſo mooued againſt him, that they ceaſed not till they had him committed to Newgate. And the ſame after none about fiue of the clocke, the Captaine with his people entred by the bridge, and cut the ropes of the draw bridge aſunder with his ſwoord. When he was paſſed into the Citie, he made in ſundry places thereof Proclamations in the Kings name, that no man in payne of death ſhould rob or take any thing without paying therfore; By reaſon whereof, he wanne the hearts of the com-commons, but all was done to beguile them. After as he came from London-ſtone, he ſtrake it with his Sword, and ſaid: Now is Mortimer Lord of this Citty, and then ſhewing his minde to the Maior for the ordering of his people, he returned into Southwarke, and there abode, as he before had done, his people comming and going at lawfull houres when they would.

On the morrow, the third of July, the ſaid Captaine againe entered the Citty, and cauſed the Lord Say to be ſet from the Tower to the Guild-hall, where hee was araigned before the Maior, and other the Kings Iuſtices, and Robert Horne Alderman before named, ſhould haue bene likewiſe arraigned, but that his wife and other freinds, for fiue hundred markes gat him reſpited to his liberty. The Lord Say declining he might be tryed by his Peres, was by the rebells forceably taken from the Officers, and brought to the Standard in Cheape, where they ſtrake off his head, pight it on a pole, and bare it before them, and his body they cauſed to be drawne naked at a horſe taile vpon the pauement, from Cheape into Southwarke, to Saint Thomas of watering, and there hanged and quartered.

Also a Squire called Crowmer, that was then Sheriffe of Kent, that had wedded the ſaid Lord Sayes daughter, by commandement of the Captaine, was brought out of the Fleete, that was committed thither for certaine extortions that hee had done in his Office, and led to Mile end without London, and there without any iudgement his head was ſmit off, and the Lord Sayes head and his, were borne vpon two long poles vnto London bridge, and there ſet vp.

The ſame day, the Captaine went vnto the houſe of Philip Malpas, draper, and Alderman, and robbed and ſpoyled his houſe, taking from thence great ſubſtance, and returned into Southwarke. On the next morrow, he againe entered the City, and dined that day in the Parith of Saint Margaret Pattns at one Gherſtis houſe, and when he had dined, like an vncourteous gueſt hee robbed him, as the day before he had Malpas. For which two robberies, although the poore people drew to him, and were partners in the ſpoyle, yet the honeſt and wealthy commoners caſt in their minds the ſequele of this matter, and feare leſt they ſhould be dealt with in like manner. Then the Maior and Aldermen, with aſſiſtance of the worſhipfull commoners in ſafegard of themſelues and of the City, take their counſell how they might driue the Captaine, and his adherents from the City, for the performance whereof, the Maior ſent vnto the Lord Scales, and Mathew Gough, then hauing the Tower in their gouernment, requiring their ayde and aſſiſtance, which they promiſed.

On the firſt of July, the Captaine being in Southwarke, cauſed a man to be beheaded there, and that day entred not the City. When night was come, the Maior and the Cittizens, with Mathew Gough, kept the paſſage of the bridge, and defended the Kentiſhmen which made great force to enter the Citty. Then the Captaine ſeeing this bickering, went to harneis, and aſſembled his people, and ſet ſo fiercely vpon the Cittizens, he draue them backe from the troups in Southwarke, ouer Bridge gate, vnto the drawbridge, in defending whereof, many a man was drowned and ſlaine. Among the which was Iohn Sutton, Alderman, Mathew Gough a Squire of Wales, and Roger Hoſland, Cittizen. This ſkirmiſh continued all night till nine of the cloche on the morrow, ſo that ſometime, the Cittizens had the better, and ſometimes the other, but euer they kept them vpon the bridge, ſo that the Cittizens neuer paſſed much the bulwarke at the bridge gate, nor the Kentiſhmen no farther then the draw-bridge. Thus continued the cruell fight to the deſtruction of much people on both ſides, laſtly, after the Kentiſhmen were put to the worſt: a truce was agreed for certaine houres, during which truce, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, then Chancellour of England, ſent a generall pardon to the Captaines for himſelfe, and another for his people, by reaſon whereof, hee and his company withdrew them by little and little, and their Captaine put all his pillage and goods that hee had robbed in a Barge, and ſent it to Rochester by water, and himſelfe went by Land, and would haue entered into the Caſtle of Quinborow with a few men that were left about him: but he was there let of his purpoſe: wherefore he fled into the wood Country beſide Lewes in Suſſex. The Captaine and his people being thus departed, not long after, proclamations were made in diuers places in Kent, Suſſex and Surry, that who might take the foreſaid Captaine aliue or dead, ſhould haue 1000. markes for his trauell.

Captaines and Rebells pardoned.

The Copy of the Writ and Proclamation by the King, for the taking of the ſaid Cade and his fellowſhip.

HENRICUS Dei gracia Rex Angliæ & Franciæ, & Dominus Hibernia, vniuerſis & ſingulis ciuibus, &c.

For as much as one Iohn Cade, borne in Ireland, which called himſelfe Iohn Mortimer, and in ſome writing calleth himſelfe Captaine of Kent, the which Iohn Cade the laſt yere before had his dwelling in Suſſex with a Knight, called Sir Thomas Dagre, ſlew there a woman with childe, and for that cauſe, fled the priſon of the Church, and after for that cauſe, forſware the Kings Land: the which, Iohn Cade, alſo after this, was ſworne to the French part, and dwelled with them, which hath now of late time (to the intent to enrich himſelfe by robbing and diſpoyling of the Kings liege-men, as it is now openly knowne, to bring himſelfe to great and high eſtate) falſely and vntruely deceiued many of the Kings people, and vnder colour of holy & good intents, made them to aſſemble with him againſt the Kings regality and his Lawes, and nought ſetting by the Kings Grace and pardons granted, and not oncle to him, but al the kings subiects, the which by his deceite haue assembled with him, the which hee with great reuerence, receiued on Monday last passed, and so did all that were assembled with him: notwithstanding, all this, hee laboureth now of new to assemble the kings people a-gaine, and to that intent, beareth them on hand that the kings letters of pardon granted to him and them, be not anaileable, nor of none effect, without authority of Parliament: where as the contrary is true, as it is openly knowne by that, that the king grants from time to time his Charters of pardon to such as him list, of all manner of crimes and offences, both generall and speciall.

The king therefore willeth and commandeth, that none of his subiects giue faith nor credence to the said false informations of the said false traytour, nor accompany with him in any wise, nor comfort, nor sustaine him nor his with victuall, nor with any other things. But will whosoeuer of the kings subiects may take him, shall take him, and that whosoeuer taketh him, and bringeth him quicke or dead to the king or his Councell, shall haue a thousand markes for his labour truly paide him, without faile or delay, by the prouision of the kings Councell. And whosoeuer taketh any of those that from this day forth accompany with him, shall haue 5. markes for his reward, truly to be payd in manner and forme aboue said.

And ouer this, commanding all Constables, Ministers, and Officers of the said Shire, that none of them on paine of death, take vpon them to execute any commandement by word or writing sent or made vnto them by the said Cade, calling him Mortimer, and Captaine, be it to reare any people or to any other intent: but to arrest, and make to be arrested, such as take vpon them to bring any such commandement by writing or by word. Et hoc nullatenus omittatis. Teste me ipso apud Westminster, 10. die Iulij. Anno regni, 28.

Captaine of Kent taken and beheaded.

After which proclamation thus published, a Gentleman of Kent, named Alexander Eden awaited so his time that he tooke the saide Cade in a garden in Sussex. And there he was slaine at Hothfield, and brought to London in a Cart, and there quartered, his head set on London-Bridge, and his quarters sent to diuers places in Kent.

Bishop of Salisbury murthered.

This yere the commons also in diuers parts of England: as in Sussex, Wiltshire, and other places, did much harme to vnruly persons, among the which on the 29. of June, Will. Ascot, Bishop of Salisbury (after he had said masse at Edington) was by his own tenants drawne from the Altar, in his Albe with his Stole about his necke to the top of an hill, and there by them shamefully murthered: so they cleaued his head as hee kneeled on his knees in his prayers, and after spoyled to the naked skin, and then they renting his bloody shirt, took every man a piece, and made boast of their wickednesse: and the day before, his Chariot was robbed of his treasury, An. reg. 29. to the value of ten thousand markes.

Alexander Eden Esquire, Sheriffe of Kent, for his good seruice against the said rebells, is made Custos, or keeper of the Castle at Rochester. Alexander Eden.

In the moneth of September, Tresham, that was speaker in the Parliament, was beheaded in Northamptonshire.

After Michaelmas, Richard, Duke of Yorke comming out of Ireland, tooke Ioh. Sutton, Baron of Dudley, and Reginald, Abbot of S. Peters at Glocester, and shortly after, he tooke Ioh. Gargraue, keper of the Kings bench at London, and sent them to the Castle of Ludlow.

The 6. of Nouember, began a Parliament at Westminster, and the first of December, the Duke of Somerset, which was newly come out of Normandy, was put vnder arrest, and his goods by the commons was lowly despoyled and borne away from the Blackfriers. After which riot, on the next morrow, proclamation was made throw the City by the Duke of Yorke, and the Duke of Norfolke, that no man should spoile or rob, vpon paine of death: and the same day at the Standard in Cheape, was a man beheaded for doing contrary to the Proclamation. Parliament at Westminster.

The 4. of December, the King and his Lords rode throw the City of London, with a great Army of men, well appointed, and diuided into three battells. Also the Citizens armed stood in the stretes of the City, where, throw the King passed, which altogether made the greatest shew of armed men that had been seene in London within the memory of any man then liuing. King Henry rode into Kent with an army.

The 18. of Ianuary, the King, with certaine Lords, and his Iustices, road towards Kent, and there iudited and araigned many, whereof to the number of 26. were put to death, 8. at Canterbury, and the residue in other Townes of Kent and Sussex. And the King returning out of Kent on the 23. of February, the men of that country naked, saue their shirts, in great numbers, met him on the Blackheath, and there on their knees asked mercy, and had their pardon. Then the King rode royally throw the City of London, and was of the Citizens toyfully received, and the same day against the Kings comming to the City, nine heads of the Kentish-men that had been put to death, were set on London bridge, and the Captaines head that stood there before, was set in the midst of them. 1451. Rebells in Kent and Sussex executed.

The malice begunne, increased betweene the Lords of the Land, and especialy, against the Duke of Somerset, and other of the Queenes Councell, for the losing of Normandy, whereof the chiefe City of Rome was lost or giuen by by appointment, the yeere proceeding (as witnesseth Gagwine) vpon condition, that the Duke of Somerset, with his wife, and English souldiers, should with such goods as they might carry, depart freely from the City: For which free passage he should pay vnto the French king 56. thousand Scutes, which amount to 14000. marke sterling. And also he was bound to deliuer into the French K. possession, all townes and castles that at that day were in the possession of Englishmen within the duchy of Normandy: for the Robert Gagwine.

the performance of which couenants, the Lord Talbot was sent for one of the pledges, and so by one Floquet, all the Townes and Castles were to the French Kings vse received, Harfleet only excepted, whereof the Captaine named Curton, with the assistance of Sir Thomas Auringham in despite of all the French Kings power laid both by Sea and Land, held the same a full moneth or more, and then for lacke of rescue, gaue it vp by appointment.

Richard, Duke of Yorke, pretending a Title to the Crowne, and heyre to Lionell, Duke of Clarence, came this yeere out of Ireland vnto London, in the Parliament time, there to consult with his especiall friends, Iohn, Duke of Norfolke, Richard, Earle of Salisbury, and Richard his sonne, which after was Earle of Warwicke: Thomas Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, and Edward Brooke, Lord Cobham, &c. After long deliberation and aduice taken, it was concluded to keepe their chiefe purpose secret, and that the Duke should raise an Army of men, vnder a pretext to remoue diuers counsellours about the King, and to reuenge the manifest iniuries done to the Common wealth by the same rulers, of the which as principall, the Duke of Somerset was namely accused, both for that hee was greatly hated of the Commons for the losse of Normandy, and for that it was well knowne, that hee would be altogether against the Duke of Yorke, in his challenge to be made to the crowne when time should serue: Therefore, when the Duke of Yorke had thus framed his foundation of his long intended enterprize, he assembled a great host, to the number of 10000. in the Marches of Wales, publishing openly, that the cause of this his gathering of people, was for the publike wealth of the Realme, for affirming the same to be true, hee wrote his letters in forme as followeth. Richard, Duke of Yorke, his declaration of truth as he find. An. reg. 30.

Richard, Duke of Yorke, pretended Title to the crown.

For asmuch as I Richard, Duke of Yorke, am informed, that the king my Soueraigne Lord, is my heauy Lord, greatly displeased with me, and hath mee in distrust by sinister informations of mine enemies, aduersaries, and euill-willers, where, God knoweth, from whom nothing is hid, I am, haue beene, and euer will be, his true liege-man, and so haue I before this diuers times, as well by mouth, as by writing, notified and declared to my said Soueraigne Lord. And for that this notice so common vnto me, of the displeasure of my said Soueraigne Lord, is to me so grieuous, I haue prayed the reuerend father in God, the Bishop of Hereford, and my Cosin, the Earle Shrewsbury, to come hither, and heare my declaration in this matter. Wherein I haue saide to them, that I am true liege-man to the King, my Soueraigne Lord, euer haue beene, and shall be to my dying day. And to the very proofe that it is so, I offer my selfe to sweare that, on the blessed Sacrament, and receiue it, the which I hope shall be my saluation, at the day of doome: And so for my speciall comfort and consolation, I haue prayed the said Lords to report and declare vnto the Kings Highnesse my said offer. And to the end and intent, that I will be ready to doe the same oath in presence of these three Lords, such as shall please the Kings Highnesse to send hither to accept it. In witnesse whereof, I haue signed this schedule with my hand manuall, and set thereunto my signet of Armes. Written in my Castle of Ludlow, the 9. of Ianuary, the 30. yeere of the raigne of my Soueraigne Lord, King Henry the sixt. 1452.

The 27. of May, 1452. the glorious City of Constantinople, was taken by Mahomet, the seuenth Prince of Turks, whose Souldiers entred it with all extremity, and omitted no manner of cruelty, or violence, either to virgins, aged persons, nor sucking Babes, yea, such was the inordinate practice of their Turkish tyranny vpon this imperiall City, as it exceeded the damage, Rapes, and spoyles of other Cities: they also beheaded Constantine the Christian Emperour thereof, and put his head vpon the top of a Launce, and with derision, caused it to be borne throughout the Turkish campe: this renowned City was at first chiefely reedified, and dignified by an Emperour, whose name was Constantine, and his mothers name Helen, and was latly lost, and bereft of all Christian Religion by a Constantine, whose mothers name was likewise Helen, in the yeere 1460. Constantinople taken by the Turke. Particulars concerning the same taken out of Chalcondilas.

In Constantinople there happened a horrible tempest of thunder and lightning, which burned almost eight hundred houses, and spoyled three thousand people, at the taking of this City by the said Mahomet. The Turkes found therein so much treasure, that they wondered that the Cittizens would not spend it vpon Souldiers for their owne defence, but so lauishingly to spare the true spending thereof, to become an entising pray to their barreconcileable enemies.

The 16. of February, King Henry accompanied with the Duke of Somerset, and many other Lords, tooke towards the Marches of Wales, for as much, as he was credibly enformed, that the Duke of Yorke, assisted with diuers other Lords and men of name, had in those parts gathered a strong power of people, and with them was entering the Land, and so held on his iourney towards him: but when the Duke had witting of the Kings great power, he returned from the way which was taken by the kings host, and pressed towards London. And when hee had receiued knowledge from the City, that hee might not there be receiued, he went ouer Kingstone-Bridge, and so into Kent, and there vpon Ascent-Heath, neere vnto Dertford, he pight his field, where of the King hauing knowledge, shed him after, and lastly came vnto Black Heath, and there pight his field. When both the hosts were thus readie pitched, mediation of peace was made betweene them, for furtherance whereof, to the Duke were sent the Bishoppes of Winchester and of Ely, to the Earles of Salisbury and Warwicke. To whom it was answered by the Duke, that he nor none of his company intended any hurt to the Kings person, nor to any of his Councell, being louers of the Common wealth, and of him and his Land: but he vnderin'ent and purpose was to remoue from the king a few euil disposed persons, by whose meanes the common people was grieuously oppressed, and the communalty greatly impouerished, of whom he named the Duke of Somerset to be the Principall, &c. And further to vnderstand of the Dukes meaning, by this his forcible entring of the Realme (as himselfe pretended) may appeare by certaine letters by him written to the king, and also the kings answer to the same; both which, I thinke good here to set downe as I finde them recoyded.

Richard, Duke of Yorke, his letters to King Henry.

Please it your highnesse to conceiue that since my departing out of this Realme by your commandement, and being in your seruice in your Land of Ireland, I haue bene informed, that diuers language hath ben said of me to your most excellent estate, which should sound to my dishonour and reproach, and charge of my person: how beit, that I aye haue beene, and euer will be, your true leage-man and seruant: and if there be any man that will, or dare say the contrary, or charge me otherwise, I beseech your right wiseneselle to call him before your high presence, and I will declare me for my discharge as a true knight ought to do, and if I doe not, as I doubt not but I shall, I beseech you to punish me: as the poorest man of your Land: and if he be found vntrue in his suggestion and information, I beseech you of your Highnelle, that he be punished after his desert, in example of all other. Please it your excellence to know, that as well before my departing out of this your Realme, for to go into your Land of Ireland, in your full Noble seruice, as since, certaine persons haue lyen in awaite for to hearken vpon me: as Sir John Talbot, knight, at the Castle of Holt: Sir Thomas Stanley, knight, in Cheshire: Pulforde at Chester: Elton at Worcester: Brooke at Gloucester: Richard, groome of your Chamber at Beaumarres, which had in charge, (as I am informed) for to take me, and put me into your Castle of Conway, and to strike off the head of Sir William Oldehall, knight, and to haue put in prison Sir William Deuereux, knight, Sir Edmond Mallo, knight withouten enlarging, vntill the time that your Highnelle had appointed their deliuerance.

Item, at such time as I was purposed for to haue arriued at your Hauen of Beaumarres, for to haue come to your Noble presence to declare me your true man and subiect, as my duty is, my landing was stopped and forbarred by Henry Norres, Thomas Norres, William Bulkley, William Gruft, and Bartholomew Bould, your Officers in North-Wales, that I should not land there, nor haue victuall, nor refreshing for me and my fellowship, as I haue written to your excellence hereberore, to farre forth, that Henry Norres, deputy to the Chamberlaine of North-Wales said vnto me, that he had in commandement, that I should in no wise haue landing, refreshing, nor lodging, for men, nor for horse, nor other thing that might turne to my worship or ease, putting the blame vpon William Say, Vsher of your Chamber, saying, and affirming that I am against your intent, and as a Traytour, as I am informed: and moreouer, certaine letters were made and deliuered vnto Chester, Shrewsbury, and to other places, for to let mine entrie into the same.

Item, aboue all wrongs and iniuries aboue said done vnto me of malice, without any cause, I being in your Land of Ireland, in your honorable seruice, certaine commissions were made and directed vnto diuers persons, which for the execution of the same, sate in certaine places, and the iurors impanelled and charged, to the which iuries, certaine persons laboured instantly to haue me indited of treason, to the intent for to haue vndon me and mine issue, and corrupted my blood, as it is openly published: beseeching your Maiestly royall, of your righteousnelle, to examine these matters, and thereupon to doe such iustice in this behalfe, as the cause requireth: for mine intent is fully to pursue to your Highnelle for the conclusion of these matters.

Answer of King Henry to the Duke of Yorke.

Cousin, we haue seene the Bill that ye take vs late, and also vnderstand the good humble obedience, that ye in your selfe shew vnto vs, as well in word as in deed, wherefore our intent is, the more hastily to ease you of such things as were in your said Bill. Yowbeit that at our more leysure we might answere to your said Bill, yet we let you to wit, that for the causes aforesaid, wee will declare you now our intent in these matters: sith it is that a long time among the people hath bene vpon you many strange language, and in especiall anone after your discolnate and vnlawfull slaying of the Bishoppe of Chester, diuers and many of the vntrue ship-men and other, said in their manner, words against our estate, making menace to our owne person by your sayings, that ye should be fetched with many thousands, and ye should take vpon you that, which yee neither ought, nor as we doubt not, yee shall not attempt, for farre forth that it was said to your person by diuers, and especially we remember of one Waines which had like words to vs. And also there was diuers of such false people, that went on, and had like language in diuers of our Townes of our Land, which by our subiects were taken and duely executed: wherefore we sent to diuers of our Courts and places to hearken and to take heed, if any such maner of comming were, and if there had beene, for to refell it: but comming into our Land, our true subiect as yee did, our intent was not that ye, nor lelle of estate of our subiects, nor none of your seruants should not haue beene letted nor warned, but in goodly wise receiued: Yowbeit, that peraduenture your sudden comming, without certaine warning, caused our seruants to doe as they did, considering the causes aboue said. And as to the enditement that ye spoke of, we thinke verily, and hold for certaine, that there was none such. And if yee may truely proue, that my person was there about, the matter shall be demanded as the cale shall require; to that bee shall know it is to our great displeasure. Vpon this for the easings of your heart in all such matters, wee declare, repute, and admit you our true and faithful subiect, and as our welbeloued Cousin.

Richard, Duke of Yorke to King Henry againe.

Please it your Highnesse tenderly to consider, that great murmure and grudging is vniuersally in this our Realme, in that Iustice is not duly ministered to such as trespasse, and offend against your Lawes, and in speciall, of them that be indited of treason, and other, being openly noysed of the same, whereby great inconueniences haue fallen, and great is like to fall hereafter in your said Realme, which God defend, but if by your Highnesse prouision conenable be made, for due reformation and punishment in this behalfe. Wherefore I your humble subiect and true leageman, Richard, Duke of Yorke, willing, as effectually as I can, and desiring the sucetie and prosperitie of your most royall Person, and the welfare of this your Noble Realme, counsell and aduertise your excellency for the conseruation of good tranquility and peaceable rule among all other subiects, for to withdraine and prouide, that true iustice be had, against all such that so be indited or openly named, wherein I offer my selfe, and will put my endeuour, for to execute your commandement in the premises, for the punishing of such offenders, and redzelle of the said misrule, to my might and power. And for the hasty execution hereof, like it your Highnesse to addzelle these letters of prinp seale, and writs to your officers and ministers, to do, take and arrest all such persons so noysed and indited, of what estate, degree, or condition soeuer they be, and them to commit to the Tower of London, and to other of your prisons, there to abide without baile or mainprise, vntill the time they be otterly tried, and determined after the course of your Lawes.

Answer of King Henry to the Duke of Yorke.

Cousin, as touching your bill last put vp to vs, we vnderstand well, that ye of good heart, counsell, aduertise vs to the setting vp of iustice, and to the spedy punishing of some persons indited or noysed, offering your seruice to bee ready at commandement in the same, sith it is, that for many causes, mooning vs to haue determined in our soule, to stablish a fast and a substantiall Councell, giuing them more ample authority and power, then euer we did before this: in the which we haue appointed you to be one. But sith it is not accustomed sure, nor expedient, to take a conclusion and conduse by aduice or counsell of one person by himselfe for the conseruation, it is obserued that the greatest and the best, the rich and the poore, in liberty, vertue, and effect of your voyces be equall: we haue therefore determined within our selfe to send for our Chancellour of England, and for other Lords of our Councell, yea, and all other, together within short time, ripely to commune these and other our great matters, in the which communication, such conclusion by the grace of God shall be taken, as shall sound to his pleasure, the weale of vs and our Land, as well in these matters, as in any other.

At length it was agreed by the King, that the Duke of Somerset, should be committed to warde there to abide, and answer such articles as the Duke of Yorke would lay against him, vpon which promises so made by the King to the Duke, who saw that the people of kent, and of other places came not to him as they had promised, and that they were not strong enough, for the Kings part was much more then his, he brake vp his field on the first of March, and yelded himselfe to the King at Dertford, where, contrary to promise before made, he found the Duke of Somerset chiefe about the King. Then was the Duke of Yorke sent before to London, and holden partly as prisoner, and straighter should haue bene kept, but it was noysed that Sir Edward, Earle of March, sonne to the said Duke of Yorke was comming toward London with a strong power of Welshmen, which feared so the Queene and Councell, that the Duke was set at full liberty. And on the tenth of March, the said Richard, Duke of Yorke, made his submission, and tooke his oath to be true faithfull, and obedient subiect to King Henry the first, king of England, in Saint Pauls Church at London, there being present, the King, and most of his Nobility, that is to say, the Dukes of Buckingham, Northampton, and Somerset: the Earles of Warwick, Arundell, Salisbury, Shropshire, Deuonshire, Wiltshire, Northumberland, Stafford and Dorset, Viccounts of Beaumount and Wells: Barons Fitz Warren, Saimond, Cobham, Douglas, and other Bishops: the Cardinall, Archbishop of Yorke, and Canterbury, Winchester, Ely, and London in these words following.

Richard, Duke of Yorke, his submission and oath to Henry the sixt.

I Richard, Duke of Yorke, confesse and beknow, that I am, and ought to be humble, subiect, and liegeman to you my soueraigne Lord, King Henry the 6. and owe therfore to beare you faith and truth, as to my soueraigne liege Lord, and shall do all dates vnto my liues end, and shall not at any time will or assent, that any thing be attempted or done against your most Noble person, but wheresoeuer I shal haue knowledge of any such thing imagined or purposed, I shall with all speed and diligence possible to me, make that your highnes shall haue knowledge thereof, and ouer that, doe all that shall be possible to me, to the withstanding and let thereof, to the vttermost of my life: I shall not any thing take vpon me against your royall estate, or obeysance that is due thereto, nor suffer any other man to do, as far forth as it shall be in my power to let it: And also shall come at your commandement whensoeuer I shall be called by the same, in humble and obeysant wise, but if I be letted by any sickness, or impotence of my person, or by such other cause as shall be thought by you my soueraigne Lord, reasonable. I shall neuer hereafter take vpon me, to gather any rowt, or to make any assembly of your people, without your commandement or licence, or in my lawfull defence, in interpretation, or declaration of the which my lawfull defence, I shall report me at all times to your Highnesse, and if the cale require, to my Peeres, nor any thing attempt against any of your subiects, of what estate, degree, or condition condition that they be. But whensoeuer I find my selfe wronged and agrieued, I shall sue humbly for remedy to your Highnesse, and proceede after the course of your Lawes, and in none otherwise, sauing in my owne lawfull defence in manner aboue said, and otherwise haue to your Highnesse, as an humble and true subiect ought to haue to his Soueraigne Lord. All these things aboue said, I promise you truely to obserue and keepe, by the holy Euangelists conteined in the booke that I lay my hand heere vpon, and by the holy Crosse I heere touch, and by the blessed Sacrament of the Lords body, that I shall now with his mercy receiue. And ouer, I agree wee, and will, that if I any time hereafter, as by the grace of our Lord God I neuer shall, any thing attempt by way of feate, or otherwise against your royall Maiestie and obeysance that I owe thereto, or any thing take vpon me otherwise, then is aboue expressed, I from that time forth be vnabled held, and taken as an vntrue and openly forsworne man, and vnable to all manner of worship, estate, and degree, be it such as I now occupy, or any other that might in any wise grow vnto me hereafter. And this I haue here promised and sworne, proceeded of mine owne free desire, and frée volunte, and by no constraining or coaction. In witnesse of all the things aboue written, I Richard, Duke of Yorke aboue writ, subscribe with mine owne hand and Seal.

An. Reg. 31. This oath he also tooke at Westminster, and at Couentrie, at sundrie times, although his little obseruing thereof, as by the sequell may appeare.

This yeere deceased Iohn Stafford, Archbishoppe of Canterbury, late Lord Chancelour of England, and was buried at Canterbury. After him succéeded in the Archbishoprick, Iohn Kempe, borne at Wy in Kent, Doctour of Lawes, first Bishop of Rochester, then of Chichester, then of London, then Archbishop of Yorke, Chancelour of England, and Cardinall of Saint Albin: and now Archbishop of Canterbury, and Cardinall of Saint Rufine, and was inthronized at Canterbury on the 11. of December.

1453. On the 25th day after Christmas, the King holding his Christmas at Westminster with great solemnitie, made his two brethren by the mothers side Knights.

The Earle of Kendall, and the Lord Lespare came Ambassadours from the chiefest Magistrates of the City of Burdeaux, which signified to the Councell, that if they would send an Army into Gascoygne, the people of the countrey would reuolt from the French part, and againe become Englishmen. This newes sore troubled the heads of the Councell, which caused them, lest inward sedition might hinder outward victory, set the Duke of Yorke at liberty, and permitted him to goe to the Castell of Wigmore in the Marches of Wales, by whose absence, the Duke of Somerset rose in such high fauour, both with the King and the Queene, that his word was onely heard and regarded: the Councell hoping now to haue the City of Burdeaux, with the Countrey round about, appointed Iohn, Lord Talbot, Earle of Shrewesbury, to goe thither with an Armie, who arriuing in the Ile of Garoze, passed forth with his power, being scant three thousand men, and tooke the strong Towne of Fronsake, and diuers other Townes and fortresses. Burdeaux yeelded to the Englith.

The inhabitants of Burdeaux hearing of the Earles arriuall, sent to him messengers in the darke night, requiring him with all speed, to come and receiue the City. The Earle hastened forth, and came before that City, ere the Frenchmen within vnderstood any thing of the Citizens purpose. But when they heard that there was a gate set open for the Englishmen to enter, they thought to haue escaped secretly by a posterne, but they were pursued, slaine, and taken by the Lord de Lespare, and other of the English Army.

After the regaining of Burdeaux, there arriued at Blay, the Bastard of Somerset, Sir Iohn Talbot, Lord Lisle, by his wife, sonne to the said Earle of Shrewesbury, the Lord Molines, the Lord Harington, the Lord Cames, Sir Iohn Howard, Sir Iohn Mountgomerie, Sir Iohn Vernon, with 2200. men, victualls, and munition.

In the moneth of March, was the Towne of Harflew won by the Frenchmen, and shortly the City of Bayons was giuen vp by appointment, that the Souldiers should leaue their armour behinde them.

When the Earle of Shrewesbury was furnished, as is aforesaid, first hee fortified Burdeaux with Englishmen, and store of victualls, and artillery, then hee rode into the Countrey abroad, where hee obtained Cities and Townes, without stroke, amongst other Townes, the Towne and Castle of Chastillon in Perigort was to him deliuered, the which he fortified.

In the meane time, the French King being aduertised of these things, raised an Army to resist the inuasion made by the Earle, and first hee appointed his Captaines to beseege the Towne of Chastillon, to the rescue whereof, the Earle hasted forward, hauing in his company eight hundred horsemen, vnder the leading of his sonne, the Lord Lisle, the Lord Molins, the Lord Cameis, Sir Ed. Hull, Sir Iohn Howard, and Sir Iohn Vernon: hee appointed also 5000. foote-men, vnder the conduct of the Earle of Kendall, and the Lord de Lespare to follow him with speed. In his way, hee tooke a Towne, which the French-men had before taken, and slew all that he found therein, and after by the way, hee met fiue hundred Frenchmen a foraging, of whom he slew the more part, and chased the other to the campe.

The French men that lay at the siege, perceiuing by these runners away, that the Earle approched, left the siege, and retired in good order into the place which they had trenched and fortified. The Earle aduertised how the siege was remooued, hasted forward toward his enemies, doubting lest they would haue beene fled and gone before his comming, but they abode abode the Earles comming, and so receiued him, that though by manly courage hee first wanne the entrie at their campe, yet at length they compassed him about, and thoting him thorow the thigh with a hand gunne, slew his horse and finally killed him, lying on the ground. There died also Sir Iohn Talbot, Lord Lisle his sonne, and his Bastard sonne, Henry Talbot, and Sir Edward Hull, and thirty other men of name, the Lord Molens was taken prisoner with threescore others. The residue of the English people fled to Burdeaux, and other places, of whom in the fight were slaine aboue a thousand persons.

John Earle of Shrewsbury slaine. Lord Molins taken.

Thus at this battell of Chastillon fought the twentieth of July, ended his life Iohn, Lord Talbot, and of his progeny the first Earle of Shrewesbury, after that hee had valiantly made warre in seruice of his Prince 24. yeeres: he was buried at Whitchurch in Shropshire.

An. Reg. 32. After this, the Towne of Saint Millar, Libourne, and all other Townes which the Earle of Shrewesbury had conquered, rendred themselues to the Frenchmen, Burdeaux only excepted. The which City being the last refuge of the English people, the French King in person inclosed with all his puissance, and in conclusion, constrained both the garrison and inhabitants to yeeld, so that the Englishmen and Gascoygnes might safely depart with all their substance.

Thus was the Duchy of Aquitaine, which had continued in the possession of the Englith from the yeere of our Lord, 1155. vnto this yeere, 1453. which is neere hand 300. yeeres, by the marriage of Elianor, daughter and heyre to William, Duke of Aquitaine, wife to King Henry the second, finally reduced and brought againe to the French obedience and seruitude. Description of Aquitaine. Within that Duchy, be foure Archbishops, foure and twenty Bishops, fifteen Carledomes, two hundred and two Barons, and aboue a thousand Captainships, and Bayliffewicks, whereby ye may perceiue what a losse this was to the Realme of England.

The thirteenth day of October, the Quéene at Westminster was deliuered of her first borne sonne, whose name was Edward. 1454.

When the warres were ceased in foraine parts, ciuill dissention beganne againe to renew within the Realme, being diuided into two seuerall factions: for King Henry descended of the house of Lancaster, claiming the Crowne from his Grandfather, King Henry the fourth: and Richard, Duke of Yorke, as heire to Lionell, Duke of Clarence, third sonne to King Edward the third, wrestled for the game, by reason whereof, the Nobles as well as the common people, were into many parts diuided, to the vtter destruction of many a man, to the great ruine and decay of this Realme. For while the one part studied to destroy the other, all cars of the common wealth was set aside, iustice and equity clearely exiled.

Practises of the Duke of Yorke.

The Duke of Yorke aboue all things, first sought meanes how to prouoke the malice of the people against the Duke of Somerset, imagining that hee being made away, his purpose should shortly come to conclusion.

Hee also practised to bring the King into the hatred of the people, for that hee was not a man of stomacke sufficient to supply the roome which he held. Many of the high estates not liking the woorke, and disallowing the acts and doings both of the King and his Councell, determined to practise how things might come to some alteration: which when the Duke vnderstood, he chiefely entertained and wan the fauour of two the Neuills, both named Richards, the one Earle of Salisbury, the other Earle of Warwicke: the first being the Father, and the second the sonne. This Earle of Salisbury, was second sonne to Ralph Neuill, Earle of Westmeland, whose Daughter the Duke of Yorke has married, and the said Richard was espoused to Lady Alice, the onely child, and sole heyre of Thomas Mountacute, Earle of Salisbury, slaine at the siege of Orleance, of which woman he begat Richard, Iohn, and George, Richard the eldest sonne, espoused Anne, the sister and heyre of the entire blood to Henry Beauchampe, Earle, and after Duke of Warwicke, in whose right and Title, hee was created Earle of Warwicke.

An. reg. 32. Edmond, Duke of Somerset sent to the Tower, and Articles put against him by the Duke of Yorke.

The Duke of Yorke with his friends, wrought so effectually, and handled his businesse so politikly, that the Duke of Somerset was arrested in the Quéene great Chamber, and sent to the Tower of London, where hee kept his Christmas without great solemnity, against whom, in open Parliament, were layd diuers articles, beginning thus: These articles and Petitions following, giue and minister, I Richard, Duke of Yorke, your liege-man, and seruant vnto your Highnesse, summarily proposing and declaring them, against Edmond, Duke of Somerset, for the great welfare, and the common auaile, and increase of your Maiestie royall, and of this your Noble Realme, as well to bring to knowledge and vnderstanding the meanes and causes of the great mischiefes and inconueniences, which late befell vnto this your Noble Realme, as in losse of your liueload beyond the Sea, and otherwise in punishment of deseruiters, and cause of innocency, and also in putting aside and eschewing of the great and vnspeakable hurt and preiudice which hath béene like, without that purueyance be had of remedy, to succeed in short time. To the which articles of euery of them, I the said Duke of Yorke, desire of your Reguall, and indifferent right vnseuerlie, that the said Edmond answer by his faith, and truth, the Sacrament of his oath, thereupon made duely and truely, as Law and Conscience requireth, &c.

The King at that time hauing layne long sicke at Clarendon, was conueyed to London, by reason whereof, no finall determination passed in this waighty cause, but all was put in suspence, till the next assembly of the High Court of Parliament.

Wheat sold for 12 pence the quarter.

This yeere, Wheat and other graines were in such plenty, that a quarter of Wheat was commonly sold for 12. pence, and 14. pence: a quarter of Maulte for 16. pence, and 17. pence at the most, and not above. A certaine Farmer dwelling in the Towne of Cruse Royse or Rose Towne in Hartfordshire, wanting money, sold 20. quarters of Wheat the best, for 20. shillings.

Archbishop of Canterbury deceased.

John Kempe, Archbishop of Canterbury, deceased, and was buried at Canterbury. This Kempe was borne at Wy in Kent, whereupon, when hee was Archbishop of Yorke, hee made the Parish Church at Wy, a Colledge, whereof the gouernour was a Prebend, and the other were ministers for diuine service, and to instruct youth in Grammer & learning according to his foundation. Which Colledge, at the suppression the 26. of Henry the eighth, was valued 93. pounds, two shillings by yeere. The father of this Archbishop Kempe, lieth buried in the said Church of Wy, with this Epitaph following.

Hic iacent ossa, Thomæ Kempe marmore fossa,
Cuius opus pronum, se probat esse bonum:
Dum vixit lætus, Jnit & benitate repletus,
Munificus vigilet, pauperibus tribuit:
Jungitur hus: Satrix, virtutum sponsa Beatrix,
Quæ partitur opes, sponte manans inopes.
Ex his procedit, vt ramus ab arbore crescit,
Cleri præsidium, dux sapiens eminens:
Christo lectores, mens cunctis supplices horis,
Vt patris dictas, luminet has animas.

Idem Thomas obijt Anno Domini, 1428. 30. die Mensis Maij.

Unto this John Kempe, succeeded in the Archbishopricke of Canterbury, Thomas Bourcher, brother to Henry, Earle of Eser, Deane of Saint Martins, first Bishop of Winchester, then of Ely, and then Archbishop of Canterbury, and Cardinall of Saint Ciriac, and William Grey was made Bishop of Ely, and Richard Neuill, Earle of Salisbury, was made Lord Chancellour of England.

Whilest King Henry lay sicke, Richard, Duke of Yorke, bare all the rule, and gouerned as Regent, and did now discouer the sparks of his hatred hid vnder dissimulation, against the Duke of Somerset: but when the King had recouered his strength againe, and resumed to him his Princely gouernment, he caused the Duke of Somerset, to be set at liberty, and preferred him to be Captaine of Calois, wherewith not onely the Commons, but many of the Nobility, (fauourours of Richard, Duke of Yorke) were greatly grieued and offended, saying, that hee had lost Normandy, and would lose Calois.

Edmond, Duke of Somerset, Captaine of Calois.

1455. The Duke of Yorke raiseth a power, and marcheth toward London.

The Duke of Yorke and his adherents, perceiuing that their accusing of the Duke of Somerset preuailed not, determined to reuenge their quarrell, and obtaine their purpose by open warre: and so he being in Wales accompanied with his especiall friends, the Earles of Salisbury and Warwicke, the Lord Cobham, and others, assembled a power of warlike persons, and marched towards London.

The King being informed thereof, assembled likewise an host, and meaning to meete with the Duke, rather in the South parts, then about London, where it was thought hee had too many friends, with great spede, being accompanied with Humfrey, Duke of Buckingham, and Humfrey his eldest sonne, Earle of Stafford, Edmond, Duke of Somerset, Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland, James Butler, Earle of Wiltshire, and of Ormond, John Beawford, Earle of Dorset, Iasper Tewder, Earle of Penbroke, brother to the King: Thomas Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, Thomas, Lord Clifford, the Lords, Sudley, Barnes, Rose, and others, being in all, aboue 2000. men of warre, departed from Westminster the 21. day of May, towards Saint Albans, to meete with the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury: the King lodged that night at Madesord, or Watford on this side Saint Albans, and on the morrow in the morning, early hee came to Saint Albans. And about the same time, were there assembled Richard, Duke of Yorke, John, Duke of Norfolke, Richard, Earle of Warwicke, Richard, Earle of Salisburie, William, Lord Fauconbridge, Edward, Lord Cobham, and many other Knights and Esquires the Kings enemies, in a place called Reysield, beside Saint Albons. The king hearing of the Dukes comming with the Lords aforesaid, pight his banner in a place called Gotelowe, which place was sometimes called Sandforth in Saint Peters Stréte, and commanded in strong manner to keepe the wards and barriers of the same towne. The Duke of Yorke knowing the strength made against him, abiding in the field aforesaide, from seuen of the clock in the morning, vntill it was almost ten of the clock without any stroke smitten on either part, by the aduise of his counsell sent vnto the King vnder these words following.

Please it vnto your excellent Grace, Richard duke of Yorke, to take him as your true liege man and humble subiect, and to consider and tender at the reuerence of God, and in the way of charity, the true intent of my comming, and to be good and gracious Soueraigne vnto mee, and all other your true liege men, which that with all their power and might will bee ready to liue and dy with you in your right, and to doe all things as shall like your Maiesty royall to command vs, if it be to the worship of the Crowne of England, and the welfare of this your Noble Realme. Moreouer, gracious Lord, please it vnto your Maiesty royall, of your great goodnesse, and rightwisenesse, to incline your will to heare and feele the rightwise part of vs your true subiects, & liege men. First praying and beseeching to our soueraign Christ Iesus, of his high and mighty power to giue the vertue of prudence, & that through the prayer of the glorious Mary, Saint Albons bons giue you very knowledge of your trothes, and to know the intent of your assembling at this time: For God, that is in heauen, knoweth our intent is rightfull and true: And therefore wee pray vnto that mighty Lord in these words: Domine sit clypeus defensionis noster: wherefore gracious Lord, please it your Maiesty Royall to deliuer such as wee will accuse, and they to haue like as they haue deserued. And this done, you to be honourably worshipped, as most rightfull King, and our true Gouernour. And if wee should now at this time be prouided, as afore this time is not vnknowne haue beene prouides broken, which haue beene full faithfully promised, and thereupon great oaths sworne, wee will not now cease for no such promises, nor oath, till wee haue them which haue deserued death, or else wee to dye therefore.

The answere by the King to the Duke of Yorke.

I King Henry, charge and command, that no manner of person of what degree, or estate, or condition so euer he be, abide not, but that they auoyde the field, and not to be so hardy as to make resistance against me in my own Realme: For I shall know what traytour dares be so bold as to raise any people in my owne Land, where through I am in great disease and heauinesse: by that saith I owe vnto S. Edward, and vnto the Crowne of England, I shall destroy them euery mothers sonne, and eke they to be hanged & drawne, and quartered, that may be taken afterward of them, in example to make all such Traytours to beware, for to warde any riling of people within mine owne Land, and so traiterously to abide their King and Gouernour. And for a conclusion rather then they should haue any Lord that here is with me at this time, I shall this day for their sake in this quarrell my selfe lose and dye.

The first battell at S. Albons.

The words of the Duke of Yorke to all Gentlemen & and other assembled with him.

Sirs, the King our Soueraigne Lord will not be reformed at our beseeching we pray, nor will not in no wise vnderstand the intent wherefore wee be heere assembled and gathered at this time, but onely to intent purpose to destroy vs all, and thereupon great oath hath made, that there is none other way, but that hee with all his power will pursue vs, and if wee be taken, to giue vs a shamefull death, leesing our liuelode and goods, and also our heyres shamed for euer. Therefore Sirs, now sith it will none otherwise be, but that wee shall hitterly die, better it is for vs to die in the field, then cowardly to be put to an vtter rebuke and shamefull death, for the right of England stameth in vs. Considering also in what perill it standeth at this time, and for to redresse the mischiefe, whereof let euery man helpe to his power this day, and in that quarrell to quite vs like men to the Crowne of England, praying and beseeching vnto that Lord, the which is Eternall, that raigneth in the glorious Kingdome celestiall, to keepe and saue vs this day in our right, and through the gifts of his holy grace, wee may be made strong to withstand the great abhominable and horrible malice of them, that purpose to destroy vs and the Realme of England, and put vs to a shamefull death: pray wee therefore vnto that Lord to be our comfort and our defender, saying these words, Domine sit clypeus defensionis nostræ. And when these words were said, the Duke of Yorke, and the Earles of Warwicke and Salisburie, with their host, betweene eleuen and twelue at noone breake in, to the fore seuerall places of the said Stréte. The King then being in the place of Edmond Westbyes Purueyder of the said Towne of Saint Alban, hearing of the said Dukes coming, commanded his host to slay all manner Lords, Knights, Squires, Gentlemen and Peasants, that might be taken on the party of the foresaid Duke of Yorke. This done, the Lord Clifford kept so strongly the barriours of the same Towne, that the foresaid Duke of Yorke might in no wise with all the power, that hee had, enter, nor breake into the said Towne. The Earle of Warwicke knowing thereof, tooke and gathered his men together with him, and brake in by the Garden side into the said Towne, betweene the Signe of the Key, and the Exchequer in Holywell Stréte: and anon as they were within the said Towne, they blew the Trumpet, and cryed with an high voyce, a Warwicke, a Warwicke, that maruaile it was to heare. And till that time, the Duke of Yorke might neuer haue entry into the Towne, and then with strong hand, they brake vp the Barriers, and fought a fierce and cruell battell, on the which were slaine on the Kings party, Lords of name: Edmond, Duke of Somerset, Henry, Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Stafford, the old Lord Clifford, Sir Robert Vere, Berten Entewell, Williams Chamberlaine, Richard Fortescue, and Ralph Ferrers, Knights, Oliuer Maleuery, Oliuer Alterton, Gilbert Scaresbrooke, John Gath, Thomas Packington, Roger Morecroft, William Tarwin, John Bensted, John Alford, Reginald Griffith, Humfrey Acworth, Henry Hawlin, the Queenes Messenger, Richard Chantellar, Porter to the King. Alexander Breakespeare, Gilbert Hilding, Porter to the King, William Souche, John Boteraux, Ralph Babthorpe, Sewer to the King, and Ralph his sonne, the Kings Attorney, William Coruin, William Cotton of Conington, in Huntington shire, Receiuer of the Duchy of Lancaster, Gilbert Faldingar, John Dawes, Ellis Wood, Robert Woodward, and Ralph Vvloughby, Esquires, Hawling the Kings Porter, and William Butler, Yeoman, John Apthiken, John Daw, John at Heath, Hughe North, William Porter, John Page, Thomas

Barker, John Taylor of Henley, Robert Purton, and Henry Himingley, Yeoman of the Crowne, Nicholas of the Pantrie, John Cocks, William, Fishmonger to the Duke of Buckingham, Allen Sutton, Clarke Chapleine, and many other slaine, to the number of 5000. and on the other part were slaine about 600. persons, of them that were slaine, were buryed at Saint Albons eight and forty persons. And at that battell were wounded Lords of name, the King shot into the necke with an arrow, Humfrey, Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Sudley in the visages with arrowes, Humfrey, Earle of Stafford, in the right hand with an arrow, the Earle of Dorset was so sore hurt, that hee might not goe, but was faine to bee carried home in a Cart, and Sir John Wenloke, Knight, likewise hurt, and carried from thence in a Chaire, and divers other Knights and Esquires sore hurt, and the Substance of the Kings host despoyled of their harnesis, at their owne request, made delivery to the Dukes host for salvation of their lives, and fled. The Earle of Wiltshire, and Thomas Thorpe, Lord chiefe Baron of the Exchequer, with many other fled, and cast away their harnesis in ditches, and woods. This done, the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury, came unto the King where he was, and besought him on their knees, of grace and forgivenesse of that they had done in his presence, and besought him of his highnesse to take them to his grace, and as his true liege-men. The King desired them to cease their people, that there should be no more hurt done, and to obey his commandement, did cause to be proclaimed in the Kings name, that all manner of people should cease of their malice, and not to smite one stroke more, and so ceased the battell. And upon the morrow after, the King, and the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury, came to London, and was lodged in the Bishops Pallace of London, where they kept their Whitsontide with great joy and solemnity, concluding there to hold a Parliament, the same to beginne on the ninth of July, next following.

This yeere, in the moneth of June, appeared a Comet, or Starre, called Stella Cometa, bestwirt the North and the East, extending his beames towards the South.

The Parliament beganne at Westminster on the ninth day of July, as was appointed, in the which Session, the Duke, Humfrey, of Gloucester, late deceased at Bery in Suffolke, was openly declared to have beene a true subject to the King and Realme: besides this, it was inacted, that no person should judge or report any point of untruth of the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Salisbury and Warwicke, or of any Knight, Esquire, Archer, or other comming in warrelike arap, against the King at Saint Albons, considering their enterprize was onely to see the Kings person in safegard. And all the blame was put upon the Duke of Somerset, Thomas Thorpe, Baron of the Exchequer, and William Iolceph, Esquire, the Kings collaterall companion, because they upon malicious purpose kept a certaine Letter from the Kings knowledge, and would in no wise suffer it to be delivered unto him, notwithstanding the same made to the advancement of some good assured peace, if it had beene thoroughly and advisedly read, waged and considered: in which Letter they declared that as humble and faithfull subiects, they onely required that it would please the King, whose honour, health suerty and preservation they chiefely wished, not to give credit to their adversaries malicious suggestions, till their coming to his presence, unto the which they humbly besought him, that they mought be admitted, as his faithfull liege-people, to shew the intent and purpose of their comming, which was to none other end, then to enlarge their fidelity, and allegeance towards his most dread person, intending to put themselves with as much diligence, industry and travell, in all things that might preferre and advance his honour, surety and safegard, as any subiect he had living. The keeping backe of this Letter, did minister matter sufficient to the Parliament, to colour and institle for well done, all transgressions committed in the late battell at Saint Albons.

In this Parliament was the Duke of Yorke made Protector of the Realme: the Earle of Salisburie was made Lord Chancellour, and had the great Seale to him delivered: And the Earle of Warwick made Captaine of Calcis, and the Territories of the same. And thus the Rule of the Realme rested in the Duke and Chancellour, and all the war-like affaires remained principally in the Earle of Warwicke. And so amongst them it was agreed, that King Henry should still raigne in name and dignity, but neyther in deed nor in authority, not minding to destroy him, lest they mought suddenly provoke the fury of the Common people against them, because that of the Common people hee was for his holinesse of life, and abundant Clemency, much favoured and highly esteemed.

Now that the Duke of Yorke, and his adherents, had wrested the whole rule and government into their hands, all such persons, as either loved, or the Queene favoured, were put beside the privy Councell, such put in their places, as were knowne to favour the house of Yorke.

Also all Officers were changed throughout the Realme at the will of the Protector, Chancellor and Captaine of Calcis, so that they constituted and ruled all things at their owne will: but they were noted with an execrable offence, of divers spirituall persons, and namely, of the Abbot of Westminster, and his Monks, for that they tooke out of the Sanctuary at Westminster, John Holland, Duke of Exceter, being repugnant to the order taken in the last Parliament, and conveyed him to the Castle of Pont fracte. Duke of Exceter fet out of Sanctuary, and fent to Pontfract Caſtle.

But Henry Beauford, newly inuested An. reg. 34. Duke of Somerset, and Humfrey, Duke of Buckingham, Buckingham, who had lost his Sonne in the same battell, and other Lords and men of authority, favouring the party of King Henry, and bewailed the unsure estate of the same King, because they perceived wherevnto the cloked courtesie, and dissembled manner of the Duke of Yorke did draw, thought it necessary to purvey for a remedy ere the mischiefe happened: hereupon they consulted with the Quen, and by her advice was a great Councell called at Greenwich, where the Duke of Yorke was discharged of his Protectorship, and the Earle of Salisbury deprived of his office of Chancellourship, which change amongst the Nobility, caused sudden alterations and seditious attempts to spring in the commonalty, especially in the City of London.

1450. Ro. Fabian.

In the moneth of May, an Italians servant walking through Cheape of London, with a Dagger hanging at his Girdle, a Parchants servant, that before time had beene in Italy, and there blamed for wearing of the like weapon, challenged the Stranger, how he durst be so bold to beare weapon, considering hee was out of his native Countrey, knowing that in his Country no Stranger was suffered to weare the like: To the which question, such answere was made by the Stranger, that the Mercer tooke from him his dagger, and drake it upon his head, whereupon the Stranger complained to the Maior, who on the morrow sent for the young man to the Guild-Hall: wherefore after his answer made to his complaint, by agreement of a full Court of Aldermen, he was sent to ward: and after the Court was finished, the Maior and Sheriffes walking homeward through Cheape, were there met by such a number of Mercers servants and other, that they might not passe, for aught that they could speake or doe, till they had delivered the young man, that before was by them sent to prison.

And the same day in the afternoone, suddenly was assembled a multitude of lewd and poore people of the Citty, which without head or guide, ranne into certaine Italians houses, and especially into the Florentines, Lukeses and Venetians, and there tooke and spoyled what they found, and did great hurt in sundry places, but most in foure houses standing in Broad-street ward, whereof three stood in Saint Bartholomewes Parish the little, and one in the Parish of Saint Benets Finke.

The Maior, Aldermen, and worshipfull Commoners of the City, with all their diligence resisted them what they could, and sent divers of them to Newgate: and finally, not without shedding of blood, and maiming of divers Citizens, the rumour was appeased. The young man, beginner of all this busnesse, tooke Sanctuarie at Westminster, and not long after, the Duke of Buckingham, with other Noble-men, were sent from the King, into the Citty, who there charged the Maior by vertue of a Commission, that inquiry should be made of this rout, and so-called an oyer determiner at the Guild-Hall, where sate for Judges, the Maior, as the Kings Lieutenant, the Duke of Buckingham on his right hand, the chiefe Iustice on the left hand, and many other men of name, where, while they were empaneling their inquests, the other Commons of the City, many of them secretly put them in armour, and meant to have rong the common Bell, so to have raised the whole force of the Citty, and so to have delivered such persons as before for the robberry were committed to ward.

But this matter was discreetly handled by the Councell, and labour of some discreete commoners, which appeased their neighbours in such wise that all this fury was quenched: but when word was brought to the Duke of Buckingham, that the commonalty was in harnesse, he with the other Lords tooke leave of the Maior, and departed, and so ceased the enquiry for that day.

Upon the morrow, the Maior commanded the Common Councell, with the Wardens of fellowshippes, to appeare at the Guild-Hall, where by the Recorder in the Kings name, and the Maiors, was commanded every Warden, that in the after-noone eyther of them should assemble his whole fellowship at their common Halls, and there to give straight commandement, that every man see the Kings peace kept within the City. After which time, the Cittizens were brought to such quietnesse, that after that day, the enquiry was duly perused, and three persons for the said rout put in execution, and hanged at Tiborne, whereof two were Sanctuary men of Saint Martins le Grand, the other a shipman; for of robbing Anthony Mawricine, and other Lumbards. An. Reg. 35.

The French nation hearing of the civill dissention within the Realme of England, thought to worke some domage to the English people, in revenge of old iniuries, whereupon were two Navies appointed to invade the Townes standing upon the rivage of the Sea. The Captaine of the one fleete, was William, Lord Pomyars, and of the other Sir Piercy Brelly, Captaine of Depe. These two Captaines taking their course out of the mouth of Seyne, severed themselves, the one Westward, and the other Eastward, which was Sir Peter Brelly, this lustie Captaine saying almost all the coasts of Sussex, and Kent, durst not once take Land, till hee arrived in the Downs, and there having perfect notice, that a little before, the chiefe Rulers of the Downe, were departed from thence to asspyde the plague which then there raigned, entred the Hauen with fifteene thousand men, and their ships all Landing at Sandwich, wherof seven thousand entred the Land, the space of three miles, and there kept and defended the Towne, untill their owne company might come to them, at what time they killed the Maior, the Bailifes, and the other Officers of Sandwich, with divers other Gentlemen of the Countrey, and spoyled and robbed the town, leading and carrying away 1457. Sandwich ſpoiled by the French.

Carts of furniture, and other riches to their ships, and moreouer, robbed and spoyled two great Gallies, or Ships laden with marchandise comming to London.

The Towne of Fowy hyens.

The Lord Pomyars likewise take his course Westward, and by night, brent Foway, and other certaine Townes in Deuonshire, in the moneth of August, and with his pillage returned into Britaine.

The Scots also entered Northumberland, and burned certaine cottages and houles, but hearing that the Duke of Yorke was marching thitherward with a great army, they with all hast returned into Scotland.

Rob. Fabian.

In this yeere was a great fray in the Northcountrey, betweene the Lord Egremond, and the Earle of Salisburies sonnes, whereby many were maimed and slaine, but in the end, the Lord Egremond, was taken, who was by the Kings Councell found in great default, and therfore condemned in great summes of money, to be payed to the Earle of Salisbury, and in the meane time committed to Newgate.

Register of Blaior.

Not long after this Sir Thomas Percy, Lord Egremond, and Sir Richard Percy his brother being prisoners in Newgate, condemned in a great summe to the Earle of Salisbury, as is aforesaid, brake out of prison by night, and went to the King: the other prisoners tooke the Leads of the gates, and defended it a long while against the Sheriffes, and all their Officers, in so much that they were forced to call more ayde of the Cittizens, whereby they lastly subdued them.

An. reg. 36.

The Queene secretly thirsting the ouerthrow of Richard, Duke of Yorke, and his faction, perceiuing that they could attempt nothing against him more to the Citty of London, because the Duke was had more in estimation among the Cittizens, then eyther the King or Queene, and therefore she caused the King to make a progresse into Warwickshire, for his health and recreation, and so with hawking and hunting, came to the Citty of Couentry, where diuers waits were studied to compasse the Queenes desire: for the accomplishing whereof, the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Salisbury, and Warwicke, were sent for to Couentrie by the Kings Letters, vnder his priuy Seale, to which place the said Lords resorted: but being admonished by secret friends what was intended against them, they auoyded that danger, and so not saying farewell, they departed from the Court, the Duke vnto Wigmore, in the marches of Wales, the Earle of Salisbury to the Castle of Middleham in the North-countrie, and the Earle of Warwicke sayled to the Towne of Caleis; thus were they separated in bodies, but in mindes and hearts knit together in one, hauing alwaies messengers with Letters, walking betwixt them, to communicate their deuices.

Robert Ponings sume time for-ster and Carter to Iacke Cade proclaimed a traytor.

In this meane time, many were apprehended for rayling of seditious tales, among other sayeth the Record, one Robert Ponings, late of Southwarke in the County of Surry Esquire, which was sometime a companion and adherent, to the most horrible, wicked and heynous traytor and tyrant, Iohn Cade, in time of his insurrection, being then his caruer, and sword-bearer, what time hee had his robberie and tyrannie in the Citty of London, and in many other places, the which Robert, stirred the greatest part of such as were adherents, &c. For all which doings being pardoned, he hath still persuered in his wickednesse, and oflate, to wit, in the 31. the 32, &c. of our raigne hath assembled numbers of men at North Cray, and Framingham in Kent, &c. Wherefore we proclaime him to be a Traytour, and to be apprehended, &c.

Reginald Pecocke, Bishop of Chichester.

Reginald Pecocke, Bishop of Chichester, a secular Doctour of Diuinitie, that had laboured many yeres to translate the holy Scripture into English, was accused to haue passed the bonds of Diuinity, and of Christian beliefe in certaine Articles, of the which he was conuict before the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other Bishops and Clerks, and after, vtterly abiured, reuoked, and renounced those Articles openly at Pauls Crosse in his mother tongue, on the fourth day of December, as followeth: In the name of the Trinity, Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, I Regnald Pecocke, Bishop of Chichester, bniworthy, of my owne power and will, without any maner of coertion or dread, confesse and knowledge, that I haue before this time, presuming of my naturall wit, and preferring my iudgement and naturall reason before the new and the old Testament, and the authority and determination of our mother holy Church, haue held, writen and taught otherwise than the holy Romane, and Vniuersall Church teacheth, preacheth, or obserueth. And one is against the true Catholike and Apostles Faith, I haue written, taught and published many, and others, perillous Doctrines, Bookes, Workes, and Writings, containing Heresies and Errors, contrary to the Faith Catholike and determination of holy Church, and especially these Heresies and errors following, that is to say,

Item, quòd non est de necessitate salutis credere sanctorum communionem.

Item, quòd non est de necessitate salutis credere, & tenere illud quod concilium generale & vniuersalis Ecclesia statuit, approbat, seu determinat in fauorem fidei, & ad salutem animarum est ab vniuersis Christi fidelibus approbandum & tenendum.

Wherefore I miserable sinner, which herebefore long time haue walked in darknesse, and now by the mercy and infinite godnesse of God reduced into the right way, and light of truth, and considering my selfe grieuously to haue sinned, and wickedly haue infected and infected the people of God, returne and come againe to the Vnity of our Mother holy Church, and

and all heresies and errors written and contained in my sayde bookes, workes and writings, here solemnly and openly renoke and renounce, which heresies and errors, and all other spices of heresies I haue before this time before the most Reuerend father in God, and my good Lord of Canterbury in diuers and lawfull some iudicially abiured, submitting my selfe, being then and also now at this time a very contrite and penitent sinner, to the correction of the Church and of my said Lord of Canterbury.

And ouer this, exhorting and requiring in the name and vertue of almightie God, in the saluation of your soules and mind, that no man heer after giue faith and credence to my saide pernitious doctrines, heresies and errors, neyther my said Bookes keepe, hold, or read in any wise, but that they all such Bookes, workes, and writings suspect of heresies, deliuer in all goodly hast vnto my said Lord of Canterbury, or to his Commissioners and Deputies, in eschewing of many inconueniences and great perils of soules, the which else might be cause of the contrary. And ouer this in declaration of my conuersion and repentance, I here openly assent, that my said Bookes, workes and writings, for declaration and cause aboue rehersed, be deputed vnto the fire, and openly brent in ensample and terror of all other, &c. After this, he was deprined of his Bishoppicke hauing a certaine pencion assigned vnto him for to liue on in an Abbey, and some after he died. His Bookes were intituled:

1 Of Christian Religion, and a Booke perteyning thereunto.
2 Of Matrimonie.
3 Iust apriling of holy Scripture, deuided into three parts.
4 The Donet of Christian Religion.
5 The followers of the Donet.
6 The Booke of faith.
7 The Booke of filling the foure Tables.
8 The Booke of Worshipping.
9 The Prouoker of Christian men.
10 The Booke of Councell.

King Henry a louer and seeker of peace at the handes of his rebels.

In the moneth of January died the Earle of Deuonshire, in the Abbey of Abingdon, poysoned (as men said) being there at that time with Queene Margaret. King Henry and his adherents perceiuing that the Duke of Yorke lay still and stirred not, returned to London, and there called a great councell, openly declaring that the French and Scots, emboldned by the ciuill discord within the Realme, would attempt to annoy the same, as of late they shewed apparant tokens of their malicious meaning, and would not cease vpon occasions to doe further displeasures, till they perceiued a perfect concord, and vnfained amity to be concluded betweene him and his friends, and those of the contrary part and confederacie. And to the intent, he would be the author of peace, he promised so to entertaine the Duke of Yorke, and his fautors, that all old grudges being not onely inwardly forgotten but outwardly forgiuen, should be the cause of perpetuall loue and assured amitie. This deuise was of all men present well taken, and adiudged for the best. Whereupon diuers graue persons were sent to the Duke of Yorke, and all other the great estates of the Realme, which since the battell of Saint Albons neuer met or communed together, commanding them for great causes to resort to the Kings pallace without delay. At whose commandement came to London, the Earle of Salisbury on the 15. of January with 500. men, and was lodged in his owne house called the Herber: and on the 26. day came Richard Duke of Yorke with 400. men, and was lodged at Bainards Castle being his owne house. Then came the Dukes of Excester and Somerset with 800. men, and were loged without Temple barre, and the Earle of Northumberland, the Lord Egremond, and the Lord Clifford came with 1500. men and lodged without the Citie. And on the 14. of February came the Earle of Warwicke from Caleis with 600. men all in red iackets, embrodered with ragged staues before and behinde, and was lodged at the grey friers. And on the 17. of March, the King and Queene with a great retinue came to London, and were lodged in the Bishops pallace. And because no notorious attempt or bickering should be begunne betweene any of the parties of their retinues, the Maior of London Godfrey Boloinge, and Aldermen of the Citty kept great watch, as well by day as by night, riding about the Citty, by Holborne and Fleetstreet with 200. men well armed, to see good order and peace to be kept. The Lords which lay within the Citie held a daily councell at the blacke Friers. The other part sojourning without the walles, assembled likewise in the chapiter house at Westminster.

At the length by the diligent trauaile, good exhortation, and prudent aduice of the Archbishoppe of Canterbury, and other learned and vertuous Prelats, both parts were perswaded to come to a communication, where after long debating of their grieuances, they were accorded, promising to forget all olde rancours, and to bee friends each to other, and obedient to the King, whereof writings were made and sealed. The principall points whereof, the King being reputed as whole arbitrator, consisted herein.

First, that of the costes and expences of the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Warwicke and Salisbury fiue and fortie pounds yearely rent should be giuen vnto the Monastery of Saint Albons, to bee imployed for Edmond late Duke of Somerset, Henry late Earle of Northumberland, and Thomas Clifford, which being slaine in the late battell of Saint Albons were buried in the Abbey Church. The same Duke of Somerset, Earle of Northumberland and Lord Clifford, were declared for true liege men to the King at the day of their deaths, as well as the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of Warwicke and of Salisbury. Yorke, the Duke of of Yorke should giue to Elianor Dutchesse of Somerset, and to Henry Duke of Somerset her sonne, the summe of fiue thousand markes, &c. The Earle of Warwicke should giue vnto the Lord Clifford the summe of one thousand markes: diuers other awardes betwixt parties were there made, which I am forced to omit, passe for brenities sake,

For the outward publishing of this topfull agreement, there was vpon our Lady day in Lent, or fiue and twentieth day of March, a solemne procession celebrated within the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule in the City of London: at the which the King was present in his Imperiall robes with the Crowne on his head, before him went bare in hand, the Duke of Somerset, the Earle of Salisbury, the Duke of Exceter, and the Earle of Warwicke, and so one of the one faction, and an other of the other. And behinde the K. the Duke of Yorke, and the Queene with great familiarity to all mens sights, whatsoeuer was meant to the contrary, which appeared afterward.

The. Queenes Attorney slaine.

The thirtenth day of Aprill there was a great fray in Fletestreete, betweene men of court, and the inhabitants of the same strete, in which fray the Queenes Atturney was slaine. For this cause, the King committed the principall gouernours of Furnivals, Cliffords, and Barnardes Inne to prison in the Castle of Hertford, and William Tailor Alderman of that ward with many other, were sent to Windsor Castle the seuenth of May.

Iusting in the tower of London.

On Thursday in Whitsun weeke, the Duke of Somerset with Anthonie Rivers and other foure, kept iustes before the Queene in the Tower of London, against three Esquiers of the Queenes: and in like manner at Greenwich the Sunday following.

The Earle of Warwicke takes Spanish ships.

On the Trinitie Sunday or Monday, certaine ships appertayning to the Earle of Warwicke, met with a fleete of Spaniards, and after long and cruell fight take fire of their ships laden with yron and other merchandise, drowned, and chased to the number of 26. not without shedding of blood on both parts, for of the Englishmen were slaine 100. and many more wounded and sore hurt.

An. Reg. 37. The 9 ninth day of November fell a great debate, betweene Richard Earle of Warwicke and them of the kings house, insomuch, that they would haue slaine the Earle: and vnneth hee escaped to his barge, and went after to Caleis, for he was not long before made Captaine thereof by authority of the Parliament. Soone after, the young Duke of Somerset by stirring of them that hated the Earle of Warwicke, was made Captaine of Caleis, and a ship scale directed to the Earle for to discharge him of the Captaine ship: but the Earle, forasmuch as he was made by Parliament, he would not obey the prime scale, but continued forth in the said office.

James Earle of Wiltshire was made treasurer of England after Walter Hungerford knight.

The noble Science of Printing was about this time found in Germane at Paguince by one Io. Cuthenbergus a Knight: one Conradus an Almain brought it into Rome: William Caxton of London Mercer brought it into England about the yere 1471. and first practised the same in the Abbey of S. Peter at Westminster; after which time, it was likewise practised in the Abbeis of S. Augustine at Canterbury, S. Albons, and other Monasteries of England. 1459. Printing first inuented.

The Earle of Warwicke Admirall, Captaine of Caleis with a fourteene well appointed ships, sailed abroad to scower the seas, and by chance met with fiue great ships, whereof three were Carickes of Gene, and the other two were of Spaine, bigger in height and length, than the Carickes. The Earle though he were vnneth able to deale against them, yet he baliantly encountering them, there was a sore battaile fought betwixt them, for it lasted almost the space of two daies, yet in the ende the English bare the victorie: so that two of those ships being forced to saue themselues by flight, the other 3. were taken, which the Earle brought to Caleis, with all the marchandise aboard in the same, the value whereof in wine, oyle, wax, yron, cloth of golde, and other riches, was estemed to the value of ten thousand pound and better, by reason whereof, those wares were solde wonderfull cheape, there were taken a great number of prisoners, besides a thousand persons slaine in the fight, and of the Earles part about the number of fiftie.

Now in this meane time after that the Earle of Warwicke was departed the Realme and gone ouer to Caleis, the Duke of Yorke, and the Earle of Salisbury falling to consultation, it was agreed betwixt them, that the said Earle of Salisbury with a warlike company should march toward the King, and signifie to him by way of complaint, both the manifest iniury done to his sonne, and also the vncourteous breach of the lowne amitie and late agreement, in which sute if he preuailed, he should not then let passe the occasion given for reuenge of displeasures to him done, both by the Queene and her counsell. The Earle of Salisbury therefore remoued from Pidleham Castle with foure or fiue thousand men, taking his way through Lancashire towards London.

In the meane season the Queene assisted by the Dukes of Somerset and Buckingham, hauing a diligent eye to all her busines, imagined that the Earle of Warwicke had kindled this fire, to intent, to let the Crowne on the Duke of Yorkes head: wherefore she appointed Iames Twichet Lord Audley (because his power lay in those parts) to raise an host of men, and to giue battaile to the same Earle, if he saw cause and place conuenient: the al led vnto her all the Knights and Esquiers of Chestershire for to haue their fauour: the helde open household among them, and made her sonne the Prince to giue a liuerie of Swans to all the gentlemen of that countrey, and to many other through the land, striuing through their strength to make her sonne K. making pretence meanes to soure of the Lords to moue the King to resigne the crowne to her sonne, but she could not bring it to passe.

King Henry gaue to Owen Tewdar 100. l. the yeere out of his Manor of Folkestone, Walton, Banetted with the appurtenances in the shire of Kent, &c. Owen Tewdart.

The 21. day of September, Richard Earle of Salisbury hauing gathered a well appointed army, take his way toward Ludlow, where at that time the Duke of Yorke lay, to the intent that they both together would haue ridden to the King to Colshill in Staffordshire, to haue excused them of certaine articles laide against them by malice of their enemies, as they saide. Whereupon those that were about the King, and also the Queene, who lay at Eglishall, moued him to assemble a great power whereof Iames Twichet Lord Audley was made chiefe, and had the leading of them int othe field called Blozeheath nere vnto Puckiestone, by the which the said Duke and the Earle must needs passe, and there both hostes met and fought a mortall battell, wherein the Lord Audley was slaine with Hugh Venables of Kinderton, Thomas Dutton of Dutton, Richard Molineux of Sefton. William Trowtbecke, John Legh del Bothes, John Donne of Utkington, and John Egerton of Egerton knights, Richard Donne of Croxton, Iohn Dutres Esquires, and many other, in all to the number of 2400. persons, but the greatest losse fell to them of Chestershire, that had received the Princes liuery of Swans: but there were taken prisoners the Earle of Salisburies two sonnes Thomas and Iohn, and Sir Thomas Haringtcon, which were sent to Chester, but some after deliuered. After this discourture at Blozeheath, the Duke of Yorke perceiuing his destruction to be intended, and his priuie intents throughly disclosed to the King and Queene, he thought good no longer to linger his busines, but with all diligence to display and aduance his banner, and therefore sending for the Earls of Salisbury, after long communication, they determined to raise an armie, and by fine force either to die, or winne their purpose. Hereupon were men forthwith assembled, both out of the North, and of the Weleh, which gathered to the Parches of Wales, determining there to abide their enemies, or to meet them as occasion serued. There came to him from Caleis the Earle of Warwicke, bringing with him a great number of expert men in martiall feates whereof two Captaines of great experience, the one called Andrew Trolope, the other Iohn Blunt. Blozeheath field. Richard Molineux.

The King hauing aduertisement of the Dukes doing, sent forth Commissioners to leuie a power in all parts of the realme, where he thought to haue any faithfull fauourers, by reason whereof a great number of men were assembled, then the K. accompanied with the Dukes of Somerset and Exceter, and other that fauoured the house of Lancaster, marching forward came vnto Worcester, where he staied for a time, and sent to his aduersaries a messenger, to wit the bishop of Salisbury Richard Beauchampe, to offer vnto them a free generall pardon for all trespasses whatsoeuer, if they would giue ouer their enterprise and become true and obedient subiects. To whom they answered by the mouth of the Earle of Warwicke, in three points: First, that as concerning the pardon they durst not truste vnto it. Secondly that not withstanding such pardons, those that were about the King were vnruly, and cared not to breake the Kings commandement. Thirdly, alt. ough every Lord being called to the Parliament, ought freely to come, and safely to depart, yet the said Earle of Warwicke, at a certaine counsell holden at Westminster, was in danger of death, if the Lord aboue had not the better prouided for his escape, for the which cause he seeth the Kings pardon may be likened to a buckler of glasse, or a staffe of reede, of the which there is no trust: we dare not commit our selues vnto the defence of such pardons.

The King receiuing such an answer was nothing contented therewith, therefore commanded his standarts to be aduanced: but before he came to the place where the said Lords were incamped, they wrote a letter to the King, whereof the tenour was thus.

Most Christian King, right high, and mighty Prince, and our most dread soueraigne Lord, after as humble recommendations to your high excellency as will suffice. Our true intent to the prosperity and augmentation of your high estate, and to the Common weale of this Realme hath beene shewed vnto your highnes in such writing as wee make thereof. And ouer that an Indenture signed by our hands in the Church Cathedrall of Worcester, comprehending the pzaise of the truth and dutie that (God knoweth) we beare to your said estate, and to the preheminence and pzerogatiue thereof we sent vnto your good grace by the pzior of the said church, and diuers other Doctors, among other by Master William Linwoode Doctor of diuinity, which ministred vnto vs seuerally the blessed sacrament of the body of Iesus, whereupon we and euery of vs deposed for our sayd truethand duety, according to the tenour of the said Indenture. And since that time we haue certified at large in writting and by mouth, by Garter King of armes, not onely to your saide highnesse, but also to the good and worthie Lords being about your most noble presence, the largeneste of our said truth and duety, and our intent and disposition, to search all the motions that might serue conuenientlie to the affirmation thereof, and to our perfect sureties from such inconuenient and vnrecuerent iopardies as we haue beene put in diuers times heretofore. Wherefore we haue cause to make, and ought to make such exclamation and complaint, not without reason, as is not vnknowne to the said worthie Lords, and to all this land, and will offer vs to your high presence, to the same intent, if we might so doe without the said surety, which onely causeth vs to kepe such fellowship as we doe in our lawfull manner. And here to we haue forborne and auoided thinges that might serue to the effusion of Christian blod, of the dread that we haue of God, and of your royall Maiestie: and haue also eschewed to approach your said most noble presence, for the humble obeisance and reuerence wherein we haue, and during our life will haue the same. And yet neuertheless we feare, that we be proclaimed and diffamed in our name vnrightfully, vnlawfully, and saying your high reuerence, vntruely, and otherwise (as God knoweth) than we haue giuen cause, knowing certainely that the blessed and noble intent of your saide good grace and the righteousnesse thereof is, to take, repute and accept your true and lawfull subiects, and that it accordeth neyther with your said intent, nor with your will or pleasure, that we should be otherwise taken or reputed. And ouer that, our Lordships and tenaunts haue bin of high violence robbed and spoyled, against your peace and lawes and all righteousnesse. Wee therefore, as we suffice, beseech your said good grace to take repute, and receiue thereunto our said truenes and intent, which to God is knowen, as wee shew it by the said tenour of the same Indenture, and not apply your said blessednes ne the great righteousnes and equity wherewith God hath euer indued your high nobilitie, to the importune impatience and violence of such persons as intend of extreame malice to procede vnder shadow of your high might and psence, to our destruction, for such inordinate counsise (wherof God is not pleased) as they haue to our lands, offices, and goods, not letting or sparing therefore, to put such things in all lamentable and to sorowfull ieopardy, as might in all wise take effect, by the mystery of Gods will and power: nor not hauing regard to the effusion of Christian blod, ne any tenderness to the Noble blod of this land, such as serue to the tuition and defence thereof, ne not waighing the losse of your true liege menne of your said Realme, that God defend, which knoweth our intent, and that wee haue auoyded therefrom, as farre as wee may with our sureties, not of any dread that wee haue of the said persons, but onely of the dread of God and of your saide highner, and will not dise our sayde defence vntill the time that wee be pronoked of necessity, whereof wee call Heauen and Earth into witnesse and record, and therein beseech God to be our Iudge, and to deliuer vs according to our said intent, and our said truenes and duety to your sayd highnesse, and to the said Commonweale. Most Christian King, right high, and mighty Prince, and most dread soueraigne Lord, wee beseech our blessed Lord to preserue your honour and estate, in ioy and felicity. Written at Ludlow the 10. day of October: R. Yorke, R. Warwicke, R. Salisburie.

After their excusation contained in this letter sent to the King, they withdrew them, and went into diuers parts beyond the seas, for the more surety of their persons. The Duke of Yorke went into Ireland, where he was honourably receiued: the Earle of March, Salisbury, and Warwick, not without great ieopardy and peril, as well on the land as on the sea, went to Caleis and abode there.

Parliament at Couentry. Duke of Yorke and other attaint.

Then was a Parliament holden at Couentry, wherein were attaint of treason, Richard Duke of Yorke, Edward Earle of March his sonne and heire, Richard Earle of Warwicke, Edmond Earle of Rutland, Richard Earle of Salisbury, Iohn Lord Clifford, Lord Clinton, sir Thomas Harrington, sir Iohn Wenlocke, Thomas Neuill, Iohn Neuill sonnes of the Earle of Salisbury, Iames Pickering, Iohn Conyers, Thomas Par, William Oldhall, and Henry Ratford, Knights, Iohn Bowser, Thomas Cooke, Iohn Clay, Richard Gyton, Robert Browne, Edward Bowser, Thomas Vaughan, Iohn Roger, Richard Grey, Walter Decreuex, Walter Hopton, Roger Kynderton, William Bowes, Foulke Stafford, the Lord Powis, and Alice Countesse of Salisburp, their goods and possessions escheted, and their heires disinherited vnto the ninth degree, their tenants spoyled of their goods, bee maimed and slaine, the towne of Ludlow longing to the Duke of Yorke, was robbed to the bare walles, and the Dutches of Yorke spoiled of her goods.

Ludlow spoyled.

In this moneth of October, Henry the young Duke of Somerset, Henry Lord Roos, and Lord Audley, with menne of armes sailed to wardes Caleis, to the intent the Duke should haue bene Captaine there; but when he came to land, they of Caleis would haue taken him, so that bee hardly escaped to the Castle of Gwines, his souldiers were stripped out of their harnesse, and let go. The Lord Audley was taken into Caleis, and the Lord Roos fled into Flanders, and after returned into England.

Duke of Somerset fled to Gwines. The Lord Audley taken into Caleis. The L. Roos fled into Flanders.

Not long after, Richard Lord Riuers was sent to Sandwich, to keepe the towne and certaine great shippes which lay there at anker: but when the Earle of Warwicke saw time conuenient, he sent some of his men to Sandwich by night, the which take the said Lord Riuers and Anthonie Wooduile his son in their beds, and led them ouer to Caleis, with all the great shippes saue one called Grace de Dieu, the which might not be had away because the was broke in the bottome. Sir Baudwine Fulford vndertooke on paine of losing his head, that he would destroy the Earle of Warwicke, but when he hadde spent the King a thousand markes in money, he returned againe. Then was the Duke of Exceter Admirall sent to the sea with a great Nauy for to disseuer the Earle of Warwicke and his Nauy, he sailing from Sandwich to Dertmouth, for lacke of victuals and money his souldiers forsoke him there. And betwixt Sandwich and Dertmouth he met the Earle of Warwicke comming out of Ireland that had bene there for to speake with the Duke of Yorke, and brought with him his mother that was fled thither for dread, and led her to Caleis: but the Duke of Exceter durst not set vpon the Earle of Warwicke, nor the Earle would not distresse him, because he was Admirall, and of the Kings blood, but let him passe by.

The L. Riuers and his sonne Anthonie Wooduile taken by force carried from Sandwich.

1460. Sir Baudwin Fulford his enterprise. The Duke of Exceter sent to the seas.

In the moneth of Iune 500. men were sent to conduct the D. of Somerset from Gwines into England, but abiding the wind in the Port of Sandwich, the Earle of Warwikes men spoiled them of their harneis, killed their Captaine Mountfort and many other. The Earles at Caleis sent to the Archbishoppe of Canterburp, and at large to the Commons of England certaine articles in writing, beginning thus: Worshipfull Sirs, wee the Duke of Yorke, the Earles of March, Warwike, and Salisbury, sued, and offred to haue come vnto the King our soueraigne Lords most noble psence, to haue declared there afore him for our duety to God and to his highnes, and to the prosperity and well fare of his noble estate, and to the common weale of of all his land, as true liegemen, the matters following, that is to say.

Captaine Mountfort slaine. Articles sent from the Duke of Yorke, and the Earles, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and to the commons.

Inprimis, the great oppression, extortion, robbery, murther, and other violence done to Gods Church and to his ministers thereof, against Gods and mans law.

2 Item, the pouerty and misery that to our great heuinesse our soueraigne Lord standeth in, not hauing any liuelode of the Crowne of England, whereof he may kepe his honourable household, which causeth the spoiling of his said liege men by the takers of his said household, which liuelode is in their hands that haue bene destroyers of his said estate, and of the said common weale.

3 Item, how his lawes be partially and vnrightfully guided, and that by them that should most loue and tender his said lawes, the saide oppression and extortions is most fauoured and supported, and generally, that all righteousnes and Iustice is exiled out of the said land, and that no man dreadeth to offend against the said lawes.

4 Item, that it will please his sayd good grace to liue vpon his owne liuelode, whereupon his noble progenitors haue in daies heretofore liued as honorably and as worthily as any Christian Princes, and not to suffer the destroiers of the said land, and of his subiects, to liue thereupon, and therefore to lacke the sustenances that should be belonging to his said estate, and finde his household, vpon his poze commons, without payment, which neither acordeth with Gods nor mans law.

5 Item, how oft the said commons haue bene greatly and merueilously charged with taxes and tallages, to their great empouerishing, whereof little good hath eyther growen to the King or to the said land, and of the most substance thereof the King hath left to his part not halfe so much: and other Lords and persons, enemies to the sayd common weale, haue to their owne vse, suffering all the old possessions that the King had in France and Normandy, Aniow and Paine, Gascoigne and Gwien, won and gotten by his father of most noble memory, and other his noble progenitors, to be shamefully lost or sold.

6 Item, how they cannot cease therewith, but now begin a new charge of impositions and tallages vpon the said people, which neuer afore was seene, that is to say, euery Towneship to find men for the Kings guard, taking ensample thereof, of our enemies and aduersaries of France, which imposition and tallage, if it be continued to heire, heires, and successors, will be the heauest charge and most ensample that euer grew in England, and the foresaid subiects, and the said heirs and successors in such bondage as their ancestors were neuer charged with.

7 Item, where the King hath now no more liuelode of his Realme of England, but onely the Lins of Ireland, and the Townes of Caleis, and that no King Christened hath such a land and a Towne without his Realme, diuers Lords haue caused his highnes to write letters vnder his priuy seals, vnto his Irish enemies, which neuer King of England did heretofore, whereby they may haue comfort to enter into the conquest of the said land, which letters the same Irish enemies sent vnto me the said Duke of Yorke, and marueled greatly that any such letters should bee to them sent, speaking therein great shame and villany of the sayde Realme.

8 Item, in like wise the King by excitation and labour of the same Lords, inote other letters to his enemies and aduersaries in other lands, that in no wise they should shew any fauour or good will to the Towne of Caleis, whereby they had comfort enough to procede to the winning thereof. Considered also that it is ordained by the labour of the sayd Lords, that no where victuall nor other thing of refreshing or defence should come out of England, to the succour or reliefe of the said Towne, to the intent that they would haue it lost, as it may openly appeare.

9 Item, it is deemed and aught greatly to be deemed, that after that the same Lords would put the same rule of England, if they might haue their purpose and intent, into the handes and gouernance of the saide enemies.

10 Item, how continually sith the piteous, shamefull, and sorowfull murther to all England, of that noble, worthy, and Christian Prince Humfrey Duke of Glocester the Kings true vncle, at Bury, if hath bene labored, studied, and conspired, to haue destroyed and murthered the said Duke of Yorke and the title that it pleased God to send me of the royall blod, and also of vs the saide Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury, for none other cause but for the true heart that God knoweth wee euer haue borne, and beare to the profit of the Kings estate, to the common weale of the same realme and defence thereof.

11 Item, how the Earles of Shrewsbury and Wiltshire, and the Lord Beaumont, our mortall and extreame enemies, now, and of long time past, hauing the guiding about the most noble person of our saide soueraigne Lord, whose highnes they haue restrained and kept from the liberty and freedome that belongeth to his said estate, and the supportors and assurers of all the premiles, would not suffer the Kings said good god grace to receiue and accept vs, as he would haue done, if he might haue had his owne will, into his said presence, dreading the charge that would haue beene laid vpon them, of the misery, destruction, and wretchednesse of the sayde Realme, whereof they be causes, and not the King, which is himselfe as noble, as vertuous, as righteous and blessed of disposition, as any Prince earthly.

12. Item, the Earles of Wiltshire and Shrewsbury, and the Lord Beaumont, not satisfied nor content with the Kings possessions & his goods, stirred and excited his said highnes to hold his Parliament at Coventry, where an act is made by their prouocation and labour, against vs the said Duke of Yorke, vp sonnes March and Rutland, and the Earles of Warwicke and Salisbury, and the sonnes of the said Earle of Salisbury, and many other Knights and Esquiers, of diuers matters falsely and vntruely imagined, as they will answere afore Almighty God in the day of doome, the which the said Earles of Shrewsbury and Wiltshire, and the Lord Beaumont prouoked to be made, to the intent of our destruction and of our issue, and that they might haue our liuelode and goods, as they haue openly robbed and dispoyled all our places and our tenements, and many other true men, and now proced to hanging and drawing of men by tyranny, and will therein shew the largenes of their violence and malice as vengeably as they can, if no remedy be prouided at the Kings highnesse, whose blessednesse is neither assenting nor knowing thereof.

We therefore seing all the said mischiefes, hearing also that the French King maketh in his land great assembly of his people, which is greatly to be dread for many causes, purpose yet againe with Gods grace to offer vs to come againe to the said presence of our said soueraigne Lord, to open and declare there vnto him the mischiefe aboue declared, and in the name of the land to sue, in as reuerent and lowly wise as we can, to his said god grace, to haue pitie and compation vpon bs his said true subiects, and not to suffer the same mischiefes to raigne vpon them. Requiring you in Gods behalfe, and praying you in your owne therein to assist vs, doing alway the duety of liegemen in our persons to our said soueraigne Lord, to his estate, prerogatiue, and preheminence, and to the surety of his most noble person, whereunto we haue euer beene, and will be as true as any of his subiects alive, whereof we call God, our Lady Saint Mary, and all the Saints in heaven vnto witnes and record.

The Earle of Wiltshire and other spoiled Newberry.

In the meane time, the Earle of Wiltshire treasurer of England, the Lord Scales, and the Lord Hungerford went to Newbery, which longed to the D. of Yorke, and there made inquisition of all them that in any wise had fauoured the said Duke, whereof some were found guilty, and were drawen, hanged and quartered, and all the inhabitants of the towne were spoiled of their goods. From thence the Earle of Wiltshire went to Southhampton, where vnder colour to take the Earle of Warwike, but especially to scale out of the Realme, as he appeared afterwards, he armed fiue great carickes of Jene, and stuffed them with souldiers taking victualles of the Kings price without payment, and put a great part of his treasure into the said caricks, and after sayled about in the sea, and at last scale into Dutchland, sending backe againe his souldiours into England. The Earle of Wiltshire scale ouer the seas.

Then were the Kings privy seales directed to all bishops, abbots, priors and other states spirituall and temporall to lend the King money, therewith to wage souldiers to keepe the sea coasts: but the commons of Kent dreading the like vengeance to be taken vpon them, as was done vpon them of Newbery, sent priuily messengers to Caleis to the foresaid Earles, beseeching them in all hast possible to come to their succour, whereupon the said Earles sent ouer into Kent the Lord Fauconbridge, to know if their deds would accord with their words and anon the people of Kent and other shires adioyning resorted to the said Lord Fauconbridge in great number, and made long proclamations, containing diuers articles and causes of their assembly, all which hers I ouerpasse. When the Earles knew the wilful hearts of those people, they prepared to come into this land, against whose comming, a long ballet was fired vpon the gates of Canterbury, made in fauor of the Duke of Yorke and the sayde Earles, beginning thus, In the day of fast and spirituall affliction, The celestiall influence of bodies transitorie, &c. The Earles of Marche, Warwicke, and Salisbury, arriued at Sandwitch, where met with them Thomas Bourcher Archbishop of Canterbury, who with his crosse borne before him, and a great number of other people, accompanied them to London, into the which City they entred on the second day of July: with them came the Popes legats, to treat of a peace, if need were. Pyllage Scales for money. The men of Kent send to Caleis for the Earles. The Earles entred into London.

Then was a conuocation of the Clergy holden in Saint Pauls Church, where the sayde Earles being present, the Earle of Warwicke recyted the cause of their comming into the land, with the misgouernments thereof, and then made open oth vpon the crosse of Canterbury, that they had euer borne true faith and allegeance to King Henry, Then the Earles of Marche and Warwike, with the Lords Fauconbrige, Clinton, Bourcher called the Earle of Ewe, the Pryor of Saint Johns, Audley, Burgauenny, Say, and Scrope, the Archbishop, the Popes legate, the Bishops of Exceeter, Ely, Salisbury, and Rocheester, addressed themselues with to the King at Northampton, leauing the Earle of Salisbury to be gouernour of the Citie in their absence. The Lord Scales and Hungerford, that before the comming of the Earles were in the Citie of London, and would haue had the gouernance thereof, went to the tower of London, and with them the Lords Vesty, Louell, Delaware, Kendale a Gascoigne: Knights, Sir Edmond Hampden, Thomas Brune sherife of Kent, Iohn Bruin of Kent, Gernais Clifton treasurer of the kings house, Thomas

Thomas Tyrell, the Duches of Exceeter and many other. Then was the Tower of London besieged both by water and land, that no victualls might come to them. And they that were within the Tower rasht wild fire into the City, and shot many small gunnes, whereby they brent and slew men women and children in the stretes: also they of the City layd great guns on the further side of the Thames against the Tower, and brake the walls in diuers places.

The King lying in the Friers at Northampton, ordained a strong and mighty field in the medows beside the Nunry, hauing the riuer at his backe. The Earles with their power coming to Northampton, sent certaine Bishops to the King, beseeching him to admit the Earle of Warwicke to come to his presence, to declare their innocency: which request being denied by the Duke of Buckingham, the Earle sent an Herald of armes, desiring to haue hostages for his safe comming and going, but they might not be heard. The third time the Earle of Warwicke sent words to the King, that at two houres after none he would speake with him, or dye in the field. The Bishop of Hereford, a white Frier, the Kings confessor, incouraged the Kings part to fight, wherefore after the battell hee was committed to the Castle of Warwicke, where he was long prisoner.

Battell at Northampton.

The tenth day of July, at two of the clocke after none, the Earles of Marche and Warwicke let cry throw the field, that no man should lay hand vpon the King, ne on the Common people, but on the Lords, Knights and Esquires: then both hosts incountred and fought halfe an houre, the Lord Edmond Gray of Ruthen that was the kings baward, brake the field, and came to the Earles party, and was a great helpe to them in obtaining the victory: many of the Kings side were slaine, and many that fled were drowned in the Riuer, the Duke of Buckingham, the Earle of Shrewsbury, the Lord Beaumount, and the Lord Egremont were slaine by the Kings Tent, with many Knights and Esquires: the Kings Ordinance of guns might not be shot, there was so great raine that day.

When the field was done, and the Earles had the victory, they came to the King, he being in his Tent, and said in this wise: Most Noble Prince, displease you not, though it haue pleased God of his grace, to grant vs the victory of our mortall enemies, the which by their pernenous malice haue vntruly stirred and moued your Highnes to exile vs out of your Land, and would haue vs put to finall shame and confusion: we come not to the intent for to inquiet, ne grieue your said Highnesse, but for to please your Noble Person, desiring tenderly the high welfare and prosperity thereof, and of all your Realme, and to be your true leag-men while our liues shall endure.

The King with these words was greatly recomforted, and anon was led to Northampton with procession, where he rested three dayes, and came to London the fifteenth day of July, and was lodged in the Bishops Palace.

The nineteenth day of July, they that were in the Tower of London, for lacke of victualls, yeelded and came forth, of the which diuers were drawne and headed.

The Lord Scales, late in an euening, entred a Wherry with three persons, and rowing toward Westminster, there to haue taken Sanctuarie, was espyed by a woman, and anon the Wherry-men fell on him, killed, and cast him all and besides Saint Mary Queries. Lord Scales murthered in a Wherry neer the Chaunel.

When Queene Margaret heard that the King was taken, she with her sonne, and 8. persons fled to the Castle of Hardlag in Wales, and was robbed by the way in Lancaster shire of all her goods to the value of ten thousand marke: from thence she went into Scotland.

The tenth of August, Iames, King of Scots, besieging the Castle of Rokesborough, was slaine with a gun that brake in his caunpe.

The 21. of September, the Duke of Somerset came from Gwines into England. An. reg.

The eighth of October, a Parliament was begunne at Westminster, into the which came Richard, Duke of Yorke, that a little before was come out of Ireland, and being lodged in the Palace, the King being there, he brake vp the doores of the Kings chamber, to the King giuing him place, tooke another Chamber. Then the said Duke, as right heyre by lineall descent from Richard the second, challenged the Realme, purposing to haue beene crowned on Allhallowne day next following, and herewpon sent to the Parliament in writing his said claime, Title and Pedigree. The which claime after diligent deliberation had and approoued, by the said Parliament, peace and concord betweene the King and the Duke, on the digill of Allhallow was established and concluded, as in Articles followeth. Parliament. The articles betwixt King Henry and the Duke of Yorke.

Blessed be Iesu, in whose hands all bounty resteth, and is the peace and vnity betwixt Princes and the weale of euery Realme: I know by whose direction agreed it is appointed and accorded, as followeth: Betwixt the most high and most mighty Prince, King Henry the sixth, King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland on the one party, and the right high and mighty Prince, Richard Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, on that other party, vpon certaine matters of variance, mooued betwixt them, and especially vpon the claime and Title vnto the Crownes of England and of France, and royall power, estate, and dignity appertaining to the same, and Lordship of Ireland opened, shewed and declared by the said Duke, afore all the Lords, spirituall and temporall, being in this present Parliament.

First where the said Richard, Duke of Yorke, hath declared and opened, as aboue is said, Title and claime, in manner as followeth.

That the right Noble and worthy Prince Henry, King of England the third, had issue and lawfull got, Edward, his first begotten sonne, borne at Westminster the fifteenth kalends of July, in the yere of our Lord, 1239 and Edmond his second sonne, which was borne on S. Marcells day, in the yere of our Lord, 1245. the which Edward, after the death of King Henry his father, intituled and called King Edward the first, hadde issue Edward his first begotten Sonne, called after the decease of his father, King Edward the second, which hadde issue, Edward the third: which Edward the third had issue, Edward Prince of Wales, William of Hatfielde his second sonne, Lionell the third Duke of Clarence, John of Gaunt the fourth, Duke of Lancaster, Edmond of Langley the fift, Duke of Yorke, Thomas Woodstocke the sixt, Duke of Glocester, and William of Windzore the seuenth. The said Edward Prince of Wales, which died in the life time of his father, had issue Richard, which succeeded Edward the third his Grandfire: Richard died without issue: William of Hatfielde the second sonne of Edward the third, died without issue: Lionell the third Sonne of Edward the third, Duke of Clarence, hadde issue Phillip his Daughter and heire, which was given inmatrimonie vnto Edmond Mortimer Earle of March, and hadde issue Roger Mortimer Earle of March her Sonne and heire, which Roger hadde issue Edmond Earle of March, Roger Mortimer, Anne and Elianor: which Edmond, Roger, and Elianor, died without issue: And the said Anne coupled in matrimony to Richard Earle of Cambridge, the Sonne of Edmond of Langley, the fift Sonne of Edward the third and had issue Richard Plantagenet, commonly called Duke of Yorke, John of Gaunt the fourth Sonne of Edward, and the younger brother of the said Lionell, had issue Henry Earle of Darby, which incontinent after that King Richard resigned the Crownes of the Realmes and Lordshippe of Ireland, vnrightfully entred vpon the same, then being aline Edmond Mortimer Earle of March Son to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, sonne and heire of the saide Phillip, daughter and heire of the sayde Lionell, the third sonne of the said King Edward the third, to the which Edmond the right and title of the sayde Crownes and Lordshippe by law and custome belonged. To the which Richard Duke of Yorke, as sonne to Anne daughter to Roger Mortimer Earle of March, sonne and heire of the sayde Phillip daughter and heire of the sayd Lionell, the third Sonne of King Edward the third, the right, title, dignity royall and estate of the Crownes of the Realmes of England and France, and the Lordshippe of Ireland, pertayneth and belongeth afore any issue of the sayde John of Gaunt, the fourth son of the said king Edward. The said title notwithstanding, and without preiudice of the said Richard Duke of Yorke, tenderly desiring the wealth, rest, and prosperity of this land, and to set apart all that might be trouble to the same, and considering the possession of the saide King Henry the sixt, and that he hath for his time bene named, taken, and reputed for King of England and of France, and Lord of Ireland, is contented agreed and consenteth, that he be had, reputed, and taken for King of England and France, with the royall estate, dignity and pzel eminence belonging thereunto, and Lord of Ireland during his naturall life. And for that time, the sayde Duke without hurt or preiudice of his said right and title shall take, worshippe and honour him for his soueraigne Lord.

Item, the said Richard Duke of Yorke, shall promit and bind him by his solemne oath, in manner and forme as followeth.

The othe of Richard Duke of Yorke.

In the name of God Amen: I Richard Duke of Yorke, promise and sweare by the faith and truth, that I owe to almightie God, that I shall neuer consent, procure, or Eir, directly or indirectly, in priuy or apart, neither (as much as in me is) shall suffer to be done, consented, procured, or stirred, any thing that may sound to the abridgement of the naturall life of King Henry the sixt, or to the hurt or diminishing of his raigne or dignitie royall, by violence or any otherwise, against his freedome or liberty: but if any person or persons would doe or presume any thing to the contrary, I shall with all my might and power withstand it, and make it to bee withstode, as far as my power will stretch thereunto, so helpe me God and his holy euangelists.

Item, Edward Earle of March, and Edmond Earle of Rutland, sonnes of the said Duke of Yorke shall make like othe.

Item, it is accorded, appointed and agreed, that the said Richard Duke of Yorke, shall be called and reputed from thencefoorth bery and rightfull heire to the Crownes, royall estate, dignitie and Lordship aboue said, and after the decease of the said King Henry, or when he will lay from him the said Crownes, estate, dignity, and Lordship, the said D. and his heires shall immediately succede to the sayde Crownes royall, estate, dignity and Lordship.

Item, the said Richard Duke of Yorke shall haue, by authority of this present Parliament, Castles, mannors, lands and tenements, with the wardes, marriages, reliefes, seruices, fines, amercements, offices, auoidons, fees and other appurtenances to them belonging, whatsoeuer they be, to the yerely value of tenne thousand markes ouer all charges and repziles, whereof fiue thousand markes shall bee to his owne state, three thousand fiue hundred markes to Edward his first begotten Sonne Earle of March, for his estate, and one thousand pound to Edmond Earle of Rutland his second Sonne, for his yerely sustentation, in such considerations and such intent as shall bee declared by the Lords of the Kings Counsell.

Item, if any person or persons imagine or compasse the death of the said Duke, and thereof probably bee attaint, of open déde done by folkes of other condition, it be deemed and adiudged high treason.

Item, for the more establishing of the saide accord, it is appointed and consented that the Lords spirituall and temporall, being in this present Parliament, shall make othes to accept, take, worship, and repute the said Richard Duke of Yorke, and his heires, as afore is rehearsed rehearsed, and keepe and obserue, and strengthen as much as appertaineth vnto them, all the things afore said, and resist to their power, all them that would presume the contrarie, according to their estates and degrées.

Item, the saide Richard Duke of Yorke, Earles of March and Rutland, shall permit and make other to helpe, ayde, and defend the saide Lords and euery of them, against all those that will quarrell, or any thing attempt against the sayde Lords or any of them, by occasion of agréement or consenting to the saide accord, or assistance giuing to the Duke and Earles, or any of them.

Item, it is agréed and appointed, that this accord, and euery article thereof, bée opened and notified by the Kings letters patents, or otherwise, at such times and places, and in manner, as it shall be thought expedient to the sayde Richard Duke of Yorke, with the aduice of the Lords of the Kings Councell. The King vnderstandeth certainely, the sayde title of the sayde Richard Duke of Yorke, iust, lawfull, and sufficient, by the aduice and assent of the Lords spirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this Parliament assembled, and by authoritie of the same Parliament declareth, approueth, ratifieth, confirmeth and accepteth the saide title iust, good, lawfull, and true, and thereunto giueth his assent and agrément of his free will and libertie. And ouer that, by the sayde aduice and authoritie declareth, entitleth, calleth, stablisheth, affirmeth, and reputeth the saide Richard Duke of Yorke, bery true and rightfull heire to the Crones, royall estate, and dignity of the Realmes of England and of France, and of the Lordshippe of Ireland aforesayde, and that according to the worshippe and reuerence that thereto belongeth, he bée taken, accepted, and reputed in worshippe and reuerence, by all the States of the sayde Realme of England, and of all his subiects thereof, hauing and ordaining by the same authority, the King to haue the said Crones, Realme, royall estate, dignitie, and preheminence of the same, and the said Lordshippe of Ireland during his life naturall. And furthermore by the same aduice and authority willeth, consenteth and agréeth, that after his decease, or when it shall please his highnes to laye from him the sayde Crones, estate, dignitie, and Lordship, the said Richard Duke of Yorke, and his heires, shall immediately succede him in the said Crones, royall estate, dignitie, and worship, and them then haue and enioy, any act of Parliament, statute or ordinance, or other things to the contrary made, or interruption or discontinuance of possession notwithstanding. And moreouer, by the sayde aduice and authoritie stablisheth, granteth, confirmeth, approueth, ratifieth, and accepteth the sayde accord, and all things therein contained, and thereunto freely and absolutely assenteth, agréeth, and by the same aduice and authority ordaineth and establisheth, that if any person or persons imagine or compasse the death of the said Duke, and probably be attaint of open déde done by folkes of that condition, that it be deemed and adiudged high treason. And furthermore ordaineth and establisheth by the said assent and authority, that all Statutes, ordinances and acts of Parliament, made in the time of the said King Henry the fourth, by the which he and the heires of his body comming of Henry late King of England the first, the sonne and heire of the said King Henry the fourth and the heire of King Henry the first, were or be inheritable to the saide Crownes and Realmes, or to the heritage of the same, bée annulled, repelled, damned, cancelled, void, and of none effect.

And ouer this, the King by the said aduice, assent and authority, ordaineth and establisheth, that all other acts and statutes made afore this time by act of Parliament, not repelled or annulled by like authority, or otherwise void, be in such force, effect, and vertue, as they were afore the making of these ordinances, and that no letters patents royall of record, nor acts iudicall, made or done afore this time not repelled, reuersed, ne otherwise void by law, be preiudiced or hurt by this present act. Also it was ordained by the same Parliament, that the saide Richard Duke of Yorke, should be called Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornewell, and Earle of Chester, and pzincepz of England.

The English chronicle printed by William Caxton, and therefore called Caxtons chronicle, declareth how that in the Parliament, while the Commons of the Realme were assembled in the common house, communing and treating vpon the title of the saide Duke of Yorke, suddenly fell downe the crowne which hung there in the middest of the sayde house, which was the fratry of the abbey of Westminster, which was taken for a prodigy or token, that the raigne of King Henry was ended: and all the Crowne which stood on the highest Tower of the Castle of Douer, fell downe the same yere.

The agrément afore saide being put in articles, was engrosed, sealed, and sworne by the two parties, and also enacted in the high court of Parliament: for joy whereof, the King hauing in his company the duke of Yorke, rode to the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paule within the city of London, and there on the day of All Saints, with the crowne on his head, went solemnly in procession, and was lodged a good space after in the Bishops pallace nere to the said church. And on the Saturday next ensuing, Richard Duke of Yorke was by sound of Trumpet, solemnly proclaimed heire apparent to the Crowne of England, and pzincepz of the Realme.

The right title and claime of Richard Duke of Yorke exhibited to the Kings spirituall & temporall in Parliament this yeere being 39. Henry 6.

The 16. of October, the Councell of the Duke of Yorke did exhibite to the Lords in Parliament, a writing touching the Dukes claime to the crowne of England and Lordship of Ireland, which the Lords willed to bee read vnto them, and vpon consultation among themselues it was answered that no answers should be be made vnto it without the King. The title was deuised from King H. 3. to King Edward 3. vnto whose second Sonne Lionell Duke of Clarence, the Duke of Yorke was proued to be the lawfull heire, and so hereby had better right to the Crowne then any of the line derived from Iohn of Gaunt Duke of Lancaster. The Lords declared this title to the King, who willed them to call the Iudges and his Counsell at lawe to answere the same. Wherefore order was taken that euery Lord might frankly therein vtter his conceipt without any impeachments. In the end obiections were made against the Dukes title as followeth.

First, the oathes of the Lords made to the King, and namely the Dukes oathe.

Secondly, the Acts of Parliament lately made against the Dukes oathe.

Thirdly, sondry Actes of entaile made to the Crowne of England.

Fourthly, that the Duke pretending his title from Lionell Duke of Clarence, should rather beare the armes of Clarence, then of Edmond of Langley Duke of Yorke.

Fifthly, that King H. 4. tooke the Crowne vpon him, as right heire to King Henry, and not as a conqueror, vnto which obiections Richard Plantagenet, commonly called Duke of Yorke, answered thus.

First, no oath ought to be performed when the same tendeth to the suppression of truth and right being against the law of God.

To the 2. and 3. he knoweth no Acts made, but one act of 7 H. 4. touching a generall claime made by him a wrong doer, for if hee had any right to the same, hee neither needed nor would haue made any such entaile.

To the forth he might iustly haue borne the Armes of Clarence and of England, onely for feare the same for a time, as he did for making his Claime to the Crowne.

To the which being a manifest vntruth, was onely a shadow to cloake a violent vsurpation of Henry of Darby.

After this, the Parliament kept at Couentry the last yere, was declared to be a deuilish counsell, and onely celebrated for the destruction of the nobility, and no lawfull Parliament, because they which were returned, were neuer elected according to the due order of the law, but secretly named by them, which desired rather the destruction than the aduancement of the common wealth. When these agréements were done and enacted, the King dissolued his Parliament, which was the last Parliament that euer he ended. The Duke of Yorke well knowing that the Quéene would spurne against the conclusions agreed in this Parliament, caused both her and her sonne to be sent for by the King: but the being a stout woman, by the counsell of the Dukes of Excester and Somerset, not onely denied to come, but also assembled a great army, intending to take the King by force out of the Lords hands.

Great water sounds.

The one and twentieth of November, such abundance of waters ouerflowed in the countries of Huntington, Suffolke, Cambridge, and the Ile of Ely, as the like had not béene seene before: for it ouerthrew the bridge, with a great part of the Hospital and fratry at Thetford in Norfolke, and the bridges in Cambridge, running ouer the wheeles of the water Milles there, destroying many houses, and comming in at the windowes of the rest.

The Duke of Yorke pretendeth being at London, alligned the Duke of Norfolke, and the Earle of Warwicke his trusty friends, to be about the King, and he with the Earles of Salisbury and Rutland, and a conuenient number of men, departed out of London the second of December, and sent to the Earle of Marche his eldest sonne to follow him with all his power. The Duke came to the castle of Sandall beside Wakefielde on Christmas euen, and there began to assemble his tenants and friends. There came to him vnder a colour of friendship, the Lord Neuill, brother to the Earle of Westmerland, and required of him a commission for him to rise the people for to chastise his rebels, as he said: but when hee had raised to the number of eight thousand menne, he brought them to the Lords of the countrie, that is to say, the Earle of Northumberland and the rest.

D. of Yorke went northward.

Battell at Wakefield

The Quéene ascertained hereof, determined to méete with him before his power were come together, and so, hauing in her company the Prince her sonne, the Dukes of Excester and Somerset, the Earle of Deuonshire, the Lord Clifford, the Lord Roose, and in effect all the Lords of the north parts, with an 18000. men, marched from Yorke to Wakefield, where they placed themselues euen before the castle gates, the Duke hauing with him not fully 4000 men (as was said) contrary to the minde of his faithfull friends, would néedes issue forth to fight with his enemies. The Duke of Somerset, and other of the Quénes part, deuised how to take them, and so appointed the Lord Clifford to lye in one vale, and the Earle of Wiltshire in another, and the Duke with other kept the maine battell. The Duke of Yorke with his people descended downe the hill in good order of array, and was suffered to passe on toward the maine battell: but when hee was in the plaine field betwéene his castle and the towne of Wakefielde, hée was environed on euery side, so that hee manfully fighting was within halfe an hower slaine, and his whole armie discomfited: and with him died of his trustie friends, his two bastard vncles, Sir Iohn, and Sir Hugh Mortimers, Sir Dane Hall, Sir Hugh Hastings, Sir Thomas Nevill sonne to the Earle of Salisbury, William and Thomas a Parre brethren, Lord Harington, Thomas Haringtons knight, Sir Henry Ratford knight, and other, to the number of 2200. whereof many were young gentlemen, heires of great parentage in the North parts: In this conflict was wounded and taken prisoner Richard Earle of Salisbury and was led by the Duke of of Somerset to the Castle of Pontfract, and hadde grant of life for a great ransome, but the common people of the countrey, who loued him not, take him out of the castle by violence and smote off his head. There was also taken Sir Richard Limbroke, Ralph Stanley, Iohn Harrow, Captaine Hanson, and diuers other.

The Lord Clifford perceiuing where the Earle of Rutland was conueied out of the fielde, by one of his fathers chaplaines, and schoolmaster to the same Earle, followed and ouertooke him and stabbed him to the heart with a dagger, as hee kneeled before him. The same Lord Clifford not satisfied herewith, came to the place where the dead corps of the Duke of Yorke lay, and caused his head to bée striken off, and set on it a crowne of paper, fixed it on a pole, and presented it to the Quéene, not lying far from the fielde. The Dukes head with the Earle of Salisburies head were set by ouer a gate of Yorke. This battell was fought in the South fielde of Wakefield by the faire stone bridge of nine arches, on the last of December.

The Earle of March so commonly called, but now after the death of his father, Duke of Yorke, lying at Glocester, was wonderfully amazed when the lamentable newes of these mishaps came to his vnderstanding: but being comforted by his friends, hee remoued to Shrewsbury and raised thereabout a puissant army to the number of 23000. ready to goe against the Quéene, & his fathers enemies. But when hee was setting forward, newes was brought him, that Iaspar Earle of Penbroke, & Iames Butler Earle of Ormond and Wiltshire, had assembled a great number of Welchmen and Irishmen, suddenly to take and surprise him, hée being therewith quickened retired backe, & met with his enemies in a faire plaine néere to Mortimers Crosse, betwéene Ludlow, and farre from Hereford east, on Candelmas day in the morning, at which time the sun (as some write) appeared to the Earle of March like three sunnes, and suddenly ioyned together in one, vpon which sight hée tooke such courage, that hée fiercely setting on his enemies put them to flight: and for this cause men imagined he gaue the sun in his full brightnesse for his badge or cognizance. Of his enemies were slaine to the number of three thousand eight hundred. The Earles of Penbroke and Wiltshire fled, but Owen Tewther (whom Leiland saith should be called Mereclicke) father to the sayd Earle of Penbroke, which Owen Tewther, hadde married (as was said) Katherine mother to King Henry the sixt, was there taken and beheaded, and afterward was buried in a chappel of gray Friers Church in Hereford. There were also taken and beheaded, Dauid Floid, Morgan ap Reuther, Sir Iohn Skidmore, and his two Sonnes, Thomas Griffith, Iohn Throkmorton, Thomas fitz Henry, and other. During this season, the Quéene encouraged with this late gained victory at Wakefield, with a great number of people out of the North, marched toward London, intending to recouer the company of the King her husband, and to vndoe all that had ben done in the last Parliament. These northerne people after they were once passed the riuer of Trent, spoiled & wasted the country afore them, Andrew Trollope grand captaine, and as it were leader of the battell, with a great armie of Scots, Welchmen, and other strangers, beside the northern men, destroyed the Townes of Granthum, Stamford, Peterborow, Huntington, Roiston, Pellebourne, and in a maner all the townes by the way vnto Saint Albons, sparing neyther Abbeis, Priories or Parish Churches, but bare alway Crosses, chalices, bookes, ornaments, and other things whatsoeuer was worth the carriage, as though they had bene Saracens, and no Christians. At length they came vnto to. Dunstaple, and so to Saint Albons, and hearing that the Dukes of Northfolke and Suffolke, and the Earles of Warwicke and Arundell, the Lords Bonuile and other, whom the Duke of Yorke hadde left to gouerne the King in his absence, hadde ioyned were Kings affent assembled a great host, by the incamped with the King néere to the Towne, Battell at Mortimers Crosse.

Second battell at S. Albons.

Those northern Lords and other that were with the Quéene made forward and entring into Saint Albons, meant to passe through the Towne, and so cope with their enemies, but finding a sort of archers ranged, néere to the great Crosse in the market place, to defend their passage, they were received with such a storme of arrowes, which came flying about their eares as thicke as haile, that they were quickly repulsed backe, and with losse driuen to retire into the West end of the Towne, where by a lane that leadeth Northwards vp to Saint Peters stréete, they made their entrie, and hadde there also a sharpe incounter, against certaine bands of the Kings people: but yet after great slaughter on both parts, they got through, and vpon the Heath, at the North end of the towne, called Barnard heath, toward a little Towne called Synedridge, in a place called No mans land, they hadde a farre greater conflict, with power of fiue thousand of the Kings armie, which gaue the onset so fiercely at the beginning, that the victory rested doubtfull a certaine time, till at the length, through the withdrawing many of the Kentishmen, with their Captaine Louelace, that was the vaward, King Henries part lost the fielde: the Lords fled, and the King went to Quéene Margaret, that was come with the Northern menne (as is afore sayde) and her Sonne Edward. The Earle of Warwicke went toward the Earle of March, that was comming toward London out of Wales. The Lord Bonuile would haue withdrawen him, but the King assured him to haue no bodily hurt: Neuertheless at the instance of the Quéene, the Duke of Excester, and the Earle of Deuonshire, hée was beheaded at Saint Albons, and with him Sir Thomas Kiriell of Kent. This battell was fought on Shrouetuesday, vz the 17. of Februarij, in the which battell was slaine 1916. persons, of whom no noble man is remembred, saue Sir John Gray, which was the same day made Knight, in the company of other twelue in the Towne of Colny. The same day Thomas Thorp Baron of the Exchequer was beheaded at Highgate by the commons of Kent.

Now after the noble men were fled, and a-lone, without any power of men to guarde his person, hee was counselled by a squire called Thomas Hoo, a man well seene in the lawes, to send some conuenient messenger to the Northerne Lords, aduertising them that hee would now gladly come vnto them (whom hee knewe to bee his friends, and hadde assembled themselues together for his seruice) to the end hee might remaine with them, as before hee hadde vnder the gouernement of the Southerne Lords. According to this aduice the King appointed the same Squier to beare the message, who first went and declared the same vnto the Earle of Northumberland and returning backe to the King, vz ought certaine Lords with him, who conueyed the King first into the Lord Cliffords tent, that stoode next to the place where the Kings people hadde incamped. This done, they brought the Quene and her sonne Prince Edward vnto his presence, whom he ioyfully receiued, imbracing and kissing them in most louing wise, and yelding hartie thankes to almighty God, whome it hadde pleased to strengthen the forces of the Northerne men, to restore his derely beloued sonne againe to his possession. The Quene caused the King to dubbe her sonne Prince Edward Knight, with thirty other persons, which the day before had fought on her partie.

Knights dubbed at S. Albons.

This done, they went to the Abbey, where of the Abbot and the monks they were receiued with hymnes and songs, and so brought to the high altar, and after to the Chaire, and so to the Chamber, in which the King was wont to lodge. The Abbot made sute, that order might be taken to refreine the Northern menne from spoiling the Towne, and proclamation was forwith made to that effect, but it auailed not, for they maintained that the people of all things was graunted them by couenant, after they were once passed the riuer of Trent: and so not regarding any proclamation, they spared nothing that they could lay hands on, if the same were meet for them to carry away.

The Quéne hauing thus got the victorie, sent to the Maior of London, commanding him without delay, to send certaine carts laden with Lenten stuffe, for the refreshing of her armie, which the Maior incontinent granted, caused carts to be laden, and would haue sent them forward, but the commons of the Citie would not suffer them to passe, but stayed them at Criple gate: during which controuersie, diuers of the Northern horsemenne robbed in the suburbs of the Citie, and would haue entred at Criple gate, but they were pulled by the commoners, and three of them slaine, whereupon the Maior sent the Recorder to Barnet to the Kings Councell, there to exercise the matter, and the Duches of Bedford, the Lady Scales, with diuers Fathers of the spiritualtie went to the Quéne to assuage her displeasure, conceiued against the City. The Quéne therefore at their humble request by aduice of her Councell, appointed certaine Lords and knights, with 400. tall persons, to ride to the Citie, and there to view and see the demeanor of the people, and diuers Aldermen were appointed to méete them at Barnet, and to conuey them to London, but all these deuises were shortly altered into another forme, because true report came, not only to the Quéne, but also to the citie, that the Earle of March, hauing vanquished the Earles of Penbroke and Wiltshire, had met with the Earle of Warwicke, after the last battell at Saint Albons, at Chippingnorton by Cotelwolde, and that they with both their powers were comming towards London. The Quéne therefore, hauing little trust in Esser, and lesse in them of Kent, but least of all in the Londoners, with her husband and sonne, departed from Saint Albons into the North countrey, where their refuge onely consisted.

The Duches of Yorke, séeing her husband and sonne slaine, and not knowing what should succéede of her eldest sonne, sent her two youngest sonnes George and Richard, ouer Sea to the City of Utrich in Almaine, where they were of Phillip Duke of Burgoigne well receiued, and so remained there till their brother got the Crowne.

The Earles of March and Warwike, hauing knowledge that the King and Quéene were departed from S. Albons, rode straight to London, entring the Citie with a great number of men of warre, the first week of Kent, vz the eight and twentieth of February, where he was ioyfully receiued, whose comming thither was no sooner knowne, but that the people resorted to him out of Kent, Esser, and other parts in great numbers to ayde, and assist this lucky Prince in whom the hope of all their ioy consisted.

This prudent Prince minding to take time when time serued, called a great Councell both of the Lords spirituall and temporall, and to them declared the title and right that he hadde to the Crowne, rehearsing also the Articles concluded betwixt King Henry and his Father by their writings signed and sealed, and also confirmed by act of Parliament. &c. Which after the Lords hadde considered, they determined, that because King Henry was insufficient of himselfe to rule the Realme, hee should bee depriued of all Kingly honour and Soueraigntie, and incontinently was Edward Earle of March sonne and heire to the Duke of Yorke (by the Lords of that Councell assembled) named and elected for King and Gouernour of the Realme. On which day being Sunday, and the second day day of March, the people of the Earles part being in their musters in Saint Johns field, and a great number of the substantiall Cittizens there assembled to behold their order, suddenly the Lord Fauconbridge, which tooke the musters, wisely declared to the people, certaine Articles, and points that King Henry had offended in, and then it was demanded of them, whether the said Henry were worthy to raigne still: but the people cryed, Nay, nay. Then was it asked, if they would haue the Earle of March to be their King, and they said Yea, yea: then certaine Captaines were sent to the Earle of March at Bainards Castle, who told him that the people had chosen him King, whereof hee thanked God and them, and by the aduice of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Exceter, and the Earle of Warwick with others, he tok it vpon him. Many welthy Cittizens of London, not altogether liking of his doing, conueyed themselues out of the Citty, amongst the which were Philip Malpas, Alderman of London, Thomas Vaghan Esquire, Maister William Atclife, with many other, who fearing the Quenes comming to London, shipped themselues in a Shippe of Antwerp, purposing to haue sayled thither: but by the way they were taken by a French Ship, named the Colmayne, and at length deliuered for great ransome.

Cittizens of London fled.

Edward Earle of March tooke on him the kingdome.

Edward, Earle of March, being elected, as is aboue said, on the next morow went in procession at Pauls, and offered there, and after Te Deum being song, hee was with great royalty conueyed to Westminster, and there in the Hall set in the Kings seate, with Saint Edwards Scepter in his hand, and then asked of the people if they would haue him King, and they cryed Yea, yea. Then after certaine homages by him receiued, hee was with procession conueyed to the Abbey there, and set in the Quire as King, while Te Deum was singing: that done, hée offered at Saint Edwards shrine, and then returned by water to Saint Pauls, and was there lodged within the Bishops Palace. Thus tooke he possession of the Realme, vpon a Tuesday, being the fourth of March, and was proclaimed King of England, by the name of Edward the fourth, when King Henry had raigne 38. yeres, 8. moneths and odde daies.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING EDVVARD THE FOVRTH.

An. reg. 1. Iohn Rouse.

EDVVARD Earle of March, borne at Roane, sonne and heyre to Richard, Duke of Yorke, about the age of 18. yéeres, began his raigne the 4th day of March, by the name of Edward the 4th, in the yeere 1460. after the account of the Church of England: he was a man of Noble courage, and great wit: but in his time was much trouble, and vnquietnesse in the Realme, as shall be shewed.

Walter Walker beheaded for a word speaking.

The 12. of March, Walter Walker, a Grocer of Cheape in London, for words spoken touching the Title of King Edward, when hee was proclaimed, was suddenly apprehended, condemned and beheaded in Smithfield. This Grocer is he, whom Maister Hall mistaketh to be Burdet, of whom yee shall finde in the 17. yere of this Kings raigne.

The same 12. day of March, in the afternoone, King Edward hauing prepared a great army, being accompanyed with the Duke of Norfolke, the Lord Fauconbridge, the Lord Fitzwalter, Sir John Wenlocke, John Stafford, Henry Ratlife of Framlingham, Roger Vvolfestone and others, with great triumph, rode throgow the Citty of London to Bishops gate, and so tooke his iourney toward the North, where betweene Shirburne in Elmet, and Todcaster, all the North part met him, and on Palme Sunday the 29. of March, fought a great battell betweene Towton and Sartou, in which were slaine, Henry Percy, Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Shrewsbury, the Earle of Deuenshire, John, Lord Clifford, the Lord Beaumond, Iohn, Lord Neuill, the Lord Vvillowghby, Leo, Lord Wells, the Lord Roos, the Lord Scales, the Lord Grey, Reynolph, Lord Dacres, the Lord Fitzhugh, the Lord Molineux, Lord, Henry Buckingham: Knights, two Bastard sonnes of Henry Holland, Duke of Exceter, Richard Percy, John Heyron, Gerueyes Clifton, Edmond Hamis, Thomas Crakenthorpe, John Crakenthorpe, Vvilliam Harill, John Ormonde, Andrew Trolope, Roger Mollyn, Radulph Pigote, Henry Norbohew, Dauid Trolope, John Burton, Captaine of Yorke, and many other knights, and Squires, whose names were not then noted. The whole number slaine, were accounted by some to be 33000. but by other some 35091. many of these were first buried in fiue pits, yet appearing halfe a mile off by North-Sarton Church in the field, where Maister Burgare caused them to be brought from thence, and to be buryed in the Church-yard of Sar-

This field was as much in Sarton Parish as in Towton, yet it bare the name of Towton.

King Henry fled into Scotland.

The Duke of Exceter, the Duke of Somerset, the Lord Roos, the Lord Hungerford and many other fled to Yorke, to King Henry, and then they with the King, Queene and Prince, fled toward Scotland to Barwicke, and so to Edenborough.

King Edward went to Yorke, where he was with all solemnity received, there he caused the heads of his father and the Earle of Salisbury, with other his friends to be taken downe, and buried with their bodies. And then caused Thomas Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, the Earle of Wilt-shire was beheaded at Newcastle. And then King Edward went to Durham, and when he had quieted the Countrey, returned Southward. The Lord Fitz Walter was drowned at Fetherbridge, Sir Thomas Fulford was beheaded at Yerham, &c.

The Towne of Barwicke was deliuered to the Scots by King Henry the first on Saint Markes day, and the 15. of June, the King of Scots came thither.

King Edward crowned at Westminster.

The 26. of June, the Maior of London, with the Aldermen in Scarlet, and the commons in greene, brought King Edward from Lambeth to the Tower of London, where hee made 28. Knights, and on the morrow, he dubbed foure mo, and on the 28. of June, hee was crowned at Westminster with great solemnitie of Bishops, and other Temporall Lords,

And on the morrow after, the King was crowned againe in Westminster Abbey, in the worship of God and S. Peter: and on the next morrow, hee went crowned in Pauls Church in London, in the honor of God and Saint Paul, and there an Angell came downe and cersed him, at which time was so great a multitude of people in Paris as euer was seene in any daies. And soone after his Coronation, the King made his brother George Plantagenet, Duke of Clarence, and his brother Richard Duke of Gloucester: Humfrey Stafford Esquire, Lord Stafford of Southwick: Sir William Herbert, Lord Herbert, and after Earle of Penbroke: and the said Lord Stafford, Earle of Deuonshire. Also this hee made Edmond Grey Lord of Ruthen, William Neuil, Lord Fauconbridge, Earle of Kent: Henry, Lord Bourcher, Earle of Esser: John Stafford, Lord of Buckingham, Earle of Wiltshire: Sir Thomas Blunt, Knight, Lord of Mountioy: Sir John Howard, Lord Howard: William Hastings, Lord Hastings, and after that, great Chamberlaine: Richard Wooduile Lord Riuers: John Denham Esquire, Lord Denham, &c. To Henry, Lord Bourcher, before spoken of, Richard, Duke of Yorke long before this time had giuen his sister Elizabeth in marriage of whom he begat foure sonnes, William, Thomas, John and Henry, the which William being a man of great inuentrie, wit, and prouidence, in graue and weighty matters, married the lady Anne Wooduile, descended of high parentage, whose mother Iaquet was Daughter to Peter of Luxenburgh, Earle of Saint Paul, by the which Anne, hee had Henry, Earle of Esser, one Daughter named Cicilie, married to Vvalter, lord Ferrers of Chartley, and another called Isabell, which dyed vnmarried. John Markham was made Lord chiefe Iustice, and Robert Stillington, keeper of the priuy Seale.

States created.

Ich. Markham chiefe Iustice.

John Dauy had his hand striken off at the Standard in Cheape, because hee had smitten a man before the Kings Iudges at Westminster, wherefore the King commanded him to haue the law, in example to others.

Record. One had his hand striken off in Cheap.

This peere in the Parnell season, King Edward rode to Canterbury, and to Sandwich, and so along by the Sea-Coast to Hampton, and from thence into the Marches of Wales, and to Bristow, where he was most royally received, thus he progressed about the land to vnderstand the estate thereof. 1462. An. reg. 2.

The 4. of November, beganne a Parliament at Westminster, wherein King Henry, his Queene, and his sonne, were dis-herited of the Crowne: Henry, Duke of Exceter, Henry, Duke of Somerset, Thomas, Earke of Deuonshire, &c. To the number of 140. were attainted and dis-herited, shortly the Earle of Oxford and Awbrey his sonne, Sir Thomas Tudenham, Knight, William Tirrill, and John Mongomery Esquire, were detect, and at seuerall times beheaded at the Tower-hill, and after that many other.

The 37. of March, King Edward went Northward so farre as Stamford, where he was enformed, that King Henrie had procured the Frenchmen and Scots to enter this land, in resisting whereof K. Edward sent his priuy seale throw out England to moue them to giue a certain summe of money, which they granted liberally. The Lord Fauconbridge, Earle of Kent, was appointed to keep the seas with the L. Audeley, Lord Clinton, Sir John Howard, Sir Richard Walgraue, and other, to the number of 10000. which landed in Britaine, and won the Towne of Conquet, with the Ile of Reth, &c.

In Michaelmas Tearme, King Edward sate in the kings bench three daies together, in open Court, to vnderstand how his lawes were executed.

Queene Margaret, wife to Henry the sixth, landed in the North, where hauing but small succour and euill fortune, she was forced to take the sea againe, and by tempest of weather was driuen to Barwicke where she landed, but lost her ships and goods.

King Edward beganne his iourney toward Scotland, on the feast day of Saint Andrew the Apostle, accompanied of Dukes, Earles, Barons and knights as followeth: the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, the Earles of Arundell, Shrewsbury, Worcester, Kent, Westmerland and

Shortly after, Queene Margaret obtained a great power of Scots, and other her friends, and so bringing her husband with her, and leauing her sonne called Prince Edward, in the Towne of Barwicke, entred Northumberland, take the Castle of Bamburgh, and stuffed it with Scottishmen, and made theroff Captaine Sir Ralph Grey, and came forward toward the Bishoprieke of Durham. Whereof when the Duke of Somerset vnderstood, hee without delay, reuolted from King Edward, and fled to King Henry, to likewise did Sir Ralph Percy, and many other of the Kings friends, but many followed King Henry, in hope to get spoyle, for his armie spent and spoiled Townes wheresoeuer they came. Parliament.

About midsommer, the Scots, with many French and Englishmen layd siege to the Castle of Norham, but were forced to leaue it as they found it. The Earle of Warwicke with the Towne of Barwicke, where hee made fiue Bannerets, and 22. Knights, and went into Scotland, where he burnt Lawghmaban, Jedworth and Galowey, and many other Townes, and returned to Barwicke.

This peere a quarter of Wheat was sold for two shillings at London, Barley for two and twentie pence, Peasle for three shillings foure pence, and Oats for 14 pence, and in the countrey of Norfolke, a quarter of Wheate was sold for 20. pence: Mault for 20 pence, Barley and Oats for 12. pence. 1464.

In the moneth of Aprill, King Edward made great preparation against King Henry, and on Saint Markes day, Ralph Percy, Lord Hungerford, with a great power, purposing to haue distressed Sir John Neuill, Lord Mountacute, was himselfe taine with many other. An. reg. 4. Battell at Yerham.

The 15. of May, King Henries power being at Yerham, the Lord Mountacute, with a power came thither, and inclosed them round about bout. There were taken and slaine many Lords that were with King Henry, but his owne life was sed foure dates before into Lancashire, where he and others lived in Caues full hardly, vnknowne more then a yere. On Trinity Sunday, King Edward made the Lord Mountacute Earle of Northumberland, and warden of the Marches. The Earles of Warwicke and Northumberland, tooke Bamburgh Castle, and Sir Ralph Grey being taken in Bamburgh, for that he had sworne to be true to King Henry, was condemned, and had iudgement giuen vpon him by the Earle of Worcester, high Constable of England, as followeth.

Iudgement on Sir Ralph Grey.

Sir Ralph Grey, for thy treason, the King had ordained that thou shouldest haue had thy spurres taken off by the hard heeles, by the hand of the Maister Cooke, who is here ready to doe as was promised thee, at the time that thee twise off thy spurres, and said to thee, as is accustomed: That and thou be not true to thy Soueraigne Lord, hee shall smite off thy spurs with his knife, hard by the heeles, and so shewed him the Maister Cooke, ready to doe his office with his apron and his knife. Moreouer, thou maiest see, the Kings of Armes, and Heralds, and thine owne proper Coat of Armes, which they should teare off thy body, and so shouldest thou as well be disgraded of thy worship, Nobles and Armes, as of thy order of Knight-hood. Also heere is another Coate of thine Armes reuersed, the which thou shouldest haue worne on thy body, going to thy death-wards, for that belonged to thee after the Law: notwithstanding the disgrading of knight-hood, and of thine Armes and Nobles, the King pardoneth that, for thy Noble Grand-father, who suffered trouble for the Kings most Noble predecessours. Now Sir Ralph Grey, this shall be thy penance: thou shalt goe on thy feete vnto the Tolwnes end, and there thou shalt be laid downe and drawne to a scaffold made for thee, and thou shalt haue thy head smitten off, thy body to be buryed in the Friers, thy head, where the Kings pleasure shall be. This iudgement was pronounced at Doncaster, against the said Ralph Grey, for rebelling, and keeping of the Castle of Bamburgh, against King Edward.

The order of disgracing of a Knight.

Neuill Earle of Northumberland, and Herbert, Earle of Penbroke.

After this, King Edward returned to Yorke, where in despight of the Earle of Northumberland, which then kept himselfe in the Realme of Scotland, he created Sir John Neuill, Lord Mountacute, Earle of Northumberland, and in reproofe of Iasper, Earle of Penbroke, hee created William, Lord Herbert, Earle of Penbroke: but after when the Earle of Northumberland was reconciled to his fauour, hee restored him to his possessions, name and dignity, and preferred the Lord Mountacute to the Title of Marquesse Mountacute, so that in degree, he was aboue his brother, the Earle of Warwicke, but in power and possessions farre vnder him.

The Earle of Warwicke was sent ouer into France, to demand the Lady Bona, daughter to Lewis, Duke of Sauoy, and sister to the Lady Carlot, then Queene of France, which Bona was then in the French Court. The Earle of Warwicke comming to the French King, as then being at Towers, was of him honorably receiued, and courteously entertained: his message was so well liked for the aduancement of the Lady Bona, that her sister, Queene Carlot, obtained both the good will of the King her husband, and also of her sister, the aforesaid Lady, so that the matrimony on that side, was clearely assented to, and the Earle of Dampmartine appointed with others to saple into England, for the full finishing of the same: but in the meane while, on the first of May, King Edward tooke to wife, Elizabeth, daughter to Iaquet, Duchesse of Bedford, sister to the Earle of S. Paul, late wife to Sir John Grey, slaine at Saint Albons field on King Henries part, which marriage was kept secret almost halfe a yeere.

King Edward married.

King Edward tooke the Chancelorship from the Bishop of Excester, brother to the Earle of Warwicke, and gaue it to the Bishop of Bathe.

In the moneth of May, the Duke of Somerset, the Lord Roos, the Lord Molyns, Talbois Earle of Eyme, Sir Philip Wentworth, Sir Thomas Finderne, gathered an hoste in the North-countrey, Sir Iohn Neuill, Earle of Northumberland, with 10000. men came vpon them, whom the commons forsaking, their Captaines were taken and beheaded. King Edward fearing the Lord Mountacute, whom he had of late made Earle of Northumberland, he caused the men of the Countrey to desire the rightfull heyre, Percy, sonne to Henry, that was slaine at Yorke field: and so Percy was restored, and Mountacute was made a Marquesse, and his sonne, Duke of Bedford, which should wed the kings eldest daughter, and so by possibility should be King of England, thus was hee fed with faire words, but nothing performed. About Michaelmas, the King held a Councell at Reding, where the Queene was shewed openly, and receiued as Queene. After this wedding knowne, the Earle of Warwick and King Edward were neuer friends.

Duke of Somerset and others beheaded.

Earle of Northumberland made Marquesse Mountacute.

The Minster of Yorke, the Steeple of Chiltern Church in Notwich, part of the Priory of Chiltern-Church in London, the Steeple of Saint Mary Spittle at London, with the Cloyster, were burnt this yeere.

Minster of Yorke burned.

This yere the 22. of January, a Parliament began at Westminster, wherein it was enacted, that no merchandize comming out of Flanders, or out of any Land of the Duke of Burgoyne, should be sold within any ground of England. Also King Edward caused a new coyne to be made, whereby hee gained much, for hee made of an old noble a royall, which he commanded to goe for 10.s. neuertheless, to the same royall was put 8.d. of alay, and so wriged the more by 8.d. being smitten with a new stampe: he likewise made halfe angells of 5.s. and farthings of 2.s. 6.d. angelets of 6.s. 8.d.

8.d. and halfe angells, 3.s. 4.d. hee made siluer monies, of 3.d. a groat, and so of other coynes after that rate, to the great harme of the commons. I finde by record, that William, Lord Hastings, the Kings Chamberlaine was made Master of the Kings Mints, of Monies of gold or siluer in the Tower of London, his Realme of England, Territary of Ireland, and Towne of Caleis, with the Marches of the same: the which Lord Hastings vndertooke to make the same monies vnder forme following, to wit, of gold, a piece for 8. shillings 4. pence sterling which should be called a noble of gold, of the which there should be 50. such pieces in the pound weight of the Tower, another piece of gold 4. shillings 2. pence of sterlings, and to be of them 100. such pieces in the pound: and a third piece of gold weighing the fourth part of the first, for two shillings one peny sterlings, and 200. such pieces in the pound, and euery pound weight of the said Tower, to be worth 20. pound, 16. shillings 8. pence of sterlings, the which should be 23. Carets, 3. graines, and halfe fine, &c. And for siluer 37. shillings 6. pence of sterlings, the piece of foure pence to be 112. groates, and 2. pence in the pound weight, &c. Thus much out of the Record.

Sheep transported ouer Sea.

King Edward concluded an amity and league with King Henry of Castill, and Iohn, King of Aragon, at the concluding whereof, hee procured licence for certaine Cotelswold sheepe to be transported into the countrey of Spaine, which haue there since mightily increased and multiplyed to the Spainsh profit, as it is said: but true it it, that long ere this were sheepe in Spaine, as may appeare by a pattent of King Henry the second: the 31. of his raigne, granted to the Weauers of London, that if any cloth were found to be made of Spanish wooll, mixed with English wooll, the Maior of London should see it burnt.

Besides this, to haue amity with his next neighbour, the King of Scots, hee winked at the losse of Barwicke, and was contented to take a truce for 15. yeeres.

1568. The 11. of February, Queene Elizabeth was deliuered at Westminster of a daughter, also named Elizabeth, who was long after married to King Henry the 7th whose Christning was done in the Abbey with the most solemnity that might be, and more, because the King was assured by his Phisician, that the Queene was conceiued with a prince, which prooued otherwise as yee haue heard.

An. reg. 6. Hungerford and Courtney executed.

This yere was the Lord Hungerford, Sir Thomas Hungerford knight, sonne to the Lord Hungerford, and Henry Courtney of right, Earle of Deuonshire beheaded at Salisbury. The Lord Stafford of Southwike procured the said Courteyes death, to be made Earle of Deuonshire, as indeed he was shortly after.

1467. King Edward, through the refusall of the French Kings sister in law (as yee haue heard) wan him enemies in France, whereforce in other places he procured him friends, but those friends had stand him in small stead, if Fortune had not holpen him to another, euen at his elbow. This was Charles, Earle of Carrolois, sonne and heyre apparant vnto Philip, Duke of Burgoygne, which Charles being then a widower, was counselled to be a futor vnto King Edward, to haue in marriage the Lady Margaret, sister to the same King, a Lady of excellent beauty, and thought not vnworthy to match with the greatest Prince in the world.

An. reg. 7.

Anthony, the Bastard of Burgoyne, called the Earle of the Roch, brother to the said Earle Carroloys, a man of great wit, corrage, and valiancy, was appointed by his father, Duke Philip, to goe into England in embassage about this ate, who being furnished for his estate, hauing in his company Gentlemen, and other expert in all feats of chiualry, and martiall prowesse, to the number of 400. Horses, tooke ship, and arriued in England, where hee was of the King and Nobles honourably receiued. His message being declared, was forfully heard of the King, the which by that affinity saw how they might be assured of a buckler against the French: the King therefore granted

Knights of the Bathe.

In the Ascension day, King Edward made 48. Knights of the Bathe within the Tower of London, amongst the which, was of that company Sir Thomas Cooke, Sir Mathew Philip, and Ralph Ioceline, and Sir Henry Vauer, Citizens of London made Knights: and vpon the 26. of May, Queene Elizabeth was crowned at Westminster with a great solemnity: her Father also was created Earle Riuers, and made high Constable of England: her brother, Lord Anthony, was married to the sole heyre of Thomas, Lord Scales, Sir Thomas Grey, sonne to Sir Iohn Grey, the Queenes first husband, was created Marques Dorset, and married to Cicely, heire to the Lord Bonuile.

Queene Elizabeth crowned.

King Henry taken.

King Henry was taken in Clitherwood, beside Bungerly Hyppingstons in Lancashire, by Thomas Talbot, sonne and heyre to Sir Edward Talbot of Bathall, and Iohn Talbot his cousin of Colebye, which deceiued him being at his dinner at Wadington Hall, and brought him towards London with his legges bound to the stirrops, where he was met by the Earle of Warwicke, and arrested at Elsydon, and forthwith his gilt spurres were taken from his feete: Doctor Manning, Deane of Windsor, Doctor Bedle, and young Ellerton, being in his company, with their feete bound vnder the horse bellies were brought through the City to the Tower of London, where the King was kept long time.

Long piked shoes forbid.

It was proclaimed throughout England, that the beakes, or pikes of shoone, or boots, should not passe two inches, vpon paine of curling by the Clergy, and forfeiting 20.s. to be payd, one noble to the King, another to the Cotwainers of London, and the third to the Chamber of London. And for other Cities and Townes the like order was taken. Before this time, and since the yere of our Lord, 1382. the pikes of shoes and boots were of such length, that they were faine to be tyed vp to their knees with chaines of siluer, gilt, or at the least with like laces.

granted to the Baſtards requeſt, and the ſaid Baſtard openly in the Kings great Chamber, contracted the Lady Margaret, for and in the name of his brother, the Earle of Charoloys.

Parliament at Weſtminſter. The third of June, began a Parliament at Weſtminſter, wherein was returned to the Kings hands, all manner of gifts that had beene given from the firſt day, hee tooke poſſeſſion of the Realme, to that time, except certaine things then excepted, this patterit is dated in the 5th yeere of this Edward.

Lib. Eriſwicke. Alſo this yeere in diuers places of England many men were arreſted, and treaſon furniſhed againſt them, where through many of them were put to death, and the other eſcaped for great ſummes of money: amongſt the which, Sir T. Cooke, Sir Iohn Plumer, Knights, Humfrey Heyford, and other Aldermen of London were arreſted, and charged with treaſon, whereof they were acquite, but they loſt all their goods to the King, to the value of 4000. markes, or more, as ſome haue written: and for example, the forenamed Sir Thomas Cooke, late Maior of London, was by one named Hawkins, appeached of treaſon, for the which he was committed to the Tower of London, his place in London ſeiſed by the Lord Riuers, and his Lady and ſeruants clearely put out thereof. The cauſe was this: the forenamed Hawkins, came vpon a ſeaſon vnto the ſaid Sir Thomas, requeſting to lend him 1000. markes vpon good ſurety, whereunpon hee anſwered, that hee would firſt know for whom it ſhould be, and for what intent: at length vnderſtanding it ſhould be for the vſe of Queene Margaret, hee anſwered, he had no current wares wherof any thrift might be made without too much loſſe, and therefore required Hawkins to moue him no further, for hee intended not to deale withall, yet the ſaid Hawkins required but one hundred pound at laſt, and went without it, or the value of one penny, and neuer came againe to moue him, which ſo reſted two or three yeeres after, till the ſaid Hawkins was caſt in the Tower, and at length brought to the bake, called the Duke of Cyrceſters daughter (becauſe ſhee was the deuiſer of that torture) by meanes of which paine, hee ſhewed many things, among the which, the motion he had made to Sir Thomas Cooke was one, by meanes whereof, Sir Thomas Cooke was troubled as you haue heard, and one Iury: by meanes of Sir Iohn Fogge, indited him of treaſon: after which, an Oyer determiner was kept in the Guild-hall, in which ſate with the Maior, the Duke of Clarence, the Earle of Warwicke, the Lord Riuers, Sir Iohn Fogge with other of the Kings Councell, to the which place, the ſaid Sir Thomas was brought, and there arreigned vpon life and death, whereof hee was acquited of the ſaid indictement, and ſent to the Counter in Breadſtreet, and from thence to the Kings Bench: being acquited, his wife got againe poſſeſſion of his Houſe, the which ſhee found in an euill plight: for the ſeruants to Sir Iohn Fogge, and the Lord Riuers, had made hauocke of what they liſted. Alſo at his place of Giddy-hall in Eſſex, another ſort had deſtroyed the Deere in his Parke, his Conies and fiſh, and ſpared not halfe, pewter, bedding, and all what they might carry: for the which might neuer one penny be gotten in recompence, nor Sir Thomas Cooke be deliuered, till hee had payed 8000. to the King, and 800. pound to the Queene, and for that Sir Iohn Markham, Knight, chiefe Iuſtice of the pleas, determined ſomewhat againſt the Kings pleaſure (that the offence done by Sir Thomas Cook was no treaſon, but miſpriſion, the which was no deſert of death, but to be fined at the Kings pleaſure) the Lord Riuers and the Dutcheſs of Bedford his wife, procured that hee loſt his Office afterward in the twelfth yeere of Edward the fourth.

Lord chiefe Iuſtice loſt his Office for doing iuſtice.

The marriage afozeſaid concluded, the Baſtard of Burgoyne challenged the Lord Scales, brother to the Queene, to fight with him, both on Hoyſe-backe and on foote: which challenge the Lord Scales gladly accepted, the King cauſing liſts to be prepared in Well Smithfield of London for theſe Champions, the length of 120. Tailers yards, and tenne foote: and in breadth eighty yards and ten foote, double barred, fiue foote betweene the barres, the Timber and worke-manſhip whereof coſt two hundred marks, beſides faire and coſtly galeries for the Ladies and other. At the which martiall enterpriſe, King Edward himſelfe with his Nobility was preſent. The firſt day being the Thurſday next after Corpus Chriſti day, they came together with ſharpe Speares, and departed with equall honour. The next day they tinted on Hoyſe-backe, the Lord Scales Hoyſe had on his chafron a long ſharpe pike of ſteele, and as the two Champions coaped together, the ſame Hoyſe thruſt his pike into the noſtrills of the Baſtards Hoyſe, ſo that for very paine, hee mounted ſo high, that he fell on the one ſide with his maſter, and the Lord Scales rode about him with his ſword drawne in his hand, till the King commanded the Marſhall to helpe vp the Baſtard, who openly ſaid, I cannot holde mee by the clouds; for though my Hoyſe faile mee, I will not faile my incounter-companion, but the King would not ſuffer them to doe any more that day. The next morrow, the two Noble men came into the field on foote, with two polaxes, and fought valiantly, but at the laſt, the point of the poll-axe of the Lord Scales, happened to enter into the ſight of the Baſtards helme, and by fine force, might haue plucked him on his knees: but the King ſuddenly caſt downe his warder, and then the Marſhall ſeuered them. The Baſtard not content with this chance, required the King of Iuſtice, that hee might performe his enterprize: the Lord Scales refuſed not: but the King calling to him the Conſtable and the Marſhall, with the Officers at Armes, after conſultation had, it was declared for a ſentence definitiue, by the Duke of Clarence then Conſtable of England, and the Duke of Norfolke then Marſhall, that if hee would goe forward with his attempted chalenge, hee muſt by the law of armes, be deliuered to his aduerſary, in the ſame ſtate and like condition, as he ſtood when hee was taken from him. The Baſtard hearing this iudgement, doubted the ſequele of the matter, and ſo relinquiſhed his chalenge. Other chalenges were done, and baliantly atchieued by Engliſh-men, which I paſſe ouer. Shortly after came ſorowfull tydings to the Baſtard, that his Father, Duke Philip, was dead, and therevpon taking his leaue of King Edward, and his ſiſter, the new Dutcheſſe of Burgoyne liberally rewarded, returned to his brother, the new Duke. This yeere, diuers perſons being common Iurors, ſuch as at Aſſiſes, were ſworne for rewards, or fauour of parties, were iudged to ride from Newgate, to the Pillory in Cornehill, with writers of paper on their heads, and then againe to Newgate: and this iudgement was giuen by the Maior of London.

Lady Margarete the Kings ſiſter, marries to the Duke of Burgoyne.

The 18. of June, Margaret, ſiſter to King Edward the fourth, begunne her iourney from the Mandeuile in London, toward her marriage with Charles, Duke of Burgoyngne: firſt ſhee offered in the Church of Saint Paul, and then rode through the Citty, the Earle of Warwicke riding before her, with Earles and Barons a great number, the Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, with other Ladies and Gentle-women in great number. And after entry into Cheape, the Maior of London and his brethren the Aldermen, preſented her with a paire of rich Baſons, and in them an hundred pound in gold, and that night ſhe lodged in the Abbey of Stratford, where the King then lay: from thence ſhe tooke her iourney to Canterbury. The King riding after to ſee her ſhipping, on the firſt of July, ſhee tooke the Sea at Margate, and there tooke leaue of the King her brother, and departed. There returned backe againe with the King, the Duke of Clarence, the Duke of Glocester, the Earles of Warwicke, Shrewſbury, and Northumberland. And there abode with her in the Ship, the Lord Scales, the L. Dacres her Chamberlaine, Sir Iohn Woodvile, Sir Iohn Howard, and many other famous Knights and Eſquires: ſhee was ſhipped in the new Ellen of London, and in her Nauy, the Iohn of Newcaſtle, the Mary of Saliſbury, and many other royall ſhips, and on the morrow landed at Sluce in Flanders, and as ſoone as her ſhip, and company of ſhips were entred into the Hauen, there receiued her, Sir Simon de Lelein, and the water-Baily, in diuers boats and barkes apparelled ready for her landing. The firſt eſtate that received her, was the Biſhop of Vtright well accompanied, and the Counteſſe of Shoyne, Baſtard daughter to Duke Philip, of Burgoyngne, and with her many Ladies and Gentle-women, and ſo proceeding in at the gate of the Towne, the ſame Towne was preſented to her, ſhe to be Soueraigne Lady thereof: alſo they gaue her twelue marks of Gold Troy-weyght, the which was 200. pound of Engliſh mony, and ſo ſhee proceeded throw the Towne to her lodging, euery houſholder ſtanding in the ſtreet with a Torch in his hand burning.

On the morrow, the old Dutcheſſe of Burgoigne came to her, accompanyed with many great eſtates. On the third of July, came the Duke of Burgoyngne to Sluce, with 20. perſons ſeructly, and was there openly affianced to the Lady Margaret, by the Biſhop of Saliſbury, and the Lord Scales, in preſence of the Lord Dacre, the Dutcheſſe of Norfolke, the Lady Scales, and all the Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlewomen enuironing the chamber.

On 8. of July, being Saturday, by the Duke of Burgoygnes appointment, the Lady Margaret removed by water to the Dame. And on the Sunday in the morning, betwixt 5. and 6. of the clock, the marriage was ſolemnized betwixt them, by the Biſhops of Saliſbury, and of Turney, there being preſent the old Dutcheſſe of Burgoign, the Lord Scales, the Lord Dacre, with the Knights, Eſquires, Ladies and Gentlewomen that came out of England: the great tryumphs, feaſtings, ſhewes of pageant, with other ſtrange deuices and inckings, were ſuch as I haue not read the like, and would be ouer long in this place to ſet downe.

In the end of Auguſt, the Caſtle of Harlow was wonne by aſſault of the Lord Herbert, the which Caſtle was one of the ſtrongeſt holds in Wales.

Harlow Caſtle wonne.

This yeere, many murmurous tales ranne in the City, betwixt the Earle of Warwicke, and the Queenes blood, the which Earle was euer had in great fauour of the commons of this Land, by reaſon of the orderly houſhold which hee daily kept in all Countries where euer he ſoiourned, or lay: and when hee came to London, he held ſuch an houſe, that fire Oren his houſe were eaten at a breakefaſt, and euery Tauerne was full of his meate, for who that had any acquaintance in that houſe, he ſhould haue had as much ſodden and roſt, as he might carry vpon a long dagger.

King Edward taken prisoner.

The 29. of September, Humfrey Neuill, Knight, and Charles his brother were taken by the Earle of Warwicke, and beheaded at Yorke, King Edward being present. In the moneth of March, the Lord Willoughby, Richard, Lord Wells, Sir Robert, his sonne, Sir Thomas Delaband, Sir T. Dimocke, the Kings Champion, o2aue out of Lincolnshire, Sir Thomas Burgh, a Knight of the Kings house, pulled downe his place, and tooke all his goods and cattell, and with 30000. of the commons cryed King Henry. King Edward gaue Lord Wells his pardon, and sent for him, and hauing him in custody, commanded him vpon paine of death, to cause the Lincolnshire men to lay downe their holt, and so he wrote, but all in vaine: whereupon the Lord Wells his head was cut off. King Edward dispersed the Lincolnshiremen, by vertue of his ordinance, and slew many of them; Sir Robert Wells, Sir Thomas Delaband, and Sir Thomas Dimocke were taken and beheaded beside Stamford, the 13. of March: and the 19. day, the Lord Willoughby was beheaded at Pontefret.

The Duke of Clarence, and the Earle of Warwicke, fled into France, where they made a marriage betwixt Prince Edward, Sonne to King Henry the first, and one of the Earle of Warwickes daughters. At this marriage was concluded, that King Henry should raigne againe, and Prince Edward after, and for lacke of their heyres, George, Duke of Clarence, and his heyres, &c.

George, Duke of Clarence, and the Earle of Warwicke fled into France.

The 13. day of September, George, Duke of Clarence, Iasper, Earle of Penbroke, Richard, Earle of Warwicke, the Earle of Oxford, with the Bastard Fauconbridge, and many other arrised at Plimouth, and another fort at Dartmouth, of whom, the Earle of Penbroke went into Wales, the other toward Exceter, proclaiming in the name of King Henry, that all men betwixt the ages of 16. and 60. should be ready to assist the said Lords, on the behalfe of King Henry, against King Edward. Also on the Sunday next after the feast of S. Michael the Archangell, Doctor Godard preaching at Pauls Crosse, declared by the reading of bills, and diuers other arguments and proues, that Henry was true and lawfull King of England, and not King Edward. Moreouer, the Marquesse Mountacute, who had gathered six thousand men in King Edwards name, and was come neere vnto the said Edward: hee told them how King Edward had serued him: first, making him Earle of Northumberland, and after giuing the same Earledome to Thomas Percy, made him Marques Mountacute, allowing him a Pies nest to maintaine it withall: wherefore he would leaue to serue him, and take part with the Earle of Warwick his brother. Whereof when King Edward vnderstood, he fled from his host, besides Nottingham, and the third day of October, he with the Lord Riuers, Lord Hastings his Chamberlaine, the Lord Say, and other, to the number of seuen or eight Earles, tooke shipping at Lin, and sayled toward the Duke of Burgoigne his brother in Law.

King Edward fled beyond the Seas. Phil. Comines.

The Queene had before that, to wit on the first of October, stolne secretly in the night out of the Tower of London by water to Westminster, and there taken sanctuary. This time was great watch kept in the City of London for the Gentlemen had assembled themselues in great companies, and so had come to the outer part of the City, as to Ratcliffe, Saint Katherens, Southwarke and other the suburbs, and many of them were entred the City, where they robbed the Flemmings at Blanchapleton, and other places, making them to flye out of the Citie with sorrow enough.

The Queene tooke sanctuary at Westminster. Kentish men robbed the Flemmings, and chased them out of London.

On Wednesday following, the Tower of London was yeelded to the Maior and his Brethren the Aldermen, who forthwith entred the same, and deliuered King Henry of his imprisonment, and lodged him in the Kings lodging. On the Friday following, came to London the Archbishop of Yorke, brother to the Earle of Warwicke, the Lo2 Prior of Saint Johns, and other, to the number of two thousand men of armes. On the morrow following, came the Duke of Clarence, the Earle of Warwicke, the Bastard Fauconbridge, with other, to the number of 4000. men. On the first day of October, the Duke of Clarence, the Earle of Warwicke, the Archbishop of Yorke, the Lo2d of Saint Johns, with other, entred the Tower of London, and King Henry being there prisoner nigh the space of nine yeeres, they elected him to be their lawfull King, and forthwith rode with him through London to the Bishops Palace, where he rested till the 13. of October, on which day he went a procession crowned in Pauls Church: the Earle of Warwicke bare his traine, and the Earle of Oxford his sword, &c.

George, Duke of Clarence and other landed at Plimouth.

George, D. of Clarence, the Earle of Warwicke and other receiued King Henry.

King Edward was proclaimed vsurper of the Crowne, and Iohn Tiptoft, Earle of Worcester, being found in the top of an high tree, in the Forrest of Waibridge, in the County of Huntingdon, was brought to London, at Parliament arrested and condemned to death by Sir Iohn Vere, Earle of Oxford, and beheaded at the Tower-hill, and after buried at the Blacke-Friers.

Doctor Godard preached at Pauls Crosse against King Edward.

1471. Prince Edward borne in the Sanctuary.

Queene Elizabeth, wife to Edward the fourth, bring in the Sanctuary at Westminster, was deliuered of a Prince on the fourth of Nouember, who was after King Edward the fift.

King Edward, with the Lord Hastings, the Lord Say, and nine hundred Englishmen, and three hundred Flemmings, would haue landed in Essex, but there the Earle of Oxfords brother put them off, and after hee landed fo2e weather-beaten at Rauenspoine, within Humber on Holdernesse, and there rose on him Holdernesse men, whose Captaine was Sir Iohn Westerdale a Priest, after cast into the Marshallsea, at London. As King Edward passed the Countrey, he shewed the Earle of Northumberlands Letters and Seales, that sent fo2 him, saying, that hee came to claime no Title of the Crown but onely his Dukedome of Yorke, nor would not haue done else, but at the crying of the Earle of Warwicke, and cryed in euery place, King Henry and Prince Edward, wearing a Ostrich feather, Prince Edwards liuery. King Edward came to Nottingham, where Sir William Stanley, Sir William Norris, and diuers others brought him men, so that he had then 4000. o2 more. Then Edward marched toward Leycester, where the Earle of Warwicke, and Marquesse Mountacute, had 4000. men, and would haue fought with King Edward, but that he had receiued letters from the Duke of Clarence, that hee would not fight vntill hee came. Whereupon hee keeping Leycester still, suffered Edward to march toward London. A little out of Warwicke the Duke of Clarence with seuen thousand men meeting with King Edward agreed to him, and brake all the promises made in France. King Edward comming to London, by Master Vrswike the Recorders meanes, and others, entred into the Bishop of Londons Palace, by aposteame, and there tooke King Henry, and the Archbishop of Yorke, and sent them both to the Tower on Saunct Dunstan's day.

Annal. 11.

Edward the fourth landed at Rauenspoine.

George of Clarence agreed with his brother, Edward the fourth.

King Henry sent to the Tower again.

The Earle of Warwicke, the Duke of Exceter, Marquesse Mountacute, and the Earle of Oxford, with many Knights, came with their hoste toward Barnet: wherefore King Edward tooke King Henry with him, and possessed the Towne of Barnet at the North, the Earle of Warwicke and his retinue remained on the plaine without the Towne hosting gunnes one at the other. And in the morning being Easterday, and the 14. of April, they fought in a thicke mist, from foure of the clocke in the morning till ten, and diuers times the Earle of Warwickes men supposed that they had got the victory of the field, but it happened that the Earle of Oxfords men had a Starwith streames, both before and behinde on their liuerice, and King Edwards men had the Sunne, with streames on their liuery: whereupon the Earle of Warwicks men, by reason of the mist, not well discerning the badges so like, shot at the Earle of Oxfords men, that were on their owne part, and then the Earle of Oxford and his men, cryed treason, and fled with eight hundred men. The Marquesse Mountacute was priuily agreed with King Edward, and had gotten on his liuery, but one of his brothers, the Earle of Warwickes men espying this, fell vpon him and killed him.

John Rastall.

The Earle of Warwicke seeing his brother dead, and the Earle of Oxford fled, leapt on a horse to flye, and comming to a woode where was no passage, two of King Edwards men came to him, killed him, and spoyled him to the naked skinne, Sir William Tyrrell, Knight, was killed on the Earle of Warwickes part. The Duke of Exceter fought manfully, and was disparcled, wounded, and left for dead, from seuen in the morning, till foure of the clocke in the after-noone, and then being brought to a seruants house of his thereby, called Ruchland, he had a Chirurgion, and after was conueyed into Westminster Sanctuary. There were slaine on King Edwards part: Humfrey Bourcher, Lord Cromwell, Henry Bourcher, sonne and heyre to the Lord, Barons both, buried at Westminster, Sir Iohn Lisle was there slaine, also Thomas a Par, and Iohn Milwarer Esquires to Richard Duke of Glocester, were there slaine: and on both parts, to the number of foure thousand, which were buried on the same plaine, halfe a mile from Barnet, where after a Chappell was builded in memory of them, but it is now a dwelling house, the top quarters remaine yet.

The morrow after Easter day, were the bodies of the Earle of Warwick and the Marques Mountacute, laid naked in Pauls Church in London, that all men might see them fo2 the space of three o2 foure dates, and then buried at William Priory in Barkshire; the Lord Barners was reuerently buried in the friers Augustines Church at London. King Henry, with the Archbishop of Yorke, were sent to the Towser of London.

Earrell of Pembrokeshire beheaded.

At this time Queene Margaret, and Prince Edward her sonne had lien on the sea 17. dates letted with foule weather, and on Easter day at euen, they landed with their French Nauy at Weymouth, and so came to Exceter, from thence to Tewkesbury, and pitched their field by Seuerne. Edward the fourth being come from London, fought with Prince Edward at Tewkesbury on the fourth of May, tooke Queene Margaret prisoner, with Prince Edward her sonne, whom cruelly hee smote on the face with his Gauntlet, and after his seruants slew him. Edmond, Duke of Somerset, and Sir Hugh Courtney, fled from Prince Edward, and lost him the field. There was slaine Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, Lord, John of Somerset, Lord Wenlocke, Sir Edmond Hamden, Sir William Whittingham, Sir William Vaus, Sir Nicholas Hartuy, Sir John Delues, Sir William Filding, Sir John Lukenore, Sir William Lirmonth, Sir John Venam, Sir T. Seamer, Sir W. Rowse, Sir Thomas Henree. King Edward entering a Church in Tewkesbury with his sword drawne, a Priest brought the Sacrament against him, and would not let him enter, vntill he had granted his pardon, to these that follow: Edmond, Duke of Somerset, John Bough, Strother, Lord of Saint Johns, Sir Humfrey Audley, Sir Gerus of Clifton, Sir William Grimsby, Sir William Cary, Sir Henry Rose, Sir Thomas Tresham, Sir William Newbrough, Knights, Henry Tresham, Walter Courtney, John Fiory, Lewis Miles, Robert Jackson, James Gower: Sword-bearers to Prince Edward, James Delues, sonne and heyre to Sir John Delues: all these, where they might haue escaped, tarried in the Church (trusting in the Kings pardon) from Saturday, till Sunday, when they were taken out and beheaded.

King Edward granted pardon to many, and after cut off their heads.

About this time, Sir Walter Wrottile, and Sir Geffery Gates, Knights, gouernours of Calais, sent Sir George Broke, Knight, from Calais with 300. souldiers, to Thomas the Bastard Fauconbridge, Captaine of the Carle of Warwickes Nauy, willing him to raise the County of Kent, and to goe to London, there to take King Henry out of the Towser, and then to goe against King Edward.

Thomas the Bastard.

The fourteenth day of May, Thomas, the Bastard, with a riotous company of ship-men, and other of Essex and Kent, came to London, where, being denied passage through the Citty, he set vpon Bishops gate, Aldgate, London-bridge, &c. along the Thames side, shooting arrowes and gunnes into the Citty, fired the suburbes, and burnt more then 60. houses, wanne the Bulwarkes at Aldgate, and entred the Citty, but the port-close being let downe, such as had entred were slaine, and then the Citizens pursued the rest so far as Stratford and Blackwall, slaying many, and take many prisoners. Thomas the Bastard went from London Westward, as farre as Kingstone vpon Thames, to prosecute King Edward, but the L. Scales, with Nicholas Faunt, Maior of Canterbury, by fayre words, caused Fauconbridge to returne to Blackheath on Kent, from whence in the night hee stale from the hoste, with 600. horse-men to Rochester, and so to Sandwich, where he abode the Kings comming.

The 21. of May, King Edward came to London, with thirty thousand men: and the same night, King Henry was murthered in the Tower of London: On the morrow, hee was brought through Cornhill, from the Tower with a great company of men, bearing weapons as they should haue led him to some place of execution, to Saint Pauls Church in London, in an open coffin bare faced, where he lied: thence he was carried to the Black Friers, and there lied: and thence to Chersey Abbey in a boat, where he was then buried, but since by King Richard the third, in the second yeere of his raigne, removed to Windsor where hee was buried without the Chancell, at the South doze of the Quire of Windsore Chappell, where he was worshipped by the name of holy King Henry: whose red hat of Velure, was thought to heale the head-ach of such as should put it on their heads: there he rested for a time, but now his Tombe being taken thence, it is not (commonly) knowne what is become of his body.

King Henry murthered.

Thus ended the King his transitorie life, hauing enioyed as great prosperity, as fauourable fortune could afford, and as great troubles on the other side, as this frowning could powze out: yet in both states hee was patient, and vertuous, that hee may be a patterne of most perfect vertue, as hee was a worthy example of fortunes inconstancy: hee was plaine, vpright, farre from fraud, wholy given to prayer, reading of Scriptures and almes-deedes, of such integrity of life, that the Bishop which had beene his confessor tenne yeere, auouched, that he had not all that time committed any mortall crime: So continent, as suspition of bnchast life neuer touched him: and hauing in Chastlemalle a shew of young women with their bare breasts laid out, presented before him, hee immediately departed, with these words, fie, fie, for shame, forsooth you be to blame: before his marriage, hee liked not that women should enter into his Court, and for this respect, hee committed his two vncles by his mothers side, Iasper and Edmond, to most honest and vertuous Prelates to be brought vp. So farre hee was from couetousnesse, that when the executors of his Vncle, the Bishop of Winchester, surnamed the Rich Cardinall, would haue giuen to him two thousand pound, hee plainely refused it, willing them to discharge the will of the departed, and would scarce condescendat length, to accept the same summe of money toward the endowing of his Colledges in Cambridge and Eaton: he was so religiously affected (as the time then was) that on principall Holydates, he would weare sacke-cloth next his skin. Oath, he vsed none, but in most earnest matters these words: Forsooth, and forsooth; for he was so pitifull, that when comming from S. Albons, he hee saw the quarter of a Traytour against his crowne ouer Cripplegate, he willed it to be taken away, with these words, I will not haue any Christian so cruelly handled for my sake; many great offences hee willingly pardoned, and receiuing at a time a great blow by a wicked man, which compassed his death, hee onely saide, forsooth, forsooth, yee foule to smite a King anopnted so. Another also which thrust him in the 4de with a sword, when hee was prisoner in the Tower, was by him pardoned, when hee was restored to his Kate and kingdome: not long before his death being demanded wherefore hee had so long held the Crowne of England vniustly, hee replyed, My Father was King of England, quietly enioying the Crowne all his raigne, and his Father, my Grandsire was also King of England, and I, euen a childe in my cradle, was proclaimed, and crowned King without any interruption, and so held it forty yeeres well neere, all the States doing homage vnto me, as to my Auncestors: wherefore I may say with King Danid: The lot is faine vnto me in a fayre ground, yea, I haue a goodly heritage, my helpe is from the Lord, which saueth the vpright in heart. Hee raigned eyght and thirty yeeres, six moneths, and odde dayes. After this redemption of the Crowne six moneths; he lined 52. yeeres, hauing by his wife one onely Sonne, called Edward, Prince of Wales, descended as you haue heard; hee was of seemely stature, of body slender, his face beautifull, of his owne naturall inclination, he abhorred all the vices, as well of the body, as of the soule.

Edward the fourth entred London.

And now to returne to King Edward. At his comming to London, the Maior, Aldermen, and other Citizens meeting him one mile without the Citty, to wit, betwixt Islelon, and Soyletich, in the high way hee made Knights these Aldermen, Sir John Stockton, Maior of London, Sir Ralph Verney, Sir Richard Lee, Sir John Young, Sir William Taylor, Sir George Ireland, Sir William Stocker, Sir Mathew Philip, Sir William Hampton, Sir Thomas Stalbroke, Sir John Crosby, Sir Bartholomew James, Sir Thomas, or Richard Vrswike, Recorder of London, all these hee made Knights, in reward of the good seruice the Londoners had done to him. On the 24. day of May, King Edward when hee had made banarets, Sir Thomas Gray, Sir Richard Hastings, Sir John Courtney, Sir Nicholas Lartimer, Sir Ralph Hastings, Sir Roger Tegets, Sir John Stanley, Sir Simon Mountfort, Sir John Heningham, Sir William Stanley, &c. He take his iourney into Kent with all his army, following the Bastard and other his complices, to suppresse them, if they were in any place assembled to resist him: but after they were once diuerted, they durst not shew themselues againe in armour, those only excepted, that were withdrawne into Sandwich, with the Bastard, which for the more part were Mariners, an. 807. hundred: with these he kept the Towne, hauing in the hauen, 47. ships great and small vnder his gouernance, but the King approching, they sent to him for pardon, which the King granted, and being in the City of Canterbury, he sent into Sandwich his brother, Richard, Duke of Glocester, to receiue him to mercy, together with all the ships which they deliuered: where vpon King Edward not onely pardoned the Bastard, but made him Knight, and Vice-Admiral. The Lord Denham and Sir John Fog, with other were left inlent; to sit in iudgement of the rebels in Kent, Sussex, and Essex, whereof were a great number punished by the purse, some 200. markes, some 200li. some more, some lesse. This King Edward returned out of Kent, with much good, and little losse. Nicholas Faunt, Maior of Canterbury (that had serued the Earle of Warwicke, and had of late perswaded the Bastard to depart from his host) and diuers other of his country-men were hanged and quartered, and the heads of Spilling and Quinten, were set vpon Alde-gate of London.

On the 4. day of June, George Neuill, Archbishop of Yorke, and brother to the late Earle of Warwicke, and the Marques Montacute, was deliuered out of the Tower of London, and discharged of his imprisonment.

The 1. of July, Edward, the sonne of King Edward, was made Prince of Wales, Duke of Lancaster, and Earle of Cornwall.

In the moneth of September, Thomas, the Bastard Fauconbridge, was taken at Southampton, by Richard, Duke of Glocester, he was conueyed to the Castle of Middleham in Yorkeshire, and there beheaded. Notwithstanding that he had the Kings pardon, his head was sent to London, and set on London Bridge.

The Bastard lost his head.

The Earles of Penbrooke and of Richmond fled into Britaine.

The 12. of Nouem. the Lady Anne, the Kings sister, was diuorced from Henry Holland, Duke of Exceter, by meanes of her owne suite.

King Edward kept his Christmas at Westminster, where hee with his Queene on the same feast day, sate crowned, and likewise on the 12th day, the King was againe crowned, and went procession crowned, but the Queene was not then crowned, because she was neere her time of deliuerance, but shee went on procession with him, the king kept his estate at Whitehall, with his Prelates & Noble estates, where also dined the Maior of London, the Aldermen and many of the wealthy Citizens. 1475.

There is also a pit in Langley Parke in Kent, which is alway full of water, be the weather never so dry, except against battell, and then it will be drie, and so it was this yeere.

This yeere were sent Ambassadours from King Edward to the Duke of Burgoyne, who landed at Bridges on the 2. of Aprill, where they were honorably received without the Towne by the Lord Grantehuse.

Ambassadors sent into Burgundy.

The names of the Ambassadours, were Sir Iohn Scot, Knight, marshall of Calais, Master William Hatclife, Secretary to the King, Master Ioh. Russell, Doctor, and Archdeacon of Barkeshire, Master Richad Mareen Archdeacon of London, Sir Iohn Young, Knight, and merchant of London, and Sir Iohn Crosby, merchant of London: on the 4. of Aprill, they were conueyed on horse-back to the Dukes lodging, &c. They passed from thence to the D. of Britaine, to haue gotten there the 2. Earles of Penbroke and of Richmond.

Archbishop of York: spoyled and sent to prison.

George Neuil, Archbishop of Yorke, being at Windsor with K. Edward on hunting, the King promised the Archbishop to come to the Moze (a place in Hartfordshire, which the Archbishop had purchased and builded commodiously, there to hunt and make merry with him, whereupon the Archbishop taking his leaue of the King, went home to the Mannor of the Moze, and there made great prouision for the King, and sent for much plate, that he had at that time of Barnet and Tewksbury fields, and besides this, borowed much of his friends, and purueyed for the King, for two or three dales meate, drinke and lodging, as royally as he could: but the day before the King had promised to haue come to the Moze, the King suddenly sent for the Archbishop to come to Windsor, where he was arrested of treason, that hee should helpe the Earle of Oxford, and so sent to Caleis and to Hames, where hee continued a long time after prisoner: all which time, the King kept the Archishopzick in his owne hands. In the meane while, Sir William Par, Knight, and Sir Thomas Vaughan Esquire, and other were sent to the Moze to seaze all his goods for the King, which came there to the summe of 20000. l. and all other Lordships and lands that the said Archbishop had within England, and all his stuffe and riches.

Also Sir Iohn Vere, Earle of Oxford, that had withdrawne himselfe from Barnet field, first into Scotland, after into France, then getting much goods on the Sea, landed in the West-countrey, and en red Saint Michaells Mount, with 77. men, the last of September, whereon hee was by the Kings appointment, besieged by Bodrigan, and other, but with such fauour, that the Earle reuictualled the Mount. Then was Richard Forteisue, Esquire, for the body, and Sheriffe of Cornu all sent thither to continue the siege. And King Edward sending pardons to the Earles men, so long practised with them, that at the last, if the Earle had not submitted himselfe to King Edward, he had beene taken by his owne men, and sir Forteisue entring the Mount the 15. of February, found victuall enough there to haue serued them till Midsommer after: Iohn Vere, E. of Oxford the Lord Beamond, two brothers of the said Earle, and Thomas Clifford, were brought prisoners to the King. The Earle of Oxford was sent prisoner to Guines, where he remained so long as this King raigned: In all which time, the Ladie his wife might neuer come to him, or had any thing to line vpon, but what people of their charities would giue her, and what she got by her needle.

In the moneth of September, Lewes de Bruges, Lord Grantehuse, came into England from Charles, Duke of Burgoygne, and on the thirteenth of October was created Earle of Winchester openly in the Parliament chamber. Creation.

The first of October, began a Parliament at Westminster by authority, wherby an ayde was granted to the King, towards the charge of his warres, which was leuied of mens lands, as well of Lords as other. 1471. Parliament at Westmins.

The Duke of Burgoygne hauing great warres with the French King, sent Ambassadours into England, to require King Edward his brother in law to make warre on the French King, vnto the which request King Edward easily granted, because he wished to be reuenged on the French King, as of his enmy, for ayding the Earle of Warwick, Queene Margaret, and her sonne, Prince Edward, and their complices: whereupon he prouided, and also determined, in the beginning of the next yere, to bring a great army ouer to Caleis and to inuade the kingdome of France. And forthwith with all diligence, prepared all things ready for his iourney, making many shifts for the prouision of money to serue his turne. And because this last yeere great summes of money were granted him by the Parliament, he deuised this shift to call before him a great number of the wealthiest sort of the people of his Realme, and to them declared his neede, and the requisite causes thereof, and demanded of them some portion of money, which they sticked not to giue, and therefore the King willing to shew that this their liberalitie was very acceptable to him, he called this grant of money a Benevolence, notwithstanding that many grudged thereat, and called it a Malevolence: but the King died such gentle meanes towards them for their assistance in his necessitie, that they could not otherwise doe, but frankly yeeld and giue him competent summes, wherewith he prepared a great army.

King Edward prepareth to his iourney into France.

This yere, Henry Holland, the Duke of Excester, was found dead in the Sea betweene Douer and Caleis, but how he came there, the certaintie could not be knowne. 1474

King

The King sayleth into France.

King Edward hauing prepared his armie, led the same to Douer, from thence to crosse the seas to Caleis. The foze than passed with him at this present, was the greatest that euer came into France, most of them being horsemen, all in very good order well armed. All the nobles of the Realme bore there: a few excepted, they were fifteene hundred men of armes very well mounted, and the most of them lusted and richly trapped, after the manner of the French warres, and well accompanied with horsemen of their retinue, they were at the least fifteene thousand archers on horse-backe, and a great number of footemen, and others, as well to pitch their tents, whereof they were well furnished, as also to attend vpon their artillery, and inclose their campe, and in all their army they had not one pledge. Besides this, were 3000. Englishmen appointed to lane in Britaine. Anno. 14.

When King Edward came to Douer, the Duke of Burgoigne to helpe his passage, sent 300. Boates of Holland, and Zeland, called cuts, which are flatte and lowe, builte very commodiously for transporting of horses: but notwithstanding all this helpe they hadde from the Duke, and all the King of England could command himselfe, he was aboue three wekes in passing betweene Douer and Caleis, one shippe of Cinq tasks 200. or 300. of his small passengers. Before King Edward embarked, his herault came to the King of France one Herault alone called Guyenne, a Norman borne, who brought a letter of defiance from the king of England, in very bad language, and so excellentlie well penned, that mine Author was perswaded it was neuer Englishmans doing. The contents thereof were, that the King should yelde vnto him the Realme of France, being his inheritance, to the end he might restore the clergy and nobilitie to their ancient liberty, vnto them of the great charges they sustained, and deliuer them of the miseries they were in, which if he refused to do, he protested what great mischiefe should ensue thereof, in manner & forme as in such cases is accustomed. The King read the letter softly to himselfe, and after ward all alone withdrew himselfe into a Wardrobe, and commanded the Herault to be brought to his presence, to whom he made this answere. King Edward tyeth his men in passing betweene Douer and Caleis.

First, that he knew well that the King of England had not passed the Seas of his owne free motion, but by the perswasion of the Duke of Burgundie, and the communaltie of England.

Secondly, that the summer was now almost past, and that the Duke of Burgoigne was returned from Nuntz, as a man discomfited and vtterly vnfurnished of all things.

Thirdly, as touching the Constable (of France) he knew well (he said) that he had intelligence with the king of England, because he hadde married his Niece: but would deceiue his King his master as hee had him, notwithstanding all the great benefits that he had receiued of him, which he then rehearsed, adding thereunto, that the said Constable meante to line in continuall dissimulation, and entertaine euery man to make his profite of him.

Last of all, he alleaged to the Herault diuers reasons to perswade the King his master to peace, and gaue him with his owne hand 300. crownes, promising him a thousand more if the peace were concluded: for after openly he gaue him for a present, a goodly peece of crimson veluet of thirtie els. The Herault answered, that he would trauel me best he could for peace, and thought the King his master would easily be won thereunto: but he willed the King of France, to send an Herault to the English campe, to demand a safe conduct for certaine Ambassadours, that he would send to the King of England, and to direct his letters to the Lord Howard, & to the Lord Stanley, and to himselfe also to make his Herault. At one time, in a manner, both the King of England landed at Caleis, and the Duke of Burgoigne departed from before Nuntz, who in great haste rid straight to Caleis, to the sayde king with a very small traine, for he had sent his army to spoile the Countrey of Barrois and Loraine. The King of England departed from Calis in company of the Duke, and passed through Bolleigne, and from thence marched to Peronne, where the Duke gaue the Englishmen but cold entertainment, for he caused the gates to be streightly kept, & would suffer but fewe to enter, so that the greatest part of them lodged in the fields. After they were come to Peronne the Constable of France sent to the Duke of Burgoigne one of his seruants, by whom he excused himselfe for the withholding of Saint Quintins, alleaging that if he had restored it, he could haue made him in no stede in the realme of France, for he should vtterly haue lost his credite and intelligence, but now seeing the king of England was come ouer in person, he promised to doe hereafter all that the Duke should command him, whereof the better to assure him, he sent him a letter of credite to the declaration of the Duke. Furthermoze he gaue the Duke his faith in writing to serue and succour him, his friends, and confederates, as well the King of England as others, against all men none excepted.

The Duke deliuered the King of England his letter, and all the matter of credite, adding somewhat thereto of his owne heade, for he assured the King, that the Constable would deliuer into his hands, both Saint Quintins and all his other places, which the king easily beleued, partly, because he had married the Constables Niece, and partly, because he saw him in so great feare of the king of France, that he thought he durst not faple his promise made to the Duke and him, and the Duke beleeued it also. But the Constable ment nothing lesse, for the feare he was in of the French king was not so great that it could force him thus farre, but hee died still his wonted dissimulation.

The King of England reloycing at this message sent by the Constable, departed from Perenne with the Duke of Burgoigne, toward S. Quintins, whereunto when he approched, a great Bande of Englishmen ran before, thinking that the Belles should have bene rong at their comming, and that the Citizens would have receyued them with Crosse and Holy water, but when they dyeue nere to the towne, the Artillerie shot, and the souldiours issued forth to the skirmish, both on Horsebacke and on foote, so that two or three Englishmen were slaine, and some taken: and in this state returned they in great rage to their campe, murmuring against the Constable.

The next morning the Duke of Burgondy would have taken his leaue of the King of England to depart to his army in Barroys, promising to doe marualles in his fauor.

The French king sent a seruant of the Lord Halles in the likeneese of an Herault, with a coate made of a Trumpets Banner, to the English campe, where when he came, he was brought to a Tent, and after dinner talked with the King, his message was chiefely grounded vpon the great desire the king had of long time to be in peace with the king of England, saying further, that since hee was crowned King of France, he never had attempted any thing against the King of England or his Realme.

Secondly, he excused himselfe, for receiuing in times past the Earle of Warwicke into his dominions, saying, that he did it onely against the Duke of Burgoigne and not him.

Further, he declared that the saide Duke of Burgoigne had for no other cause called him into France but that by the occasion of his comming, he might conclude a better peace for himselfe with the King: and if happily any other furthered the matter, it was onely to amend the broken estate of their owne affaires, and for their owne priuate commoditie: but as touching the King of Englands good successe, they were altogether careles thereof. Hee put him also in minde of the time of yere, alleadging that winter approached, and likewise the great charges he sustained.

Lastly he saide, that notwithstanding a great number in England desired war with France, yet if the King of England incline to peace, the King for his part would condescende to such conditions as hee doubted not but he and his realme would allowe of: Finally, he demanded a safe conduct for certaine Ambassadors, to come well enformed of his masters pleasure.

The King of England and part of his nobles liking these ouertures very well, graunted to the Herault of France, as large a safe conduct as he demanded, and gaue him foure Nobles of Golde for a reward. Hee also sent an English Herault with him to bring the like safe conduct. And in the next morning in a Village nere to Amiens, the Commissioners of both Princes mette, being these. For the King of France, the bastard of Bourbon Admirall of France, the Lord of Saint Pierre and the Bishoppe of Cureur, called Heberge: And for the King of England, the Lord Howard, one Chalanger, and Doctor Morton. Many Articles of peace were treated of, but the last resolutions, were these: That the French king should paie to the King of England presently before his departure out of France, seuenty two thousand Crownes, that the Dolphine should marry king Edwards eldest Daughter, and that shee should haue the Dutchie of Guien, for her maintenance, or fiue thousand Crownes yerely, to be paid in the tower of London, the space of 99. yeres, which terme expired, the Dolphine should peaceably enioy the reuenues of the whole Dutchie of Guien, and then the king of France to bee clerely discharged of all payments to the king of England. Further it was decred, that the two Princes should mete together and bee sworne to the treaty, which meting was obserued in a Towne called Picquigny, on the 29. of August.

The King of England vpon receit of his money, departed toward Caleis in great hast, fearing the Duke of Burgoignes malice and his subtelties.

At his departure he left for Hostages with the king of France, till his returne into England, the Lord Howard, and the maister of his House called Sir John Cheyney. King Edward tooke Shipping at Caleis, and landed at Douer, and was receiued on the Black-heath by the Maior of London and his brethren in scarlet, and 500. commoners, all clad in Murrey, and so conueyed to London through the citie to Westminster, on the 28. of September.

King Edward returning into England, landeth at Douer.

The French king to compasse his purpose for the getting of the constable into his hands, tooke truce with the Duke of Burgoigne for nine yeres, as a contractour in the league, and not as a Prince alie. King Edward of England aduertised hereof, sent ouer sir Thomas Mountgomery to the French king, offering to passe the Seas againe the next Sommer to aid him and to make warre on the Duke of Burgoigne, so that the French king should pay to him 50000. crownes for the losse which hee should sustaine in his custome, by reasons that the woles of Caleis, could haue no vent, and also paie halfe the charges, and halfe the wages of his souldiers and men of warre. The French king thanked king Edward for his offer but he alleaged that the truce was already concluded, so that hee could not attempt any thing against him, without reproch to his honor: so Sir Thomas Mountgomery was with plate dispatched. There returned with him the Lord Howard, and Sir John Cheyney, which were Hostages with the French king, till the English armie were returned into England. 1475.

The eightenth of Aprill, were inhanced to the honor of knighthode, after the customs of England, in the time of peace, his eldest son Edward Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornewal and Earle of Chester, his second Sonne the Duke of Yorke, and with them the Earle of Lincolnes Sonne and heire, the Duke of Suffolke, the Lord Thomas Gray the Queenes Sonne, and Richard his brother: the Earle of Shrewsburie: the Earle of Wiltshire, Master Edward Wooduile: the Lord Neuill: the Lord Barkleys son and heire: the Lord Awdeleys Son and heire: the Lord Saint Amand: the Lord Stanleys Son and heire: the Lord Sturtons Son and heire: the Lord Hastinges Son and heire: the Lord Ferrers of Chartleys Son and heire: Master Harbert brother to the Earle of Penbroke, Master Vaughan Brian chiefe Iustice: Littleton one of the Iudges of the Common pleas, Master Bodringham, Master Brian Stapleton, Kneuit, Pilkinton, Ludlow, Charleton, &c. The same day the King created the Lord Thomas Marques Dorset before dinner, and so in the habite of a Marques aboue the habite of his knighthode, he beganne the table of knights in Saint Edwards Chamber. At that time hee ordained that the Kings chamberlaine should goe with the ancient and the well nurtred knight to aduertise and teach the order of knighthood, to the esquiers being in the haine. The King himselfe came in person, and did honor to all the company with his noble counsell. An. reg. 15. Knights of the Bath made by the King.

King Edward having established all things in good order, both within his realme and without, was yet troubled in his minde, for that the Earle of Richmond, one of the blod of King Henry the first, on the mothers side, was alive, and at liuerty in Britaine: therfore he sent ouer to Francis Duke of Britaine, one Doctor Stillington, and other Ambassadours laden with no small summe of golde. These Ambassadors declaring their message, affirmed that the king their master, willed, to haue the Earle of Richmond onely to ioyne with him in aliance by marriage, and so to plucke by all the remnants of discord, betwixt him and them of the contrary faction. The Duke thought at the first, that king Edward would giue to the Earle his eldest Daughter the Ladie Elizabeth in marriage, he therefore consented to deliuer him, and receiued of the English orators a great summe of money: but ere any were embarqued with their prey, the Duke being aduertised, that the Earle of Richmond was not so earnestly sought for, to be coupled in mariage with king Edwards daughter, as to haue his head parted from his body with an axe, and therefore caused his treasurer Peter Landoyse to conuey the sayd Earle of Richmond into a sanctuary at Sabo, where the English Ambassadors then lay, staying for a conuenient winde: who complained that they were euill vsed to be spoyled both of their money and marchandise: yet because the matter was so handled, that it seemed the Earle escaped into sanctuary through their owne negligence, after that they had receiued him, they were answered that the Earle should be safely kept, either in sanctuary, or else as a prisoner in the Dukes house, and thus the king purchased for his money, the keeping of his money for a little time.

The second day of Nouember was borne the kings daughter named Anne, at Westminster.

1467. King Edward was somewhat displeased with the chance about the Earle of Richmond, but trusting that the D. of Baptaine would according to promise keepe him from doing any grieuance to him, put all doubts thereof out of his minde, and began to study how to keepe a liberall Princely house, and thereupon storing his chestes with money, hee employed no small portion in good house keeping.

John Duke of Norffolke deceased, on the Tuesday after the feast of the Epiphany, the 15. of Edward 4.

This yere Edward kept the feast of Saint George, and order of the Garter at Windsore in most royall manner, first on the Saterday beforenome, the King being Soueraigne with the knights of the order, entered the chapiter within the castle, which chapiter was also continued in the after noone, in this manner, towards euensong time, being all mounted on horseback in their habits of blew, rode to the chapiter from thence they went to the quire on foote, where they remained while euensong was done, and then rode againe to the Castle (in their habits as afore) where they had their boilde of spices, &c. An. reg. 16. Order of S. Georges feast.

On Sunday morning, the Soueraigne with the knights rode to mattens, which being ended, they entred the Chapiter from whence they went to the Deans house to breakefast, & after to the quire againe euery man to his owne stall. Then came the Quene with the Lady Elizabeth her eldest daughter, the Dutchesse of Suffolke, the Kings sister, the Lady Marchionesse of Montague, the Lady Marchionesse of Dorset, the Lady Hastings, &c. all in one liuery of murrey embrodered with garters, except the Marchionesse of Montague, who rode in a gowne of silke, and these Ladies were placed in the rode loft. And in the same order and habite came the Soueraigne, and knights, with the Quene and her Ladies in the afternoone to euensong. The King this day dined in his great Chamber, on whose right hand sate Richard Bewchamp Bishop of Salisbury, Chancellor of the order, and on the left hand the D. of Clarence, and the Duke of Suffolke. At a side table sate the Marquesse of Dorset, the Earles of Arundale, Northumberland, and Essex, the Lord Maltrauers, the Earle Dowglas the Lords Dudley, Ferrers, and Howard, and Sir John Astely knight, all on one side. And at a table on the other side, sate Master Dudley, Deane of S. Georges chappell, and with him all on one side, the Chanons of the same chappell in their mantles of murrey, and mantlet of S. George.

On the Sunday the Soueraigne and knights of the order entred the chapiter, where they had a short communication, from whence they went to the quire, where euery knight stood before his stall while the King had offered a rich suite of vestments, and certaine copes of the same vestue, which the Deane received: that done the King went to his stall, and euery knight sate him downe in their owne sales, till the offertory, and then the Marques and the D. of Suffolke offered the sword of Iohn Mowbray late D. of Norfolke deceased, the Lords Maltravers and Howard, his pledge: which being done, and obeisance made, every knight stood before their stals, while the King had offered, and then every knight offered according to his stal, to wit, the D. of Clarence, the Marques Dorset, the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Arundell, the Earle of Essex, and the D. of Suffolke, the Earle of Northumberland, the Earle of Douglas, the Lord Maltravers, and the Lord Howeard, the Lord Dudley, the Lord Ferrers, sir Iohn Astley. The masse being ended, they went to the Chaunter, and thus the feast was ended, from the which were absent of the order out of the Realme, the king of Scotl, the king of Portingale, the Duke of Burgoigne, the D. of Aerein, the Lord Rivers, the Lord Scrope, the L. Dunasse, absent within the realme, the prince, the D. of Glocester, the Duke of Buckingham, the Lord Hastings, and sir William a Par.

Suffolke

This yere Charles Duke of Burgundy was slaine by the Switzers, before the Towne of Nancy in Lorraine, after whose death the French king wan all the townes which the said Duke had holden in Picardy and Artois, and because the Towne of Bologne, and county of Bolonnois, appertained by right of inheritance unto the Lord Iohn earle de la Toure Earle of Auvergne, the French king bought of him his right and title in the same, and recompenced him with other lands in the county of Forest, and in other places. And because the forenamed towne & county were holden of the Carledome of Artois, he changed the tenor, and anowed to holde the same towne and county of our lady of Bologne, and thereof did homage in the great Church of Bologne, offering there an heart of gold, weying 2000. crownes, ordaining further, that his heires and successors at their entree into their estates, by themselues or their deputies, should offer an heart of like waight and valew, as a relefe and homage for the same towne and countrey.

The great Duke of Burgundy slaine.

This yere 1477. Charles the great Duke of Burgondy surnamed the Bould, after much warre and many valyant battailles which he verp fortunatly had performed by the space of eight yeres, & in the end he received two great overthrowes by the Swichers, both of them in short time, and then of Renato Prince of Lorraigne, chiefe of that hoste, were unto Mancela, where this Duke was miserably slaine, and his body two dayes after was found in the Snow, and with great honor carried thence unto the Sepulcher of Princes.

No man ought to gape after other mens fortune.

An. reg. 17. Burder beheaded. Enguerrand.

This yere T. Burder an Esquire of Arrow in Warwickshire, son to sir Nicholas Burder (who was great butler of Normandy in Henry the fifts dayes) was beheaded (as was said) for a word spoken, in this sort: King Edward in his progresse hunted in Tho. Burders parke at Arrow, and slew many of his deere, amongst the which one was a white bucke, whereof T. Burder had great account, and therefore when he understood thereof, he wished the bucks head in his belly that slewed the king to kill it. Which tale being told to the K. Burder was apprehended, & accused of treason, for wishing the bucks Register of head, horns and all in the kings belly. This was Gray Friers. the report, and true it is (though some have saide the contrarie) that there was a parke at Arrow: for K. Edward the third, in the seventh yere of his raigne, gave licence to Robert Burder, to inclose his wood of Arrow into his parke (as appeareth by paten in record:) And the record also sheweth that the saide Thomas Burder was accused of poysoning, sorcery and inchantment, for the which he was attainted, by parliament condemned, drawne from the tower of London to Tibborne, and there beheaded, and then buried in the Gray Friers Church at London. This Thomas Burder (by licence obtained of Edward the fourth, in the twelfth yere of his raigne) alienated his lands from his eldest sonne, and true heire, to others at his pleasure, whereof he after sore repented him: And being drawne from the Tower toward his end (as is afore shewed) espying his saide eldest Sonne in west Cheape, over against the Record Tow. hospitall of Thomas Becket, he procured himselfe to be staid, and there asked his sonne forgiuenesse, confessing himselfe grievously to have offended God, in wronging him of his inheritance, which he tooke to be the cause, that God had so justly pagued him by the Princes pleasure, to come to such an end.

King Edward kept his royall feast of Christmas at Westminster.

The 15. of January king Edward the fourth solemnized the matrimoniall feast of his Son Richard the Duke of Yorke, and the Lady Anne daughter and sole heire to Iohn Mowbray D. of Norfolke, with great solemnity. By which marriage, the said Richard was created Duke of Yorke and Norfolke, Earle marshall, Warren, and Nottingham.

The 16. day of January began a Parliament at Westminster, wherein George Duke of Clarence king Edwards brother, was attainted of treason: In the which attaindor (which I have read) is declared, that the said George D. of Clarence, against the King his Soueraigne Lord, had caused diuers his servants to informe the people, that Thomas Burder his servant (which was lawfully and truely attainted of treason) was wrongfully put to death. To his servants of such disposition, he gave large summes of money, benison, &c. therewith to assemble the Kings subiects, to feast them, and then to induce them to beleue, that the saide Burder was wrongfully executed. He also by such his servants, laboured to make the people beleue that the King wrought by Negromancie, and vsed the craft to poyson his subiects, such as him pleased, to the great disclander of the King, and incouraging his subiects against him. And over that, the saide Duke being in full purpole to exalt himselfe and his heires to the regality and crowne of England, and cleerly in opinion to put aside from the same for ever, the king and his heires, vpon one the falsest, and most vnnaturall coloured pretence that man might imagine, falsely and vntruely published, that the king was a bastard, and not legitimate to raigne. And to continue in his most malicious and traiterous purpole after, his seditious language among the people, he induced diuers of the Kings naturall subiects to bee sworne vpon the blessed sacrament, to be true to him and his heires, none exception reserued of their allegiance: and after the same oath so made, he shewed to many, that the King had taken his liuelode from him, and his men were disherited, but he would indeuor to get them their inheritance, as he would do his owne: he shewed also, that the King intended to consume him, in like sort as a candle consumeth in burning, whereof he would in briefe quit him. And ouer this the saide Duke got an exemplification vnder the great seale of Henrie the first late king, wherein was contayned, that if the said Henry and Edward his sonne died without issue male, that the said Duke and his heires should be kings, &c. Thus much for his attaindor.

An. reg. 18.

Duke of Clarence put to death.

And on the 11. of March, after he had offered his owne masse penie in the tower of London, he made his end in a vessell of Malmesey and was after buried at Tewkisburie, by his wife, sometime daughter to the Earle of Warwicke, which being with child died of poyson but a little before him.

This George Duke of Clarence, left behind him two young infants begot on his wife, the Daughter of Richard Earle of Warwicke, which children succeded their ancestors in semblable euill chance: for Edward, his heire, whom King Edward had created Earle of Warwicke, was 24. yeres after in the time of Henry the 7. attainted of treason, and on the tower hill lost his head: And Margaret his sole daughter, married to Sir Richard Pole Knight, and by Henry the eight restored to the Carledome of Salisburie, was attainted 62. yeres after her father had suffered, and was in the tower beheaded: in whose person died the forname of Plantagenet. This yere was a great mortality and death of the pestilence, not only in London, but in diuers parts of the Realme, which began in the latter end of September, in the yere last before passed and continued all this yere till the beginning of November, which was about 14. moneths, in the which space died innumerable of people in the saide city and else where.

1479. Great pestilence.

William Gray Bishop of Ely deceased at Dolnham, and was buried at Ely, bestowne two pillars of marble: he gaue much money toward the reparation of the great Church at Ely, Iohn Morton, Doctor of the ciuill law succeded him in that Byshoprike.

An. reg. 19. Penall laws and Statutes reuiued.

This yere King Edward more then he was accustomed, began to search for the statutes of penall law and statutes, as well of the chiefe of his nobilitie, as of other gentlemen, being prepristories of great possessions or aboundantly furnished with goods, likewise of merchants, and other inferior persons: by reason whereof, it was of all menne iudged, that he would prowe hereafter a sore and rigorous Prince among his subiects: but this his new inuented practise, and couetous meaning (by reason of forraine affaires, and abridgement of his dayes in this transitory life, (which were within two yeres after consumed) toke some, but no great effect.

This yere King Edward began to kepe his feast of Christs nativitie at Wicking, but at fiue daies end removed from thence to Greenwich, where he kept out the other part, with great royalty. 1480.

The 22. of February, fiue notable theeues were put to death at London, for robbing of Churches and other places, especially the College of S. Martin le grand in London, for the which three of them were drawne to the tower hill, and there hanged and burnt, the other two were pressed to death. Church robbers hanged, burned, and pressed to death.

Ambassadours were sent, to and fro betwirt the Kings of England and of France, and till the French king led the King of England with faire words, putting him in hope to match his Sonne and heire the Dolphin, with the Lady Elizabeth daughter to King Edward, according to the conclusions of agreement had and made priuily betwixt them, although in very deede he meant nothing lesse, his ambassadors euer made excuses if any thing were amisse, and he vsed to send change of Ambassadours, so that if those which had borne here afore, and were returned, hadde sayde, or promised any thing (though they were authorized so to do) which might turne to their masters hinderance, the other that came after mought excuse themselues by ignorance of that matter, affirming that they wanted commission once to talke or meddle with that matter, or if he perceiued that any thing was like to bee concluded contrarie to his minde, for a shift, he would call his Ambassadours home in great hast, and after send another with new instructions, nothing depending on the old. Thus the French King by cloaking his inward determinate purpole, with great dissimulation and large promises, kept himselfe in friendshippe with the King of England, till he had wrought a great part of his will against the young Duches of Burgoigne which king Edward would not haue suffered, if he had put any great doubt in the French kings faire promises, considering that the Crowne of France, was in this meane time so much increased in dominions to the great reinforcement of that Realme. An. Reg. 20

On the 9. of November was borne King Edwards third Daughter, named Briget, at Eltham, and was christened in the chappell there by the Bishop of Chichester.

James King of Scots, sent into England Ambassage, for to haue the Lady Cicely King Edwards second daughter, to be married to his eldest sonne James Prince of Scotland, D. of Rotheley, and Earle of Carlile. King Edward and his Councell, perceiuing that this affinitie should be both honorable and profitable to the Realme, did not onely grant to this his desire, but also before hand disbursed certaine sums of money, to the intent that the marriage should 1451. hereafter neither he hindered nor broken, with condition that if the said mariage proceeded not then the prouost and marchants of the Towne of Edenborrow, should be bound for repayment of the said summe again. But King Iames was a man wedded to his owne will so much, that he could not abide any that would speake contrary to his fancie, by meanes whereof, diuers of the Nobilitie of his Realme were greatly troubled, amongst whom Alexander Duke of Albany, brother to King Iames, being exiled into France, and passing through England, tarried with King Edward, and vpon occasion moued him to make warre against his brother the said King Iames, for that he forgetting his oath, promise and affinitie concluded with king Edward, caused his subiects to make roades into English borders. King Edward set on by the Duke of Albanie, determined to inuade Scotland, with an armie: hereupon all the winter season he mustred his men, rigged his shippes, and left nothing vnprouided for such a iourney, so that in the beginning of the yere, all things for the warre were in a readinesse: towards the charges whereof, King Edward had borrowed many great summes of money, amongst other, the Citizens of London granted him 5000. marks, which was repaid to them in the next yere following.

This yere King Edward created William Lord Barkley Vicount Barkeley, at Greenewich,

An. reg. 22. King Edward appointed to be his cheifetaine of his host toward Scotland, and lieutenant generall, Richard Duke of Glocester, and with him were adioyned as associates, Henry Earle of Northumberland, Thomas Lord Stanley, Lord Steward of the kings house, the Lord Louell, the Lord Graystoke, diuers other noble men, and worthy knights. These came to Alnewike in Northumberland about the beginning of the moneth of July: where they marshalled their host: The forward was led by the Earle of Northumberland, vnder whose standert were the Lord Scrope of Bolton, Sir John Midleton, sir Iohn Dichfield and other, and souldiers to the number of 6700. In the middle ward was the Duke of Glocester, and with him the Duke of Albany, the Lord Louel, the Lord Graystocke, Sir Edward Woodvile, and other to the number of 4800. The Lord Neuill was appointed to follow with 3000. The Lord Stanley led the wing on the right hand of the Dukes battell with 4000. menne. The Lord Fitzs Hugh, Sir William a Par, Sir Iames Harington with the number of 2000. guided the left wing. And beside these 1000. to attend the ordinance. This royall armie came sodainely by the water side to the towne of Berwicke, and entred the towne, but Carle Bothwell captaine of the Castle, would in no wise deliuer it: wherevpon the captaines planted a strong siege round about it. The two Dukes and all the other souldiers (except the Lord Stanley, sir Iohn Errington treasurer of the Kings house, sir William a Par, and foure thousand men left to kepe the siege before the castle) departed toward Edenborrough, and in marching spent many townes and castles. King Iames kept himselfe within the castle of Edenborough. The Duke of Glocester entred the Towne, and at the speciall desire of the Duke of Albany saued the Towne, and the inhabitants from fire, blood and spoile, taking onely such presents as they offered to him and his captaines. The Lords of Scotland lying at Hadington, on the second of August wrote to the Duke of Glocester, requiring that the mariage betwixt the Prince of Scotland and King Edwards daughter might be accomplished, according to the couenants: and further, that a peace from thenceforth might be concluded betweene both realmes. The Duke of Glocester answered, that for the marriage he knew not his brothers pleasure, but he required restitution of all the money payed out in loane vpon the same marriage: and for peace he would agree to none, except the Castle of Berwike might be to him deliuered. The Scots excused the matter touching the repaiment of the money, for that the time of the contract of the said marriage was not yet come, and as touching the Castle of Berwike, they affirmed it to appertaine to the Realme of Scotland as of olde inheritance. The same time the Archbishop of Saint Andrewes, the Bishoppe of Dunkill the Earle of Argile, Lord Cambell, and Andrew Lord of Auandal, Chancellor of Scotland wrote to the Duke of Albany, a solemne instrument signed and sealed with their seales, concerning a generall pardon to him and his seruants vpon certaine conditions to be granted, so reasonable that the Duke of Albany willingly accepted of the same, but before he departed he promised the Duke of Glocester to doe and performe all whatsoeuer before he had woone, and promised to king Edward: and for performance hereof, he againe tooke a corporall oath, and sealed a writting at Leuington, the third of August.

After he was restored, the Lords of Scotland proclaimed him lieutenant of Scotland: and not long after the castle of Berwicke was deliuered to the Lord Stanley and other, where the Duke of Glocester made Sir T. Molineux Knight banneret. The duke of Albany also caused the prouost and burgesses of Eden borough to become bound for the repaiment of the money lent by king Edward. And then the Duke of Glocester returned to Sharebutton, &c.

King Edward so greatly fauoured William Harriot Maior of London, that he tooke him with certaine of his brethren the Aldermen, and Commons of the citie of London, into the forrest of Waltham, where was prouided for them a pleasant lodge of greene boughes, in the which lodge they dined with great cheere, and the K. would no go to dinner till he saw them serued. After dinner they went a hunting with the king and slew many dere, aswell red as fallow, whereof the King gaue vnto the Maior and his company good plentie and sent into the Ladie

King Edward banqueted the Maior and Aldermen of London.

Lady Maioresse and her sisters the Aldermens wiues, two harts, fiue bucks, and a tunne of wine to make them merry with, which was eaten in the Drapers Hall.

1483. King Edward held his feast of the nativity of Christ in his manor of Eltham, and kept his estate all the whole feast in his great chamber, and the Queene in her chamber, where were daily more then 2000. persons serued.

The same yere on Candelmas day, he with his Queene went on procession from S. Stephens chappell into Westminster hall, accompanied with the Earle of Angulse, the L. Grey, and sir Iames Liddall Ambassador from Scotland, and at his proceeding out of his chamber, he made sir Richard Wood vnder treasurer of England, and sir William Carosby, one of the iustices of the Common place, knights.

An. reg. 23. Although King Edward reioyced much that his vnkindnesse was come to good conclusion with the Scots, yet he was now sore disquieted in his minde towards the French king, whom he now perceiued to haue dallied with him, as touching the agreement of the marriage to be hadde betwixt the Dolphine, and his daughter Elizabeth: for the L. Howard being returned out of France, certified the king of his owne knowledge, that he being present, saw the Lady Margaret of Austrich, daughter to the Duke Maximilliian, sonne to the Emperor Frederike, receiued into France with great pompe and royaltie, and at Amboys to the Dolphine contracted and espoused. King Edward highly displeased with such double dealing of the French king, called his nobles together, & opened vnto them his griefes, who promised him for redresse thereof to be ready with all their powers, to make warre in France at his pleasure and appointment. But whilest he was busie in hand to make his preparance for warres thus against France, whether it was of melancholie and anger which he had taken with the French kings doings, or els were by any superstition forgot, to the which he was greatly giuen, he sodenly fell sicke, and was so grieuously taken, that he ended his life, as it were euen sodenly, at Westminster on the ninth day of Aprill, the yere of Christ 1483. at the age of 41. yeres, when he had raigned 22. yeres, one moneth, and odde dales, and was buried at Windsore, where he had before prouided his resting place: for ioining the old chappell of S. Georges church builded by K. Henry the first, he laid a newe foundation from the west end thereof, and builded the beautifull newe chappell now frequented, almost to the roofe, which the Lord Reginal Bray (with some small helpe of the Knights of the order) afterward finished. King Edward the 4. tooke from the colledge of Eaton, and the kinges colledge in Cambridge, xxiiij. King Henry the 6. his founder (saith Sir Tho. Smith) almost 1600. pound by yere, and gaue to the colledge of Windsor he with scripturous buildings repaired the castles of Nottingham & Douer, the Tower of London, the house of Eltham, and builded at Westminster.

Phil. Com. Philip de Comines writeth of the death of this King in manner following: Haue we not seene (saith he) the late King of England Edw. the 4. heire of the house of Yorke, bitter y deroyed the house of Lancaster vnder which both his father and he had lined many yeres? Further he said, king Edward hauing done homage to king Henry the 6. being of the house of Lancaster, did he not afterward holde him prisoner many yeres in the tower of London, where in the end he was murthered? Haue we not seene also the Earle of Warwike, principall gouernor of all the said King Edwards offices (after he had put to death all his enemies, especially the Duke of Somerset) in the end became deadly enemy to the King his maker, gaue his daughter in marriage to the Prince of Wales son to K. Henry, attempted to set vp again the house of Lancaster, rased with the said prince into England, discomfited in the field and slaine, both he and his brethren, and kinsmen, and diuers noblemen of England, who in time past had done the like to their enemies? After all this he children of these, when the world turned, reuenged themselues, and caused in like maner the other to die: which plagues we may be assured hapned not, but by the wrath of God. For after K. Edward was quiet in his realme, and received yeerely out of France 5000. crownes paid him in the tower of London, and was growen so rich, that richer he could not be, he died sodainely, as it were of melancholie, because of the French kings marriage with the Lady Margaret the D. of Austriches daughter, for so sone as he was aduertised thereof, he fell sicke, and began then to perceiue how he had bin abused, touching the marriage of his daughter whom he caused to be called the Lady Dolphineese. Then also was the pension which he had receiued out of France taken from him, which he called tribute, although indeede it were neyther the one nor the other. Thus much out of Comines concerning the death of Edward the fourth, who also affirmeth, that within his remembrance in the ciuill warres of England died aboue 80. persons of the Blood royall. King Edward left issue by Elizabeth his wife, two sons, Edward prince of Wales, and Richard D. of Yorke, and fiue daughters, to wit, Elizabeth that after was K. married to King Henry the seuenth, Cicely maried to Vicount Wels, Briget a Nun at Dertforde, Anne married to Thomas Howard after Earle of Surrey, and Duke of Norfolke, Katherine wedded to William L. Courtenay, sonne to the Earle of Deuonshire, he had also one base son knowne to the world, by the name of Arthur, that was after Vicount Lisle.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING EDVVARD THE FIFTH.

Whose Historie was written by sir Thomas Moore, as followeth.

KING Edward, of that name the 4th after he had lived 53. yeres (it should be 40. and one yeere) seuen moneths, and fiue daies, and hereof raigned two and twentie yeres, one moneth, and eight dayes, died at Westminster the ninth day of Aprill, the yeere of our redemption a thousand foure hundred fourescore and two, leauing much faire issue, that is to witte, Edward the Prince, of thirteene yeres of age: Richard Duke of Yorke, two yeres younger: Elizabeth, whose fortune and grace was afterward to be Queene wife, vnto King Henry the seuenth and mother vnto the eight: Cicely, not so fortunate as faire: Bridget, which professing the vertue of her, whose name she bare, professed and obserued a religious life in Dertford, an house of close Nuns: Anne, that was after honourably married vnto Thomas then Lord Howard, and after Earle of Surrey: and Katherine which long time tossed in either fortune, sometime in wealth, oft in aduersity, at the last, if this be last, for then she liued, is by the benignitie of her nephew King Henry the 8. in very prosperous estate, and worthy her birth and vertue.

This noble Prince deceased at his palace of Westm. and with great funerall honour and heauinesse of his people from thence conueyed, was enterred at Windsore. A King of such gouernance and behauiour, in time of peace (for in warech part must needs be others enemie) that there was neuer any Prince of this land, attaining the crowne by battell, so heartily beloued with the substance of the people: nor he himselfe so especially in any part of his life, as at the time of his death: Which fauor and affection, yet after his decease, by the cruelty, mischiefe & trouble of the temptations vnto that followed, highly toward him more increased. At such time as he died, the displeasure of these that bare him grudge, for king Henries sake the first, whom he depos'd, was well assuaged, and in effect quenched, in that, that many of them were dead, in more part of the yeres of his raigne, a great part of a long life: and many of them in the meane season growne into his fauour, of which he was neuer strange. He was a goodly personage, princely to behold, of heart courageous, politike in counsell, in aduersitie, nothing abashed, in prosperity rather ioyfull than prowd, in peace iust and mercifull, in warre sharpe and fierce, in the fielde bold and hardy, and nathelesse no further than wisedome would, aduenturous, whose warres who so will consider, hee shall no lesse commend his wisedome where he vsed, than his manhood where he vanquished. He was of visage louely, of body mighty, strong and cleane made: how be it in his latter daies with ouer liberall diet, somewhat corpulent and bowely, and nathelesse not vncomely: hee was of youth greatly giuen to lecherie wantonnesse; from which, health of body in great prosperity and fortune, without a speciall grace hardly refrained.

Description of Edward the fourth.

This fault not greatly grieued the people: for neither could any one mans pleasure stretch and extend to the displeasure of very many, and was without violence, & ouer that, in his latter daies lessed and well left. In which time of his latter daies this realme was in quiet and prosperous estate, no feare of outward enemies, no war in hand, nor none toward, but such as no man looked for: the people toward the Prince, not in a constrained feare, but in a willing and loving obedience: among themselues, the commons in good peace. The Lords whom he knew at variance, himselfe in his death bed appeased; he had left all gathering of money (which is the onely thing that withdraweth the hearts of Englishmen from the Prince) nor any thing intended he to take in hand, by which he should bee driuen thereto, for his tribute out of France hee had obtained, before obtained: & the yere forgoing his death, he had obtained perwike. And albeit, that all the time of his raigne he was with his people, so bentigne, so courteous and so familiar, that no part of his vertues was more esteemed: yet the condition, in the end of his dayes (in which many Princes by a long continued soueraignetie, decline into a prowd port from behenaire behauiour of their beginning) marueilously in him grew and encreased: so far forth, that in summer the last that euer he saw, his highnesse being at Windsore in hunting, sent for the Maior and Aldermen of London, to bring for many other errand, but to haue them hunt and be merry with him, where he made them neke so straight, but so friendly and so familiar cheare, and sent dertion from thence so freely into the City, that no one thing in many dayes before, gat him eyther more hartes or more hartie fauor amongst the common people, which oftentimes more esteeme and take for greater kindnes, a little courtesie, than a great benefit. So deceased (as I haue said) this noble king in the time, in which his life was most desired: whole loue of his people, & their entire affection toward him, had borne to his noble children, (hauing in themselues alsó as many gifts of nature, as many princely vertues, as much goodly towardnes as their age could receiue) a maruellous fortresse and sure armor, if diuision and dissension of their friends had not wanted them, and left them destitute, and the ercecrable desire of soueraignity prouoked him to their destruction, which if eyther kind or kindnes had holden place, must needs haue bin their chiefe defence. For Richard the Duke of Glocester, by nature their vncle, by office their protector, to their father beholden to themselues by oathe and allegiance bounden, all bands broken that binde man and man together, without any respect of God or the world, vnnaturally contriued to bereaue them, not only of their dignity, but also of their liues.

But forasmuch as this Dukes demeanor, minister in effect all the whole matter whereof this Booke shall entreat, it is therefore conuenient, somewhat to shew to you ere we farther go, what manner of man this was, that could find in his heart so much mischiefe to conceiue.

Richard D. of Yorke.

Richard Duke of Yorke, a noble man and a mighty, began not by war, but by law to challenge the crowne, putting his claime into the parliament, where his cause was either for right or fauor so farre forth aduanced, that king Henry his blod (albeit he was a goodly Prince) vtterly reiected, the crowne was by authority of Parliament entailed to the Duke of Yorke and his issue male in remainder, immediately after the death of king Henry. But the duke not induring so long to tarry, but intending vnder pretext of dissension and debate arising in the realme, to preuent his time, and to take vpon him the rule in King Henry his life, was with many nobles of the Realme at Wakefield slaine, leauing 3. sons, Edward, George and Richard. All three as they were great States of birth, so were they great and stately of stomacke, greedy and ambitious of authority, and impatient of partners: Edward reuenging his fathers death, depriued King Henry, and attained the crowne: George Duke of Clarence, was a goodly Noble Prince, and at all points fortunate, if either his owne ambition hadde not set him against his brother, or the enuie of his enemies his brother against him. For were it by the Queene and Lords of her blod which highly maligned the kings kinred (as women commonly not of malice, but of nature hate them whom their husbands loue) or were it a prowd appetite of the D. himselfe, intending to be king: at least wise heinous treason was there laid to his charge, and finally, were he faulty, were he faultles, attainted was he by Parliament, and iudged to death, and thereupon hastily drowned in a But of malmesey, whose death K. Edward (albeit he commanded it) when he wist it was done, piteously bewailed, and sorrowfully repented.

Edward George D. of Clarence.

Richard the 3. son, of whom we now intreate, was in wit & courage equal with either of them, in body and prowesse far vnder them both, little of stature, ill featured of lims, crooke backed, his left shoulder much higher than his right hard fauored of visage, and such as is in states called warely, in other men otherwise: he was malicious, wrathfull, enuious, and from time his birth euer froward. It is for truth reported, that the Duchesse his mother had so much adoe in her trauell, that she could not be deliuered of him vncut, & that he came into the world with the feet forward, as men be borne outward, and (as the fame runneth) also not vntoothed, whether men of hatred report aboue the truth, or else that nature changed her course in his beginning, which in the course of his life many things vnnaturally committed. He euill Captaine was he in war, as to which his disposition was more inclined, than for peace: sundry victories had he, and some times ouerthrowes, but neuer in default as for his owne person, either in hardinesse or politike order: free was he called of dispence, and somewhat aboue his power liberall: with large gifts he gat him vnstedfast friendship, for which he was faine to pill and spoyle in other places, and get him stedfast hatred. He was close and secret, a deepe dissembler, lowly of countenance, arrogant of heart, outwardly compinable, where he inwardly hated, not letting to kisse whom he thought to kill: dispitious and cruel, not for euill will alway, but after for ambition, and either for the surety or increase of his estate. Friend and foe was much what indifferent, where his aduantage grew: he spared no mans death, whose life withstood his purpole. He slew with his owne hands K. Henry the 6. being prisoner in the tower, as men constantly said, and that without commandement or knowledge of the king which would vndoubtedly, if he had intended the thing, haue appointed the butcherly office to some other, than his owne borne brother.

The death of king Henry the 6.

Some wise men also wene, that his drift couertly conueyed, lacked not in helping forth his brother of Clarence to his death: which he resisted openly, howbeit somewhat (as men deemed) more faintly, than he that were heartily minded to his wealth. And they that thus deeme, thinke that he long time in K. Edwards life, forethought to be king, in case that the king his brother, whose life he loked that euill death should shorten, should happen to decease (as indeed he did) while his children were young. And they deeme, that for this intent he was glad of his brothers death, the Duke of Clarence, whose life must needs haue hindered him to intending, whether the same D. of Clarence had kept him true to his nephew the young king, or enterprised to be king himselfe. But of all this point, is there no certainty, and who so draweth vpon coniectures, may as well smote two far as two short. Howbeit this haue I by credible information learned that the same night in which K. Edward died, one Mistlebrooke long ere morning, came in great hast to the house of one Pottier dwelling in red Crosse streete without Cripplegate in London: and when he with hasty rapping was quickly letten in, he shewed vnto Pottier, that K. Edw. was departed. By my truth man, quoth Pottier, then will my master the Duke of Glocester be king. What cause he had so to thinke thinke hard it is to fay, whether he being toward him any thing knew that he had secret thing purposed, or elsewise had any inkling thereof, for he was not likely to speake it of nought.

Reports vncertaine as spoken of how it fell.

But now to returne to the course of this history. Were it that the Duke of Glocester had of old fore-minded this conclusion, and was now at erst thereunto stirred, and put into hope by the occasion of the tender age of the young Princes his nephews (as opportunity and likelihood of speede, pretendeth a man of courage of that he never intended) certaine it is, that he contrived their destruction, with the disputation of the regall dignity upon himselfe: And forasmuch as he well wist, and helped to maintaine a long continued grudge and hart-burning betweene the Quenes kindred, and the Kings blood, either party envying others authority, he now thought their division should be (as it was indeed) a furtherly beginning to the pursute of his intent, and a sure ground for the foundation of all his building, if he might first under the pretext of revenging old displeasure, abuse the anger and ignorance of the one party, to the destruction of the other, and then winne to his purpose as many as hee could, and those that could not be won, might be lost ere they looked therefore: for of one thing was he certaine, that if his intent were perceived, he should some haue made peace betweene both parties with his owne blood.

King Edward in his life, albeit that this dissention betweene his friends somewhat irked him: yet in his good health hee somewhat the lesse regarded it, because he thought whatsoever busines should fall betweene them, himselfe should alway be able to rule both the parties. But in his last sickness, when he perceived his naturall strength so sore enfeebled, that hee despaired all recovery, then he considering the youth of his children, albeit he nothing lesse mistrusted than that that happened: yet well foreseeing that many harmes might grow by their debate, while the youth of his children should lacke discretion of themselves, and good counsel of their friends, of which either party should counsell for their owne commodity, and rather by pleasant advise to win themselves favour, than by profitable advertisement to do his children good, he called some of them before him that were at variance, and in especiall the L. Marques Dorset, the Quenes son by her first husband, and W. the L. Hastings a noble man then Lord Chamberlaine, against whom the Quene specially grudged, for the great favour the king bare him: also for that he thought him secretly familiar with the King in wanton company. Her kinred also bare him fore, as well for that Sir E. had made him captaine of Calais, which office the L. Rivers brother to the Quene claimed of the kings former promise, as for diuers other great gifts which he received, that they looked for. When these Lords with diuers of both the parties were come in presence, the King lifting up himselfe and vnderset with pillowes, as it is reported, on this wise saide vnto them.

The oration of the king in his deathbed.

My Lords my deare kinsmen and allies, in what plight I lie, you see, and I feele. By which the lesse while I take to liue with you, the more deeply am I moued to care in what case I leave you, for such as I leave you, such be my children like to find you. Which if they should, (that God forbid) find you at variance, might hap to fall themselves at war, ere their discretion would serue to set you at peace: yee for their youth, of which I reckon the onely surety to rest in your concord: For it sufficeth not, that all you love them, if each of you hate other. If they were men, your faithfulnes happily would suffice, but childred must be maintained by mens authority, and slipper youth vnder propped with elder counsell, which neyther they can haue, but yee giue it not: ye giue it, if ye greé not. For where each laboreth to breake that the other maketh, and for hatred of each of others person, impugneth each others counsel, there must needes be long ere any good conclusion go forward. And also while eyther party laboreth to be chefe, flatterey shall haue more place then plaine and faithfull advice, of which must néds insue the euill bringing vp of the Prince, whose mind in tender youth infect, shall readily fall to mischiefe and riot, and draw downe with his noble Realme to ruine: but if grace turne him to wisedome, which if God send, then they that by euill means before pleased him best, shalalter fall furthest out of fauor, so that at length euil drifts draw to nought, & good plaine waies prosper. Great variance hath there bin long betwéne you, not alway for great causes: sometime a thing right well intended, our misconstruction turneth vnto worse, or a small displeasure don vs, eyther our owne affection or euil tongues agreeneth. But this wot I well, ye never had so great cause of hatred, as ye haue of loue: That we be all men, that we be christian men, this shall I leave for preachers to tell you (and yet I wot nére whether any preachers words ought more to moue you then his that is by and by going to the place that they all preach of.) But this that I desire you to remember, that the one part of you is of my blood, the other of mine alies, and each of you with other eyther of kinred or affinity, which spirituall kinred of affinity, if the Sacraments of Christs church beare that weight with vs, that would god they did, should no lesse moue vs to charity, than the respect of fleshly consanguinity. Our Lord forbid, that you long together the worse for the selfe cause that you ought to loue the better, & yet that hapeneth, & no where find we so deadly debate as among them, which by nature and law most ought to agree together. Such a pestilent serpent is ambition, and desire of vain glory and soueraignity, which among states, where he once entreth, crépeth forth so far, till with diuision and variance he turneth al to mischiefe, first longing to bee next the best, afterward equal with the best, and at last chiefe and aboue the best. Of which immoderate appetite of worship, & thereby of debate and dissention, what losse, what and sorrow, what trouble hath within these fewe yéres grown in this realme, I pray God as well forget, as we wel remember. Which things if I could aswel haue forsene, as I haue with my more paine than pleasure proued, by Gods blessed lady (that was euer his oathe) I would neuer haue wonne the courtesie of mens knées, with the losse of so many heads. But sith things passed cannot be againe called, much ought we the more beware, by what occasion wee haue taken so great hurt afore, that we ourselves fall not in that occasion againe. Now be those griefes passed, and all is (God be thanked) quiet, and likely right well to prosper in wealthfull peace vnder your cousins my children, if God send them life, and you love. Of which two things, the lesse losse were they, by whom through God did his pleasure, yet should the Realme alway find Kings, and peradventure as good Kings: but if you among your selues in a childs raigne fall at debate, many a good man shall perish, and happily he too, and ye too, ere this land find peace againe. Wherefore in these last words, that ever I like to speake with you, I exhort you and require you all, for the loue that you haue ever borne to me: for the loue that I haue ever borne vnto you: for the loue that our Lord beareth to vs all, from this time forward all griefes forgotte, each of you loue other. Which I verily trust you will, if ye any thing earthly regard, eyther God or your king, affinitie or kinred, this Realme, your owne country, or your owne surety. And therewithall the King no longer inouring to sit vp, laid him downe on his right side, his face toward them: and none was there present that could refraine from weeping. But the Lords recomforting him with as good words as they could, and answering for the time, as they thought to stand with his pleasure, there in his presence, as by their words appeared, each forgaue other, and ioyned their hands together, when (as it after appeared by their deeds) their hearts were far asunder. As soone as the King was departed, the noble Prince his son drew toward London, which at the time of his decease kept his houshold at Ludlow in Wales, which countrey being farre off from the law and recourse to iustice, was begon to be far out of good will, and worsen wilde robbers and rouers, walking at liberty vncorrected.

And for this occasion the Prince was in the life of his father sent thither, to the end that the authority of his presence, should refraine euill disposed persons, from the boldnes of their former outrages. To the gouernance and ordering of this young Prince, at his sending thither, was there appointed Sir Anthonie Wooduille L. Lord Riuers. Riuers and brother vnto the Q. a right honorable man, as valiant of hand, as politike in counsell. Adioyned were there vnto him other of the same party, and in effect euery one as hee was next of the kinne vnto the Quene, was planted next about the Prince.

That drift by the Quene not vnwisely deuised, whereby her blood might of youth bee rooted in the princes fauour, the Duke of Glocester turned vnto their destruction, and vpon that ground set the foundation of all his vnhappy building. For whomsoeuer he perceiued either at variance with them, or bearing himselfe their fauor, he breake vnto them some by mouth, some by writing & secret messengers, that it was neyther reason, nor in any wise to be suffered, that the young king their master and kinsman, should be in the hands and custody of his mothers kinred, sequestred in manner from their company and attendance, of which euery one ought him as faithfull seruices as they, and many of them fare more honorable part of him than his mothers side. Whose blood (quoth he) hauing the Kings pleasure, was full vnmeetely to be matched with his: which now to be as who say remoued from the King, and the lesse noble to bee left about him, is (quoth he) neither honorable to his maiestie, nor vnto vs, & also to his grace no surety, to haue the mightiest of his friends from him, and vnto vs no little ieopardy, to suffer our well pewed euill willers to growe in ouer great authoritie with the Prince in youth, namely, which is light of belefe and some perlipaded. For remember, I trow, King Edward himselfe, albeit he was a man of age and discretion, yet was hee in many things ruled by the best, more then stode either with honor or our profit, or with the commodity of any man else, except onely the immoderate aduancement of themselues. Which whether they sozer thirsted after their own wealth, or our wo, it were hard I wéene to gesse. And if some folkes friendship had not holden better place with the King, then any respect of kinred, they might peraduenture easily haue be trapped and brought to confusion some of vs ere this. Why not as easily as they haue done some other already, as nére of his royall blood as we? But our Lord hath wrought his will: and thanks be to his grace that peril is past. Howbeit as great is growing, if we suffer this young King in our enemies hand, which without his witting might abuse the name of his commandement, to any of our vndoing, which thing God and good prouision forbid.

Of which good prouision none of vs hath any thing the lesse need, for the late made attonement in which the kings pleasure had more place then the parties wils: nor none of vs, I beléeue, doth vnbuske our some to truss a new friend made of an old foe, or to thinke that an howrely kindnes suddenly contract in one houre, continued yet scant a fortenight, should be deper setled in their stomacke then a long accustomed malice, many yeres rooted. With these words and writings & such other, the Duke of Glocester, some set a fire them that were of themselues cold to kindle, and in especiall twaine, Edward Duke of Buckingham, and Will. Lord Hastings and chamberlaine, both men of honor and great power: The one by long succession from his ancestry: the other by his office, and the Kings fauor.

These two not bearing each to other so much loue, as hatred both vnto the Quenes part, in this point accorded together with the Duke of Glocester, that they would vtterly remoue from the Kings company all his mothers friends, vnder the name of their enemies.

Upon this concluded, the Duke of Glocester vnderstanding that the Lords which at that time were about the King, intended to bring him vp to his coronation, accompanied with such power of their friends, that it should bee hard for him to bring his purpose to passe, without the gathering a great assembly of people, & in manner of open war, whereof the end he wist was doubtfull, and in which the King being on their side, his part should haue the face and name of a rebellion: he secretly therefore by diuers meanes caused the Quéene to be perswaded and brought in the minde, that it neither were need, and also should be ieopardous, the King to come vp strong. For whereas now euery Lord loued other, and none other thing studied vpon, but about the coronation and honor of the King, if the Lords of her kinred should assemble in the Kings name much people, they should giue the Lords, atwixt whom and them hadde borne sometime debate, to feare and suspect, lest they should gather this people not for the kings safegard, whom no man impugned, but for their destruction, hauing more regard to their old variance, then their new attonement: for which cause they should assemble on the other party much people againe for their defence, whose power the wise well farre strecched. And thus should all the Realme fall on a roze. And of all the hurt that thereof should ensue, which was likely not to be little, and the most harme there like to fall where the least would, all the world would put her and her kindred in the wight, and say that they had vnwisely and vntruly also broken the amitie and peace, that the King her husband so prudently made betwéene his kin and hirs in his death bed, and which the other party faithfully obserued.

The Quéene being in this wise perswaded, such word sent vnto her sonne, and vnto her brother, being about the King, and ouer that the Duke of Glocester himselfe and other Lords the chiefe of his bende, wrote vnto the King so reuerently, and to the Quénes friends there so louingly, that they nothing earthly mistrusting brought the King vp in a great hast (not in good spéed,) with a sober company. Now was the K. in his way to London gon from Northampton, when the Dukes of Glocester & Buckingham came thither, where remained behind the Lord Riuers the Kings vncle, intending on the morrow to follow the King, and be with him at Stony Stratford, twelue miles thence, early ere he departed. So was there maor that night much friendly chére betweene these two Dukes and the Lord Riuers a great while. But incontinent after that they were openly with great courtesie departed, and the Lord Riuers lodged, the Dukes secretly with a few of their most priuy friends, set them downe in Councell, wherein they spent a great part of the night: and at their rising in the dawning of the daye, they sent out priuily to their seruants in their Innes and Lodgings about, giuing them commandement, to make themselues shortly ready, for their Lords were to horse backward. Upon which messages, many of their folke were attendant, when many of the Lord Riuers seruants were vnready. Now had these Dukes taken also into their custody the keies of the Inne, that none should passe forth without their licence. And ouer this, in the high way toward Stony Stratford where the King lay, they had bestowed certaine of their folke, that should send backe againe, and compell to returne any man that were gotten out of Northampton toward Stony Stratford, till they should giue other licence: For as much as the Dukes themselues intended for the shew of their diligence, to be the first that should that day attend vpon the Kings highnes out of that Towne: thus bare they folke in hand. But when the Lord Riuers vnderstood the gates closed, and the wayes on euery side beset, neyther his seruants nor himselfe suffered to goe out, perceiuing well so great a thing without his knowledge not begunne for naught, comparing this maner present, with his last nights chére, in so fewe houres so great a chang, maruellously mistiked. Howbeit, sith he could not get away, and kepe himselfe close bee would not, lest he should séeme to hide himselfe for some secret feare of his owne fault, wherof he saw no such cause in himselfe: he determined vpon the surety of his owne conscience, to goe boldly to them, and inquire what this matter might meane: who as soone as they saw, they began to quarrell with him, and say that he intended to set diffiance betweene the King and them, and to bring them to confusion, but it should not lie in his power. And when he began (as he was a very well spoken man) in godly wise to excuse himselfe, they tarried not the end of his answere, but shortly take him and put him in ward: and that done, forthwith went to horseback, and take the way to Stony Stratford, where they found the King with his company, ready to leape on horseback, and depart forward to leaue that lodging for them, because it was to streight for his both companies. And as soone as they came in presence, they alight downe with all their company about them: To whom the Duke of Buckingham said, go afore gentlemen, and yeomen kepe your rowmes.

The Lord Riuers put in ward.

And thus in godly array they came to the King, and on their knées in very humble wise saluted his grace which receiued them in very topous and amiable manner, nothing earthly knowing nor mistrusting as yet: But euen by and by in his presence they picked a quarrell to the Lord Richard Gray, the kings other brother by his mother, saying, that he with the Lord Marques his brother, and the Lord Riuers his vncle had compassed to rule the King and the realme, and to set variance among the states, & to subdue and destroy the noble blod of the realme: Toward the accomplishing whereof they said, that the Lord Marques had entered into the tower of London, and thence taken out the Kings treasure and sent men to the Sea.

The Lord Gray.

All which things these Dukes well wist were done for good purposes and necessary, by the whole councell at London, sauing that somewhat they must say. Unto which words the K. answered: What my brother Marques hath done I cannot say: but in good faith I dare well answere for mine vncle Riuers and my brother here, that they be innocent of any such matter.

ter. Yea my Leage, quoth the Duke of Buckingham, they haue kept their dealing in these matters far from the knowledge of your good grace. And forthwith they arrested the Lord Richard, and Sir Thomas Vaughan, knight, in the Kings presence, and brought the King and all backe vnto Northampton, where they tooke againe further Counsell: And there they sent away from the King whom it pleased them, and set new seruants about him, such as liked better them then him: at which dealing hee wept, and was nothing content, but it bated not. And at dinner, the Duke of Glocester sent a dish from his owne table to the Lord Riuers, praying him to be of good chéere, all should be well enough: and he thanked the Duke, and praied the messenger to beare it to his nephew, the Lord Richard; with the same message for his comfort, as one to whom such aduersity was strange, but himselfe had béene all his daies in vre therewith, and therefore could beare it the better. But for all his comfortable curtesie of the Duke of Glocester, he sent the Lord Riuers, and the Lord Richard, with Sir Thomas Vaughan, into the North Countrey, into diuers places to prison, and afterward all to Pontfract, where they were in conclusion beheaded.

The death of the Lord Riuers and others.

In this wise the Duke of Glocester tooke vpon himselfe the order and gouernance of the young King, whom with much honour, and humble reuerence, he conueyed vpward, toward the City. But anon, the tydings of this matter came hastely to the Quéene, a little before the midnight following, and that in the forest wise, that the King her son was taken, her brother, her son, and other friends arrested, and sent, no man wist whither, to be done with, God wot what. With which tydings, the Quéene in great fright and heauinesse bewailing her childes raigne, her friends mis-chance, and her owne mis-fortune, damning the time that euer she diswaded the gathering of power about the King, gat her selfe in all hast possible with her younger sonne, and her daughters, out of the Palace of Westminster, in which she then lay, into the Sanctuary, lodging her selfe and her company there in the Abbots place.

The Quéene taketh Sanctuary.

Now came there one likewise not long after midnight from the Lord Chamberlaine, vnto the Archbishop of Yorke, then Chancelor of England, to his place, not far from Westminster: And for that he shewed his seruants that he had tidings of so great importance, that his Master gaue him in charge, not to forbeare his rest, they letted not to wake him, nor for to admit this messenger to his bed-side. Of whom hee heard that these Dukes were gone backe with the Kings grace, from Stony Stratford, to Northampton: Notwithstanding, Sir, (quoth he) my Lord sendeth your Lordship word, that there is no feare, for he assureth you that all shall be well. I assure him, quoth the Archbishop, be it as well as it will, it will neuer be so well as we haue séene it: and thereupon, by and by, after the messenger departed; he called to all the haste, all his seruants to be called vp, and so with his owne houshold about him, and euery man weapned, hee tooke the great Seale with him, and caine yet before day vnto the Quéene. About whom he found much heauinesse, rumble, hast, and businesse, carriage and conueyance of her stuffe into Sanctuary, Chests, Coffers, Packs, Fardells, trussed all on mens backs, no man vnoccupied, some loading, some going, some discharging, some comming for more, some breaking downe the walls, to bring the nert way, and some yet drew to them to helpe to carry a wrong way.

The Quéene her selfe sate alone, alow on the rushes all desolate and dismaied, whom the Archbishop comforted in the best manner he could, shewing her, that he trusted the matter was nothing so forze as she take it for, and that he was put in good hope, and out of feare, by the message sent him from the Lord Chamberlaine: Ah, woe worth him (quoth she) for he is one of them that laboureth to destroy me and my blod.

Madame (quoth he) be ye of good cheere, for I assure you, if they crowne any other King then your sonne, whom they now haue with them, we shall on the morrow crowne his brother, whom you haue here with you. And héere is the great Seale, which in likewise, as that Noble Prince, your husband, deliuered it vnto me, so héere I deliuer it vnto you, to the vse and behalfe of your sonne, and therewith he betooke her the great Seale, and departed home againe, yet in the dawning of the day. By which time, he might in his Chamber window see all the Thames full of Boats of the Duke of Glocesters seruants, watching, that no man should goe to Sanctuary, nor none should passe vnlearned: Then was there great commotion and mutemur as well in other places about, as specially in the City, the people diuerly drumming vpon this dealling. And some Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, either for fauour of the Queen, or for feare of themselues, assembled in sundry companies, and went flock-meale in harnesse: and many also, for that they reckoned this demeanor attempted, not so specially against the other Lords, as against the King himselfe, in the disturbance of his coronation. But then by and by, the Lords assembled together, toward which meeting, the Archbishop of Yorke, fearing that it would be aferibed (as it was indéede) to his ouermuch lightnesse, that hee so suddenly had resbed vp the great Seale to the Quéene, to whom the custody thereof nothing pertained, without special commandement of the King, secretly sent for the Seale againe, and brought it with him, after the customable manner. And at this meeting, the Lord Hastings, whose truth toward the King no man doubted, nor needed to doubt, perswaded the Lords, to beleeue, that the Duke of Glocester was sure, and fastly faithfull to his Prince, and that the Lord Riuers, and Lord Richard, with the other Knights, were for matters attempted by them against the Dukes of Glocester and Buckingham, put vnder arrest for their surety, not for the Kings ieopardy: and that they were also in safe ward, and there no longer should remaine then till the matter were, not by the Dukes onely, but also by all the other Lords of the Kings Councell indifferently examined, and by other directions ordered, and either iudged or appeased.

But one thing hee aduised them, beware that they iudged not the matter too farre-forth, ere they knew the truth, nor turning their priuate grudges into the common hurt, irking, and prouoking men vnto anger, and disturbing the Kings Coronation, toward which, the Dukes were comming vp, that they might, peraduenture, bring the matter so farre out of ioynt, that it should neuer be brought in frame againe. Which strife, if it should happen, as it were likely, to come to a field, though both parties were in all things equall, yet should the authority be on that side where the King is himselfe. With these perswasions of the Lord Hastings, whereof part himselfe beleeued, of part he wist the contrary, these commotions were somewhat appeased, but especially by that that the Dukes of Glouceſter and Buckingham, were so neere, and came so shortly on with the King, in none other manner, with none other pompe or semblance then to his Coronation, causing the fame to be blowne about, that these Lords and knights which were taken, had contrined the destruction of the Dukes of Glouceſter and Buckingham, and of other the Noble blood of the realme, to the end that themselues would alone demeane and gouerne the King at their pleasure.

And for the colourable proofe thereof, such of the Dukes seruants as rode with the Carts of their stuffe, that were taken (among which stuffe, no marueil, though some were harneſle, which at the breaking vp of the houshold, must needes either be brought away, or cast away) they shewed vnto the people, all the waies as they went: Lo, here be the barrells of harneſle that these traytors had priuily conueyed in their carriage to destroy the Noble Lords withall.

This deuice, albeit it made the matter to wise men more vnlikely, wel perceiuing that the intenders of such a purpose would rather haue had their harneſle on their backs, then to haue bound them vp in barrells: yet much part of the common people were therewith very well satisfied and said it were almes to hang them.

The King comming to London.

When the King approched nere to the City, Edmond Shaa, Gold-smith, then Maior, with William White, and John Mathew, Sheriffes, and all the other Aldermen in Scarlet, with 500. horse of the Citizens in violet, receiued him reuerently at Harnsey, and riding from thence accompanied him into the City, which hee entred the fourth day of May, the first and last yere of his raigne.

The King was lodged in the Bishops Palace, where was kept a great Councell, and there was sworne to the King, the Duke of Glouceſter, the Duke of Buckingham, and all the Lords.

But the Duke of Glouceſter bare him in open sight so reuerently to the Prince, with all semblance of loue vnfeigned, that from the obloquie in which hee was so late before, hee was suddenly raised into so great truſt, that at the Councell next assembled, hee was made the onely man, those, and thought most meete to be Protector of the King and his Realme, so that (were it destiny, or were it folly) the Lambe was betaken to the Wolfe to keepe. At which Councell also, the Archbishop of Yorke, Chancellor of England which had deliuered vp the great Seale to the Quéene, was therefore greatly reproued, and the Seale taken from him, and deliuered to Doctor Russell, Bishop of Lincolne, a wise man, and a good, and of much experience, and one of the best learned men, vndoubtedly, that England had in his time. Diuers Lords and Knights were appointed vnto diuers rowmes. The Lord Chamberlaine, and some other kept still their Offices that they had before.

The Protector made.

The Bishop of Lincolne made Lord Chancellor.

Now all were it, so that the Protector so sore thirsted for the finishing of that hee had begunne, that thought euery day a yere, till it was atchiued, yet durst he no further attempt, as long as hee had but halfe his prey in his hand: well witting, that if hee depoſed the one brother, all the Realme would fall to the other, if hee either remained in Sanctuary, or should happily be shortly conueyed to his farther liberty. Wherefore incontinent, at the next méeting of the Lords at the Councell, hee proposed vnto them, that it was a heinous déed of the Quéen, and proceeding of great malice toward the Kings Councellors, that she should keepe in Sanctuary the Kings brother from him, whose speciall pleasure and comfort were to haue his brother with him. And that by her done to none other intent, but to bring all the Lords in obloquie, and murmour of the people: as though they were not to be truſted with the Kings brother, that by the assent of the Nobles of the Land, were appointed, as by the Kings nérest friends, to the tuition of his royall person. The prosperity whereof standeth (quoth he) not all in keeping from enemies, or all viand, but partly also in recreation, and moderate pleasure, which hee cannot in his tender youth take in the company of ancient persons, but in the familiar conuersation of those that be neither far vnder, nor far aboue his age, nay the leſſe of estate conuenient to accompany his Noble Paieſty; wherefore, with whom, rather then with his owne brother? And if any man think this consideration (which I think no man thinketh that loueth the King) let him consider, that sometime, without small things, greater cannot stand. And verily, it redounded greatly to the dishonour both of the Kings highneſle, and of all vs, that héere about his grace, to haue it runne in euery mans mouth, not in this Realme onely, but also in other Lands (as still words walke farre) that the Kings brother should be faine to kéepe Sanctuary. For euery man will weene, that no man will so doe for nought. And such euill opinion once faſtened in mens hearts, hard it is to wraſt out, and many grow to more griefe then any man can léere diuine: wherefore mée thinketh it were not worſt to send vnto the Quéene, for the redreſſe of this matter, some honourable truſty man, such as both tendereth the Kings weale, and the honour of his Councell, and is also in fauour and credence with her. For all which considerations, none seemeth mée more méete, then our reuerend Father héere present, my Lord Cardinall, who may in this matter doe most good of any man, if it please him to take the paine, which I doubt not of his goodneſle he will not refuſe, for the Kings sake and ours, and wealth of the young Duke himselfe, the Kings most honourable brother, and after my Soueraigne Lord himselfe, most deare Nephew, considered that thereby shall be ceaſed the slanderous rumour and obloquie now going, and the hurts auoyded, that thereof might ensue, and much reſt and quiet grow to all the Realme. And if she be percaſe so obſtinate, and so précisely set vpon her owne will, that neither his wiſe nor faithfull aduertisement cannot moue her, nor any mans reason content her: then shall we by mine aduice, by the Kings authority, fetch him out of that prison, and bring him to his Noble presence, in whose continuall company he shall be so well cherished, and so honorably intreated, that all the world shall to our honour and her reproch perceiue, that it was onely malice, frowardneſle, or folly, that caused her to keepe him there: this is my minde in this matter for this time, except any of your Lordships any thing perceiue to the contrary, for neuer shall I by Gods grace, so wed my ſelfe to mine owne will, but that I shall be ready to change it vpon your better aduices.

The Protector to Queene.

When the Protector had said, all the Counſell affirmed, that the motion was good and reasonable, and to the King and the Duke his brother, honourable, and a thing that should ceaſe great murmur in the Realme, if the mother might be by good meanes induced to deliuer him. Which thing the Archbishop of Yorke, whom they all agreed to be thereto most conuenient, tooke vpon him to moue her, and therein to doe his vttermost deuoire. Howbeit, if shee could in no wiſe be intreated with her good will to deliuer him, then thought hée, and such other as were of the spirituality present, that it were not in any wiſe to be attempted, to take him out against her will. For it would be a thing that should turne to the great grudge of all men, and high displeaſure of God, if the priuiledge of that holy place should now bée broken, which had so many yéres béene kept, which both Kings and Popes so good had granted, so many had confirmed, and which holy ground was more then 500. yéeres agoo by Saint Peter in his owne person in spirit, accompanied with great multitude of Angells by night so specially hallowed, and dedicated to God (for the proofe whereof, they haue yet in the Abbey, Saint Peters Cope to shew) from that time hitherwards, was there neuer so vndeuout a King, that durſt that sacred place violate, or so holy a Bishop that durſt it presume to consecrate. And therefore (quoth the Archbishop of Yorke) God forbid that any man should for any thing, earthly, enterprize to breake the immunition and liberty of the sacred Sanctuary. that hath béene the safeguard of so many a good mans life. And I truſt (quoth hée) with Gods grace, wée shall not méede it. But for any manner méede, I would not wée should doe it. I truſt that shee shall be with reason contented, and all things in good manner obtained. And if it happen that I bring it not so to paſſe, yet shall I toward it so farre forth doe my best, that yet shall all well perceiue, that no lacke of my deuoire, but the mothers dread and womanish feare, shall be the let. Womanish feare, nay, womanish frowardneſle (quoth the Duke of Buckingham) for I dare take it vpon my soule, she well knoweth, shée néedeth no such thing to feare, either for her sonne, or for her ſelfe. For as for her, héere is no man that will be at warre with women: would God some of her kinne were women too, and then should all be sone in reſt. Howbeit, there is none of her kinne the leſſe loued, for that they be her kinne, but for their owne euill deseruing. And natheleſſe, if we loued neither her nor her kin, yet were there no cause to thinke that we should hate the Kings Noble brother, to whose grace, we our ſelues be of kin: whose honor if she as much desired, as our dishonor, and as much regard took to his wealth, as to her owne will, she would be as loth to ſuffer him from the King as any of vs be. For if she haue wit (as would God she had as god will as she hath néed wit) she reckoneth her ſelfe no wiſer then shée thinketh some that be heere, of whose faithfull minde she nothing doubteth, but verily beleeueth and knoweth that they would be as sory of his harme, as her ſelfe, and yet would haue him from her, if shee bide there: and wée all (I thinke) content, that both be with her, if she come thence, and bide in such place where they may with the honor be.

Now then, if she refuſe in the deliuerance of him, to follow the Counſell of them, whose wiſdome she knoweth, whose truth she well truſteth: it is either to perceiue that frowardnes letteth her, and not feare. But goe to, suppose that she feare (as who may let her to feare her owne shaddow) the more she feareth to deliuer him, the more ought wée feare to leaue him in her hands. For if shee cast such fond doubts that shee feare his hurt: then will shee feare that he shall be fetcht thence. For she will some thinke, that if men were set (which God forbid) vpon so great a miſchiefe, the Sanctuary would little let them: which as good men might (as me thinketh) without sinne, somewhat leſſe regard then they doe.

Now then, if her doubt, leſt hee might be fetched from her, it is not likely enough that she should send him some where out of the Realme. Verily I looke for none other. And I doubt not, but shee now as sore minded it, as wée the let thereof. And if shee might happen to bring that to paſſe, (as it were no great matterre, wée letting her alone) all the world would say, that wée were a wiſe sort of Councellors about a King, that let his brother be cast away vnder our noſes. And therefore, I enforce you faithfully for my minde, I will rather waugre her minde, fetch him away, then leaue him there, till her frowardneſle and fond feare conuey him awap. And yet will I breake no Sanctuary therefore. For verily fithy the priuiledges of that place and other like haue beene of long continued, I am not hee that would be about to breake them. And in good faith, if they were now to begin, I would not be hee that should be about to make them.

Yet will I not say nay, but that it is a deede of pitty, that such men as the Sea, or their euill debtors haue brought in poverty, should haue some place of liberty, to keepe their bodies out of the danger of their cruell creditors.

And also if the Crowne happen (as it hath done) to come in question while either part taketh other as traytors, I will well there be some places of refuge for both.

But as for theeues, of which these places be full, and which neuer fall from the craft, after they once fall thereto, it is pitty the Sanctuary should serue them: and much more, manquellers, whom God bad to take from the Altar, and kill them, if their murther were wilfull. And where it is otherwise, there need we not the sanctuaries that God appointed in the old Law. For if either necessity, his owne defence, or misfortune draweth him to that deede, a pardon serueth, which either the Law granteth of course, or King of pitty may.

Then loke me now, how few Sanctuary-men there be, whom any fauorable necessity compelled to goe thither, and then see on the other side, what a sort there be commonly therein of them, whom wilfull vnthriftinesse hath brought to naught.

What a rabble of theeues, murtherers, and malicious heynous traytors, and that in two places especially? The one at the elbow of the City, the other in the very bowells. I dare well answer it, weygh the good that they doe, with the hurt that commeth of them, and yee shall find it much better to lacke both, then haue both. And this I say, although they were not abused as they now be, and so long haue bin, that I feare me euer they will be, while men be afraid to set their handes to the amendment, as though God and S. Peter were the patrons of vngratious liuing.

Westminster and Saint Martins.

Now vnthrifts riot, and run in debt, vpon the boldnesse of these places, yea, and rich men run thither with prodemens goods, there they build, there they spend, and bid their creditors goe whistle them.

The abuse of Sanctuaries

Mens wiues run thither with their husbands plate, and say, they dare not abide with their husbands for beating.

Theeues bring thither their stolne goods, and there liue thereon.

There because they new robberies, nightly they steale out, they rob and reaue, and kill and come in againe, as though those places gaue them not only a safegard for the harme they haue done, but a licence also to doe more. Howbeit, much of this mischiefe, if wise-men would set their handes to it, might be amended with great thanks of God, and no breach of the priuiledge.

The residue, (this long agoe, I wot neare what Pope, and what Prince more pittious than politicke, hath granted it, and other men since, of a certaine religious feare, haue not broken it, let vs take a paine therewith, and let it a Gods name stand in force, as farre forth as reason will, which is not fully so farre, as may serue to let vs of the fetching forth of this Noble man to his honour and wealth, out of that place, in which hee neither is, nor can be a Sanctuary-man.

A Sanctuary serueth allway to defend the body of that man that standeth in danger abroad, not of great hatt onely, but also of lawfull hurt, for against vnlawfull harmes, neuer Pope, nor King intended to priuiledge any one place, for that priuiledge hath euery place: knoweth any man any place wherein it is lawfull one man to doe another wrong?

That no man vnlawfully take hurt, that liberty, the King, the Law, and euery nature forbiddeth in euery place, and maketh, to that regard, for euery man, euery place a Sanctuary.

But where a man is by lawfull meanes in perill, there needeth he the tuition or some speciall priuiledge, which is the onely ground and cause of all Sanctuaries: from which necessity, this Noble Prince is farre, whose loue to his King, nature and kindred prooueth, whose innocency to all the world, his tender youth proueth, and so Sanctuary, as for him, neyther none he needeth, nor also none can haue.

When come not to Sanctuary, as they come to baptisme, to require it by their Godfathers, he must alke it himselfe, that must haue it, and reason, sith no man hath cause to haue it, but whose conscience of his owne fault maketh him faine, need to require it: what will then hath ponder habe: which and if he had discretion to require it, if neede were, I dare say, would naie be right angry with them that kepe him there: and I would thinke without any scruple of conscience, without any breach of priuiledge, to be somewhat more homely with them that be there Sanctuary-men inside.

For if one goe to Sanctuary with another mans goods, why should not the King leauing his body at liberty, satisfie the partie of his goods, euen within the Sanctuary? for neyther King nor Pope, can giue any place such a priuiledge, that it shall discharge a man of his debts, being able to pay: and with that, diuers of the Clergie that were present, whether they said it for his pleasure, or as they thought, agreed plainely, that by the Law of God, and of the Church, the goods of a Sanctuary-man should be deliuered in payment of his debts, and stolne goods to the owner, and onely liberty reserued him to get his liuing with the labour of his hands. Verily (quoth the Duke) I thinke you say very truth, and what if a mans wife will take Sanctuarie, because she list to runne from her husband? I would weene, if she could alledge none other cause, he may lawfully without any displeasure to Saint Peter, take her out of Saint Peters Church by the arme. And if no body may be taken out of Sanctuary, that (saith hee) will bide there, then if a child will take Sanctuary, because he feareth to goe to Schole, his Master must let him alone. And as simple as that sample is, yet is there lesse reason in our case then in that: for therein, though thought it be a childish feare, yet is there, at the least wise, some feare, and therein is there none at all. And berily, I haue often heard of Sanctuary-men, but I neuer heard earst of Sanctuary-children. And therefore, as for the conclusion of my minde, who so may haue deserued to neede it, if they thinke it for their surety, let them keepe it. But hee can be no Sanctuary-man, that neither hath wisedome to desire it, nor malice to deserue it, whose life or liberty can by no lawfull processe stand in leopardy. And hee that taketh one out of Sanctuary to doe him good, I say plainely, that he breaketh no Sanctuary.

When the Duke had done, the temporall men whole, and a good part of the spirituall also, thinking no hurt earthly ment toward the young babe, condescended in effect, that if hee were not deliuered, he should be fetched: Howbeit, they thought it all best, in the auoyding of all manner of rumour, that the Lord Cardinall should first allaple to get him with her goodwill. And thereupon, all the Councell came vnto the Star-chamber at Westminster, and the Lord Cardinall leauing the Protector with the Councell in the Starre-chamber, departed into the Sanctuary to the Queene, with diuers other Lords with him, were it for the respect of his honor, or that the should by presence of so many, perceiue that this errand was not one mans minde: or were it for that the Protector intended not in this matter, to trust to any one man alone, or else that if the finally were determined to keepe him, some of that company had haply secret instruction incontinent, maugre her mind, to take him, & to leaue her no respite to conuey him, which she was likely to mind after this matter broken to her, if her time would in any wise serue her.

When the Queene, and these Lords were come together in presence, the Lord Cardinall shewed vnto her, that it was thought vnto the Protector, and vnto the whole Councell, that her keeping of the Kings brother in that place, was the thing, which highly sounded, not onely to the great rumour of the people, and their obloquie, but also to the importable griefe and displeasure of the Kings royall Maiesty, to whole grace it were as singular comfort to haue his naturall brother in his company, as it was their both dishonor, and all theirs, & hers also, to suffer him in Sanctuary, as though the one brother stod in danger and perill of the other. And her shewed her, that the Councell therefore had sent him vnto her, to require her the deliuery of him, that hee might be brought vnto the Kings presence at his liberty, out of that place, which they reckoned as a prison, and there should he be demeaned, according to his estate, and he, in this doing, should both doe great good to the Realme, pleasure to the Councell, and profit to her selfe, succour to her friends that were in distresse, and ouer that (which he wist well he specially tendred) not only great comfort and honour to the King, but also to the young Duke himselfe, whose both great wealth it were to be together, as well for many greater causes, as also for their both disport, and recreation: which thing, the Lord esteemed no lesse, though it pretended light, well ponoring that their pouth without recreation and play, cannot endure, nor any stranger, for the coniecture of their both ages and estates, so meetely in that point for any of them, as either of them for other.

My Lord (quoth the Queene) I say not nay, but that it were very conuenient that this Gentleman, whom ye require, were in company of the King his brother: and in good faith, me thinketh it were as great commodity to them both, as for yet a while, to be in the custody of their mother, the tender age conforted of the elder of them both, but specially the younger, which besides his infancy, that also needeth good looking to, hath a while beene so sore diseased, bered with sickneese, and is so newly rather a little amended, then well recouered, that I dare put no person earthly in trust with his keeping, but my selfe onely, considering that there is (as Phylitians say, and as wee also finde) double the perill in the recouination, that was in the first sickeneese, with which disease, Nature being sore laboured, sore wearied, and weakned, wareth the lesse able to beare out and sustaine a new sorfeit. And albeit there might be fonnd other that would happily doe their best vnto him, yet is there none that ye know better how to order him, then I that so long haue kept him: or is more tenderly like to cherish him, then his owne mother that bare him. No man denieth, good Madam (quoth the Cardinall) but that your grace were of all folke most necessarie about your children: and so would all the Councell not only be content, but glad that ye were, if it might stand with your pleasure, to be in such place as might stand with their honour. But if you doe appoint your selfe to tarry heere, then thinke they it more conuenient that the Duke of Yorke were with the King honourably at his liberte, to the comfort of them both, then here as a Sanctuary-man, to their both dishonor and obloquie, sith there is not allway so great necessity to haue the childe to be with the mother, but that occasion may sometime be such, that it should be more expedient to keepe him elsewhere, which in this well appeareth, that at such time, as your dearest sonne then Prince, and now King, should for his honor, and good order of the Country, keepe houshold in Wales, far out of your company: your grace was well content there with your selfe. Not very well content, quoth the Queene: And yet the case is not like, for the one was then in health, and the other is now sicke: in which case, I marnell greatly, that my Lord Protector, is so desirous to haue him in his keping, where if the childe in his sickneese mis-carry by nature, yet might he runne into slander and suspition of fraude, and where they call it a thing to sore against my childes honour, and theirs also, that he bideth in this place: it is all their honours there to suffer him abide, where no man doubteth he shall be best kept, and that is here, while I am here, which as yet intend not to rours forth and ieopard my selfe after other of my frends, which would God were rather here in surety with me, than I were there in ieopardy with them. Why Madam (quoth another Lord) know you any thing why they should be ieopardy? Nay verily Sir, quoth shee, nor why they should be in prison neither, as they now be. But it is, I trowe, no great maruell, though I feare lest those that haue not letted to put them in durance, without colour, will let as little to procure their destruction without cause. The Cardinall made a countenance to the other Lord, that hee should harpe no more vpon that string, and then said he to the Queen, that he nothing doubted, but that those Lords of her honorable kin, which, as yet, remained vnder arrest, should vpon the matter examined doe well enough: and as toward her Noble person, neither was, neither could be any manner ieopardy. Whereby should I trust that (quoth the Queene) in that I am guiltelesse as though they were guilty, in that I am with their enemies better loued than they? When they hate them for my sake, in that I am so mere of kinne to the King? and how farre they be off, if that would helpe, as God send grace it hurt not, and therefore, as for me, I purpose not, as yet, to depart hence. And as for this Gentleman, my sonne, I mind, that he shall be where I am, till I see further: for I assure you, for that I see some men so greedy, without any substantiall cause to haue him: This maketh mee much the more fearder to deliuer him. Truly Madam, quoth he, and the fearder that you be to deliuer him, the fearder haue here other men to suffer you to keepe him, lest your causelesse feare, might cause you farther to conuey him: and many be there, that thinke he can haue no priuiledge in this place, which neither can haue will to aske, nor malice to deserue it, and therefore they reckon no priuiledge broken, though they fetch him out, which, if you finally refuse to deliuer him, I verily thinke they will. So much dread hath my Lord his Uncle, for the tender loue hee beareth him, lest your grace should perhappe send him away.

The Queen. Ah Sir (quoth the Quéene) hath the Protector so tender zeale, that hee feareth nothing but lest hée should escape him? Whiniest he that I would send him hence, which neyther is in the plight to send out, and in what place could I reckon him sure, if he be not sure in the Sanctuary? Whereof was there neuer tyrant yet so dinelish, that durst presume to breake. And I trust, God is as strong now to withstand his aduersaries as euer he was. But my sonne can deserue no Sanctuary, and therefore hee cannot haue it. For soth he hath found a goodly glose, by which that place that may defend a thiefe, may not saue an innocent. But hée is in no ieopardy, nor hath no neede thereof: would God he had not. Doth the Protector, I pray God he may proue a Protector, trowest hée that I perceiue not, whereunto his painted processe draweth? it is not honorable that the Duke bide here: it were comfortable for them both, that hee were with his brother, because the King lacketh a play-fellow, be yee sure. I pray God send them both better play-fellowes then him, that maketh so high a matter in such a trifling pretext: as though there could none be found to play with the King, but if his brother, that hath no lust to play for sickenesse, come out of Sanctuary, out of his safegard to play with him. As though Princes, as young as they be, could not play, but with their Peeres, or children could not play, but with their kindred, with whom for the more part they agree much worse then with strangers. But the child cannot require his priuiledge: who told him so? Hée shall heare him aske it, and hée will. Howbeit, this is a gay matter, suppose he could not aske it, suppose he would not aske it, suppose he would aske to goe out, if I say hee shall not: if I aske the priuiledge but for my selfe, I say, hee that against my will taketh him out, breaketh the Sanctuary. Seemeth this liberty for my person onely, or for my goods too? See may not hence take my Horse from mee, and may you take my gold from me? He also is my ward: for as my learned Councell theweth me, sith hee hath nothing by descent holden by Knights seruice, the Law maketh his mother his guardian. Then may no man, I suppose, take my ward from me out of Sanctuarie, without the breach of Sanctuary. And if my priuiledge could not serue him, nor he aske it for himselfe, yet sith the Law committeth mee the custody of him, I may require it for him except the Law giue a childe a guardian onely for his goods and lands, discharging him of the cure and safe keeping of his body, for which onely both lands and goods serue.

¶ And if examples be sufficient to obtaine priuiledge for my childe, I neede not farre to seeke, for in this place, in which now hée (and which is now in question, whether my childe may take benefit of it) mine other sonne (now King) was borne, and kept in his cradle, and preferred to a more prosperous fortune, which I pray God long to continue. And as all you know, this is not the first time that I haue taken Sanctuary. For when my Lord, my husband was banished, and thrust out of his Kingdome, I fled hither, being great with child, and heere I bare the Prince. And when my Lord, my husband returned safe againe, and had the victory, then went I hence to welcome him home, and fro thence I brought my babe the Prince, vnto his father, when he first tooke him in his armes. And I pray God that my sons Palace may be as great safegard vnto him now raigning, as this place was sometime to the Enemy. In which place, I intend to keepe his brother, sith, &c. * Wherefore here intend I to keepe him, méer mans Law ferueth the guardian to keepe the infant. The Law of nature willeth the mother to keepe the child, Gods Law priuiledgeth the Sanctuary, and the Sanctuary my sonne, sith I feare to put him in the Protectors hands, that hath his brother already, and were (if both failed) inheritor to the crowne. The cause of my feare hath no man to go to examine, and yet feare I no farther then the Law feareth, which, as learned men tell me, forbiddeth euery man the custody of them, by whose death hée may inherit lesse land then a kingdome. I can no more, but wheresoeuer he be that breaketh this holy Sanctuary, I pray God shortly send him need of Sanctuary, when hée may not come to it: For taken out of Sanctuary would I not my mortall enemy were.

The Lord Cardinall perceiuing that the Queen ward euer the longer the further off, and also that she began to kindle and chafe, and spake more biting words against the Protector, and such as he neither beleued, and was also loth to heare; he said to her for a finall conclusion, that hée would no longer dispute the matter, but if she were content to deliuer the Duke to him, and to the other Lords present, he durst lay his own body and soule both in pledge, not onely for his surety, but also for his estate. And if she would giue them a resolute answer to the contrary, he would forthwith depart there withall, and thus whole would with this businesse afterwards, for he neuer intended more to moue her in the matter, in which shee thought that hee and all other also, saue her selfe, lacked eyther wit or truth: wit, if they were so dull, that they could nothing perceiue what the Protector intended; truth, if they should procure her sonne to be deliuered into his hands, in whom they should perceiue toward the childe any euill intend. d.

The Queene with these words, stood a good while in a great study: And for as much as her seemed the Cardinall readier to depart, then some of the remnant, and the Protector himselfe ready at hand, for that the berily thought shee could not keepe him there, but that he should incontinent be taken thence; and to conuey him elsewhere, neither had the time to serue her, nor place determined, nor persons appointed, all things vnready: This pellage came on her so suddenly, nothing lesse looking for, then to haue him fetcht out of Sanctuary, which she thought to be now best in such places about, that he could not be conueyed out vntaken; and partly (as shee thought) it might fortune her feare to be false, so well shee wist it was eyther needlesse, or bootlesse: wherefore, if shee should needes goe from him, thee deemed it best to deliuer him. And ouer that, of the Cardinalls faith shee nothing doubted, nor of some other Lords neyther, whom hée there saw. Which as shee feared lest they might be deceiued, so was the well assured they would not be corrupted: then thought shee, it should yet make them the more warily to looke to him, and the more circumspectly to see to his surety, if shee with her owne hands betooke him to them of trust. And at the last, thee tooke the young Duke by the hand, and said vnto the Lords: My Lords (quoth shée) and all my Lords, I neuer am so vnwise to mistrust your wits, nor so suspitious, to mistrust your truthes: of which thing I purpose to make you such a proofe, as if either of both lacked in you, might turne both mée to great sorrow, the Realme to much harme, and you to great reproch. For lo, heere is (quoth shée) this Gentleman, whom I doubt not but I could heere keepe safe, if I would, whatsoeuer any man say: and I doubt not also, but there be some abroad so deadly enemies vnto my blood, that if they wist where any of it lay in their owne body, they would let it out. Wée haue also experience that the desire of a Kingdome knoweth no kindred: The brother hath béene the brothers bane: and may the Nephewes be sure of their Uncle? each of these children is the others defence, while they be alunder, and each of their liues lyeth in the others body. Keepe one safe, and both be sure, and nothing for them both more perilous, then to be both in one place. For what wise Merchant aduentureth all his goods in one Ship? All this notwithstanding, heere I deliuer him, and his brother in him, to keepe, into your hands, of whom I shall aske them both before God and the world. Faithfull yee be, that wot I well, and I know well yee be wise. Power and strength to keepe him if you list, neyther lacke yee of your selfe, nor can lacke helpe in this case: And if yee cannot else where, then may you leaue him heere. But onely one thing I beseech you, for the truth which his father put in you euer, and for the truth that I put you in now, that as farre as you think that I feare too much, be you well ware that you feare not as farre too little. And therewithall she said vnto the childe, farewell mine owne worke sonne, God send you good keeping: let mée kisse you yet once ere you goe, for God knoweth when we shall kisse together againe: And therewith shée kissed him, and blessed him, turned her backe and wept, and went her way, leauing the child weeping as fast. When the Lord Cardinall, and those other Lords with him had receiued this young Duke, they brought him into the Starre-Chamber, where the Protector tooke him in his armes and kissed him, with these words: Now welcome my Lord, euen with all my very hert: And hée said in that, of likelihood as hée thought. Thereupon forthwith they brought him vnto the King his brother, into the Bithops Palace at Pauls, and from thence, to the Citty honourably into the Tower, out of the which, after that day, they neuer came abroad.

This that is between the marke ¶ and this * was not written by him in English, but is translated out of this history which he wrote in Latine.

¶ When the Protector had both the children in his hands, hée opened himselfe more boldly, both to certaine other men, and also chiefly to the Duke of Buckingham. Although I know that many thought that the Duke was priuy to all the Protectors counsell, euen from the beginning, and some of the Protectors friends said, that the Duke was the first mouer of the Protector to this matter, sending a priuy messenger vnto him, straight after King Edwards death. But other againe, which knew better the subtill wit of the Protector, deny that hee euer opened his enterprize to the Duke, vntill he had brought to passe the things before rehearsed. But when he had imprisoned the Quéenes kinsfolke, and gotten both her sonnes into his owne hands, then hee opened the rest of his purpose with lesse feare to them whom he thought méet for the matter, and specially to the Duke, who being won to his purpose, be though this strength woxe then halfe increased. The matter was broken vnto the Duke by subtill folkes, and such as were their crafts-maisters in the handling of such wicked deuices: who declared vnto him that the young King was offended with him for his kinsfolkes sake, and if he were ever able, he would reuenge them: who would pricke him forward thereunto, if they escaped (for they would remember their imprisonment) or else if they were put to death, without doubt, the yong King would be carefull for their deaths, whose imprisonment was grieuous vnto him. And that with repenting, the Duke should nothing availe, for there was no way left to redeeme his offence by benefits, but he should sooner destroy himselfe then saue the King, who with his brother and his kinsfolkes he saw in such places imprisoned, as the Protector might with a becke destroy them all: and that it were no doubt but he would doe it indeede, if there were any new enterprize attempted. And that it was likely, that as the Protector, had prouided priuy guard for himselfe, so had he spyalls for the Duke, and and traines to catch him, if he should be against him, and that peraduenture from them, whom he least suspected. For the state of things, and the dispositions of men were then such, that a man could not well tell whom he might trust, or whom he might feare.

These things, and such like, being beaten into the Dukes minde, brought him to that point, that where hee had repented the way that he had entred, yet would he goe forth in the same, and since he hath once begunne, he would stoutly goe through. And therefore to this wicked enterprize which he beleeued could not be vnpaid, he bent himselfe, and went through, and determined, that since the common mischiefe could not be amended, hee would turne it as much as he might to his owne commodity.

Then it was agreed that the Protector should haue the Dukes ayde to make him King, and that the Protectors onely lawfull sonne should marry the Dukes daughter, and that the Protector should grant him the quiet possession of the Castledome of Hertford, which he claimed as his inheritance, and could never obtaine it in King Edwards time: Besides these requests of the Duke, the Protector of his owne minde promised him a great quantitie of the Kings treas-sure, and of his houshold stuffe. And when they were thus at a point betweene themselues, they went about to prepare for the coronation of the young King, as they would haue it seeme. And that they might turne both the eyes and mindes of men from perceiuing of their drifts other where, the Lords being sent for from all parts of the Realme, came thicke to the solemnity:
But the Protector, and the Duke after that,
that they had sent the Lord Cardinall, the Archbishop of Yorke, then Lord Chancelor, the Bishop of Ely, the Lord Stanley, and the Lord Hastings, then Lord Chamberlaine, with many other Noble-men to commune and deuise about the coronation in one place, as fast were they in another place contryuing the contrary, and to make the Protector King. To which Councell, albeit there were admitted very few, and they were secret: yet began there heere and there about, some manner of muttering among the people, as though all should not long be well, though they neuer wist what they feared, nor wherefore, were it that before such great things mens hearts of a secret instinct of nature mis-giue them, as the Sea without winde swelleth of himselfe, sometime before a tempest: or were it that some one man haply somewhat perceiu-ing, filled many men with suspition, though he shewed few men what he knew. Howbeit, somewhat the dealing it selfe made men to muse on the matter, though the councell were close. For by little and little all folke withdrew from the Tower, and drew to Crosbies in Bishopps-gate streete, where the Protector kept his household. The Protector had the resort, the King in manner desolate.

Crosbies place.

While some for their business made suite to them that had the doing, some were by their friends secretly warned, that it might happily turne them to no good, to be too much attend-dant about the King, without the Protectors appointment, which remooued also diuers of the Princes old seruants from him, and set new about him.

Thus many things comming together, partly by chance, partly of purpole, caused at length not common people only, that wound with the winde, but wise-men also, and some Lords, eke to marke the matter, and muse thereon, so farre forth, that the Lord Stanley, that was after Earle of Darby, wisely mistrusted it, and said vnto the Lord Hastings, that mee much mis-liked these two seuerall Councells. For while wee (quoth hee) talke of one matter in the one place, little wot we whereof they talke in the other place. My Lord (quoth the Lord Hastings) of my life never doubt you: for while one man is there, which is never thence, never can there be thing once moued, that should sound amisse toward mee, but it should be in mine eares ere it were well out of their mouthes.

This meant he by Catesby, which was of his nere secret councell, and whom he very familiarly vsed, & in his most weighty matters put no man in so speciall trust, reckoning himselfe to no man so liefe, for hee well wist there was no man so much to him beholden, as was this Catesby, which was a man well learned in the lawes of this Land, and by the speciall fauour of the Lord Chamberlaine in good authority, and much rule bare he in the County of Lyncester, where the Lord Chamberlaines power chiefely lay. But surely great pitty was it, that he had not had either more truth, or lesse wit: for his dissimulation onely, kept all that mischefe vp. In whom if the Lord Hastings had not put so speciall trust, the Lord Stanley and he had departed with diuers other Lords, and broken all the daunce, for many ill signes that hee saw, which hee now construes all to the best. So surely thought he, that there could be no harme toward him in the Councell intended where Catesby was.

Catesby.

And of truth the Protector and the Duke of Buckingham made very good semblance vnto the the Lord Hastings and kept him much in company: And vndoubtedly the Protector loued him well, and loth was to haue lost him, sauing for feare lest his life should haue quailed their purpole. For which cause he mused Catesby to prouue with some words cast out a farre off, whether he could thinke it possible to win the Lord Hastings vnto their part: but Catesby, whether he assayed him, or assayed him not, reported vnto them, that he found him so fast, and heard him speake so terrible words, that hee durst no further breake.

And of truth the Lord Chamberlaine of very trust shewed vnto Catesby the distrust that other begaunne to haue in the matter: and therefore he fearing, lest their motion might with the Lord Hastings minish his credence, whereunto onely all the matter leaned, procured the Protector hastily to rid him. And much the rather, for that he trusted by his death to obtaine much of the rule that the Lord Hastings bare in his County: the onely desire whereof, was the allurement that induced him to be partner, and one speciall contriuer of all this horrible treason.

Whereupon, soone after, that is to wit, on the Friday, the 13. day of June, many Lords assembled in the Tower, and there late in Coun-cell, deuising the honourable solemnity of the Kings coronation, of which the time appointed then so neere approched, that the pageants, and subtilties were in making day and night at Westminster, and much victuall killed therefore, that afterward was cast away.

The Lords so sitting together communing of this matter, the Protector came in amongst them first about 9. of the clocke, saluting them courteously, and excusing himselfe that hee had been from them so long, saying merrily, that he had beene a sleeper that day.

And after a little talking with them, he said vnto the Bishop of Ely: My Lord, you haue very good Strawberies at your garden in Holborne, I require you let vs haue a messe of them.
Gladly my Lord (quoth he) would God I had some better thing as ready to your pleasure as that. And therewith in all the haste hee sent his seruant for a messe of Strawberies.

The Protector set the Lords fast in communing, and thereupon praying them to spare him for a little while, departed thence: And soone after one houre, betweene 10. and 11. hee return-ned into the chamber among them all, changed with a wonderfull sowre angry countenance, knitting the browes, frowning and fretting, and gnawing on his lips, and so fate him downe in his place, all the Lords much dismayed and sore marvelling of this maner of sudden change, and what thing should him aile. Then, when he had sitten still a while, thus he began: What were they worthy to haue, that compasse and imagine the destruction of me, being so neere of blood vnto the King, and Protector of his royall person and his Realme? At this question, all the Lords sate sore astonished, musing much by whom this question should be meant, of which euery man wist himselfe clere.

Then the Lord Chamberlaine, as he that for the loue he bare them, thought hee might be boldest with him, answered and said, that they were worthy to be punished as heynous traytors, whatsoeuer they were: And all the other affirmed the same. That is (quoth he) yonder sorceresse, my brothers wife, and other with her, meaning the Queene. At these words many of the other Lords were greatly abashed that fauoured her. But the Lord Hastings was in his mind better content that it was moued by her, then by any other whom he loued better: albeit, his heart somewhat grudged, that he was not afore made of Councell in this matter, as he was of the taking of her kindred, and of their putting to death, which were by his assent before deuised to be beheaded at Pontfract this selfe same day, in which he was not ware that it was by other deuised, that himselfe should be beheaded the same day at London. Then said the Protector, Ye shall all see in what wise that sorceresse, and that other witch of her councell, Shores wife, with their affinity, haue by their sorcerys and witchcraft wasted my body: And therewith he plucked vp his doblet sleeue to his elbow vpon his left arme, where her thewed a werith withered arme, and small, as it was neuer other. And thereupon euery mans mind sore mis-gaue them, well perceiuing that this matter was but a quarrell: for they well wist, that the Queen was to wise to goe about any such folly:
And also if she would, yet would she of all folke least make Shores wife of councell, whom of all women she most hated, as that Concubine whom the King her husband, had most loued: And also, no man was there present, but well knew that his arme was euer such since his birth. Natheles-lesse, the Lord Chamberlaine (which from the death of King Edward kept Shores wife, on whom he somewhat doted in the Kings life, sa-ing (as it is said) be that while forbare her of reuerence toward the King, or else of a certaine kind of fidelity to his friend, answered and said, certainely, my Lord, if they haue so heynously done, they be worthy heynous punishment.

What (quoth the Protector) then serue me
I weene with ifs, and with ands, I tell thee, they haue so done, and that I will make good on thy body traytor: and therewith as in a great anger, hee clapped his fist vpon the boord a great rap. At which token giuen, one cryed treason withyont the Chamber: Therewith a dore clapped, and in came there ruthing men in harnesse, as many as the chamber might hold. And anone the Protector said to the Lord Hastings, I arest thee, traytor: What, me my Lord (quoth he) yea thee, traytor, quoth the Protector. And another let fle at the Lord Stanley, which shranke at the stroke, and fell vnder the table, or else his head had beene cleft to the teth: for as shortly as he shranke, yet came the blod about his sares.
When were they all quickly beclowed in diuers chambers, except the Lord Chamberlaine, whom the Protector had spared, and thrise him spare, for by S. Paul (quoth he) I will not dine vntill I see thy head off.

The Lord Stanley wourtyed.

It booted not him to aske why, but heatilie took a priest at aduenture, and made a short shrift, for a longer would not be suffered, the Protector made so much haste to dinner, which he might not goe to, till this were done, for saining of his oath. So was he brought forth into the greene, beside the Chappell within the Tower, and his head layd downe vpon a long Log of Timber, and then stricken off, and afterward his body with his head interred at Windsore, beside the body of King Edward.

The Lord Stanleies dreame.

A maruellous case is it, to heare eyther the warnings of that hee should haue bayded, or the tokens of that hee could not auoyd, for the selfe night next before his death, the Lord Stanley sent a trusty secret messenger vnto him at midnight in all haste, requiring him to rise and ride away with him, for he was disposed vtterly no longer to bide, he had so fearefull a dreame, in which he thought, that a Boare with his tuskes so raised them both by the heads, that the blood ranne about both their shoulders. And for as much as the Protector gaue the Boare for his Cognisance: this dreame made so fearefull an impression in his heart, that hee was thorowly determined no longer to tarry, but had his horse ready, if the Lord Hastings would go with him to ride yet so farre the same night, that they should be out of danger ere day. Ha good Lord (quoth the Lord Hastings to this messenger) leaneth my Lord thy Master so much to such trifles, and hath such faith in dreames, which either his owne feare fantasieth, or else in the nights rest by reason of his daie thoughts? Tell him it is plaine witchcraft to beleeue in such dreames, which if they were tokens of things to come, why thinketh he not that wee might be as likely to make them true by our going, if wee were caught and brought backe (as friends faile fliers) then had the Boare a cause likely to race vs with his tuskes, as folke that fled for some falsehood? wherefore either is there no perill, nor none there is indeede; or if any be, it is rather in going then biding. And if we should needes fall in perill one way or other, yet had I leifer that men should see that it were by other mens falsehood, then thinke it were eyther by our owne fault, or faint heart. And therefore go to thy Master, man, and commend me to him, and pray him to be merry, and haue no feare: for I ensure him, I am as sure of the man that he woteth of, as I am of mine owne hand. God send grace Sir, quoth the messenger, and went his way.

Certaine it is also, that in riding toward the Tower the same morning in which hee was beheaded, his horse twise or thrice stumbled with him almost to the falling: which thing albeit each man wot well daily happeneth to them to whom no such mischance is toward, yet hath it been of an old vse and Custome obserued as a token oftentime notably foregoing some great misfortune.

Now this that followeth was no warning, but an odious scorne.

The same morning ere hee was vp, came a Knight into him as it were of curtesie, to accompany him to the councel, but of truth sent by the Protector to hast him thitherwards, with whom he was of secret confederacy in that purpose, a meane man at that time, and now of great authority.

This Knight, when it happened the Lord Chamberlaine by the way to stay his horse, and commune a while with a priest, whom he met in the Tower streete, brake his tale, and said merily to him, what my Lord, I pray you come on, whereto talke you so long with that priest, you haue no need of a priest yet: and therewith hee laughed vpon him, as thought hee would say, ye shall haue some. But so little was the other what he meant, and so little mistrusted, that he was neuer merrier, nor neuer so full of good hope in his life, which selfe thing is often seene a signe of change. But I shall rather let any thing passe me, then the vaine surety of mans mind so nere his death.

Vpon the very Tower-wharfe, so nere the place where his head was struck off long after, there met he with one Hastings a pursuiant of his owne name: and of their meeting in that place, he was put in remembrance of another time, in which it had happened them before to meete in like maner together in the same place. At which other time the L. Chamberlaine had been accused vnto King Edw. by the L. Riuers the Queens brother, in such wise as he was for the while, but it lasted not long, for faine into the Kings indignation, and stood in great feare of himselfe: And forasmuch as hee now met this pursuant in the same place, that peraduenture so well pallied, it gaue him great pleasure to talke with him thereof, with whom hee had before talked thereof in the same place, while he was therein. And therefore he said, Ah, Hastings, art thou remembred when I met thee here once with an heauy heart? Yea my Lord quoth he, that remember I well, and thanked be God, they got no good, nor you no harme thereby. Thou wouldst say so quoth he, if thou knewest as I know, which few know else as yet, and no shall shortly. That meant hee the Lords of the Queens kinred that were taken before, & should that day be behaded at Pontfract: which hee well wist, but nothing ware, that the Axe hung ouer his own head. In faith man, quoth he, I was neuer so sory, nor neuer stood in so great dread in my life, as I did when thou and I met here: And lo how the world is turned, now stand mine enemies in the danger, as thou maist hap to heare more hereafter, and I neuer in my life so merrily, nor neuer in so great surety.

O good God, the blindnesse of our mortall nature, when he most feared, he was in good surety: when hee reckoned himselfe surest, hee lost his life, and that within two houres after.

The description of the Lord Hastings.

Thus ended this honourable man, a good Knight and a gentle, of great authority with his Prince, of liuing somewhat dissolute, plain, and open to his enemy, and secret to his friend, easie to beguile, as he that of good heart and courage forestudied no perils: a louing man, and pitying well beloued: very faithfull, and truely enough, truelling to much. Now stew the fame of this Lords death swiftly thorow the Citty, and so forth further about like a winde in euery mans eares.

But the Protector immediatly after dinner, intending to set some colour vpon the matter, sent in all haste for many substantiall men out of the City into the Tower: and at their comming, himselfe with the Duke of Buckingham, stood harnessed in old ill faring Bryganders, such as no man should weene that they would vouchsafe to haue put vpon their backs, except that some sudden necessity had constrained them.

And when the Protector shewed them, that the Lord Chamberlaine, and other of his conspiracy had contrined to haue suddenly destroyed him and the Duke, there the same day in the Councell; And what they intended further, was as yet not well knowne. Of which their treason hee neuer had knowledge before ten of the clocke the same Forenoone, which sudden feare drowe them to put on for their defence such harnesse, as came next to hand. And so had God holpen them, that the mischiefe turned vpon them that would haue done it. And this hee required them to report.

Euery man answered him faire, as though no man beleeued, But for the further appeasing of the peoples minde, he sent immediately after dinner in all haste, an Herald of armes, with a proclamation to be made thorow the Citty in the Kings name, containing that the Lord Hastings, with diuers other of his trapterous purpole had before conspired the same day, to haue slaine the Lord Protector, and the Duke of Buckingham, sitting in the Councell, and after to haue taken vpon them to rule the King and the Realme at their pleasure, and thereby to pill and spoyle whom they list vncontrolled. And much matter there was in that proclamation, deuised to the slander of the Lord Chamberlaine, as that he was an euill Counsellor to the Kings Father, entising him to many things highly redounding to the minishing of his honour, and to the vniuersall hurt of the Realme by his euill company, sinister procuring, and vngracious ensample, as well in many other things, as in the vicious liuing, and inordinate abusion of his body, both with many other, and also especially with Shores wife, which also was one of his most secret councell of this heynous treason, with whom he lay nightly, and namely, the night last past next before his death, so that it was the lesse marueil, if vngracious liuing brought him to an vnhappy ending, which hee was now put vnto, by the most dread commandement of the Kings Highnesse, and of his honourable and faithfull Councell, both for his demerites, being so openly taken in his falsely conceiued treason, and also lest the delaying of his execution might haue encouraged other mischieuous persons, partners of his other conspiracy to gather and assemble themselue together in making some great commotion for his deliuerance: whose hope being now by his well deserued death politikely repressed, all the Realme should by Gods grace rest in good quiet and peace.

The Protectors proclamation.

Now was this proclamation made within two houres after that he was beheaded, and it was so curiously inuited, and so faire written in parchment, in so well a set hand, and therewith of it selfe so long a processe, that euery child might well perceiue, that it was prepared before. For all the time betweene his death and the proclaiming, could scant haue sufficed vnto the bare writing alone, all had it been in paper, and scribed forth in haste at aduenture. So that vpon the proclaiming thereof, one that was Schole-master of Pauls, of chance standing by, and comparing the shortnesse of the time with the length of the matter, said vnto them that stood about him: Here is a gay goodly calf, foule cast away for haste: and a Merchant answered him, that it was written by prophesie.

The Shiefe trifles of Kogers Dr. Matter White & Iohn Mathew for Shores wife one of her house. & commandment of the Protector, and led her shamefully the Citty of London to the Tower, where shee answered certaine points laid to her charge, and from thence shee was committed to Ludgate, there to remaine prisoner, &c.

Now then by and by, as it were for anger, not for couetise, the Protector sent into the house of Shores wife (for her husband dwelled not with her) and spoyled her of all that euer shee had, aboue the value of two or three thousand marke, and sent her body to prison: And when he had a while laid vnto her (for the manner sake) that shee went about to bewitch him, and that she was of councell with the Lord Chamberlaine to destroy him: in conclusion, when that no colour could fasten vpon these matters, then he laid heynously to her charge, that thing that her selfe could not deny, that all the world wist was true and that naithelesse euery man laughed at, to heare it then so suddenly, so highly taken, that shee was naught of her body.

And for this cause (as a good continent Prince, cleane and faultlesse of himselfe, sent out of heauen into the vicious world, for the amendment of mens manners) hee caused the Bishop of London to put her to open penance, going before the crosse in procession vpon a Sunday with a taper in her hand: In which shee went in countenance and pace demure, so womanly, and albeit shee were out of all array, saue her Kirtle onely, yet went shee so faire and louely, namely while the wondering of the people caft a comely red in her cheekes (of which shee before had most misse) that her great shame wanne her much praise, among those that were more gunzous of her body, then curious of her soule. And many good folke also that hated her liuing, and glad were to see sinne corrected: yet pitied they more her penance, then reioyced therein, when they considered that the Protector procured it more of a corrupt intent, then any vertuous affection.

The description of Shores wife.

This woman was borne in London, worshipfully friended, honestly brought vp, and very well married, saning somewhat too soone, her husband an honest Cittizen, young and goodly, and of good substance: But for as much as they were coupled ere shee were well ripe, shee very feruently loued, for whom shee neuer longed, which was happy the thing that the more easily made her inclinable vnto the kings appetite, when he required her. Howbeit the respect of his royalty, the hope of gay apparell, ease, pleasure, and other wanton wealth, was able soone to pierce a soft tender heart.

The Lord Chamberlain kept Shores wife after the death of Edward the fourth.

Shores wife liued when Sir Thomas More wrote: but he was but a childe in the raigne of King Henry the eyghth.

King Edwards third Concubine.

But when the King had abused her, anone her husband (as he was an honest man, and one that could his good, not presuming to touch a Kings Concubine) left her vp to him altogether.

When the King died, the Lord Chamberlaine took her, which in the Kings dates, albeit he was sore enamoured vpon her, yet he for dare her, eyther for reuerence, or for a certaine friendly faithfulnesse: proper she was and faire, nothing in her body that you would haue changed, but if you would haue wished her somewhat higher.

Thus say they that knewe her in her youth, albeit some that now see her (for yet she liueth) deeme her neuer to haue beene well vilaged, whose iudgement seemeth me somewhat like, as though men should guesse the beauty of one long before departed, by her scalpe taken out of the charnell house: for now is she old, leane, withered, and dryed vp, nothing left but reuelishment and bone. And yet being euen such: who so well aduise her visage, might quesse and deuise, which parts how filled would make it a fayre face: yet delighted he no man so much in her beauty, as in her pleasant behauiour. For a proper wit had she, and could both read well & write, merry in company, ready and quicke of answer, neither mute nor full of babble, sometime taunting without displeasure, & not without disport.

The King would say that he had three Concubines, which in three diuers properties diuerslye excelled. One the merriest, another the wiliest, the third the holiest harlot in his Realme, as one whom no man could get out of the Church lightly to any place, but it were to his bed. The other two were somewhat greater personages, and naithelesse of their humility content to be nameles, and to forbeare the praise of those properties. But the merriest was this Shores wife, in whom the King therefore toke speciall pleasure. For many he had, but her he loued, whose fauour, to say the troth (for sinne it were to belye the Diuell) she neuer abused to any mans hurt, but to many a mans comfort and relefe, where the King toke displeasure, she would mittigate and appease his minde: where men were out of fauour, shee would bring them in his grace. For many that had highly offended, she obtained pardon: Of great forfeitures she gat men remission: And finally, in many weighty suites, shee stod many men in great stead, either for none, or very small rewards, and those rather gay then rich: either for that she was content with the deed it selfe well done, or for that she delighted to be sued vnto, and to shew that she was able to doe with the King, or for that wanton women and wealthy be not always couetous.

I doubt not some shall thinke this Woman too sleight a thing to be written of, and set among the remembrances of great matters: which they shall specially thinke, that happily shall esteeme her, onely by that they now see her. But me seemeth the chance is much the more thing to be remembred, in how much she is now in the more beggerly condition, vnfriended and worne out of acquaintance, after good fortune, after as great fauour with the Prince, after as great suite, and seking to lyft all those that those daies had businesse to spede, as many other men were in their times, which be now famous, onely by the infamy of their ill deedes. Her doings were not much lesse, albeit they be much lesse remembred, because they were not so euill. For men vse, if they haue an euill turne, to write it in Marble: and whoso doth vs a good turne, wee write it in dust, which is not worst prooued by her: for at this day shee begged of many at this day liuing, that at this day had begged if shee had not beene.

Shores wife begged of them, that had begged themselues, had she not beene their friend.

Now was it deuised by the Protector, and his Councell, that the selfe-day in which the Lord Chamberlaine was beheaded in the Tower of London, and about the selfe-same houre, was there (not without his assent) beheaded at Pontfrait, the foresaid remembred Lords and Knights that were taken from the King at Northampton and Stony Stratford. Which thing was done in the presence, and by the order of Sir Richard Ratcliffe, Knight, whose seruice the Protector specially vsed in that Counsell, and in the execution of such lawlesse enterprizes, as a man that had beene long secret with him, hauing experience of the world, & a hardy wit, short and rude in speech, rough and boysterous of behauiour, bold in mischefe, as farre from pitty, as from all feare of God.

Sir Richard Ratcliffe.

The Lord Riuers and other beheaded.

This Knight bringing them out of the prison to the Scaffold, and shewing to the people about, that they were traytors, not suffering them to declare and speake their innocency, lest their words might haue inclined men to pitty them, and to hate the Protector, and his part: caused them hastily without iudgement, processe, or manner of order, to be beheaded, and without other earthly guilt, but onely that they were good men, too true to the King, and too nigh to the Quene.

Now when the Lord Chamberlaine and these other Lords and Knights were thus beheaded, and rid out of the way: then thought the Protector, that while men muzed what the matter meant, while the Lords of the Realme were about him out of their owne strengthes, while no man wist what to thinke, nor to whom trust ere euer they should haue space to dispute and digest the matter, and make parties, it were best hastily to pursue his purpose, and put himselfe in possession of the Crowne, ere men could haue time to deuise any way to resist.

But now was all the stody by what meane this matter being of it selfe so heynous, might be first spoken to the people, in such wise that it might be well taken.

To this Councell, they take diuers, such as they thought meetely to be trusted, likely to be induced to that part, and able to stand them in stede, either by power, or policy.

Among whom they made of Councell, Edmond Shaa, Knight, then Maior of London, which vpon trust of his owne aduancement, whereof he was of a proud heart highly desirous, should frame the City to their appetite. Of Spirituall men they toke such as had wit, and were in authoritie among the people for opinion of their learning, and had no scrupulous conscience.

Edmond Shaa, Maior of London.

Doctor Shaa Frier Pinke.

Among these had they Iohn Shaa Clearke, brother to the Maior, and Frier Pinke, prouincial of the Augustine Friers, both Doctors of Diuinitie, both great preachers, both of much learning than vertue, of more fame than learning. For they were before greatly esteemed among the people: but after that neuer. Of these two, the tone had a sermon in prayse of the Protector before the coronation, the tother after, both so full of tedious flattery, that no mans eares could abide them.

Pinke in his sermon so lost his voice, that he was faine to leaue off and come downe in the middest. Doctor Shaa by his sermon lost his honesty, and some after his life, for very shame of the world, into which he durst neuer after come abroad. But the frier forced for no shame and so it harmed him the lesse. Howbeit some doubt and many stinke, that Pinke was not of counsaile of the matter before the coronation, but after the common manner, fell to flattery after: namely sith his sermon was not in continent vpon it, but at Saint Marie Hospitall at the Easter after. But certaine it is, that doctor Shaa was of counsaile in the beginning, so far forth, that they determined that he should first breake the matter in a sermon at Pauls crosse, in which he should by the authoritie of his preaching, incline the people to the Protectors ghostly purpose.

But now was all the labour and studie, in the deuice of some conuenient pretext, for which the people should bee content to depose the Prince, and accept the protector for King. In which diuers things they deuised. But the chiefe thing and the weight of all that inuention reseted in this, that they should alleadge Bastardie, either in King Edward himselfe, or in his children, or both. So that he should seeme disabled to inherite the crowne, by the Duke of Yorke, and the Prince by him.

To lay bastardy in King Edward, sounded openly to the rebuke of the Protectors owne mother, which was mother to them both: for in that point could be none other colour but to pretend that his owne mother was an aduoutresse, which notwithstanding, to further this purpose he letted not: but naythelesse, he would that point should bee lesse and more fauourably handled, not euen fully plaine and directly, but that the matter should be touched craftily, as though men spared in that point to speake all the troth, for feare of his displeasure.

But the other point concerning the bastardy that they deuised to surmise in King Edwards children, that would he should be openly declared, and inforced to the vttermost. The colour and pretext whereof, cannot be well perceiued, but if we first repeate you some things, long before done, about King Edwards marriage.

After that King Edward the 4. had deposed king Henry the first, and was in peaceable possession of the Realme, determining himselfe to marry, as it was requisite both for himselfe and for the Realme, he sent ouer in ambassage the Earle of Warwike, with other noble men in his company vnto Spaine, to intreate and conclude a marriage betweene King Edward and the kings daughter of Spaine. In which thing the Earle of Warwike found the parties so toward and so willing, that he speedily according to his instructions without any difficulty, brought the matter to very good conclusion.

Now happened it, that in the meane season there came to make suite by petition to the King, Dame Elizabeth Grey, which was after Quene, at that time a widow, borne of noble blood, specially by her mother, which was Duchesse of Bedford, ere she married the Lord Woodville her father. Howbeit this Dame Elizabeth her selfe, being in seruice with Quene Margaret wife vnto King Henry the first, was married vnto one Io. Gray an Esquire, whom king Henry made knight, vpon the fields that he had on Barnet heath by Saint Albons against king Edward. And little while enioyed he that knighthood, for he was at the same fielde slaine.

Dame Elizabeth.

After which done, and the Earle of Warwike being in his ambassage about the afore remembred marriage, this poore Ladie made humble suite vnto the King, that shee might bee restored vnto such small lands as her late husband had giuen her in iointure. Whome when the King beheld, and heard her speake, as she was both faire and of a goodly fauor, moderate of stature, well made, and very wise, he not onely pitied her, but also waxed enamoured of her: and taking her after secretly aside, began to enter in talking more familiarly. Whose appetite when she perceiued, she vertuously defended him. But that did she so wisely, and with so good manner, and words so well set, that shee rather kindled his desire then quenched it.

And finally, after many a meeting, much woing, and many great promises, shee well espied the Kings affection toward her so greatly increased, that she durst somewhat more boldly say her mind, as to him whole heart shee perceiued more feruently set, than to fall off for a word.

And in conclusion, shee shewed him plaine, that as the wilfe her selfe to simple to bee his wife, so thought her selfe to good to be his Concubine. The King much maruelling at her constancy, as he that had not beene wont else where to be so stiffely said nay, so much esteemed her continence, and chastity, that he set her vertue in Stade of possession and riches, and thus taking counsaile of his desire, determined in all possible haste to marrie her.

The Kings betweene them twaine ensured her: then all mother-lesse his counsaile of his other friends, and that in such manner, as they might then perceiue, it lusted not greatly to say nay. Notwithstanding the Dutches of Yorke his mother, was so sore moued therewith, that shee dissuaded the marriage as much as shee possibly

The Kings mother.

And after hee was thus appointed, and had betweene them twaine enfored her: then also red hee counsaile of his other friends, and that in such manner, as they might them perceiue, it dated not greatly to say nay. Notwithstanding the Duches of Yorke his mother, was so sore moued therewith, that shee dissuaded the marriage as much as shee possibly bly might, alleadging that it was his honour, profite, and surety also, to marry in a noble progeny out of his Realme, whereupon dependeed great strength to his Estate, by the affinitie and great possibility of encrease of his possession. And that hee could not well otherwise doe, standing that the Earle of Warwike had so farre moued already, which were not likely to take it well, if all his voyage were in such wise frustrate, and his appointments deluded. And hee saide also, that it was not precisely to marrie his owne subiect, no great occasion leading thereunto, no possessions, or other commodity depending thereupon, but onely as it were a rich man that would marrie his maide, only for a little wanton dotage vpon her person. In which marriage many no commend the maidens fortune than the masters wisedome. And yet therein hee saide there was more honestie than honour in this marriage: for as much as there is betweene no merchant and his owne maide so great difference, as betweene the King and this Widowe. In whose person, albeit there was nothing to bee misliked, yet was there (the saide) nothing so excellent but that it mought bee found in diuers other that were more meetely (quoth hee, for your estate,) and maidens also, whereas the onely Widowhead of Elizabeth Grey, though shee were in all other things conuenient for you, should yet suffice, as me seemeth, to refraine you from her marriage, sith it is an vnfitting thing, and a verie blemish and high disparagement to the sacred maiestie of a Prince, that ought as nigh to approach priesthood in cleannelie, as he doth in dignity, to be defouled with bigamy in his first marriage.

The Kings answere to his mother.

The King when his mother had saide, made her answere, part in earnest, part in plaie merrily, as he that wist himselfe out of her rule. And albeit he would gladly that shee should take it well, yet was at a point in his owne minde, take shee it well, or otherwise. Howbeit somewhat to satisfie her he said, that albeit marriage be inga spirituall thing, ought rather to be made for the respect of God, where his grace enclineth the parties to loue together, as he trusted it was in his, than for the regard of any temporall aduantage: yet naitheless, him seemed that this marriage euen worldly considered, was not vnprofitable. For he reckoned the amitie of no earthly nation so necessary for him, as the friendship of his owne, which he thought likely to beare him so much the more hartie fauour, in that he disdained not to marry with one of his owne land. And yet if outward aliance were thought so requisite, he would finde the meane to enter thereunto, much better by other sir is kin, where all the parties could be contented, then to marry himselfe whom he should happily neuer loue, and for the possibilitie of more possessions, leese the fruite and pleasure of this that he had already. For small pleasure taketh a man in all that euer he hath beside, if hee bee loued against his appetite. And I doubt not (quoth he) but there be, as perhap, other, that be in euery point comparable with her: and therefore I let not them that like them to wed them: No more is it reason, that it mislike any man, that I marrie where it liketh me. And I am sure that my Cosin of Warwike neither loueth me so little, to grudge that I loue, nor is so vnreasonable to looke that I should in choise of a wife, rather be ruled by his eye, then by mine owne: as though I were a warde that were bound to marry by the appointment of a guardian. I would not be a King with that condition, to forbeare mine owne liberty in chopse of mine owne marriage.

As for possibilitie of more inheritance by new affinitie in strange lands, to oft the occasion of more trouble than profit: and we haue already title by that meanes, to so much as sufficeth to get and keepe well in one mans dayes. That she is a widow and hath already children, by gods blessed lady I am a batcheler and haue come to, and so each of vs hath a make that neyther of vs is like to be barrain. And therefore (madam) I pray hee content, I trust in God shee shall bring forth a young Prince that shall please you. And as for the Bigamie set the Bishop hardily late it in my way when I come to take orders: For I vnderstand it is forbidden a priest, but I neuer wist it yet, that it was forbidden a Prince.

The Duchess with these words nothing appeased, and seeing the King so set thereon, that she could not pull him backe, so highly she disdained it, that vnder pretext of her dutie to godward, shee deuised to disturbe this marriage, and rather to helpe that he should marrie one dame Elizabeth Lucie, whom the King had also not long before gotten with child. Wherefore the Kings mother openly obiected against his marriage, as it were in discharge of her conscience, that the King was sure to dame Elizabeth Lucie, and her husband before God. By reason of which words, such obstacle was made in the matter, that either the Bishoppes durst not, or the King would not proceed to the solemnization of this wedding, till the same were clerely purged, and the troth well and openly testified. Whereupon dame Elizabeth Lucy was sent for. Elizabeth Lucie.

And albeit that she was by the Kings mother and many other put in good comfort, to affirme that the was insured vnto the King: yet when she was solemnly sworne to say the troth, she confessed that they were neuer ensured. Howbeit she said his grace spake to louing words vnto her, that shee hertily hoped he would haue married her. And that if it had not beene for such kind words, shee would haue neuer shewed such kindnes to him to let him to kindly get her with child.

This examination solemnely taken, when it was clerely perceiued that there was none impediment: the King with great feast and honorable solemnitie, married dame Elizabeth Gray, and her crowned Quene, that was his enemies wife, and many time had prayed full heartily for his losse, in which God loued her better then to grant her boone. The Kings marriage.

But when the Earle of Warwike vnderstood of this marriage, he take it so higly that his ambassage was deluded, that for very anger and disdaine, he at his returning assembled a great puissance against the King, and came so fast vpon him or he could be able to resist, that he was faine to bold the Realme, and flee into Holland for succour, where he remained for the space of two yeres, leauing his new wife in Westminster in Sanctuary, where the was deliuered of Edward the Prince, of whom we before haue spoken. In which meane time the Earle of Warwike take out of prison and set by againe King Henry the first, which was before by King Edward deposed, and that much what by the power of the Earle of Warwike which was a wise man, and a courageous warrior, and of such strength, what for his lands, his alliance, and fauor with all people, that he made Kings, and put downe Kings almost at his pleasure, and not impossible to haue attained it himselfe, if he had not reckoned it a greater thing to make a King than to be a King. But nothing lasteth alway: for in conclusion King Edward returned, and with much lesse number than hee hadde at Barnet on the Easterday field, slew the Earle of Warwike, with many other great estates of that party, and so rightly attained the crowne againe, that hee peaceably enioyed it vntill his dying day: and in such plight left it, that it could not be lost, but by the discord of his bery friends, or falshood of his fained friends. I haue rehearsed this businesse about this marriage somewhat the more at length because it might thereby the better appeare vpon how slipper a ground the Protector builded his color, by which he pretended King Edwards children to be bastards: But that inuention, simple as it was, it liked them to whome it sufficed to haue somewhat to say, while they were sure to be compelled to no larger proue than themselues list to make. The Duke of Warwike slaine.

Now then (as I began to shew you) it was by the Protector and his councel concluded, that Doctor Shaa should in a sermon at Paules crosse ignifie to the people, that neyther King Edward himselfe, nor the Duke of Clarence, were lawfully begotten, nor were not the very children of the Duke of Yorke, but begotten vnlawfully by other persons, by aduoutrie of the Dutchesse their mother. And that also Dame Elizabeth Lucy was verily the wife of King Edward, and so the Prince and all his children bastards, that were begotten vpon the Quene. According to this deuise Doctor Shaa the Sonday after, at Paules Crosse in a great audience (as alwaye assembled great number to his preaching) he take for his theame Spuria vitulamina non agent radices altas. That is to say: Bastard slips shall neuer take deepe roote. Doctor Shaas sermon on Sunday the 19 of June.

Thereupon when he hadde shewed the great grace that God giueth, and secretly insondeth in right generation after the lawes of matrimony, then declared hee that commonly those children lacked that grace, and for the punishment of their parents were for the more part vnhappy which were gotten in bale, and specially in aduoutrie, of which though some by the ignorance of the world and the truth hid from knowledge in cruell for the season other mens lands, yet God alway so prouideth, that it continueth not in their blood long, but the truely coming to light, the rightfull inheritors bee restored and the Bastarde slippe pulled vp ere it can be rooted deepe. And when he hadde laid for the proofe and confirmation of this sentence certaine examples taken out of the old Testament, and other auncient Histories, then beganne he to deferend into the praise of the Lord Richard late Duke of Yorke, calling him Father to the Lord Protector, and declared the title of his heires vnto the Crowne, to whom it was after the death of King Henry the first entailed by authority of Parliament. Then shewed he that his very right heire of his body lawfully begotten was onely the Lord Protector: For hee declared then, that King Edward was neuer lawfullie married vnto the Quene, but was before God husband vnto Dame Elizabeth Lucie, and so his children bastards. And besides that, neyther King Edward himselfe, nor the D. of Clarence, among those that were secret in the household were reckoned bery surely for the children of the noble Duke, as those that by their fauors more resembled other knowne men than him. From whose vertuous conditions he saide also that King Edward was farre off. But the Lord Protector he said, the very noble Prince, the speciall patterne of knightly prowes, as well in all Princely behauior as in the lineaments and fauor of his visage, representeth the very face of the noble duke his father. This is quoth he, the fathers owne figure, this is his owne countenance, the very print of his visage, the very sure vndoubted Image, the plaine expresse likenes of that noble Duke. The King died. The Prince borne. K. Henry the first set vp. The Earle of Warwike.

Now was it before deuised, that in the speaking of these words, the Protector should haue come in among the people to the sermon ward, to the end that those meeting with his presence, might haue beene taken among the hearers, as though the holy Ghost hadde put them in the preachers mouth, and should haue moued the people euen there to crie, King Richard, King Richard, that it might haue beene after sayde, that he was especially chosen by God, and in manner by vnyracle. But this deuise quailed, either by the Protectors negligence or the preachers ouermuch diligence. For while the Protector found by the way tarrying, lest he should preuent those words, and the Doctor, fearing that hee should come ere his Sermon could come to these words, hasted his matter thereto, who was come to them, and past them and entred into other matter ere the Protector came. Whom when he beheld comming, hee sodainely left the matter with which hee was in hand, and without any deduction thereunto, out of all order, and out of all frame beganne to repeate those words againe: This is the bery Noble Prince, the speciall paterne of knightly prowes, which as well in all Princely behauiour, as in the lineaments and fauour of his visage, representeth the very face of the noble Duke of Yorke his father: this is the fathers owne figure, this is his owne countenance, the very printe of his visage, the sure undoubted image, the plaine expresse likenes of the noble Duke, whose remembrance can never die while he liueth. While these words were in speaking, the Protector accompanied with the Duke of Buckingham, went through the people into the place where the doctors commonly stand in the vpper roop, where hee stood to hearken the Sermon. But the people were so far from crying King Richard, that they stood as they had turned into stones, for wonder of this shamefull Sermon.

Preacher. After which once ended, the Preacher gat him home, and neuer after durst looke out for shame, but kept him out of sight like an Owle. And when he once asked one that had beene his olde friend, what the people talked of him, all were it that his owne conscience well shewed him that they talked no good, yet when the other answered him, that there was in euery mans mouth spoken of him much shame, it so stroke him to the heart, that within few dayes after he withered and consumed away.

The 13. of June. Then on the Tuesday following this sermon, there came into the Guilde hall in London, the Duke of Buckingham, accompanied with diuers Lords and Knights, more than happily knew the message that they brought. And therein the East end of the hall, where the Maior keepeth the Pleas, the Maior and all the Aldermen being assembled about him, all the commons of the city gathered before them after silence commanded vpon great pain in the Protectors name, the Duke stood vp, and (as he was neither vnlearned, and of nature marueilously well spoken) he said vnto the people with a cleare and a loud voice in this manner of wise.

The Duke of Buckingams Oration. Friends, for the zeale and hearty fauor that we beare you, we be come to breake vnto you of a matter right great and weighty, and no lesse weighty than pleasing to God, and profitable to all the Realme: nay to no part of the Realme more profitable, than to you the Citizens of this noble Citie. For why, that thing that we wot well ye haue long time lacked, and sore longed for, that ye would haue giuen great good for, that ye would haue gone farre to fetch, that thing we be come hither to bring you without your labour, paine, cost, aduenture or ieopardy. What thing is that? Certes the suretie of your owne bodies, the quiet of your Wiues and your Daughters, the safegarde of your goods: of all which things in time past ye stood euermore in doubt. For who was there of you all, that would reckon himselfe Lord of his owne goods among so many greens and traps as were set therefore, among so much pilling and polling, among so many tares and tallages, of which there was neuer end, and oftentimes no need: or if any were, it rather grew of riot, and vnreasonable waste, than any necessary or honorable charge? So that there was daily piled from good men and honest, great substance of goods to bee lashed out among vnthrifts, so far forth that fifteenes sufficed not, nor any vsuall manner of knowne Taxes: but vnder an easie name of beneuolence and good will, the Commissioners so much of euery man tooke, as no man could doe with his good will haue giuen: as though that name of beneuolence, hadde signified that euery man should pay not what himselfe of his owne good will list to graunt, but that the King of his good will list to take. Which neuer asked little, but euery thing was haunted aboue the measure, amerciements turned into fines, fines into ransoms, small trespasses into misprision, misprision into treason. Whereof I thinke no man loketh that we should remember you of examples by name, as though Burdet were forgotten, that was for a word spoken in hast cruelly beheaded, by the misconstruing of the lawes of this Realme for the Princes pleasure; with no lesse honour to Marcam then chiefe Iustice, that left his office rather than he would assent to that iudgement, than to the dishonestie of thole, that eyther for feare or flattery gaue that iudgement. What Cooke your owne worshipfull neighbor Alderman and Maior of this noble city, who is of you either so negligent that hee knoweth not, or so forgetful that he remembreth not, or so hard harted that he pitteth not that worshipful mans losse, what speake we of losse, his vtter spoile and vndeserued destruction, only for that it happened thole to fauor him whom the Prince fauoured not. We nede not, I suppose, to rehearse of these any mo by name, sith there be (I doubt not) many here present, that either in themselues, or in their nigh friends haue knowne as well their goods as their persons, greatly in dangered, either by fained quarelles, or small matters agreued with heynous names. And also there was no crime so great, of which there could lacke a Pretext. For sith the King preuenting the time of his inheritance attapped the Crowne by battell: it sufficed in a rich man for a pretext of treason, to haue been of kinred or aliance, neere familiarity, or longer acquaintance with any of those that were at any time, the K. enemies, which was at one time or other, more than halfe the realme. Thus were neither your goods in surety, & yet they brought Open warres. your bodies in ieopardy, besides the common aduenture of open war, which albeit that it is euer the vil and occasion of much mischiefe, yet it is neuer so mischieuous as where any people fal at distance among themselues no: in none earthly nation, so deadly and so pestilent, as when it hapneth among vs: and among vs neuer so long continued dissention, nor so many battailes in that season, nor so cruell and so deadly foughten, as was in that Kings dayes that dead is, God forgiue it his soule. In whose time, and by whose occasion, what about the getting of the garland, keeping it, leasing, and winning againe, it hath cost more English blod, than hath twice the winning of France. In which inward warre among our selues, hath beene so great effusion of the auncient noble blood of this Realme, that scarcely the halfe remaineth to the great enfeebling of this noble land, besides many a good towne ransaked and spoiled by them, that haue beene going to the fielde or comming from thence: And peace long after not much surer than warre. So that no time was there, in which rich men for their money, and great men for their lands, or some other for some feare, or some displeasure were not out of perill. For whom trusted he that mistrusted his owne brother? whom spared he that killed his owne brother? or who could perfitly loue him, or if his owne brother could not? What manner of folke he wold fauoured we shall not: his honor spare to speake of, howbeit this wot you well all, that who so was best, hare allway least rule, and more suits was in his dores vnto Shores wife, a vile and abhominable strumpet, than to all his Lords in England, except vnto those that made her their Protector: which simple woman was well named and honest, till the King for his wanton lust and sinfull affection bereft her from her husband, a right honest substantiall young man, among you. And in that point, which in good faith, I am sorie to speake of, saying that it is in vaine to keepe in counsell that thing that all men know, the Kings greedy appetite was insatiable, and euery where ouer all the Realme intolerable: for no woman was there any where, young or old, rich or poore, whom hee set his eye vpon, in whom he any thing liked, either person or fauor, speech, pace, or countenance, but without any feare of God, or respect of his honor, murmure or grudge of the world, hee would inpotently purloe his appetite, and haue her, to the great destruction of many a good woman, and great dolor to their husbands and their other friends, which being honest people of themselues, so much regard the cleannesse of their honle, the chastity of their wiues and their children, that they were leauer to lese all that they haue beside, than to haue such a villany done them. And all were it that with this and other impottable dealings, the Realme was in euery part annoied: yet specially ye here the citizens of this noble city, as well for amongst you is most plenty of all such things as minister matter to such iniuries, as for that you were nerest at hand, sith that nere hereabout was commonly his most abiding. And yet be ye the people whom hee had as singular faule well and kindly to intreat, as any part of his Realme, not onely for that the Prince by London the Kings especiall chamber. this noble City, as his especiall chamber, and the speciall well renowned City of his Realm, much honorable fame receiueth among all other nations: but also for that ye, not without your great cost, and sundry perils and ieopardies in all his warres, bare euer your speciall fauor to his part, which your kinde minders bone vnto the house of Yorke, sith he hath nothing worthily acquited, there is of that house that now by Gods grace better shall, which thing to shew you, is the whole summe and effect of this our present errand. It shall not, I wot well, nede that I rehearse to you againe that ye haue already heard of him that can better tell it, and of whom I am sure ye will better beleue it: and reason is that it so be. I am not so proud to take therefore, that ye should reckon my words of as great authority as the preachers of the Word of God, namely, a man so cunning and so wise, that no man better wotteth what he should say, and therefore so good and vertuous, that he would not say the thing which he wist hee should not say, in the pulpit, namely, into the which no honest man commeth to lie, which honourable preacher ye well remember substantially declared vnto you at Pauls Crosse, on Sunday last past, the right and title, that the most excellent Prince Richard Duke of Glocester, now Protector of this Realme hath vnto the crowne and Kingdome of the same. For as the worshipfull man groundly made open vnto you, the children of King Edward the fourth were neuer lawfully begotten, for as much as the King (leauing his very wife Dame Elizabeth Lucy) was neuer lawfully married vnto the Queene their mother whose blood sauing that he set his vnpituous pleasure before his honor, was full vnmeetely to be matched with his, and the mingling of whose bloods together, hath bene the effusion of great part of the noble blood of this Realme. Whereby it may well seeme the marriage not well made, of which there is so much mischiefe growne. For lacke of which lawfull accoupling and also of other things which the saide worshipfull Doctor rather signified than fullie explained, and which things shall not be spoken for me, as the thing wherein euery man for dread eth to say that he knoweth in auoiding displeasure of my noble Lord Protector, bearing, as nature requireth, a filiall reuerence to the Duchesse his mother, for these causes I say before remembred, that is to wit, for lacke of other issue lawfully comming of the late noble Prince Richard Duke of Yorke, to whose royall blond the Crowne of England and of France, is by the high authoritie of Parliament entailed, the right and title of the same, is by the iust course of inheritance according to the common lawes of this land, dedulate and common vnto the most excellent Prince the Lord Protector, as to the verie lawfully begotten son of the forerembred noble Duke of Yorke. Which thing well considered, and the great knightly prowesse pondered, with manifolde vertues which in his noble person singularly abound, the nobles and commons also of this Realme, and specially of the north part not willing any bastard blod to haue the rule of the land, nor the abuses before in the same vsed any longer to continue, haue condescended and fully determined to make humble petition to the most puissant Prince the Lord Protector, that it may like his grace at our humble request, to take vpon him the guiding and gouernance of this Realme, to the wealth and encrease of the same, according to his verie right and iust title. Which thing I wote it well, hee will bee loath to take vpon him, as he whose wilesome well perceiueth the labor: and study both of minde and bodie, that shall come therewith, to whomsoeuer so will accept occupy the rowme, as I dare say hee will, if he take it. Which rowme I warne you well is no childes office: And, that the great wise man well perceiued when he sayd: Ve regno cuius rex puer est: Woe is that realme that hath a childe to their king. Wherefore to much the more cause haue we to thanke God, that this noble personage which is so righteously intituled thereunto, is of so sad age, and thereunto so great wisedome ioyned with so great experience, which, albeit he will be loath (as I haue sayde) to take it vpon him, yet shall he to our petition in that behalfe the more gratiously incline, if ye the worshipfull citizens of this the chiefe city of this realme, ioyne with vs the nobles in our said request. Which for your owne weale we doubt not but ye will: and nathelesse heartily pray you so to doo, whereby you shall doe great profit to all this realme beside, in chosing them so good a king, and vnto your selfe especiall commodity, to whom his Maiestie shall euer after beare so much the more tender fauor, in howmuch hee shall perceiue you the more prone and benevolently minded toward his election. Wherein deare friends what mind you haue, we require you plainly to shew vs.

When the Duke hadde sayd, and loked that the people whom he hoped that the Maior had framed before, should after this propolition made, haue cried King Richard, King Richard, all was husht and mute, and not one word answered thereunto: wherewith the Duke was marueilously abashed, and taking the maior neere to him, with other that were about him priuie to that matter, saide vnto them softly, what meaneth this, that this people be so still? Sir (quoth the Maior) perchase they perceiue you not well. That shall we mend (quoth he) if that will helpe.

And by and by, somewhat louder he rehearsed them the same matter againe in other order and other words so well and ornately, nay nathelesse so euidently and plaine, with voice, gesture, and countenance so comely, and so conuenient, that euery man much marueiled that heard him, and thought that they neuer had in their liues heard so euill a tale so well tolde.

But were it for wonder or feare, or that each lokt the other should speake first: not one word was there answered of all the people that stode before, but all was as still as the midnight, not so much as rowning amongst them, by which they might seeme to commune what was best to doe. When the Maior saw this, he with other partners of that Counsell drewe about the Duke, and sayde that the people hadde not bene accustomed there to be spoken vnto, but by the Recorder which is the mouth of the citie and happily to him they will answere. With Fitz William Recorder. that the Recorder called Fitz William, a sad man and an vnwell, which was so new come into that office, that he neuer hao spoken to the people before, and loath was with that matter to begin: notwithstanding, thereunto commanded by the Maior, made rehearsall to the Commons of that the Duke had twice rehearsed to them himselfe. But the Recorder so tempered his tale, that hee shewed euery thing as the Dukes wordes, and no part of his owne. But all this noting, no change made in the people, which all hap after one, stod as they had bene men amased. Whereupon the Duke rowned vnto the Maior and said: this is a marueilous obstinate silence, and therewith hee turned vnto the people againe with these wordes: Deare friends, we come to moue you to the thing which peraduenture we not so greatly needed, but that the Lords of this Realme, and the Commons of other parties might haue sufficed: sauing that we such loue beare you, and so much set by you, that we would not gladly doe without you that thing in which to be partners is your weale and honor, which as it seemeth, either you see not, or wey not. Wherefore we require you giue vs answere one or other whether ye be minded as all the nobles of the realm be, to haue this noble Prince now Protector to be your King or not.

At these wordes the people began to whisper among themselues secretly, that the voice was neither lowde nor distinct, but as it were the sound of a swarme of Bees, till at the last in the neather end of the Hall, a buthment of the Dukes seruants and Mathfields, and other longing to the Protector, with some prentiles and lads that thrust into the Hall among the preasse, began sodainly at mens backes to crie out as lowde as their throates would giue, King Richard, King Richard, and threw vp their caps in token of ioy. And they that stod before cast backe their heads marueiling thereat, but nothing they said.

And when the Duke and the Maior saw this manner, they wisely turned it to their purpose, and said it was a goodly crie, and a ioyfull to heare, euery man with one voice, no man saying nay. Wherefore friends (quoth the Duke) since that we perceiue it is all your whole mindes to haue this Noble man for your King, whereof we shall make to his grace so effectuall report, that we doubt not but it shall redound vnto your great weale and commodity: woe require you that ye to morow goe with vs, and we with you vnto his noble grace, to make our humble request vnto him in manner before remembred. And therewith the Lords came downe, and the company dissolued and departed, the more part all sad, some with glad semblance that were not very merry, and some of those that came thither with the Duke not able to dissemble their sorrow, were faine at his backe to turne their face to the wall, while the dolour of their heart burst out of their eyes.

Then on the morrow after, the Maior with al the Aldermen and chiefe commoners of the citie in their best manner apparelled, assembling themselues together, resorted vnto Baynards castle, where the Protector lay. To which place repayred also according to their appointment, the Duke of Buckingham, with diuers Noble men with him, beside many Knights and other Gentlemen. And thereupon the Duke sent word vnto the Lord Protector of the being The Maior commeth to Baynards Castle. there thereof a great and honorable company, to moue a great matter vnto his grace.

Whereupon the Protector made difficulty to come out vnto them, but if he first knew some part of their errand, as though he doubted, and partly disturbed the coming of a number vnto him of so sodainly, without any warning or knowledge whether they came for good or harme. Then the Duke vnderstode how he was led this vnto the Maior and other, that they might thereby perceiue little the Protector looked for this matter, then sent vnto him by the messenger such lesting message againe, and therewith so humbly besought him to vouchsafe, that he him might admit to his presence, to propose their intent, of which they would vtter nothing either perteining vnto them, or that he the cause forth of his Chamber, yet not doubting vnto them, but good aboue in a Gallerie ouer them, where they might see him and speake to him, as though he would not yet come nere them, till he with them had commoned. And thereupon the Duke of Buckingham first made humble petition vnto him on the behalfe of them all, that his grace would pardon them, and licence them to propose vnto his grace the intente of their coming without his displeasure, without which pardon obtained, they durst not be bold to moue him of that matter. In which, albeit they meant as much honour to his Grace, as wealth to all the Realme beside, yet were they not sure how his grace would take it, whom they would in no wise offend. Then the Protector (as he was very gentle of his speech, and also longed sore to witte what they meant) gaue him leaue to propose what him liked, verily trusting for the good mind that he bare them al, none of them any thing would intend vnto him ward, wherewith he was not to be grieued.

When the Duke had this leaue and pardon to speake, then bared he bold to shew him their intent and purpose, with all the causes mouing them thereunto, as ye before haue heard and finally to beseech his grace, that it would like him of his accustomed goodnes and zeale vnto the Realme, now with his eye of pitie, to behold the long continued distresse and decay of the same, and to set his gracious hands to redresse an amendment thereof, by taking vpon him the crowne and gouernance of this Realm, according to his right and title lawfully descended vnto him, and to the laud of God, profite of the land and vnto his grace so much the more honor, and lesse paine, in that that neuer Prince raigned vpon any people, that were so glad to line vnder his obeisance, as the people of this Realme vnder his.

When the Protector had heard the proposition, he loked very strangely thereat, and answered: That albeit it were that hee partly knew the things by them alledged to bee true, yet such entire loue he bare vnto K. Edward and his children, that so much more he regarded his honor in other realmes about, than the Crowne of any one, of which he was neuer desirous, that he could not finde in his heart in this point to encline to their desire. For in all other nations where the truth were not well knowne, it should peraduenture be thought, that it were his owne ambitious mind and deuise, to depose the Prince, and take himselfe the Crowne, with which infamy hee would not haue his honour stayned for any Crowne, in which he had euer perceiued much more labour, care, paine and displeasure than pleasure to him that would so be it, as the that would not; were not worthy to haue it. Notwithstanding he not vtterly pardoned them the motion that they made him, but ful thanked them for the loue and hearty fauor they beare him, praying them for his sake to giue the same to the Prince vnder whom he was, and would be content to liue, and with his labour and counsell, as far as should like the king to vse him, he would do his vttermost deuoire to set the Realme in good state, which was already in this little while of his Protectorship (the praise giuen to God) well begun, in that the malice of such as were before occasion of the contrary, and of new stirred to be, were now partly by good policy, partly more by Gods speciall prouidence, than mans preuision, repressed.

Upon this answere giuen, the Duke by the Protectors licence, a little rowned, as well with other noble men about him, as with the Maior and Recorder of London. And after that, vpon like pardon desired and obtained, he shewed alonde vnto the Protector, that for a finall conclusion, by the Realme it was appointed K. Edwards line should not any longer raigne ouer them, both for that they had so far gone, that it was now no surety to retreate, as for that they thought it for the weale vniuersall, to take that way, although they had not yet begun it. Wherefore if it would like his grace to take the crowne vpon him, they would humbly beseech him thereunto. If he would giue them a resolute answere, to the contrary which they would be loath to heare, then must they needs take, and should not faile to find some other noble man that would.

These words much moued the Protector, which else as euery man may witte, would neuer of likely hod haue enclined thereunto. But when he saw there was non other way, but that either he must take it, or else he and his both go from it, he said vnto the Lords & commons: Sith we perceiue well that all the Realme is so set, whereof wee be very sory that they will not suffer in any wise Kings Edwards line to gouerne them, whom no man earthly can gouerne against their wils, and we well also perceiue that no man is there, to whom the crowne can by iust title apperteine, as to our selfe, as by right heire lawfully begotten of the body of our most deare father Richard late Duke of Yorke, to which title is now ioyned your election, the nobles and commons of this Realme, to which both we of all titles possible take for the most part effectuall: We be content and agree fauorably to encline to your petition and request, and accepting to the same, here we take vpon vs the Royall Estate, preeminence and Kingdome of the two noble Realmes, England and France, The Protection. and the one from this day forward, by vs and our heires to rule, gouerne and defend: the other by Gods grace, and your good helpe, to get againe and subdue, and establish for euer in due obedience vnto this realme of England, the aduancement whereof we neuer aske of God longer to liue than we intend to procure.

With this there was a great shoute, crying King Richard, K. Richard. And then the Lords went vp to the King (for so was he from that time called) and the people departed, talking diuersly of the matter, euery man as his fantasie gaue him: But much they talked and maruelled of the manner of this dealing that the matter was on both parts made so strange, as though neither had euer communed with other thereof before, when that themselues wist there was no man so dull that heard them, but he perceiued well enough, that all the matter was made betweene them. Howbeit some excused that againe, and said it must be done in good order: men must sometime for the manners sake, not be aknowne what they know: at the consecration of a Bishop, euery man wotteth well by the paping for his bulle, that he purposeth to bee one: and though he pay for nothing else, yet must he be twise asked whether he will be Bishop or no, and he must twise say nay, and at the third time take it, as compelled thereunto by his owne will. And in a stage play the people knoweth well, that he that playeth the Sowdain, is perchance a cobler, yet if one should know so little good, to shew out of season what acquaintance he hath with him, and cal him by his owne name, while he standeth in his maiestie, one of his tormentors might hap to breake his head, and worship, for marring of the play: And so they said, that these matters be kings games, as it were stage plaies, and for the more part, played vpon scaffolds: in which poze men be but the lokers on. And they that wise be, will medle no further: for they that pleasten step vp, and play with them, when they cannot play their parts, they disorder the play & doe themselues no good.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING RICHARD THE THIRD,

1483. An. reg. 1. The 25. of June. This that is here betweene this marke ¶ and this marke ¶ was not written by Master Moore in this historie written by him in English, but is translated out of this Historie which he wrote in Latin.

THe next day, the Protector with a great traine, went to Westminster hall, and there when he had placed himselfe in the court of the Kings bench, declared to the audience, that he would take vpon him the crowne in that place there, where the King himselfe sitteth and ministreth the law because he considered, that it was the chiefest duty of a K. to minister the lawes. Then with as pleasant an Oration as he could, he went about to win vnto him, the nobles, the merchants, and artificers, and in conclusion, all kind of men, but especially the lawyers of this Realme. And finally, to the intent that no man should hate him for feare, and that his deceitfull clemency might get him the good will of the people, when he had declared the discommodity of discord, and the commodities of concord and vnity, he made an open proclamation, that hee did put out of his minde all enmities, and that he there did openly pardon all offences committed against him. And to the intent that he might helpe a powre thereof, he commanded that one Fogge, whom he had long deadly hated, should be brought then before him, who being brought out of the sanctuarie (for thither had he fled for feare of him) in the sight of the people, he take him by the hand: which thing the common people reioyced at, and praised, but wise men take it for a banitie. In his returne homeward, whomsoeuer he met, he saluted: for a mind that knoweth it selfe guilty, is in a manner deiected to a seruile flattery.

King Richard, to be sure of all enemies, had sent for out of the north fiue thousand men to bee at his coronation, vnder the leading of Robert of Ridsdale, these being but meanely apparelled, and woorse harneised, mustered in Finsberie field.

On the fourth of July, he came to the Tower by water, with his wife, and on the fift day hee created John Lord Howard, Duke of Norffolke, sir Tho. his sonne, Earle of Surrey, William Lord Barkeley Earle of Nottingham, Francis L. Louel, vicount Louel & the kings chamberlaine: the L. Stanley was deliuered out of ward and made steward of the kings houshold. Also the archbi. of Yorke was deliuered, but Morton Bishop of Ely was committed to the Duke of Buckingham to bee kept in ward, who sent him to his manor of Brecknock in Wales, there to be kept. The same night the King made Knights of the Bathe to the number of seuenteene.

On the sixt of July hee rode through the City of London toward Westminster with great pompe: and on the morrow being the seuenth, he with his wife Queene Anne were crowned.

When he had beguinne his raigne in July, after this mockish election, then was he crowned the first, or rather the seuenth day of the same moneth. And that solemnity was furnished for the most part, with the selfe same prouision that was appointed for the coronation of his nephew.

After this were taken for rebels against the King, Robert Ruffe sergeant of London, William Daw pardoner of Hounslow, Iohn Smith groome of King Edwards stirrop, and Stephen Ireland wardrober in the Tower, with many other, that they should haue sent writings into the parts of Britaine to the Earles of Richmond and of Penbrooke, and the other Lords: and how they were purposed to haue set fire on diuers parts of London, which fire whilest men had beene stanching, they would haue stolen out of the Tower, the Prince Edward, and his brother the Duke of Yorke, &c. Robert Ruffe, William Daw, Iohn Smith, and Stephen Ireland, were at Westminster iudged to death, and from thence drawne to the Tower hill, and there beheaded, and their heads were set on London bridge.

Sir Thomas Moore againe in English.

Now fell there mischiefes thicke. And as the thing euill gotten is neuer well kept, though all the time of his raigne neuer ceased there cruell death and slaughter, till his owne destruction ended it. But as hee finished his time with the best death and the most righteous, that is to wit, his owne, so began he with the most piteous and wicked. I meane the lamentable murther of his innocent nephews, the young K. & his tender brother, whose death and finall infortune hath nay the lesse commen so far in question, that some remaine yet in doubt, whether they were destroyed in his daies or no.

Perkin Warbeck.

Not for that onely that Perkin Werbecke by many folkes malice, & moe folkes folly, so long space abusing the world, was afreid with princes as the poore people, reputed and taken for the younger of these two, but for that also that all things were in late dayes so couertly demeaned, one thing pretended, & another meant, that there was nothing so plaine and openly proued, but that yet for the common custome of cloke & couert dealing, men had it euer inwardly in suspect, as many well counterfeited feignes make the true mistrusted. Howbeit concerning the opinion, with the occasions mouing either party, we shall haue place more at large to intreat, if we hereafter happen to write the time of the late noble Prince of famous memorie K. Henry the 7. or perchance that historie of Perkin in any compendious processe by it selfe. But in the meane time for this present matter, I shall rehearse you the dolorous end of those babes, not after euery way that I haue heard, but by such men, and by such meanes, as me thinketh it were hard but it should be true.

King Richard after his coronation, taking his way to Glocester to visite in his new honour, the Towne of which he bare the name of his olde, deuised as he rode to fulfill the thing which he before had intended. And forasmuch as his mind gaue him, that his nephewes liuing, men would not reckon that he could haue right to the Realme, he though therefore without delay to ridde them, as though the killing of his kinsmen could amend his cause, and make him a kindly King. Whereupon hee sent one Iohn Greene, whom he specially trusted, vnto Sir Robert Brakenbury Constable of the Tower, with a letter and credence also, that the same Sir Robert should in any wise put the two children to death. This Iohn Greene did his errand vnto Brakenbury, knocking before one Lady in the Tower, who plainely answered, that he would neuer put them to death, to die therefore: with which answere Iohn Greene returning, recounted the same to King Richard at Warwike yet in his way. Wherewith he take such displeasure and thought, that the same night he said vnto a secret page of his: Ah whom shall a man trust? Those that I haue brought vp my selfe, those that I had warned would most surely serue me, euen those faile me, and at my commandement would doe nothing for me. Sir (quoth his page) there lieth one on your pallet without, that I dare well say, to doe your grace pleasure, the thing were right hard that he would refuse, meaning this by sir James Tirell, which was a man of right goodly personage and for natures gifts worthie to haue serued a much better Prince, if he had well serued God, and by grace obtained as much truth and good will as he had strength and wit. The man had an high heart, and sore longed vpward, not rising yet so fast as he had hoped, being hindered and kept vnder by the meanes of Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and Sir William Catesby, which longing for no mo partners of the Princes fauor, and namely not for him, whose pride they wist would beare no pere, kept him by secret drifts out of all secret trust, which thing this page well had marked and known: wherefore this occasion offered, of verie special friendship he take his time to put him forward, and by such wise to do him good, that all the enuyes he had, except the diuell, could neuer haue done him so much. For vpon this pages words, King Richard arose (for this communication had hee sitting at the draught, a conuenient Carpet for such a councell, and came out into a pallet chamber, on which he found sir Iames and sir Thomas Tirels of person like, and brethren of blod, but nothing of kin in conditions. Then saide the King merrily to them, what sirs, be ye in bedde so soone? And calling vp sir Iames, broke to him secretly his minde in this mischieuous matter: in which he found him nothing frange. Wherefore on the morrow he sent him to Brakenbury with a letter, by which he was commanded to deliuer Sir Iames all the keies of the Tower for one night, to the end hee might there accomplish the Kings pleasure, in such things as he had giuen him commandement. After which letter deliuered, and the keyes receiued, Sir Iames appointed the night next ensuing to destroy them, deuising before, no preparing the meanes. The Prince as soone as the Protector left the name and toke himselfe as King, bad it thewed vnto him, that he should not raigne, but his vncle should haue the Crowne. At which words the Prince sore abathed, began to sigh and said: Alas, I would, my vncle would let me haue my life yet, though I lese my Kingdome. Then he that told him the tale, shed him with good words, and put him in the best comfort he could. But forthwith was the Prince and his brother both shut vp, and all other remoued from them, onely one called Black Will, or William Slaughter except, set to serue them and se them serue. After which time the Prince neuer tasted pleasure, nor aught rought of himselfe, but with the young babe his brother, lingred with wearie and heauines, till this traiterous death deliuered them of that wretched conc: for sir Iames Tyrell deuised that they should be murthered in their beds. To the execution whereof he appointed Miles Forrest one of the foure that kept them, a fellow fleshed in murther before time. To him he ioyned one Iohn Dighton his owne horse keper, a bigge, broad, square, strong knaue.

Sir Iames Tirell.

Authority loueth no partners.

The young King and his brother murthered.

Then all the other being remoued from them, this Miles Forrest and Iohn Dighton, about midnight (the sely children lying in their beds) came into the chamber, and sodainely lapped them vp among the clothes, so to bewrapped them and intangled them, keping downe by force the feather bed and pillowes hard vnto their mouths, that within a while, smothered & stifled, their breath failing, they gaue vp to God their innocent soules into the ioyes of heauen, learing to the toquentors their bodies dead in the bed. Which after that the wretches perceiued, first by the strugling with the paines of death, and after long lying still, to be throughly dead, they laid their bodies naked out vpon the bed, and fetched sir Iames to se them, which vpon the sight of them, caused those murtherers to bury them at the Staire fot, metely deepe in the ground vnder a great heape of stones.

Then rode sir Iames in great haste to King Richard and shewed him all the manner of the murther, who gaue him great thanks, and (as some say) there made him knight. But he alowed not, as I haue heard, the burying in so vile a corner, saying that he would haue them buried in a better place, because they were a Kings sonnes. To the honorable courage of a King. Whereupon they say, that a priest of S. Robert Brakenbury toke vp the bodies again, and secretly enterred them in such place, as by the confession of his death, which onely knew it, could neuer since come to light. Very troth it is, and well knowne, that at such time as Sir Iames Tyrell was in the tower for treason committed against the most famous Prince King Henry the seuenth, both Dighton and he, were examined, and confessed the murther in manner aboue written, but whither the bodies were removed, they could nothing tell. And thus I haue learned of them that much knew, and little cause had to lie, were these two noble Princes, these innocent tender children, borne of most royall blod, brought vp in great wealth, likely long to liue, raigne, and rule in the Realme, by traiterous tyranny taken, deprived of their estate, shortly shut vp in prison, and priuily slaine and murthered, their bodies cast, God wot where, by the cruell ambition of their vnnaturall vncle and his disputeous tormentors. Which things on every part well pondered, God neuer gaue this world a more notable example, neyther in what vnsurety standeth this worldly weale, or what mischiefe worketh the proud enterprise of an ire heart, finally or what wretched end ensueth such displeasure cruelty. For to begin with the ministers, Miles Forrest at Saint Martins perecreale rotted away: Dighton liueth yet walketh on aliue in good possibility to be hanged ere he die: but Sir Iames Tyrell died at the tower hill beheaded for treason: King Richard, himselfe, as ye shall hereafter heare, slaine in the field, hacked and hewed of his enemies hands, carried on horsebacke dead, his haire in despight long and tugged like a Curre Dogge: and the mischiefe that he toke, was within lesse than three yeres of the mischiefe that he did, and yet all the meane time spent in much paine and trouble outward, much feare, anguish, and sorrow within. For I haue heard by credible report of such as were secret with his chamberlaine, that after this abhominable deede done, he neuer hadde quiet in his minde: He neuer thought himselfe sure: where he went abroad, his eien whirled about, his body priuily fenced, his hand euer vpon his dagger, his countenance and manner like one allwayes ready to strike againe: he take ill rest a nights, lay long waking and musing, sore wearied with Care and Watch, rather slumbred than slept, troubled with fearefull dreames, sodainely sometime start vp, leapt out of his bed, and ran about the chamber, so was his restles heart continually tossed and tumbled with the tedious impression and stormy remembrance of his abhominable deede.

Now had he not ward no long time in rest: for thereupon, some after began the conspiracy, or rather, godd confederation betweene the Duke of Buckingham and many other gentlemen against him.

The occasion whereupon the King and the Duke fell out, is of diuers folke diuers wise pretended.

This Duke (as I haue for certaine beene enformed) as soone as the Duke of Glocester, vpon the death of K. Edw. came to Yorke, and there had solemne funerall service for K. Edward sent thither in the most secret wise he could, one Persall his trustie seruant, who came to Iohn Ward, a chamberer of like secret trust with the D. of Glocester, desiring, that in the most close and couert maner, he might be admitted to the presence and speech of his master. And the Duke of Glocester aduertised of his desire, caused him in the dead of the night, after all other folkes auoided, to bee brought vnto him in his secret chamber, where Persall, after his maisters recommandation, shewed him, that he had secretly sent to him in his new world, he would take such part as he would, and waite vpon him with a thousand good fellowes, if nede were. The messagesent backe with thanks, and some secret instruction of the Protectors winde: yet met with him againe farther from the Duke his maister, within fewe dayes after at Nottingham: whither the Protector from Yorke, with many gentlemen of the north countrey, to the number of 600. horses, was come on his way to London ward, and after secret meting and communication had, eft some departed. Whereupon at Northampton, the Duke met with the Protector himselfe with 300. horse, and from thence still continued with him partner of all his deuises, till that after his Coronation they departed, as it semed, very great friends at Glocester: from whence, as some as the Duke came home, he so lightly turned from him, and so highly conspired against him, that a man would maruell where of the change grew. And surely, the occasion of their variance is of diuers men diuersly reported. Some haue said (I heard say) that the Duke a little before the Coronation, among other things required of the Protector the Duke of Herfords Landes, to the which he pretended himselfe inheritor. And for as much as the title which hee clayned by inheritance, was somewhat enterlaced with the title to the crowne, by the line of King Henry before depriued, the protector conceiued such indignation, that he reiected the dukes request with many spitefull and minatory wordes, which so wounded his heart with hatred and mistrust, that he neuer after could endure to looke aright on King Richard, but euer feared his owne life, so far forth, that when the Protector rode through London toward his coronation, he fained himselfe sicke, because he would not ride with him And the other taking it in euill part, sent him word to rise, & come ride, or he would make him be carried: whereupon he rode on with euill will, and that notwithstanding on the morow, rose from the feast, fayning himselfe sicke, and King Richard said it was done in hatred and despight of him. And they said that euer after continually each of them liued in such hatred and distrust of other, that the D. verily loked to haue bin murthered at Glocester from which, naitheles, he in faire manner departed. But surely some right secret at that day deep thinkers many right wise men thinke it vnlikely (the depe dissembling nature of both those men considered, and what nede in that aege would the Protector had of the Duke, and in what perill the D. stood, if he fell once in suspition of the tyrant) that eyther the protector would giue the Duke occasion of displeasure, or the Duke the Protector occasion of mistrust. And verily men thinke that if King Richard had any such opinion conceiued, he would neuer haue suffered him to escape his hands. Very troth it is, the Duke was an high minded man, and cuill could beare the Glorie of another, so that I haue heard of some that say they saw it, that the Duke at such time as the Crowne was first set vpon the Protectors head, his eye could not abide the sight thereof, but wyped his head another way. But men say, that he was of troth not well at ease, and that both to King Richard well knowne, and not ill taken, nay any demand of the Dukes vncourteouslly reiected, but he both with great gifts & high behestes, in most louing and trusty manner departed at Glocester. But some after his coming home to Brecknocke, hauing there in custodie, by the commandement of King Richard, Doctor Morton Bishop of Ely, who (as ye before heard) was taken in the councell at the Tower, wared with him familiar: whose wisedome abused his pride to his owne deliuerance and the Dukes destruction. The Bishop was a man of great naturall wit, very well learned and honorable in behauiour, lacking no wise wares to win fauor. He had him fall vpon the part of King Henry, while that part was in wealth, and mayheles left it not, nor forsoke it in wo, but fled the realme with the Queene and the Prince, while king Edward had the king in prison, neuer came home, but to the field: After which lost, and that part vtterly subdued; the other, for his fast faith and wisedome, not onely was content to receiue him, but also lowed him to come, and had him from thence forth both in secret trust, and very special fauor, which he nothing deceiued. For he being (as ye haue heard) after king Edwards death first taken by the tyrant, for his truth to the King, found the meane to set this Duke in his toppe, topned gentlemen together in ayde of King Henry, deuising first the marriage betweene him and king Edwards daughter, by which his faith, he declared the good seruice to both his maisters at once, with infinit benefite to the Realme, by the Coniunction of those two bloods in one, whose seuerall titles had long disquieted the land, he fled the Realme, went to Rome, neuer vntoning more to medale with the world, till the noble Prince King Henry the seuenth, gat him home againe, made him Archbishop of Canterbury and Chancellor of England, whereunto the Pope topned the honor of Cardinall. Thus liuing many dayes in as much honour as one man might well with, ended them so godly, that his death with Gods mercy well changed his life.

This man therefore, as I was about to tell you, by the long and often alternate prose, as well of prosperity as aduers fortune, had gotten, by great experience the very mother and mistresse of wisedome, a depe insight in politike worldly drifts. Whereby, perceiuing now this Duke glad to commune with him, feede him with faire wordes, and many pleasant praises. And perceiuing by the processe of their communication, the Dukes pride, now and then balke out a little head of enuie, toward the glory of the King, and thereby feeling him cafe to fall out, if the matter were well handled: hee craftily sought the wayes to pricke him forward, taking alwayes the occasion of his comming, and so keeping himselfe so close within his bounds, that he rather seemed to follow him, than to leade him. For when the Duke first began to praise and boaste the King, and shewed how much profite the Realme should take by his raigne: Pp Lord Morton answered: Surely my Lord, (folly it were for me to lie, for if I would sweare the contrary, your Lordship would not I weene, believe but that if the world would have gone as I would have wished, King Henries sonne had had the crowne, and not King Edward. But after that God had ordered him to lose it, and King Edward to raigne, I was never so mad that I would with a dead man strive against the quicke. So was I to King Edward a faithfull Chaplaine, and glad would have beene that his child had succeeded him. Howbeit, if the secret iudgement of God have otherwise provided, I purpose not to fyrme against a pricke, nor labor to set by that God pulleth downe. And as for the late Protector and now King. And even there he left, saying, that he had already meddled too much with the world, and would from that day meddle with his beke and his beades, and no further. Then longed the Duke fore to heare what he would have said, because he ended with the King, and there so soddenly stopped, and exhorted him so familiarly betweene them twaine, to be bold to say what so euer he thought, whereof he faithfully promised, there should never come hurt, and peraduenture more good then hee would weene, and that himselfe intended to vse his faithfull secret advice and counsell, which he said was the onely cause for which hee procured of the King to have him in his custody, where he might reckon himselfe at home, else had he ben put in the hands of them with whom hee should not have found the like fauour. The Bishoppe right humblie thanked him, and said: In good faith my Lord, I love not talke much of Princes, as a thing not all out of perill, though the word be without fault, forasmuch as it shall not bee taken as the partie meant it, but as it pleaseth the Prince to construe it. And euer I thinke on Aesopes tale, that when the Lion had proclaymed, that on payne of death, there should none horned beast abide in that wood: one that had in his forehead, a bunch of flesh, tho a way a great pace. The fore that saw him runne fast, asked him whither he made all that haste? And he answered, in faith I neyther wot, nor recke, so I were once hence, because of this proclamation made of horned beasts. What (sayd he) quoth the fore, thou maiest abide well inough, the Lion meant not by thee, for it is none beare that is in thine head. No marie (quoth he) that wot I well enough: but what and he call it an horne, where am I then? The Duke laughed merily at the tale, and said, My Lord, I warrant you, neyther the Lyon nor the Boare, shall pricke any matter at any thing here spoken, for it shall never come to their eares: In good faith Sir, said the Bishoppe, if it did, the thing that I was about to say, taken as well (as afore God I meant) it could deserve but thanke: yet fal en as I weene it would, might happen to turne me to little good, and you to lesser. Then longed the Duke yet much more to wit what it was: wherupon the Bishop saide, In good faith my Lord, as for the late Protector, sith hee is now King in possession, I purpose not to dispute his title, but for the weale of this realme, wherein his grace hath now the gouernance, whereof I am my selfe one poze member, I was about to wish, that to those good abilities whereof he hath already right many, little wanting my prayse, it might yet have pleased God for the better, to have given him some of such other excellent vertues mete for the rule of a realme, as our Lord hath planted in the person of your grace: and there left againe.

The Duke somewhat marvelling at his sodaine pawses, said: Pp Lord, I note your often breathing and sodaine stopping in your communication, so that to my intelligence, your woods neyther come to any direct or perfect sentence in conclusion, whereby eyther I might have knowledge what your intent is now toward the King, or what affection you beare toward me. For the comparison of good qualities ascribed to vs both, maketh mee not a little to muse, thinking, that you have some other pzivy imagination imprinted in your heart which you be abashed to disclose, and especially to mee, which on my honour do assure you to bee as secret in this case as the deafe and dumbe person to the singer, or the tree to the hunter. The B. being somewhat bolder, considering the Dukes promise, but most of all animated, because hee knew the Duke destrous to be magnified, and also hee perceived the inward hatred which hee bare toward King Ric. he opened his stomacke to the bottome, and said: Pp singular good Lord, sith the time of my captivitie, which being in your graces custody, I may rather call it a liberty than a straight imprisonment, in auoiding of idlenes the mother of all vices, in reading bookes and ancient pamphlets I have found this sentence written; That no man is borne free and at liberty of himselfe onely: for one part of our he owed to his parents, another part to his friends and kinsfolkes: but the native countrey, in the which he first tasted this pleasant and flattering world, demandeth a debt not to be forgotten. Which saying causeth me to consider in what case this realme my native countrey now standeth, and in what estate and assurance before this time it hath continued: what governor were now have, and what ruler we might have: for I plainely perceive (the realme being in this case) must needs decay, and be brought to confusion, but one hope I have, that is, when I consider your noble personage, your lignage and inheritance, your feruent zeale and ardent love toward your natiuall country, and in like manner the love of your country toward you, the great learning, pregnant wit, and eloquence, with fish so much doth abound in your person, I must needs put be this realme fortunate which hath such a Prince in hope, mete and apt to be governed. But on the other side, when I call to memory the good qualities of the late Protector, and now called King, so violated by tyranny, so altered by sharped authority, so clouded by blinde ambition, I must needes say, that hee is neither mete to be King of so Noble a Realme, nor so Famous a Realme mete to be governed by such a Tyrant. Was not his first enterprize to obtaine the Crowne, begun by the murther of diuers Noble personages? Did he not secondarily procede against his owne naturall mother, declaring her openly to be a woman given to carnall affection, and dissolute living? Declaring furthermore his two brethren and two Nephewes to be Bastards, and to be borne in adultery? yet not contented, after he had obtained the Garland, he caused the two poze innocents his Nephewes, committed to him, to be shamefully murthered, the blood of which little babes, daily cry to God from the earth for vengeance: what liuely shall be in this Realme, to any person, either for life or goods, under such a cruell Prince, which regardeth not the destruction of his owne blod, and then the lesse, the losse of other? But now to conclude, what I meane toward your Noble person, I say, and affirme, if you love God, your lineage, or your native countrey, you must your selfe take vpon you the Crowne of this Realme, both for the maintenance of the honour of the same, as also for the deliverance of your naturall country-men from the bondage of such a Tyrant. And if your selfe will refuse to take vpon you the Crowne of this Realme, then I adiure you by the faith that you owe to God, to devise some way how this Realme may be brought to some conuenient regiment, under some good Governour. When the Bishop had ended his saying, the Duke sighed, and spake not of a great while, so that night they communed no more. The next day, the Duke sent for the Bishop, to whom he said, Pp Lord of Ely, I must needes in heart thinke, and with mouth confesse, that you be a sure friend, a trusty Councellor, and a very louer of your Countrey. And sith at your last communication, you have disclosed the secrets of your heart, touching the new usurper of the Crowne, and also have a little touched the aduancement of the two Noble families of Yorke and Lancaster, I shall likewise declare vnto you my pzivy intents, and secret cogitations: and to beginne, when King Edward was deceased, I then began to study, and with deliberation to ponder in what manner this Realme should be governed. I perswaded with my selfe, to take part with the Duke of Glocester, whom I thought to be as cleane without dissimulation, as frackable without iniury, and so by my meanes, he was made Protector, both of the King and Realme, which authority being once gotten, he never ceased pzimly to require me and other Lords, as well spirituall as temporall, that he might take vpon him the Crowne till the Prince came to the age of foure and twenty yeeres, and were able to governe the Realme as a sufficient King: which time, when he saw me so nowhat sticke at, he then brought in Instruments, autenticke Doctors, Proctors and notaries of the Law, with depositions of diuers witnesses, testifying King Edwards children to be Bastards: which depositions then I thought to be as true, as now I know them to be fained. When the said depositions were before vs read, and diligently heard, he stood vp bare headed, saying: Well my Lords, euen as I am you minde, that my Nephewes should have no wrong: so I pzay you bee mee nothing but right, for these witnesses and sayings of famous Doctors be true: for I am onely the mouthitate heyze to Richard Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, adiudged to be the verye heyze to the Crowne of this Realme by authority of Parliament. Which things so by learned men for verity to vs declared, caused mee and other to take him for our lawfull and vnspotted Prince, and Soueraigne Lord: so against my pzo, he of a Protector was made a King: but when he was once crowned King, and in full possession of the Realme, he cast away his old conditions. For when I my selfe sued to him for my part of the Earle of Herefords Lands, which his brother King Edward wrongfully detained from mee, and also required to have the Office of the high Constable-ship of England, as diuers of my Noble Ancestors before this time tane had, and in long decent continued: in this my first suite, he did not onely flat delay mee, and afterward deny mee, but gaue me such vnkinde words, as though I had never further-ed him, all which I suffered patiently: but when I was informed of the death of the two young innocents, O Lord, my heart inwardly grudged, in so much, that I abhorred the sight of him. I take my leaue of the Court, and returned to Brecknock to you, but in my iourney as I returned, I had diuers imaginations how to deprive this vnnaturall Uncle. First I fantasied, that if I list to take vpon me the Crown, now was the way made plaine, and occasion giuen. For I saw he was disdained of the Lords temporall, and accursed of the Lords Spirituall. After diuers cogitations of this matter, as I rode betweene Worcester and Bridgenorth, I encountred with the Lady Margaret, Countesse of Richmond, now wife to the Lord Stanley, whiche is the very daughter and sole heire to John, Duke of Somerset, my grandfathers elder brother: so that she and her sonne, the Earle of Richmond, be both betweene me and the gate, to enter into the Maiesty Royall, and getting of the Crowne: and when we had a little communed concerning her sonne, and were departed, I then beganne to dispute with my selfe, whether I were best to take vpon me, by the election of the Nobility and Commonalty, or to take it by power. Thus standing in the wauering ambiguity, I considered first, the Office, duty, and paine of a King, which surely I thinke that no mortall man can inswly and truly obserue, except hee be elected by God, as King Dauid was: but further, I remembred, that if I once take on me the gouernance of the Realme, the daughters of King Edward, and their allies, being both for his sake much belowed, and also for the great iniury done to them much pitied, would never cease to barke at the one side of me. Semblably my Cousin, the Earle of Richmond, his aydes and kinsfolke, will surely attempt, eyther to bite or pierce me on the other side, so that my life and rule should ever haue vnquiet, in doubt of death or depoſition. And if the said two Linages of Yorke and Lancaster should ioyne in one against mee, then were I surely matched. Wherefore I haue clerely determined vtterly to relinquish all imaginations concerning the obtaining of the Crowne: for as I told you, the Countesse of Richmond, in my returne from the new named King, meeting me in the high-way, prayed me sticke for kindred sake, secondly for the loue I bare to my Grandfather, D. Humfrey, which was ſworne brother to her father, to moue the King to be good to her ſonne, Henry. Earle of Richmond, and to licence him with his fauour to returne againe into England, and if it were his pleaſure ſo to doe, ſhe promiſed that the Earle her ſonne, ſhould marry one of King Edwards Daughters at the appointment of the King, without any thing demanded for the ſaid eſpouſalls, but onely the Kings fauour, which requeſt, I ſoone ouer-paſſed and departed, but after, in my lodging, I called to memory more of that matter, I am bent, that the Earle of Richmond, bepre to the houſe of Lancaſter, ſhall take to wife Lady Elizabeth, eldeſt daughter to King Edward, by the which marriage, both the houſes of Yorke and Lancaſter may be vnite in one: when the Duke had ſaid, the Biſhop Morton, which fauoured euer the houſe of Lancaſter was wonderous ioyfull, for all his imagination tended to this effect, and leſt the Dukes courage ſhould aſwage, or his minde alter, he ſaid to the Duke: My Lord of Buckingham, ſith by Gods proniſion, and your incomparable wiſedome, this Noble coniunction is firſt mooued, it is neceſſary to conſider what perſons wee ſhall firſt make priuy of this politike concluſion. By my troth, quoth the Duke, we will beginne with the Lady of Richmond, the Earles mother, which knoweth where he is in Britaine: ſith you will beginne that way (ſaid the Biſhop) I haue an old friend with the Counteſſe, called Reinold Bray, for whom I ſhall ſend, if it be your pleaſure: ſo the Biſhop wrote for him to come to Weekmorke: who ſtraight came backe with the meſſenger, where the Duke and the Biſhop declared what they had deuiſed for the preferment of the Earle of Richmond, ſonne to his Lady and miſtreſſe: willing her firſt to compaſſe how to obtaine the good will of Queene Elizabeth, and alſo of her eldeſt daughter, and after ſecretly to ſend to her Sonne in Britaine, to declare what high honor was prepared for him, if he would ſweare to marry the Lady Elizabeth, as ſoone as he was King of the Realme. Reinold Bray with a glad heart returned to the Counteſſe his Lady. When Bray was gone, the Biſhop told the Duke, that if he were in his Iſle of Ely, he could make many friends to further their enterpriſe. The Duke knew this to be true, but yet loth to loſe the company of ſuch a Counſellor, gaue the Biſhop faire words, ſaying, hee ſhould ſhortly depart well accompanied for feare of enemies, but the Biſhop ere the Dukes company were aſſembled, ſecretly diſguiſed in a night, departed, and came to Ely, where he found money and friends, and ſo ſayled into Flanders, where hee did the Earle of Richmond good ſeruice. When Reinold Bray had declared his meſſage to the Counteſſe, no marueil if ſhe were glad, wherefore ſhe deuiſed a meanes how to breake this matter to Queene Elizabeth then being in Sanctuary at Weſtminſter, and hauing in her family a certaine Welſhman, called Lewes, learned in phyſicke, now hauing opportunity to breake her minde vnto him, declared that the time was come that her ſonne ſhould be ioyned in marriage with the Lady Elizabeth, daughter and heire to King Edward, and that King Richard ſhould out of all honour and eſtate be detected: and required him to goe to Queen Elizabeth, not as a meſſenger, but as one that came friendly to viſite her, and as time and place ſhould ſerue, to make her priuy of this deuice. This Phyſician with good diligence, repaired to the Queene: and when he ſaw time conuenient, he ſaid vnto her, Madam, although my imagination be very ſimple, yet for the entyre affection I beare to you and to your children, I am ſo bold to vtter vnto you a ſecret conceit, that I haue compaſſed in my braine. When I remember the great loſſe that you haue ſuſtained by the death of your louing husband, and the great ſorrow that you haue ſuffered by the cruell murther of your innocent children, I can no leſſe doe, then daily ſtudy how to bring your heart to comfort, and alſo to reuenge the quarrell of you and your children on that cruell tyrant, King Richard. And firſt conſider what battell, and what miſchiefe hath riſen by the diſſention betweene the two houſes of Yorke and Lancaſter, which two families, if they may be ioyned in one, I doubt not but that your line ſhall be againe reſtored to your great ioy and comfort. You know, Madam, that of the houſe of Lancaſter, the Earle of Richmond is next of blood, and to the houſe of Yorke your daughters now are heyres: If ye could inuent the meane how to couple your eldeſt daughter with the Earle of Richmond in matrimony, no doubt but the vſurper ſhould be ſhortly depoſed, and your heyre againe to her right reſtored. When the Queene had heard this friendly motion, ſhee inſtantly beſought him that as he had bene the firſt inuenter of ſo good an enterpriſe, that now he would not deſiſt to follow the ſame, requiring him further, that he would reſort to the Counteſſe of Richmond, mother to the Earle Henry, and to declare to her on the Quenes behalfe, that all the friends of King Edward her husband, ſhould aſſiſt and take part with the Earle of Richmond her ſonne, ſo that hee would take an oath, that after the kingdome obtained, to eſpouſe the Lady Elizabeth her daughter, &c. Maiſter Lewes ſo ſped his buſineſſe, that hee made a finall end of his buſineſſe betweene the two two mothers: ſo the Lady Margaret, Counteſſe of Richmond, brought to a good hope of the preferment of her ſonne, made Reinold Bray chiefe ſolicitor of this conſpiracy, giuing him in charge ſecretly, to inueigle ſuch perſons of the Nobility to ioyne with her, and take her part, as hee knew to be faithfull.

This Reinold Bray, within few daies, brought to his lure, Sir Giles Daubeney, Sir John Cheiney, Richard Guilford, and Thomas Ram, Eſquires, and others. In the meane ſeaſon, the Counteſſe of Richmond, ſent Chriſtopher Vrſwike into Britaine, to the Earle of Richmond, to declare to him all agreements, betweene her and the Queene agreed: but ſhee remembring that the Duke of Buckingham was one of the firſt inuenters of this enterpriſe, ſent Hugh Conway, Eſquire, into Britaine, with a great ſumme of money to her ſonne, giuing him in charge to declare to the Earle, the great loue that the moſt part of the Nobility of the Realme bare toward him, willing him not to neglect ſo good an occaſion offered, but with all ſpeede, to ſettle his minde how to returne into England, giuing him counſell to take land in Wales. When the Earle had receiued this ioyfull meſſage, he drake to the Duke of Britaine all his ſecrets, aduertiſing him that he was entred into a ſure and ſtedfaſt hope to obtaine the Crowne of England, deſiring him of helpe toward the atchieuing of his enterpriſe, which the Duke promiſed, and after performed. Whereupon the Earle ſent into England, Hugh Conway, and Thomas Ram, to declare his comming ſhortly into England. In the meane ſeaſon, the chiefe of the conſpiracy in England began many enterpriſes: which being neuer ſo priuily handled, yet knowledge thereof came to King Richard, and becauſe hee knew the Duke of Buckingham to be the chiefe head and ayde of this communication, he thought it moſt neceſſary to pluckе him from that part, whereupon he addreſſed his louing letters to the Duke, to repaire to the Court: but the Duke required the King to pardon him, excuſing himſelfe that he was not well. King Richard not content with this excuſe, directed to the Duke other letters with checking words, commanding him without delay, to repayre to his preſence. The Duke made to the meſſenger a determinate anſwer, that he would not come to his mortall enemy: and immediately prepared war againſt him, and by this meanes, Thomas, Marqueſſe Dorſet, came out of Sanctuary, gathered a great band of men in Yorkeſhire, Sir Edward Courtney, and Peter his brother, Biſhop of Exceſter, raiſed another army in Deuon-ſhire and Cornewall. In Kent, Sir Richard Guilford, mother Gentleman, raiſed a company.

But King Richard in the meane time, had gotten together a great ſtrength, with whom he removed from London toward Saliſbury, to the intent hee might ſet on the Dukes army, the King was ſcarce two daies iourney from Saliſbury, when the Duke of Buckingham accompanied with a great power of Welſh-men, which in the end forſooke him: The Duke with his power marched thorow the Foreſt of Deane, intending to haue paſſed the River of Seuerne at Glocester, and there to haue ioyned in army with the Countreies, and other Weſterne men, which if he had done, no doubt but King Richard had beene in great leopardy. But before he could attaine to Seuerne ſide, by force of continuall raine the River roſe ſo high, that it ouerflowed all the Countrey adioyning, which rage of water laſted ten dates: by which inundancy, the paſſages were ſo cloſed, that neyther the Duke could come ouer Seuerne to his complices, nor they to him: during which time, the Welſhmen lingering, idle and without money or victuall, ſuddenly ſcaled and departed. The Duke thus left almoſt alone, was of neceſſity compelled to flie, and conueyed himſelfe into the houſe of Humfrey Banaſter his ſeruant, beſide Shrewesbury, whom he had tenderly brought vp, which when it was knowne to his adherents, euery man ſhifted for himſelfe and fled. And ſome of them ſayled into Britaine, among the which were Peter Courtney, Biſhop of Exceſter, and Sir Edward Courtney his brother, Thomas, Marqueſſe Dorſet, John, Lord Wells, Sir John Bourcher, Sir Edward Woodvile, brother to Queene Elizabeth, Sir Robert Willoughby, Sir Giles Dubney, Sir Thomas Arundale, Sir John Cheinie, and his two brethren, Sir William Barkeley, Sir William Brandon, and Thomas his brother, Sir Richard Edgecombe, and Sir John Halwell, Edward Pownings, &c. Proclamation was made, and a thouſand pound promiſed to who ſo could bring out the Duke of Buckingham, whereupon Humfrey Banaſter betrayed his gheſt and maſter to John Mitton, then Sheriffe of Shropſhire: which with a ſtrong power apprehended the Duke in a little grouc adioyning to the mannors of Humfrey Banaſter, and in great haſt conueyed him to the City of Saliſbury, where King Richard then kept his houſhold. This Banaſter after he had betrayed his Maſter, his Sonne and heyre waxed mad, and dyed in a Boares ſtie, his eldeſt daughter was ſuddenly ſtricken with a foule leprey, his ſecond ſonne manuelloſly deformed of his limbs and made lame, his younger ſon in a ſmall puddle was ſpowned, and he himſelfe being of extreme age arraigned and found guilty of a murther, and by his Clergy ſaued. And as for his thouſand pound, King Richard gaue him not one farthing, ſaying, that he which would be traitor to ſo good a Maſter, would be falſe to all other.

The Duke after he had confeſſed all the whole conſpiracy, vpon the ſecond of Nouember without arraignment or iudgement, was at Saliſbury beheaded. At the ſame time that the Duke of Buckingham was by in the Weſt-countrey, there were many vp in Kent, to wit, Sir George Browne, Sir Iohn Gilford, and his Sonne, Foge, Scot, and Hants, after Clifford, Bonting, preeman of the Crowne, with many other, to the number of fiue thouſand: theſe made a fray at Gaddeſend in the faye, where Bonting lowed, and also for the great iniury done to them much pitied, would neuer cease to barke at the one side of me. Semblably my Cousin, the Earle of Richmond, his aydes and kinsfolke, will surely attempt, either to bite or pierce me on the other side, so that my life and rule should euer hang vnquiet, in doubt of death or depositon. And if the said two Linages of Yorke and Lancaster should ioyne in one against mee, then were I surely matched. Wherefore I haue clearely determined vtterly to relinquish all imaginations concerning the obtaining of the Crowne: for as I told you, the Countesse of Richmond, in my returne from the new named King, meeting me in the high-way, prayed me first for kindred sake, secondly for the loue I bare to my Grandfather, D. Humfrey, which was true one brother to her father, to moue the King to be good to her sonne, Henry. Earle of Richmond, and to licence him with his fauour to returne againe into England, and if it were his pleasure so to doe, she promised that the Earle her sonne, should marry one of king Edwards Daughters at the appointment of the King, without any thing demanded for the said espousalls, but only the Kings fauour, which request, I sone ouer-passed and departed, but after, in my lodging, I called to memory more of that matter, I am bent, that the Earle of Richmond, heyre to the house of Lancaster, shall take to wife Lady Elizabeth, eldest daughter to King Edward, by the which marriage, both the houses of Yorke and Lancaster may be vnite in one: when the Duke had said, the Bishop Morton, which fauoured euer the house of Lancaster was wonderous ioyfull, for all his imagination tended to this effect, and left the Dukes courage should swage, or his minde alter, he said to the Duke: My Lord of Buckingham, sith by Gods prouision, and your incomparable wisedome, this Noble coniunction is first mooued, it is necessary to consider what persons were shall first make proue of this politike conclusion. By my troth, quoth the Duke, we will beginne with the Lady of Richmond, the Earles mother, which knoweth where he is in Britaine: sith you will beginne that way (said the Bishop) I haue an old friend with the Countesse, called Reinold Bray, for whom I shall send, if it be your pleasure: so the Bishop wrote for him to come to Brecknocke: who straight came backe with the messenger, where the Duke and the Bishop declared what they had deuised for the preferment of the Earle of Richmond, sonne to his Lady and mistresse: willing her first to compasse how to obtaine the good will of Queene Elizabeth, and also of her eldest daughter, and after secretly to send to her Sonne in Britaine, to declare what high honor was prepared for him, if he would sweare to marry the Lady Elizabeth, as sone as he was King of the Realme. Reinold Bray with a glad heart returned to the Countesse his Lady. When Bray was gone, the Bishop told the Duke, that if he were in his Isle of Ely, he could make many friends to further their enterprize. The Duke knew this to be true, but yet loth to lose the company of such a Councellor, gaue the Bishop fayre words, saying, he should shortly depart well accompanied for feare of enemies, but the Bishop ere the Dukes company were assembled, secretly disguised in a night, departed, and came to Ely, where he found money and friends, and so sayled into Flanders, where he did the Earle of Richmond good service. When Reinold Bray had declared his message to the Countesse, no marueil if shee were glad, wherefore shee deuised a meanes how to breake this matter to Queene Elizabeth then being in Sanctuary at Westminster, and hauing in her family a certaine Welshman, called Lewes, learned in physicke, now hauing opportunity to breake her minde vnto him, declared that the time was come that her sonne should be ioyned in marriage with the Lady Elizabeth, daughter and heire to King Edward, and that King Richard should out of all honour and estate be detected: and required him to goe to Queen Elizabeth, not as a messenger, but as one that came friendly to visite her, and as time and place should serue, to make her priuy of this deuice. This Physician with good diligence, repaired to the Queene: and when he saw time conuenient, he said vnto her, Madam, although my imagination be very simple, yet for the entyre affection I beare to you and to your children, I am so bold to vtter vnto you a secret conceit, that I haue compassed in my braine. When I remember the great losse that you haue sustained by the death of your louing husband, and the great sorrow that you haue suffered by the cruell murther of your innocent children, I can no lesse doe, then daily study how to bring your heart to comfort, and also to reuenge the quarrell of you and your children on that cruell tyrant, King Richard. And first consider what battell, and what mischiefe hath risen by the dissention betweene the two houses of Yorke and Lancaster, which two families, if they may be ioyned in one, I doubt not but that your line shall be againe restored to your great ioy and comfort. You know, Madam, that of the house of Lancaster, the Earle of Richmond is next of blood, and to the house of Yorke your daughters now are heyres: If ye could inuent the meane how to couple your eldest daughter with the Earle of Richmond in matrimony, no doubt but the vsurper should be shortly deposed, and your heyre againe to her right restored. When the Queene had heard this friendly motion, shee instantly beseought him that as he had been the first inuenter of so good an enterprize, that now he would not desist to follow the same, requiring him further, that he would resort to the Countesse of Richmond, mother to the Earle Henry, and to declare to her on the Queenes behalfe, that all the friends of King Edward her husband, should assist and take part with the Earle of Richmond her sonne, so that hee would take an oath, that after the kingdome obtained, to espouse the Lady Elizabeth her daughter, &c. Matter Lewes so sped his businesse, that hee made a finall end of his businesse betweene the two two mothers: so the Lady Margaret, Countesse of Richmond, brought to a good hope of the preferment of her sonne, made Reinold Bray chiefe solicitor of this conspiracy, giuing him in charge secretly, to inuegle such persons of the Nobility to ioyne with her, and take her part, as hee knew to be faithfull.

This Reinold Bray, within few daies, brought to his lure, Sir Giles Daubeney, Sir John Cheiney, Richard Guilford, and Thomas Ram, Esquires, and others. In the meane season, the Countesse of Richmond, sent Christopher Vrswike into Britaine, to the Earle of Richmond, to declare to him all agreements, betweene her and the Queene agreed: but shee remembring that the Duke of Buckingham was one of the first inuenters of this enterprize, sent Hugh Conway, Esquire, into Britaine, with a great summe of money to her sonne, giuing him in charge to declare to the Earle, the great loue that the most part of the Nobility of the Realme bare toward him, willing him not to neglect so good an occasion offered, but with all speede, to settle his minde how to returne into England, giuing him counsell to take land in Wales. When the Earle had received this ioyfull message, he brake to the Duke of Britaine all his secrets, aduertising him that he was entred into a sure and stedfast hope to obtaine the Crowne of England, desiring him of helpe toward the atchieuing of his enterprize, which the Duke promised, and after performed. Whereupon the Earle sent into England, Hugh Conway, and Thomas Ram, to declare his comming shortly into England. In the meane season, the chiefe of the conspiracy in England began many enterprizes, which being neuer so priuily handled, yet knowledge thereof came to King Richard, and because hee knew the Duke of Buckingham to be the chiefe head and ayde of this conspiration, he thought it most necessary to plucke him from that part, whereupon he addressed his louing letters to the Duke, to exhort the Duke to come to the Court: but the Duke required the King to pardon him, excusing himselfe that hee was not well. King Richard not content with this excuse, directed to the Duke other letters with checking words, commanding him without delay, to repayre to his presence. The Duke made to the messenger a determinate answer, that hee would not come to his mortall enemy: and immediately prepared war against him, and by his meanes, Thomas, Marquesse Dorset, came out of Sanctuary, gathered a great band of men in Yorkeshire, Sir Edward Courtney, and Peter his brother, Bishop of Exceter, raised another army in Deuon-shire and Cornewall. In Kent, Sir Richard Guilford, another Gentleman, raised a company.

But King Richard in the meane time, had gotten together a great strength, with whom he removed from London toward Salisbury, to the intent hee might set on the Dukes army, the King was scarce two daies iourney from Salisbury, when the Duke of Buckingham accompanied with a great power of welsh Welsh-men, which in the end forsooke him. The Duke with his power marched thorow the Forrest of Deane, intending to haue passed the River of Seuerne at Glocester, and there to haue ioyned in army with the Countreies, and other Welsherne men, which if hee had done, no doubt but King Richard had beene in great ieopardy. But before hee could attaine to Seuerne side, by force of continuall raine the ter. River rose so high, that it ouerflowed all the Countrey adioyning, which rage of water lasted ten daies: by which inundancy, the passages were so closed, that neyther the Duke could come ouer Seuerne to his complices, nor they to him: during which time, the Welshmen lingering, idle and without money or victuall, suddenly fealed and departed. The Duke thus left almost alone, was of necessity compelled to flie, and conueyed himselfe into the house of Humfrey Banister his seruant, beside Shrewsbury, whom hee had tenderly brought vp, which when it was knowne to his adherents, euery man shifted for himselfe and fled. And some of them sayled into Britaine, among the which were Peter Courtney, Bishop of Exceter, and Sir Edward Courtney his brother, Thomas, Marquesse Dorset, Iohn, Lord Wells, Sir John Bourcher, Sir Edward Woodvile, brother to Queene Elizabeth, Sir Robert Willoughby, Sir Giles Dubney, Sir Thomas Arundale, Sir Iohn Cheinie, and his two heyres, Sir William Barkeley, Sir William Brandon, and Thomas his brother, Sir Richard Edgecombe, and Sir Iohn Halwell, Edward Pownings, &c. Proclamation was made, and a thousand pound promised to who so could bring out the Duke of Buckingham, whereupon Humfrey Banister bewrayed his ghest and master to Iohn Mitton, then Sheriffe of Shroppshire, which with a strong power apprehended the Duke in a little grouse adioyning to the mannors of Humfrey Banister, and in great haste conueyed him to the City of Salisbury, where King Richard then kept his houshold. This Banister after he had betrayed his Master, his Sonne and heyre waxed mad, and died in a Boares stie, his eldest daughter was suddenly stricken with a foule leprey, his second sonne marueilously deformed of his limbs and made lame, his younger son in a small puddle was drowned, and he himselfe being of extreme age arraigned and found guilty of a murther, and by his Clergy saued. And as for his thousand pound, King Richard gaue him not one farthing, saying, that he which would be vntrue to so good a Master, would be false to all other. Great flood. Banister, that betrayed his Master, miserably plagued. The like crafts to their Masters look for the like or worse, to theirs, and out speedy repentance.

The Duke after he had confessed all the whole conspiracy, vpon the second of November without arraignment or iudgement, was at Salisbury beheaded. At the same time that the Duke of Buckingham was by in the West-country, there were many vp in Kent, to wit, Sir George Browne, Sir Iohn Gilford, and his Sonne, Foge, Scot, and Hants, after Clifford, Bonting, peoman of the Crowne, with many other, to the number of fiue thousand: these made a fray at Gualelend in the fayre, where Bonting Duke of Buckingham beheaded.

slew Master Mowbray, with diuers other, but when they heard that the Duke of Buckingham was dead, they were faine to flie to saue themselues.

Whilest these things were thus handled in England, Henry, Earle of Richmond, prepared an army of fiue thousand Britons, and fortie well furnished Ships. When all things were prepared, and the day of setting forward was appointed, which was the twelfth of October, the whole army horsed by sayles, and tooke the Sea, but toward night the winde turned, and so huge a tempest arose, that the Ships were dispersed asunder: some driuen into Normandy, some againe into Britaine. In the morning after, when the tempest was asswaged, the Earle approached to the South part of England, at the mouth of the Haven of Pole in Dorset, where hee might see all the bankes full of men of warre, appointed to defend his arriuall, wherefore he gaue charge, that no man should land, vntill such time as the whole Nauy were assembled, but after that hee perceiued none of his ships to appeare, he hoysed vp anchors and away, where he arriued safe in Normandy, and returned by Land into Britaine, where hee was some aduertised, that the Duke of Buckingham had lost his head, and that the Marquesse Dorset, and a great number of Noble men in England had a little before inquired for him there.

In the meane season, King Richard apprehended in diuers parts of this Realme, certaine Gentle men of the Earle of Richmonds faction, amongst whom, Sir George Browne, Sir Roger Clifford, and foure other were put to death at London, the third of December. Sir Thomas Sentlegar, who had married the Dutchesse of Exceter, the Kings owne Sister, and Thomas Ram, with diuers other were executed at Exceter.

Fire at Leaden-hall in London.

The thirtieth of December, was a great fire at Leaden Hall in London, where through was burnt much housing, and all the Rockes for gunnes, and other like prouision belonging to the Citty.

After this, King Richard called a Parliament, in the which he attainted the Earle of Richmond, and all other persons, which were fled out of the Realme for feare, or any other cause as enemies to him, and to their naturall countrey, and all their lands and goods was confiscate to the Kings vse, and yet notwithstanding, he laid on the people a great tare.

An. reg. 2.

In this troublesome season, nothing was more marueiled at, then that the Lord Stanley had not beene taken, considering the working of the Lady Margaret, his wife, mother to the Earle of Richmond: but for as much as the enterprize of a woman was of him reputed of no regard or estimation, and that the Lord Stanley her husband, had purged himselfe to be innocent of all attempts by her committed, it was giuen him in charge to keepe her in some secret place at home, without hauing any seruant or companie, so that from thenceforth she should neuer send letter to her Sonne, or to any of his friends, by the whiel she might be wrolled, which commandement was a while put in execution.

This yere, King Richard began the high Tower at Westminster, which remained yet vnfinished. Also hee caused the body of King Henry the first to be remoued from Chertsey Abbey in Surrey, and to be buryed at Windsore on the twelfth of August.

King Henry the first remoued to Windsor.

In these daies were chiefe rulers about the King, the Lord Louel, and two Gentle-men, being named Sir Richard Ratcliffe, and Sir William Catesby, of the which persons was made a seditious rime, and fastened vpon the Crosse in Cheape, and other places of the Citty, whereof the sentence was as followeth.

Which was to meane these three persons, ruled this Land vnder the King, which bare a white Boare for his Cognisance. For the deuisers of this rime, much search was made, and sundry accused to their great charges. But finally, two Gentlemen, Turburuile, and Collingborne, were for that and other things laid to their charge, arrested and cast in prison, for whom shortly was holden at Guild-Hall, an Oyer determiner, where the two Gentle-men were arraigned, and that one of them called William Collingborne, Esquire, conuict of the crime and other, for the which hee was drawne vnto the Tower-hill, and there full cruelly put to death: as first hanged, and straight cut downe and ripped and his bowells cast into the fire, the which torment was so speedily done, that when the Butcher pulled out his heart, hee spake, and said, Iesus, Iesus. This man was greatly moaned of the people, for his godly personage and fauour of visage, hee had borne sometime, to wit, the 15. of Edward the fourth, Sheriffe of Wiltshire, and in the 17. Sheriffe of Somersetshire, and Dorsetshire.

Record

King Richard considering the amities concluded betweene Princes, are the cause that their Realmes are fortified with a double power, that is to say, with their owne strength, and the ayde of their friends, practised a League with the King of Scots, which not long before had made diuers incursions and roades into the Realme of England, and therefore sued to haue a truce, or peace concluded. Wherefore Commissioners were appointed, which met at Nottingham, and there in the end, concluded for three yeeres on certaine Articles, 15. in number. This peace now concluded, King Richard now doubting his owne people, was continually vexed with feare of the returne of the Earle of Richmond and his complices: Wherefore, nothing was for his purpose more, then once againe with price and prayer, to attempt the Duke of Britaine, in whose territorie the Earle then abode, to deliuer him into his hands: wherefore incontinent hee sent certaine Ambassadors to the Duke of Britaine, which tooke vpon them that King Richard should payle pay and answere the the Duke of Britaine of all the reuenues, rents and profits of the Lands and Possessions, as well belonging to the Earle of Richmond, as to any other Noble or Gentleman which then were in the Earles company, if he after that time would keepe them in continuall prison, and restraine them from liberty. The Orators furnished with these, and other instructions arriued in Britaine, but could not speake with the Duke, by reason that he, being weakned by a long and daily infirmity, began to waxe feble of his remembrance, for which cause, Peter Landoys his chiefe Treasurer, ruled all things at his pleasure, into whom the English Ambassadors moued to him their message, offering to him the same rewards and Lands that they should haue offered the Duke. This Peter faithfully promised to accomplish King Richards request, to that he kept promise with him: but fortune was so fauourable to the publike weale of England, that this deadly compact tooke none effect; for Iohn Morton, Bishop of Ely, sojourning then in Flanders, was of all this crafty deuice certified: wherefore he sent Christopher Vrswike, to declare to the Earle of Richmond all the deceit, giuing him charge in all hast possible, with his company to retire out of Britaine into France. When these newes came to the Earle, hee incontinent sent to Charles, the French King, requiring that he and his might safely passe into France, which desire was granted, and the Earle with the rest dispatched as priuily as might be into France, no man suspecting their departure. After this, the Earle tooke his iourney to Charles the French King, to whom, after great thanks giuen, he disclosed the occasion of his access to his person. After that, he required of him helpe and succour to the intent hee might returne to the Nobility of his Realme, of whom hee was generally called to take vpon him the Crowne: King Charles promised him aye, and bad him be of good comfort, for he assured him that hee would gladly shew to him his bountifull liberality. Whiles the Earle of Richmond thus attended on the French Court, Io. Vere, Earle of Oxford, so perswaded Iames Blunt, Captaine of Hames Castle, and Sir Iohn Forteskewe, Porteror of the Towne of Caleis, that he himselfe was not onely set at liberty, but they also, leauing their fruitfull offices, condescended to go with him into France, to the Earle of Richmond.

In the meane season, King Richard was credibly aduertised, what promises and oathes the Earle and his confederates had made and sworn, and how by the Earles meanes, all the Englishmen were passed out of Britaine into France. Wherefore being in a manner desperate, imagining how to infringe the Earles promise by another meane, so that by the marriage of Lady Elizabeth, his Niece, he should pretend no claime to the Crowne, there came to his minde a thing not onely detestable, but much more cruell to be put in execution, for he clearely determined to reconcile to his fauor, his brothers wife, Queen Elizabeth, and so by that meanes, the Earle of Richmond, of the affinity of his Niece should be vtterly defrauded, and if no ingenious remedy could be otherwise inuented, if it should happen Queene Anne his wife, to depart out of this world, then hee himselfe would rather take to wife his Cousin and Niece, the Lady Elizabeth, then for lacke of that affinity, the whole Realme should run to ruine. Wherefore he sent to the Queen being in Sanctuary, diuers, and often mellengers, which should excuse him of all things before, against her attempted, and after should, so largely promise promotions, not only to her, but to her sonne, Thomas, Marques Dorset, that they should bring her (if it were possible) into some vain hope. The mellengers so perswaded the Queene, that she began somewhat to relent, in so much, that she faithfully promised to yeeld her selfe to the Kings will and pleasure. And so shee first deliuered vnto King Richards hands her 5. daughters: Afterward she sent letters to the Marquesse her sonne, being then at Paris with the Earle of of Richmond, willing him in any wise to repaire into England, where for him were prouided great honours, ascertaining him, that all offences in both parties were forgiuen and forgotten: After that King Richard had thus pleased the mutable minde of Queene Elizabeth, he caused all her daughters to be conueyed into his Palace with solemne receiuing. Now nothing was contrary to his purpose, but that his mansion was not voyde of a wife: And first, he abstained both from the bed, and company of his wife: after he complained to many of the infortunate barrennesse of his wife. After this, he procured a common rumour to be published among the common people, that the Queene was dead. When the Queene heard tell that so horrible a rumour of her death was sprung amongst the communalty, shee fore suspected the world to be almost at an end with her, and not long after, to wit, the 16. of March, in the Lent season, howsoeuer it fortuned, the Queene departed out of this life, and was with due solemnitie buried at Westminster.

The King thus losed out of the bonds of matrimony, began to cast a fancy to Lady Elizabeth his Niece, making much suite to haue her ioyned with him in lawfull Matrimony: but because all men, and the maiden her selfe most of all, detested this vnlawfull copulation, he determined to deferre the matter, till he were in a more quiet ease, for all this season hee was oppressed with weyghty affayres on euery side, considering that daily part of the Nobility fayled into France, other priuily fauored the Earle of Richmond, amongst the Noble men whoute hee most suspected, these were the principall, Thomas, Lord Stanley, Sir William Stanley his brother, Gilbert Talbot, and fiue hundred other, of whole purpose, though King Richard were ignorant, yet he gaue no credence to any one of them, and least of all to the Lord Stanley, because he was ioyned in matrimony with the Lady Margaret, mother to the Earle of Richmond, for when the Lord Stanley would haue departed into his Country, the King in no wise would suffer him to depart, before he had left as in hostage in the Court, George Stanley,

An. Reg. 3.

Lord

Lord Strange, his first begotten Sonne and heyre.

While King Richard was thus troubled suddenly he heard newes that the Castle of Hames was deliuered into the hands of the Earle of Richmond, by the meanes of the Earle of Oxford, and that not onely he, but also Iames Blunt, Captaine of the Castle, were fled into Fraunce to ayde the Earle of Richmond.

Henry, Earle of Richmond, obtaining of King Charles a small crue of men, and borrowing certaine summes of money of him, and of diuers other his priuate friends, hee departed from the French Court, and came to the Citty of Roan. While he tarried there, making prouision at Harefleete, in the mouth of the River of Seyne, for all things necessary for his iourney, tydings were brought to him, that King Richard, being without children, and a widdower, intended shortly to marry with Lady Elizabeth, his brothers daughter, which newes he tooke of no small moment, for this thing onely tooke away from all his companions, their hope to obtaine an happy enterprize, by reason whereof, he iudged that all his friends in England would shrinke from him, yet notwithstanding, Castle, Henry, of Richmond, because hee would no longer linger and weary his friends, liuing betweene hope and feare, determined in all hast conuenient to set forward, and carried to his ships armour, weapons, victuall, and all other ordinances expedient for war, which being done, onely accompanied with two thousand men, and a small number of ships, weighed by his Anchors, and in the Kalends of August, he sailed from Harefleete with so prosperous a winde, that the seuenth day after, he arriued in Wales in the euening, at a Port called Milford Hauen, and incontinent tooke land, and came to a place called Dale, and at the Sunne-rising removed to Hereford West, where he was receiued of the people with great ioy.

Henry, Earle of Richmond landed at Milford Hauen.

From thence hee removed to Cardigan, 20. mile from Hereford West, whither came to the Earle, Richard Griffith, with all his men and power. After him the same day came Io. Morgan with his men. Then the Earle aduanced forward, making no abode in any place, and suddenly hee was aduertained that Sir Walter Herbert, and Rice ap Thomas, were in harnesse before him, ready to encounter with his army, and to stop their passage. Wherefore he first determined to set vpon them, and either to destroy or take them into his fauour, and after which, all his power to giue battell to King Richard, but to the intent his friends should know with what dexterity he attempted his enterprise forward, he sent messengers with letters and instructions to the Lady Margaret his mother, to the Lord Stanley and his brother, to Talbot and to other, declaring to them, that hee, holpe with the ayde of his friends, intended to passe ouer the River of Seuerne at Shrewsbury, and so to passe directly to the Citty of London, requiring them, as his speciall trust was in the hope of their fidelity that they would meete him by the way, with all diligent preparation.

When these messengers were departed, he marched forward towards Shrewsbury, and in his passage, there met and saluted him, Rice ap Thomas, with a goodly band of Welsh-men, which submitted himselfe wholy to his order and commaundement. In the meane time, the messengers layden with rewards, returned to him the third day that he entred into Shrewsbury, and made relation to him, that his friends were ready in all points to doe all things for him which they might doe. The Earle Henry continued his iourny, and came to a little Towne called Newport, and pitched his campe on a little hill adioyning, reposing himselfe there that night. In the euening of the same day, came to him, Sir Gilbert Talbot, with the whole power of the yong Earle of Shrewsbury, then being in ward, which were accounted 2. thousand men: and thus his power increasing, he arriued at the Towne of Stafford, and there paused. To whom came Sir William Stanley, accompanied with a few persons: After that the Earle departed from thence to Lichfield, and lay without the walls in campe all that night. The next morning he entred the Towne, and was like a Prince received. A day or two before, the Lord Stanley hauing in his band almost fiue thousand men, lodged in the same Towne, but hearing that the Earle of Richmond was marching thitherward, gaue to him place, withdrawing him and his, and repaired to a Towne called Atherstone, there abiding the comming of the Earle: and this he did to auoyd all suspition, being afraid lest if he should be seene openly to be a fauorer, or ayder to the Earle his Sonne in law, before the day of battell, that King Richard, which yet did not vtterly put in him mistrust, would put to some cruell death his Sonne and heyre apparant, George, Lord Strange, whom King Richard had in hostage. King Richard, at this season keeping his house in the Castle of Nottingham, was informed that the Earle of Richmond with such banished men as were fled out of England to him, were arrived in Wales, and that all things necessary to his enterprize were vnpurueyed, and very weake, nothing meete to withstand the power of such as the King had appointed to resist him, yet notwithstanding he sent to Iohn, Duke of Norfolke, Henry, Earle of Northumberland, Thomas, Earle of Surrey, and to other of his trusty friends, willing them to muster and view all their seruants and tenants, and to elect the most couragious and active persons of the whole number, and with them, to repaire to his presence with all speede. Also he wrote to Robert Brakenbry, Lieutenant of the Tower, commanding him with his power, to come to his army, and to bring with him his fellowes in Armes, Thomas Bourcher, and Sir Walter Hungerford, and diuers other Knights and Esquires, in whom he had no small iuspition. While he was thus ordering his affaires, tydings came, that the Earle of Richmond was passed Seuerne, and come to Shrewsbury without any detriment, or encombrance. At which message, he was formoued, and cryed out on them that contrary to their oath had deceiued him. And in all hast sent out to view what way his enemies kept and passed: it was declared to the King, that the Earle was incamped at the Towne of Litchfield. Whereat, when he had perfect knowledge, he hauing continuall repaire of his Subiects to him, he incontinently made his hast reits to set forward toward the way, where his enemies, as was to him reported, intended to passe, and keeping his array, he, with great pompe, entred the Towne of Leicester, after the Sunne-set. The Earle of Richmond raised his campe from Litchfield to Tamworth, and with vnd-way passing, there saluted him Sir Walter Hungerford, and Sir Thomas Bourchier, knights, and diuers others, which submitted themselues to his pleasure. Diuers other Noble personages like wise resorted to him with all their power. There hapned in this progresse to the Earle of Richmond a strange chance, for he was not a little afraide, because he could not be assured of his father in Law, Thomas, Lord Stanley, which as yet inclined to neither party, wherefore the Earle accompanied with 20. light horse-men, lingering in his iourney behinde his hoste, in the meane while, the whole King came before the Towne of Tamworth, and when he for darknesse could not perceiue the steps of them that passed on before, and had trauailed hither and thither, seeking after his company, he abode in a little village about three miles from his army, where he tarried all night. The next morning, in the dawning, he returned, and by good fortune came to his army, excusing himselfe not to haue gone out of his way by ignorance, but of purpose: this excuse made, he priuily departed againe to the Towne of Atherstone, where the Lord Stanley, and Sir William his brother, with their bands, were abiding: then the Earle came to his father in Law, in a little Stole, where he saluted him and Sir William his brother, and after, consulted how to giue battell to King Richard, if he would abide, whom they knew not to be farre off with an huge army. In the euening of the same day, Sir Iohn Savage, Sir Brian Stanford, Sir Simon Digby, and many other, leauing King Richard, turned and came to the Earle of Richmond with an elect company of men. In the meane season, King Richard marched to a place called Redmore, where for two battells to encounter, by a village called Bosworth, not farre from Leycester, and there he pitched his field, refreshed his army, and tooke his rest. The next day after, King Richard being furnished with men, and all abilliments of warre, bringing all his men out of their camp into the plaine, ordred his forewards in a marrellous length, in which he appointed both horse-men and foote-men, and in the Forefront he placed the Archers.

Battell at Bosworth.

Ouer this battell was Captaine, Iohn, Duke of Norfolke, with whom was Thomas, Earle of Surrey his sonne. After this long bantgard followed King Richard with a strong company of appoynted men of warre, hauing horse-men for wings on both sides of his battell.

After that the Earle of Richmond was retreated from the communication with his friends, he with all diligence pitched his field into the campe of his enemies, and there he lodged that night. In the morning betime, he caused his men to put on their armour, and apparrell themselues to fight, and giue battell, and sent to the Lord Stanley, requiring him with his men to approach neere to his army, and to helpe to set the Soldiers in array: he answered, the Earle should set his owne men in good order, while he would come to him in conuenient time. The Earle made his fore-ward some what straight and slender, according to the small number of his people. In the front he placed the Archers, of whom he made Captaine, Iohn, Earle of Oxford. To the right wing of the battell, he appointed Sir Gilbert Talbot to be the leader. To the left wing, he assigned Sir Iohn Savadge, and he with the ayde of the Lord Stanley, accompanied with the Earle of Penbroke, hauing a good company of horse-men, and a small number of foot-men, for all his whole number exceeded not 5000. men, beside the power of the Stanleyes, whereof 3000. were in the field vnder Sir William Stanley: The kings number was double so much, or more. When both these armies were thus ordered, and all men ready to set forward, King Richard called his chiefetaines together, perswading them to be baliant, &c. But his people were to him vnfaithfull in his end, as he was to his Nephewes vntrue and vnnaturall in his beginning. When the Earle of Richmond knew that the King was so neere enbattelled, he rode about his army, giuing comfortable words to all men, after the which he made to them a pithy Oration, perswading them to haue the victory, for that they were to fight in a iust quarrell, he had scantly finished his saying, but the one army espyed the other, betweene both armies there was a great marrish, which the Earle left on his right hand, and so doing, he had the Sun at his backe, and in the face of his enemies. When the King saw the Earles company was passed the marrish, he commanded with all haste to set vpon them, the terrible shot on both sides passed, the Armies ioyned, and came to hand-strokes, at which incounter, the Lord Stanley ioyned with the Earle.

The Earle of Oxford in the meane season, fearing lest while his company was fighting, they should be compassed of the enemies, gaue commandement, that no man should goe aboue ten fote from the Standard, which commandement once knowne, they knit themselues together, and ceased a little from fighting: the enemies suddenly abashed at the matter, and mistrusting some fraude, began also to pause. The Earle of Oxford bringing all his band together on the one part, set on his enemies freshly: again, the aduersaries perceiuing that, placed their men slender and thinne before, and thicke and broad behinde, beginning againe the battell. While the 2. forewards thus mortally fought, King Richard was admonished, that the Earle of Richmond accompanied with a small number of men of armes, was not farre off, and as he approached to him, he perfectly knew his personage, and being inflamed with ire, he put his spurres to his horse, and rode out of the side of the range of his battell, leauing the dauntgards fighting, and with Speare in wyst, ran toward him. The Earle perceiued well the King furiously comming toward him, and because the whole hope of his wealth and purpose was to be determined by battell, he gladly proffered to encounter with him body to body, and man to man: King Richard set on so sharply at the first brent, that he ouerthrew the Carles Standard, and slew Sir William Brandon, his Standardbearer, and matched hand to hand with Sir John Cheiney, a man of great force and strength, which would haue resisted him, and the said Iohn was by him manfully ouerthrowne, and so he making vpon pallage by dint of Sword as he went forward, the Earle of Richmond withstood his violence, and kept him at the Swords point longer then his companions thought, which being almost in dispaire of victory were suddenly recomforted by Sir William Stanley, which came to succour, with 3000. tall men, at which very instant, King Richards men were driuen backe and fled, and he himselfe manfully fighting in the middle of his enemies was slaine. In the meane season, the Earle of Oxford, with the aid of the Lord Stanley, after no long fight, discomfited the forward of King Richard, whereof a great number were slaine in the chase, but the greatest number that came to the field, neuer gaue stroke. In this battell dyed on King Richards part, about the number of 4000. men, and on the other side but 100. persons, as Sir Gilbert Talbot then wrote from the campe, and of the Nobility were slaine, Iohn, Duke of Norfolke, Walter, Lord Ferres of Chartley, Sir Richard Ratcliffe, Sir William Conyers, Sir Richard Claringdon, and Robert Brakenbury, Lieuetenant of the Tower, and not many Gentlemen more: Sir Will. Catesby learned in the Lawes of the Realme, and one of the chiefe Counsellours to the late King, with diuers other were 2. daies after beheaded at Leicester. Amongst them that ran away, were S. Francis Viscount Louel, and Humfrey Stafford, with Thomas Stafford his brother, which tooke Sanctuary in S. Johns at Glocester. On the Earle of Richmonds part that was slaine, the principall was Sir Iohn Brandon, his Standard-bearer. This battell was fought at Bolworth in Leicestershire, the 22. of August, in the yere of our Lord 1485. the whole conflict endured little aboue 2. houres. When the Earle had thus obtained the victory, he rendred thanks to God, and after to his souldiers for their fidelity: then the people cryed, King Henry, King Henry. When the Lord Stanley saw the good will of the people, he take the Crowne of King Richard, which was found amongst the spoyle in the field, and set it on the Earles head, as though he had bene elected King by the voyce of the people.

King Richards slaine.

King Henry at this time made Knights, as followeth: Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir Iohn Mortimer, Sir Rice ap Thomas, Sir Robert Poins, Sir Humfrey Stanley, Sir Io. Turburuile, Sir William Willoughby, Sir Hugh Persiall, Sir R. Hegecombe, Sir I. Bikenyle, Sir de Baron de Carow.

After this, the whole campe remoued to the Town of Leicester, where he rested two daies. In the meane season, the dead corps of King Richard was as shamefully carried to the Towne of Leycester, as he gorgeously the day before with pompe departed out of the same Towne: for his body was naked to the skinne, not so much as one clout about him, and was trussed behind a Pursuiuant of armes, like a Hogge or Calfe, the head and armes hanging on the one side of the horse, and the legges on the other side, and all sprinckled with myre and blod, was brought to the Gray-Friers Church within the Towne, and there homely buried, when he had raigned two yeres, two moneths and one day.

He founded a Colledge at Pidelham beyond Poke, and another at London, beside the Tower, in a Chappel called our Lady of Barking: he also endowed the Quenes Colledge at Cambridge with fiue hundred marks of yerly rent. He defeasted the great field of Wichwood, betweene Woodstocke and Bristow, which King Edward the fourth had incorporated before to the Forrest, &c.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING HENRY THE SEVENTH.

An. reg. 1.

HENRY the seuenth, borne in Penbroke Castle, began his raigne the 22. of August, in the yere of our Lord God, 1485. He was a Prince of marueilous wisedome, policy, iustice, temperance, and liberality, and notwithstanding many great occasions of trouble and warre he kept his Realme in right good order, for the which he was greatly reuerenced of forraigne Princes.

On the forenamed 22. of August, was a great fire in Bread-street of London, in the which fire, was brent, the Parson of Mildreds, and one other man in the parsonage there.

Parson of S. Mildreds brent.

King Henry before his departure from Leicester, sent Sir Robert Willoughby, Knight, to the Manor of Sherhutton, in the County of York, for Edward Plantagenet, Earle of Warwicke, Sonne and heyre to George, Duke of Clarence, then being of the age of 15. yeeres, and sent him vp to the Tower of London, where he was put vnder sure custody.

In the meane season, the King remoued towards London, and when he had approached the Citty, on the 27. of August, the Maior, Magistrates, and companies all clothed in violet, met him at Shoreditch, and with great pompe conueyed him through the Citty to Saint Pauls Church, where he offered his three Standards, one of S. George, the second a red Dragon, the third a white Cow, after his prayers said, and Te Deum sung, he departed to the Bishops Palace, where he soiourned a season.

The sweating began the 21. of September, and continued till the end of October: of the which sickenesse, a wonderfull number dyed, and in London besides other, died Thomas Hill, Maior, in whose place was chosen William Stocker, who likewise deceased about 7. daies after: in which place departed other 4 Aldermen, Thomas Hand, Richard Rawson, Thomas Norland, and Iohn Stocker, and then was chosen Maior, Iohn Warde, who continued till the feast of Simon and Iude.

On the euen of S. Simon and Iude, King Henry came from Kennington vnto Lambeth, and there dined with Thomas Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, Cardinall of S. Ciriac in Thermis. And after dinner, with a goodly rompany of the estates of this Realme, both spirituall and temporall, from thence went by land toward London, his Nobles riding after the guise of France vpon small Pachneies, two and two vpon a horse, & at London bridge end, the Maior of London, with his brethren, and the crafts, met and receiued the King, and the King proceeded to Grace-church corner, and so to the Tower. On the morrow, being the feast day of Simon and Iude, King Henry created Thomas, Lord Stanley, Earle of Darby, Edward Courtney, Earle of Deuonshire, and Iaspar, Earle of Penbroke, was created Duke of Bedford, all at one time in the Tower of London. Banarets made at this creation, Sir Gilbert Talbot, Sir Iohn Cheinie, Sir William Stonar, Sir William Troutbeke, Sir Ioh Mortimer, Sir Ric. Crosby, Sir I. Fortescue, Sir Edward Bedingfield, Sir Thomas Cokesey, Sir James Baskeruile, Sir Humfrey Stanley, Sir Richard de la Bere.

Penance of the Lord Audeley.

On the 30. of October, K. Henry was crowned at Westminster, by the hands of Tho. Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, and ordained a number of chosen Archers being strong and hardy persons, to giue daily attendance on his person, whom he named Yeomen of the Garde.

Parliament at Westminster.

The 7. of November, began a Parliament at Westminster for the establishing of all things, in the which he caused to be proclaimed, that all men were pardoned of all offences, and should be restored to their lands and goods, which would submit themselues to his clemency. After this, he began to remember his speciall friends, of whom some he aduanced to honour and dignity, and some he enriched with possessions and goods: and to begin, the Lord Chandew of Bayteine, he made Earle of Bathe: Sir Giles Daubeney was made Lord Daubeney: Sir Robert Willoughby, Lord Brooke: and Edward Stafford, eldest sonne to Henry, late Duke of Buckingham, he restored to his dignity and possessions: Sir Thomas Molineux, Knight, Baneret, he made Constable of Beaumarice, where shortly after he ended his life. The Parliament being dissolued, the King redeemed the Marques Dorset, and Sir Iohn Bourchier, whom he had left as pledges at Paris, for money there before borrowed: and sent also into Flanders for Iohn Morton, Bishop of Ely.

The 18. day of Januarp, King Henry married the Lady Elizabeth, eldest daughter to Edward the 4th, by which meanes the two families of Yorke and Lancaster, which had long bene at great diuision, were united and made one.

King Henry married the Lady Elizabeth.

King Henry sent the Lord Treasurer with Mr Bray and other, vnto the Lord Maior of London, requiring him and the Citizens of a pzest of 6000. marks, wherefore the Maior with his brethren and commons, granted a pzest of 2000. pound which was leuied of the companies, and not of the wards, which pzest was repayed again in the yere next following euery penny.

1485. Loue to the King.

Wheat was sold for three shilling the bushell, and bay salt at the like price. An. reg. 2.

In the Moneth of September, Quene Elizabeth was deliuered of her first sonne, named, Arthur, at Winchester.

This yere deceased Thomas Bourchier, Archbishop of Canterbury, and was buried at Canterbury: Iohn Morton, Bishop of Ely, a man of excellent wit, learning and vertue, was translated, and succeeded him in the Archbishoprike of Canterbury, and Iohn Alcocke succeeded in the Bishoprike of Ely.

Sir Richard Simon, a wily Priest, came to Gerald, Earle of Kildare, and deputy of Ireland, and presented to him a lad his Scholler, named Lambert, whom he fained to be the Sonne of George, D. of Clarence, lately escaped the Tower of London. And the child had learned of the Priest such Priuely behauiour, that he lightly mowed the Earle and many Nobles of Ireland, tendering the blod royall, of Richard Plantagenet, and George his sonne, as also maligning the aduancement of the house of Lancaster in Henry the seuenth, either to thinke or make the world wene, they thought verily this child to be Edward, Earle of Warwicke, the Duke of Clarence lawfull sonne. And although King Henry moye them halfe marred all the sport, in shewing the right earle through all the streets of London: yet the Lady Margaret, Dutches of Burgoigne, sister to Edward the 4. Iohn de la Pole her Nephew, the Lord Louel, Sir Thomas Broughton Knight, and other Captaines of this conspiracy, deuised to abuse the colour of this young Earles name, for preferring their purpose: which if it came to good, they agreed to depose Lambert, and to erect the very Earle in deede, now prisoner in the Tower: for whose quarrell, had they pretended to fight, they deemed it likely they should haue bene made away: wherefore it was blazed in Ireland, that the King to mocke his subiects, had schooled a boy to take vpon him the Earle of Warwicks name, and had shewed him about in London, to blinde the eyes of simple folke, and to defeat the lawfull inheritor of the Duke of Clarence their country-man and Protector: during his life, to whose Linage they also deuised a Title of the Crowne.

1487. In all the hast they assembled at Diuelin, and there in Christs Church they crowned this Idoll, honouring him with Titles imperiall, feasting and triumphing, roaring mighty shouts and cries, carrying him thence to the Kings Castle vpon tall mens shoulders, that he might be seene and noted, as hee was sure an honourable boy to looke vpon.

B. Hall. In this meane time, the Earle of Lincolne, and the Lord Louel, had gotten, by the ayd of Margaret, about 1000. Almaines, with Martin Swart, a German, and in martiall acts very expert, to be their Captaine, and so sayling into Ireland, and at the citty of Diuelin, caused yong Lambert to be proclaimed King of England, and so with a great multitude of Irishmen, of whom Thomas Gerardine was Captaine, they sailed into England with the new King, and landed at Foulzey, within a little of Lancaster, trusting there to be aided with money by Sir Thomas Broughton, one of the chiefe of this conspiracy.

King Henry not slacking in his matters, when he had gathered his hoste together, ouer the which the Duke of Bedford, and the Earle of Oxford were chiefe Captaines, he went to Couentrey, where he being certified, that the Earle of Lincolne was landed at Lancaster with his new King, he remoued to Nottingham, to whom shortly after came George Talbot, Earle of Shrewesbury, the Lord Strange, Sir Iohn Cheiney, with many other.

In this space, the Earle of Lincolne being entered into Yorkeshire, directed his way to Newarke vpon Trent, and at a little village called Stoke, field Stoke, 3. or 4. miles from Newarke, nigh to the King and his army planted his campe.

The next day following, the King diuided his number into three battells and after approached nigh the Towne of Stoke, where both the armies ioyned and fought egerly on both parts: but at the length, the Kings fore-ward set vpon the aduersaries with such a violence, that they slew many, and put the rest to flight. For there their chiefe Captaines, the Earle of Lincolne, and the Lord Louel, Sir Thomas Broughton, Martin Swart, and the Lord Gerardine (or after Campion, Morice Fitz Thomas) Captaine of the Irishmen, were slain, & other about 4000. This battell was fought on the 16. of June: Lambert and the Priest were both taken, to the no small griefe of Margaret, Duttches of Burgoygne.

Lambert, after that he had been a turne-broch for a space in the Kings Kitchen, was at length made one of the Kings Falconers.

Now when the King had got the vpper-hand of his enemies (as per haue heard) he remoued to Lincolne, and there tarried three daies, causing solemne processions to be made, in rendering thinks to God for his fortunate victory. Then caused hee execution, to be done on such as were taken in the field, either at the battell, or in the chase. And shortly after, he went into Yorkshire, and there coasted the Countrey, searching out such as had aided his enemies, whom he punished, some by long imprisonment, some by large fines, and some by death. An. reg. 3.

About the midst of August the King came to Newcastle vpon Tine, and from thence sent Ambassadors into Scotland, Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, and Richard Edgecombe, Knight, controller of his house, to conclude some peace, or truce with King Iames of Scotland. The English Ambassadors were honorably receiued, and entertained of the King, who gladly would haue concluded a perpetuall peace, but his people would not agree thereto: but in the end concluded vpon a truce for seuen yeres. Truce with the Scots.

King Henry, after the Ambassadours were returned out of Scotland, came backe from Newcastle toward Yorke, and so to London: and in the way, being at Leicester, there came to him Ambassadors from Charles the French King, which declared both the recouery of certaine Townes out of the hands of Maximilian, King of the Romanes, which hee had wrongfull detained from the Crown of France before that time: and also that their Master, King Charles, had now warres in hand against Francis, Duke of Britaine, because that he succoured, and maintained the Duke of Orleance, and others that were rebells against him. Wherfore his request was, that for the old familiarity which had been betweene them he would now either assist, and helpe him, or else stand as neuter betwixt them, neyther helping or hurting the one or the other. The King answered the Ambassadors, that he would neither spare paine nor cost, to set some reasonable stay betwixt them. And as the Ambassadors were returned home, the King sent his Chaplaine, Christopher Vrswike ouer into France to King Charles, as well to shew, that he was glad of the victory which he had against Maximilian, as to declare what a tempestuous Storme of euill rebellion himselfe had escaped, and ouercome here in England. But the chiefe point of Vrswikes errand consisted in this, that he should intimate to the French King, how his Master King Henry offered himselfe as a mediator betwixt him and the Duke of Britaine, to make them friends, and if hee perceiued the French King to giue eare thereunto, then hee should goe into Britaine to moue the Duke there to be contented, that some reasonable order might be taken betwixt them.

Whilest Vrswike was trauelling in this matter, King Henry for the accomplishing of the Coronation of his wife, Queene Elizabeth, returned toward London, and on the Saturday next before the feast of All Saints, he began his iourney with the Queene from Warwicke, and in his way at S. Albons, kept the feast of All Saints: and on the next morrow remoued to Barnet where he rested: and on the next morrow as he was comming toward London in Barnesley parke, he was met by the Maior, Aldermen, Sheriffes, and principall commoners of the City of London, all on horsebacke, and in one liuery to attend vpon him, where he dubbed Sir Will. Horne

Horne Maior of London, Knight. And betwixt Ielson and London, he dubbed Sir Io. Percivall Alderman, Knight. Against the Kings coming into London, the streets were grauelled, and the crafts in their liueries stood on both sides from Bishopsgate into Pauls Church. The Queene with the Kings mother, and many Ladies stood in a house without Bishopsgate neere the Spittle, and saw the King with his traine come toward the Cittie: Who rode thorow the Citty to Pauls Church, whereinto he was received: Te Deum sung for ioy of his victory, and then lodged in the Bishops Palace. On the morrow he went in procession, and heard a Sermon at Pauls Crosse. On the next Sunday, the Queene with her Ladies and other estates, came from Greenwich to the Tower of London, where shee was received by the King: and on the 25. of November, shee was crowned at Westminster with a great solemnity. And shortly after, King Henry deliuered Lord Thomas Marquesse Dorset out of the Tower, receiuing him againe to his former fauour, because his truth had beene thoroughly tried. Marie Elizabeth crowned.

Immediately after, came the Lord Barnard Dambeney a Scot borne, which in the French Kings behalfe, required King Henry to make some manner of end of those British warres, whatsoeuer it were. King Henry therefore sent ouer into France, Iohn, Abbot of Abingdon, Sir Richard Edgecombe, Knight, and the said Christopher Vrswike, with commission to driue some agreement betwixt the French-men and the Britons. These went first to the French King, and after to the Duke of Britaine, with whom they could doe no good, and so signified to the King their Master. Now in the meane time, Edw. Lord Wooduile, brother to the Queen, Lord Woodvile aped the Duke of Britaine. fled to King Henry, that he might haue a power of men appointed to him, with the which he would freale priuily ouer without licence or passport, so that euery man should thinke that he were fled the Realme, without knowledge of the King, and although this request was outwardly denied, yet the Lord Woodvile withdrew himselfe into the Isle of Wight, whereof hee was made ruler, hee there gathered a crue of tall and hardy personages, to the number of 400. and arriued in Britaine, where he ioyned himselfe with the Britons against the French men. The French King aduertised hereof, was not well pleased towards the King of England, till King Henry by messengers excused himselfe to be guiltlesse, and then he was pacified. And so the English Ambassadors renewing the league and amity betwixt the two Kings for 12. moneths, returned into England. The King of England forthwith called his high Parliament. Court of Parliament, in the which it was not onely determined, that the Duke of Britaine should be ayded with a power of men, but also there were diuers summes of money granted to the furnishing forth of the same.

About the 27. day of July, the Duke of Britaines Army gaue battell to the French hoste, where to a Towne called S. Alvin, hauing apparelled 1700. Britons in coats, with red crosses after the English fashion, although they had but 400. Englishmen with the Lord Woodvile. The victory in this battell fell to the French, so that almost all the English men were slaine with the Lord Woodvile, besides 6000. Britons. The Duke of Orleance, and the Prince of Orenge were taken prisoners, which were there in the Britons part. The French-men had 1200. men, with their valiant Captaine an Italian, named Iames Galiot. The newes hereof being heard in England, caused King Henry to make haste in sending forth his army, and therefore was the Lord Brooke, with Sir I. Cheiney, Sir Iohn Middleton, Sir Ralph Hilton, Sir Richard Corbet, Sir Thomas Leighton, Sir Richard Laton, and Sir Edmond Cornwall, sent ouer into Britaine with all conuenient speede, hauing with them 8000. men well appointed, and furnished in warr-like sort to ayde the Duke of Britaine. These arriued in Britaine, and marched forward, till they came neere to their enemies, where they pitched their field. But while this war was thus set forward, Francis, Duke of Britaine departed this life, and then the rulers of that Countrey falling at diuision amongst themselues, tended not the defence of their country, so that the Englishmen perceiuing themselues to be in danger, and being in the midst of winter, they returned into England within 5. months after their first setting forth, so that finally the French K. gat the vpper hand of the Britons, and did ioyne that Dutchy to his Realme of France. Hee had married Anne, the daughter and heire to the Duke of Britain. Lord Woodvile slaine. An. reg. 4.

He haue heard how there was in the last parliament, money granted for the furnishing forth of the army into Britaine, to wit, that euery man should be taxed to pay the tenth penny of all lands and goods: which money the most of them that dwelled in the Bishoprickes of Durham, and in the parts of Yorke-shire refused vtterly to pay, for that they thought themselues ouer-charged with the same. Wherefore such as were appointed Collectors, complained to Henry, Earle of Northumberland, chiefe ruler of the North parts. The Earle forth-with signified to the King all that matter, and the King not willing to pardon one penny, commanded the Earle to distreine, or otherwise to leuy the money, as he should thinke meetest. The rude people hearing of this answer from the King, by and by, with great violence set vpon the Earle, by the exciting of one named Io. a Chamber, whom the Earle with fare words sought to appease: but they alledging all the fault to be in him, as chiefe Author of that taxe, furiously slew him, and certaine of his houshold seruants, in a place called Cocke-lodge by Thirske, eyghtene miles from Yorke, on the twenty eyghth of Aprill. Then the Northren men got them to armour, assembling together, chose them a Captaine, called Sir I. Egremond, Knight: and I. Sheleder. Earle of Northumberland slaine. 1489.

passing by the Countreis, they published that they would bid the King battell, only in defence of their liberties. The King sent foyth Thomas, Earle of Surrey, whom not long before he had deliuered out of the Tower, with a crue of men, to chasten those rebells of the North, who skirmished with a company of them, whom they discomfited, and take Sir I. a Chamber, the first beginner of this rebellion. Then the Northren men came to the Citty of Yorke, where they remained three or foure daies, vnto the time they heard of the comming of the King, and then fled out of Yorke, some one way, some another: but diuers of them were taken and brought to the King, who caused them that were Captaines to be hanged and quartered. Io. a Chamber was hanged at Yorke, vpon a gibbet set vpon a foure square paire of Gallowes, and the other his complices were hanged on the Gallowes round about him: but Sir Ioh. Egremond fled into Flanders, to Margaret, Dutches of Burgundy. After this, the King returned to London, leauing the Earle of Surrey to rule the Countrey of the North, and appointed Sir Richard Tunstall to gather the subsidy to him due of the people.

James the third, King of the Scots, was slaine by his rebellious subiects, after they had banquished him in battell.

About the same time, Adrian, an Italian, was sent Ambassador from Pope Innocent the eight, into Scotland, there to haue taken vp the variance betwixt the King, and his people: But being arriued in England, hee was informed that King Iames was slaine, and therefore remained heere certaine moneths, and for that he was a man of excellent learning and humanity, and commended by Iohn Morton, Archbish. of Canterbury, the King made him first Bishop of Hereford, and shortly after, that being resigned, he was made Bishop of Bath and Wells.

1490. This yere came Ambassadours from the French King, the Lord Francis of Lutzenburge, Charles Marignane, and Robert Gagwine, to haue concluded a peace with King Henry, and that the French King might dispose of the yong Dutchesse of Britaine, as he should think best: but thereto would not King Henry consent: notwithstanding at length it was agreed, that a form of league should be drawne with conditions, whereupon the French Ambassadors being dismissed, Tho. Earle of Ormond, and Tho. Goldston, Prior of Christs Church in Canterbury, were appointed to follow into France for conclusion of the same league, but they returned without agreeing vpon any League at all.

An. reg. 6.

Parliament at London.

King Henry determining no more with peaceable messages, but with open warre to determine all controuersies betwixt him and the French King, called a Parliament, and therein declared that hee was iustly prouoked to make warre against the Frenchmen, and therefore desired them of their benevolence of money and men toward the maintenance thereof. Euery man allowed the cause to be iust, and promised his helping hand. The King commended them for their willing and faithfull hearts. And to the intent hee might spare the power sort, hee thought good first to erect money of the richest sort, by way of benevolence, which kinde of leuying money was first practised by King Edward the fourth, King Henry following his example, published, that by their open gifts, he would measure their benevolent hearts: so that he who gaue most, should be iudged to be his most loving friend; and he that gaue little, to be esteemed according to his gift. By this meanes King Henry got innumerable great summes of money, with some grudge of the people, for the extremitie shewed by the Commissioners in diuers places.

A benevolence to K. Henry.

The Cittizens of London gaue toward this iourney 9682. pound, 17. s. and 4. pence. Toward the which summe, many Aldermen gaue 200. l. the piece, and some of the Comons 100. l. the rest was supplyed by the poorer sort.

John Twichet, Lord Audley, Treasurer of England, deceased on the 16. of September, he left issue, Iames Audley, married to Margaret daughter to Sir Rich. Darell, Knight. Which Iames Audley was beheaded on the 28. of June, Anno 1497. 1491.

Henry, the Kings second sonne, was borne at Greenwich in Kent on the 22. of June. An. reg. 7.

Maximilian, King of the Romans, intending to be reuenged on the French men, for the many iniuries done to him, because he was not rich enough to maintaine the war of himselfe, he sent his Ambassadour, Iames Conibald, a man of great wisedome, to require the King of England, to take his part against the French King, making diuers great offers on his own behalfe, if it would please him so to doe.

King Henry no lesse desirous then Maximilian to put the French K. to trouble, and chiefely to aid the Britons in the extremity of their businesse, gladly consented to Maximilian, and promised to prepare an army with all spede, and to passe the seas, to inuade the French territories. 1492.

The 6. of Aprill, the Nobles of the Realme, Hugh Clopton, Maior of London, his brethren the Aldermen, Sheriffes, and companies of the Citty in their liueries, assembled in the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul, where Doctor Morton, Archbishop of Canterbury, Chancellor of England, made to them an Oration, declaring how the King of Spaine had won the great and rich Citty and Countrey of Granado from the Moores: for top whereof, Te Deum was sung with great solemnity. The Cittyes Granado won from the Moores.

In the moneth of May following, was holden a great and valiant iusting within the Kings Manor of Shine, now called Richmond, in Southrey, the which endured by the space of a Moneth, sometime within the said place, and sometime without, vpon the Greene without the gate of the said Manor. In the which space a combate was holden, and done betwixt Sir James Parkar, Knight, and Hugh Vaughan, Gentleman-Vsher, vpon controuersie for the Armes that Garrar gaue to the said Hugh Vaughan: but he was there allowed by the King to beare them, and Sir Iames Parkar was slaine at the first course. The cause of his death was thought to be long of a false helmet, which by Iusting at Shine. A combate at Shine.

by force of the Dronacle failed, and so he was striken into the mouth, that his tongue was borne vnto the hinder part of the head, and so hee died incontinently.

In this season, Charles the French King receyued the Lady Anne of Britayne, and with great solemnity wedded her, hauing with her in dowry the dutchy of Britaine. Thus was Maximillian in a great chafe toward the French King: Wherefore he sent vnto King Henry, desiring him with all spede to passe the Seas with his armie, that they might pursue the war against their aduersaries with fire, sword, and blood. King Henry hearing this, and hauing no mistrust in the promise of Maximillian with all spede leuied an armie, and rigged his naule: and when all things were ready, he sent his Almoner Christopher Vrswike, and Sir Iohn Risley Knight, vnto Maximillian, to certifie him that the King was in a readinesse, and would arriue at Caleis, as soone as he should be aduertised, that Maximillian and his men were ready to ioyne with him.

I belefe touchof Lame of the violent attempts & damages done by the seuerent Sarazens and their bill extirpation out of the Kingdomes of Spaine this present yeere. 1492.

Rodericke King of Spaine hauing defloured the daughter of Earle Iulian a noble man of that countrey, the saide Earle to be auenged of the King brought in the Sarazens of Affrica who being sent by Myramoline their K. vnder conduite of their leader Muza arriued in Spaine in the yeere of our Lord 714. and in two yeres space they obtained almost all Spaine, except the parts of Austria, in which space according to some authors there were slaine on both sides three score and tenne thousand, concerning which Moores and Sarazens, notwithstanding all their ialour, paynes, diligence, and industry, of the Spanyards, yet by reason of many vnexpected supplies they could not bee wholly suppreſt, vntill the yeere 1480. no; absolutely then vntill this present yeere 1492. at which time king Ferdinando and Elizabeth his wife, with their clergy in solemne processions, and with great tryumphes, Pompe, and state, being accompanied with most of the Nobility & attended with a great armie of horse and foote, entred into Granado, and take full possession thereof; which they hold to this day, these monstrous Banquellers the Sarazens (of whom for diuers causes I will speake some what more) possest sundry Kingdomes, and Prouinces in Spaine, for the space of seuen hundreth sirty and six yeres.

In the yeere 1480. the Turkes took the City Gronto in Calabria Ulcriur and made great slaughter.

The Turkes at this day in all their Conquests vse the Christian Churches as their hell hounds did, for to their Popish Sacrifice commanded them which they neuer omit, especially to an episcopall or Cathedrall Church.

In the yeere 830. the Sultan of Babilon inuaded Christendome, take Rome, and sackt it, executed all torments, and extremities, vpon the Clearcy, as well as vpon the Laity, he made Saint Peters Church a stable for his horse, and in contempt of our holy Sacrament of the Supper of our Lord, hee gaue his horse bread and water at the high Altar. And when by Gods permission they had thus punished the Sinnes of the people, it pleased God to smite the Christian Princes, who chased them out of Europe, for at that time Christendome was as farre out of order as it is at this present. In the yeere 924. these hell hounds spoyled all Italy, and were not expulsed thence vntill the yeer, 915. and after that they came proudly into France, and made great hauocke of all Christians ouer whom they had power, and had it not bin for the present supply of the Princes of Italy and Germany, they ment to haue inuaded England, but God bee thanked that at that time they were by any meanes suppreſt and their bloudy purpose preuented. In the yeere 1260. began the Kingdome of Tartars, who slew Dauid their great Lord who was also K. of India, and son to Prester John, and when these mad Hoane Tartars had slaine their King and all his children and neere kinsmen, then they planted and setled themselues in that Region, which is now called Tartaria: in this great slaughter they onely saued one of the kings Daughters, because she was married vnto Lingitha, whom they had chosen to be Lord ouer them, this Lingitha ordained, that whosoeuer sought to be King in his owne right should be put to death, he also instituted a law that it should be lawfull for the Tartars to enioy & possesse all kingdomes and countries of the world, and to spe all other nations at their pleasure, ouer whom they could get dominion; then they began to exercise all spoile and outrage vpon all their Christian neighbours, whose malicious practises and inueterate hatred towards the Christians is no sor abated at this day. The Cittyes of Granado won from the Moores. 1266. Thy originall of the Kings of Tartars.

In the yeere 1207. Mammellis the Prince of Sarazens, whose name by interpretation is as much to say as King of Kings, with a verie mighty power inuaded Spaine, and put the Kingdomes of Spaine, Portugall, Aragon, Castyle, and the rest into great perplexity and danger, but their Christian forces courageously ioyned together and being strongly and kindely seconded by the French king and some other Princes their neere neighbours, gaue them many sharpe fightes and braue battels, and in the end by Gods fauour ouercame them in playne fight, & slew most of the infidels and put the rest to flight, in which holy seruice, many Dukes, Earles, and Barons of each nation dyed right valiantly, vpon the force of their enemies, and in the yeere 1266. the foresaid Sarazens of Affrica, seeing part of their tyrannous successors very likely in short time to be eyther expulsed or suppreſt: came ouer into Spaine with a mighty power to recouer that which the former had lost, with great hope to spoyle and possesse the Kingdomes of Spaine entirely, but God gaue Courage and vnity to the Christians that those new-come Sarazens, were in manner all quite expulsed and the Christians remained Conquerors ouer them though with great effusion of bloud: at this time the City of Wismary in Germanie was cleane burnt to ashes being the day after the ascension of our Lord, and in the yeere 1341. our foresaid inueterate enemies of our Sauiour attempted furious inuasion vpon Granado, but the kings of Spaine, Arragon, and Portugall, very valiantly resisted them, and forced them with great losse to retire to their shippes and Galleis, thereby to saue the remaynder of themselues Note the insolence of the Sarazens. 1266.

themselues, hauing lost by fight and by mortalitie thirtie thousand horse, and fiftie thousand foote: some Chronielers say, that the Sun did shine three houres longer the day of this set Battell with the Sarazens, then it did any time before, except at the time of Duke Iosua, and in the yere 1385, the Turkish Sarazens made so fierce warres vpon the Christians, and did such grieuous damages and slaughters vpon the Christians, that they compelled the Chri- 10
They refuse to bee called Almaines and would bee called Sarazens as defended of Berra. stian Emperor, to pay them tribute. Thus much in briefe touching the Bastard head of Agars Ismalites, and their incessant tyranny, and oppression vpon all their bordering Christian neighbours: I thought mete to set downe at this time, as well in discharge of my religious duty to my God, Prince and country, as to expresse the bellish tyranny and malice of these pretended Sarazens vnto the Church of God, whose vnspeakeable pernicious practices vpon many other Christian Nations, are dayly more felte and sene in farre countries, then is any way rightly vnderstood or considered of the common people of this our nation: wherof many in their pride of ignorance, and wilfull blindenesse, and vnchristian careles respect, which they haue of the hourely outrages and bloody practices which the wandering of-spring of these Infidels, execute and performe in this present age vpon the Russians, Polonyans, Transiluanians, Hongarians, Germaynes, Italians, Spaniards, and Portugals, and others, retayning still a good hope by meanes of the diuision of the Christian Princes, to possesse themselues of all Europe, hauing the best part thereof already in their possession.

These Ambassadors comming into Flanders perceiued that Maximillian was neyther pur-ueyed of men, money, armour, or any other thing necessary for the setting forth of warre, saue only that his will was good, but his power was small.

An. Reg. 8. King Henry being aduertised hereof, was sore disquieted in his minde: but taking counsaile, at length he determined not to stay his pretended iourney, and therefore he so increased his number before he take shippe, that hee with his owne power might be able to match with his aduersaries.

King Henry sayleth into France. Then on the ninth of September, King Henry, departed from Greenwich toward the Sea-side, and on the first of October take shipping at Sandwich, and the same day landed at Calais with a great armie. The 15. of October hee departed toward Boloigne, the first night he lay at Sanding field, the next night at Wozgison, where he met with the Earle of Oxforde chiefe Captaine of the fore-ward, then come from the beating downe of the Towne of Arde: with the Earle of Oxford came the Earle of Shrewsburie, the Earle of Deuonshire, the E. of Suffolke, the Earle of Essex, the L. Grey Codner, the Lord Strange, the Lord Powesse, the Lord Hastings, the Lord Audley, the Lord Latimer, the Baron of Dudley, and diuers Knights and Esquires: these lay that night at Wozgison, the next night both the wards lay at Winell, and the next night they came before Boloigne, and there lay at siege till the eight of Nouember, at the which time the Lord Cordos chiefe Captaine vnder the French King in his masters name required peace, which King Henry granted vpon conditions. This peace greatly displeased the Englishmen, because they were ready prest to haue set on their enemies, and brought into great hope to haue beene enriched, by the spoile to haue fallen to their lots of their enemies goods, besides the glorious fame of renowmed victories and namely for that diuers of the Captaines, to set themselues and their bands the more gorgeously forward, had borrowed large summes of money, and for the repayment had mortgaged their lands, &c. The King returned to Calais: there were not many of the English armie lost at this siege of Boloigne, and seme men of name more then that baliant captaine sir John Savage knight. King Henry besiegeth Boloigne.

King Henry arrived at Dover on the seuententh of December, from whence he rode to Westminster, where he kept his Christmasse with great solemnitie. 1495

Now sprang there vp a new found son to King Edward the fourth in this manner. The Dutchesse of Burgoigne espying a certaine young man, of visage beautifull, of countenance demure, of wit subtill, called Perken Werbeke, this young man trauelling many Countries, could speake English, and diuers other languages: the Dutchesse glad to haue got so mete an instrument for her purpose, as one not vnlike to be taken, and reputed for the Duke of Yorke, sonne to her brother king Edward, which was called Richard, kept him a certaine space with her priuily, and him with such diligence instructed both of the secrets, and common affaires of the Realme of England, and of the linage, descent, and order of the house of Yorke, that like a good scholler, he could tell all that was taught him without any staggering or stay in his words: and besides that hee kept such a princely countenance, that all men in manner did firmely beleeue, that he was extracted of that noble family of the Duke of Yorke: when the Dutchesse saw her time, shee sent this Perken first into Portingale, and so into Ireland, where shortly after his arriuall, he entred so farre in credit with the people, that his words were taken to be true. Perken Werbeke.

The French king aduertised hereof, sent into Ireland for Perken, who with all diligence sayled into France, and comming to the kings presence, was of him royally receiued, and had a gard assigned, whereof was governor the Lord Congresshall, and to him being at Paris, resorted Sir George Neuill bastard, Sir John Taylor, Rowland Robinson, and a hundreth Englishmen: but after that the peace was confirmed betwixt the two kings of England and of France, the French king dismissed Perken.

And so Perken returned to the lady Margaret who assigned him a guarde, and called him the white Rose of England, the nobility of Flanders did to him all reuerence.

An. reg. 9. In England the brute of him sore disquieted the people, in so much that not onely of the meaner sorte, but also of the Nobles beleeued all that was of him reported, and many passed ouer to him: and some of the Noblemen conspired together, purposing to ayde the forsaid Perken. Wherefore they sent messengers to the Lady Margaret, to know when Richard Duke of Yorke might come into England, to the intent they might be in a readinesse to assist him, at his arriuall. Sir Robert Clifford knight, and William Barley were sent into Flaunders, which discouered to the Dutchesse all the secret intent of the friends of the new found Duke. The Dutchesse gladly receiued this message, and brought the messenger to the sight of Perken Who so well counterfeited the gesture, and manner of Richard Duke of Yorke, that Sir Robert Clifford beleeued that he was the second sonne of King Edward, and thereof wrote into England to his complices.

1494. The coasts kept against Perken Werbeke. The King perceiuing that this fable was not banquished, sent certaine knights with competent bands of Souldiers to keepe the sea coasts: he also sent into the Low countries certaine persons to learne the truth of this forged Dukes progenie: where some of them comming to Tourney, got knowledge that hee was borne in that Citie of base linage, and named Perken Werbeke. The King being aduertised hereof, sent Sir Edward Poinings knight, and sir Willi. Warham Doctor of the laws vnto Philip Archduke of Burgoigne, to signifie to him, that the young man being with the Lady Margaret, had falsely vsurped the name of Richard Duke of Yorke, long before murthered. The Ambassadors hauing done their message, were answered, that to haue the King of England lone, the Archduke would neyther aide or assist Perken, nor his complices in any cause or quarrell:

After the returne of the Ambassadors, the king sent certaine espials into Flanders, which should faine themselues to haue fled to the Duke of Yorke, and thereby to search out the whole intent of the conspiracy.

Other were sent to intise Sir Robert Clifford and William Barley to returne into England, promising to them pardon of all their offences, and high rewards, for obeying the kings request. They that were sent did so earnestly apply their busines, that they brought to passe all things at their owne desires, for they learned who were the chiefe conspirators, and perswaded Sir Robert Clifford to giue ouer that enterprise. When the King had knowledge of the chiefe Captaines of the conspiracie, he caused them to be apprehended. The chiefe were, Iohn Ratclife Lord Fitz Walter, Sir Simon Mountforte, Sir Thomas Thwates Knights, William Dawbeney, Robert Ratclife, Thomas Cressenor, and Thomas Astewoode: Simon Mountford, Robert Ratclife, and William Dawbeney were beheaded, the other had their pardons, the Lord Fitzwalter was conueyed to Calais and layd in houlde, and after lost his head.

An. reg. 10. King Henry taking displeasure with the Flemmish merchants with their wares banished this land. King of Romaines, for that he had not kept touch with him against the French King, and partly displeased with the Flemmings, but specially with the Lady Margaret, for keeping and setting forward Perken Werbeke, not onely banished the Flemmings wares and merchandize out of his dominions, but also restrained all English merchants from their repaire and traffike, into any of the lands and territories of the king of Romaines, or of the Archduke Phillip, son to the king of Romaines, causing the parte to be kept at Calais, of all English merchandize and commodities: wherefore the said King and his sonne banished out of their lands and signories, all English clothes, yearne, tynne, leade, and other commodities of this Realme.

Henry the Kings second sonne was created Duke of Yorke, on Alhalowne day, at which time were made Knights the Duke of Yorke, the Lord Haringtou, Lord Clifton, Lord Dacre of the South, Lord Waren, Sir Thomas Stanley, Sir John Arundell, Sir Walter Griffith, Sir Gerueyes Clifton, Sir Robert Harcourte, Sir Edward Traforde, Sir Henry Merney, Sir Robert Newbrough, Sir Raulph Ryder Sir Iohn Sparke, Sir Humfrey Fulforde, Sir Robert Litton, Sir Pierce Edgecombe, Sir Robert Clere, Sir Thomas Fartax, Sir Richard Knightley, Sir John Chekb. Creation.

King Henry kept his Christmas at Westminster, where on the twelfe day he made Ralph Awstrey Maior of London, and William Morton late Maior Knights. 1495

The morrow after the Epiphanie, King Henry went to the Tower of London, and there remained till such time, as Sir Robert Clifford was there presented, which was done for a policy, that if Sir Robert accused any of the Nobilitie they mought be called thither, without suspition of any euill, and there attached, and laid fast: now at the comming of Sir Robert Clifford to the Kings presence, he besought him of pardon, and obtained it, and therewith opened the manner of the conspiracy and who were the auders, fautors, and chiefe beginners of it. Amongst whom he accused Sir William Stanley, whom the King hadde made his chiefe Chamberlaine, and one of his priuy Councell: but now the King caused him to be restrained from his libertie in his owne Chamber, within the Square Tower, and there appointed him by his priuy Councell to be examined, where he wilely agreed to all things laid to his charge, if he were therein faulty and culpable. The report is, that this was his offence, when communication was had betwene him and the forementioned Sir Robert Clifford, as concerning Perken, Sir William Stanley said that if he certainely knew that the young man was the vndoubted sonne and heire of King Edward the fourth, he would neuer fight nor beare armour against him: wherefore he was charged that he bare no heartie good will toward King Henry. The King hauing finer an hole in his coat, doubted first what he should do King Henry lodged in the Tower.

with him, for loath hée was to lose the fauour of his brother the Earle of Darby: but arraigned hée was at Westminster and adiudged to die, according to which sentence, he was brought to the Tower hill on the fifteenth day of February, and there beheaded. This Sir William Stanley was the chiefe and principall helper of king Henry to the Crowne at Bosworth Fielde, against King Richard: hée was a man of a great power in his Countrey, and also of great wealth, in so much, as the common fame ranne, there was in his Castle of Holte, found in ready coine and plate, to the value of forty thousand markes or more, and his lands and fées extended to three thousand pounds by yéere.

Sir William Stanley beheaded.

Sanctuary men examined.

The 22. of February were arraigned in Guildhall at London foure persons, to witte, Thomas Bagnall, John Scot, John Hethe, and John Kenington, the which were Sanctuarie men of Saint Martin le grand in London, and lately before taken thence for forging seditious bils, to the slander of the King, and some of his Councell: for the which three of them were adiudged to die, and the fourth named Bagnall, pleaded to be restored to sanctuary: by reason whereof he was reputed to the Tower till the next terme, and on the 26. of February the other three with a Flemming, and Robert Bikley, a yeoman of the Crowne were all fiue executed at Tyborne.

Giles Lord Dawbeney was made the Kings chiefe Chamberlaine.

The King sent into Ireland Sir Henry Deane, late abbot of Lanthonie whom he made Chancellor of that Ile, and Sir Edward Poinings knight, with an army of men, wherevpon when the fauorers of Perken heard, they straight fled to the woods and marishes, Sir Edward Poinings with his whole army marched against the wild Irish, because the other being culpable were fled to them for succour: but when he saw himselfe and his power, not able to follow his enemies in the woods, marishes and mountaines, hee was constrained to recule backe, sore disquieted against Geralde Earle of Kildare, being then the Kings Deputie, whom he suspected to be the cause that he had no succours sent him, and therefore sodainely hee caused the Earle to be apprehended, and as a Prisoner brought him into England, which Earle so cleared himselfe of all things layde to his charge, that he was dismissed and sent into Ireland againe, there to be deputy and Lieutenant as before.

King Henry being now in some better surety of his Estate, take his progresse into Lancashire about the fiue and twentieth of June, there to be merry with his mother the Countesse of Darby, which then lay at Latham.

Sir William Capell Alderman of London, put in the fines.

Sir William Capell Alderman of London, was called in question, and condemned to the King, in twenty seuen hundreth, and fortie three pounds sterling, for the breach of certayne Statutes made before times: for the which he made his end with the King for fiftene hundreth and 15. pounds, fiue shillings eight pence, which hee paid.

Perken Werbeke being in Flanders, and hoping at length to obtayne the Crowne of England, gathered a power of all nations, some banquerontes, some théeues, and such as desired to line by rapine, and being thus furnished, he take such ships as his friends had prouided for him, and then departing from Flanders, arriued at Deale in Kent, on the third of July: he put some of his men to land, to signifie his arriuall with such a power, that the bishop must néeds incline to his part. The Kentishmen vnderstanding that Perken had none with him to account of, but strangers borne, and base people, like faithfull subiects determined to fall vpon those that were thus now come to Land, and also to trye if they might allure the whole Number out of their Shippes, so to giue them battayle. But Perken would not set one foote out of his Shippe, till he sawe all things sure: yet hee permitted some of his Souldiours to goe on land, which being trained foorth a prettie way from their Shippes, and seeing they could haue no comfort of the Countrey, they withdrew againe to their Ships: at which withdrawing, the Maior of Sandwich, with certaine commons of the Countrey, hikered with the residue that were vpon land, and take a liue of them 169. persons, among the which were fiue Captaines, Mountfort, Corber, White Belt, Quintin, and Genine. And on the twelfth of July, Sir John Pechy, Shériffe of Kent, brought into London bridge those 169. persons, where the Sheriffes of London, Nicholas Alwaine, and John Warner, receiued and conueied them, railed in robes like horses in a cart, vnto the tower of London, and to Newgate, and shortly after to the number of 150. were hanged about the sea coasts in Kent, Essex, Suffex, and Norfolke: the residue were executed at Tyborne and at Wapping in the Whole besides London: and Perkenfied into Flanders:

And

Perken Warbeth in Northumberland.

And shortly after in company of this Perken he entred into England with a puissant army, and caused proclamation to bée made to spare all those that would submit themselues vnto Richard Duke of Yorke, and here with they began to warre in most cruell manner, with slaughter of men, burning of Townes, and committing detestable enormities, so that all the Countrey of Northumberland, was by them in manner wasted and destroyed. At length when the Souldiers were laden with pray, perceiuing that no succour came out of England vnto the new Duke, they withdrew backe into Scotland, enriched with prayes and bootes.

When King Henry, was truely certified that the Scottish King was returned home, he stayed all the preparations made at that time to goe against him: but yet meaning to be reuenged of the wrongs done to him by King James and his people, hée first called a Parliament, and in that assembly declared the cause of the instant warre, and how necessary it should be, for to haue the warre pursued against those enemies that had begun it: to which motion all the Nobilitie wholy agréed, and a subsidie was granted.

Parliament and a subsidy.

Iaspar Duke of Bedford deceased. 1497.

Iaspar Duke of Bedford Vncle to King Henry the seuenth, deceased on the eighteenth of December, and was buried in the Abbey of Remsham in Glocestershire.

King Henry prepared a mighty army to inuade Scotland, and obtained for chiefetaine, the Lord Dawbeney; but as this army was forward toward Scotland, the same was stayed and called backe againe, by reason of a new commotion begun by the Cornishmen, for the payment of the subsidie granted at the last Parliament. Of these people the heads were called Thomas Flamoke, a Gentleman learned in the law, and Michaell Iosseph a blacke smith or horse farrier of Bodmin, men of stout stomackes. They layde the fault of this exaction vnto Iohn Morton Archbishoppe of Canterburie, and to Sir Reginald Bray, because they were chiefe of the Kings Councel, Flamoke and Ioseph erected the common people to put on harnesse, and to follow them in the quarrell, promising not to hurt any creature, but onely to sée them punished that procured such exactions to be laide on the people, without any reasonable cause: to these captaines assembled a great number of people together, then praising their hardines, when all things were ready for their iourney, set forward with their armie, and came to Taunton, where they slew the Pronost of Parine, which was one of the commissioners of the subsidy, and from thence came to Wels, so intending to go to London, where the King then soiourned. When the King was aduertised of these doings, he was somewhat offended, he reuoked the Lord Dawbeney which was going against the Scots, and increased his army. The nobles came to London with as many men of warre as they could put in a readines, to ayde the King against his rebelles, if néede should be. In the meane time, James Twichet Lord Audley, being confederate with the rebells of Cornewall ioyned with them, being come to Wells, and tooke vpon him as their chiefe Captaine and Leader: from Wells they went to Salisbury, and from thence to Winchester, and so into Kent, where they hoped to haue had great ayde, but they were deceiued: for the Earle of Kent, George, Lord Burgaueny, John Brooke, Lord Cobham, Sir Edward Poynings, Sir Richard Guilford, Sir Thomas Bourchier, John Peché, William Scot, and a great number of people were ready to defend the Countrey, which thing marueilously dismayed the Cornish-men, so that many of them fled from the company. The Captaines brought their people to Black-heath, and there ordered their battells, either ready to fight with the King if he would assayle them, or else to assault the Citty of London. The King sent John, Earle of Oxford, Henry Bourchier, Earle of Essex, Edmond de la Pole, Earle of Suffolk, Sir Rise ap Thomas, and Sir Humfrey Stanley, Noble warriours, with a great company of Archers, and horse-men, to inuiron the hill on eyther side, to the intent that all by-waies being stopped, all hope of flight should be taken from them, and incontinently, he himselfe being furnished with a great army, set forward out of the Citty, encamped himselfe in Saint Georges field, where hee lodged that night, and on the next morning sent the Lord Dawbeney with a great company to set vpon them earely in the morning, which first gat the Bridge of Dartford straw, while the Earles set on them on curry side, the Lord Dawbeney came into the field with his company, and without long fighting on the 22. of June, the Cornish-men were ouer-come: but first they tooke the Lord Dawbeney, prisoner, but let him goe at liberty, without hurt or detriment. There were slaine of the rebells about three hundred, and taken of them about 15. hundred. There was giuen to them that take them, their goods, amongst them the blacke-Smith and other their Captaines were put to death, And when this battell was ended, the King wanted of all his number but three hundred men, which were slaine.

Black-heath field.

The Lord Audley was drawne from Newgate to the Tower hill in a coat of his owne armes, painted vpon paper, reuersed and all to torne, and there was beheaded on 28. of June: Flamocke and Ioseph the Blacke-Smith, were drawne, headed, and quartered at Mileborne, and their heads and quarters set vp at London and other places: Knights and Mareshals made at Blacke-heath, and at London bridge foote, when the King returned from Blacke-heath.

In the moneth of July, King Henry sent an army into Scotland, vnder the guiding of the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Neuill, which made sharpe warre vpon the Scots: but by the labour of Peter Helias sent from the King of Spaine, a truce was concluded betwixt the two kings of England and of Scotland, with condition

Ambassadors sent to Burgundy.

About the same time King Henry receiued the Ambassadors that were sent to him from the French King: Also the Lord of Cauphere, and other orators of Phillip Archduke of Austrich, and Duke of Burgoigne, came to him for the confirmation of amitie, and to haue the English marchants to resort againe into their Countrey, which request he granted. And to did the Englishmen relort againe into the Archdukes dominions, and were receiued (saith Hall) into Antwerpe with generall processions, so glad was that towne of their returne.

Perken Werbeke landed in Cornwall.

Perken Werbeke being vsited by the King of Scots to depart out of the Scottish dominions, fained with his wife and family into Ireland, where while hee remained, hee had knowledge from the Cornishmen, that they were ready to renewe the warre againe. Whereupon hee hauing with him feure small shippes, and not aboue nine score and twenty men, sailed into Cornewall, and there landed at Whiteland Bay on the seuenth of September, from whence he went to Bodmyne, where he gathered to him aboue fiue thousand persons. Then Perken made Proclamations in name of King Richard the fourth, as sonne to King Edward the fourth. And by the aduice of his three Counsellors, John Heron Mercer a Banquerout, Richard Skelton Tayler, and John Askeley Scrimener, determined first of all to assayle the winning of Exceter, and so hastning thither, he laid siege to it: The Citizens perceiuing themselues to be in danger, let certaine messengers downe by cords ouer the wall, that nought certific the King: And herewith caused faggots to be brought and laid to the inward part of their gates, and set them all on fire, to the intent to kepe their enemies from entring in, and their Citizens from flying out, and that they in the meane season might make trenches and ramplers to defend their enemies in stead of gates. Perken set by Ladders to scale the walles: but the Citizens, with helpe of such as were come forth of the countrey to their aid, so valiantly defended the walles, that they slue aboue 200. of Perkens souldiours at that assault. The King hasted forth with his Poste, and sent the Lord Dawbeney with certaine bands of Light horsemen and to assertile all men of his comming.

The City of Exceter besieged.

But in the meane season Edward Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, and William his sonne, accompanied with sir Edmond Carew, sir Thomas Trenchard, sir William Courtney, sir Th. Fulford, sir John Halwell, sir John Crokar, Walter Courtney, Peter Egecombe, William Snaure, came into the City of Exceter to helpe the Citizens, so that the Earle was hurt in the arme with an arrow, and so were many of his men, but few slaine. When Perken saw hee could not winne the City of Exceter, he went from thence to Taunton, and there mustering his men, he perceiued them to be minished, he began to mistrust the remnant: in deede when the people that followed him in hope that no small number of the nobilitie would ioyne with him, saw no such matter came to passe, they stale away from him. When the King heard that Perken was gone to Taunton, he followed after him with all spede, and by the way there came to him Edward Duke of Buckingham, and a great company of noble men. But as soone as Perken was informed that the King was at hand, he with 160. horsemen fled from Taunton to a sanctuary at Beiwley beside Southampton. King Henry sent the Lord Dawbeney with 500. horsemen after Perken to apprehend him, so that many of his captaines were taken. Also diuers horsemen rode to Saint Michaels mount, and there spake the Lady Gorden wife to Perken, and brought her to the King. At whose beautie and amiable countenance, the King much maruelled, and sent her to London to the Quene. The common people submitted themselues to the Kings mercy.

After this the King rode to Exceter, and there executed diuers Cornishmen: hee also caused the sanctuary wherein Perken was inclosed, to be inuironed with bands of light horsemen, to watch that Perken should not escape, wherefore Perken vpon promise of pardon committed himselfe to the King, and then the King returned to London.

The 28. of Nouember, Perken was conueied on horsebacke through cheape, and Cornhill vnto the Tower of London, and from thence backe againe through Candle-wike streate to Westminster.

Perken brought to London.

The 21. of December at nine of the clocke at night, sodainly began a great fire within the Kings lodging, then being at his manor of Shine, which fire continued till midnight, by violence whereof much and a great part of the old buildings of that place was brent, with hangings, beds, apparell, plate, and many iewels.

The Kings manor of Shine brent.

Perken Werbeke endeuouring to scale secretly out of the land, was taken againe by his kepers, and by the Kings commandement cast into the Tower of London, and after hee was shewed in Westminster, and Cheape, mocked on scaffolds to the great wonderment of many people: where he read his confession written with his owne hand. 1489. An.reg.14.

This yere all the gardens which had bene continued time out of minde without Moregate of London, were destroyed, and of them was made a plaine field for archers to shoote in. The English merchants were receiued into Antwerpe with generall procession, after they had bene long absent from thence.

Perken Werbeke executed

Perken Werbeke being in holde, by great promises corrupted his kepers, named Strangwais, Blewet, Astwood, & long Roger, seruants to sir I. Digby lieutenant of the tower (as was affirmed) intended to haue slaine their master, and to haue set Perken and the Earle of Warwike at large: which Earle of Warwike had bene kept in prison within the tower (as ye haue heard) from the first yere of this king to this 15. yere, ont of all company of men and sight of beasts, and therefore could not of himselfe see he his owne destruction, but by the drift of other he was brought to his death, for being made privy of this enterprise deuised by Perken and his complices, he assented thereunto: but this deuise being reuealed, Perken and Io. a Waters, sometime Maior of Corke in Ireland were arraigned and condemned at Westminster, and on the 23. of November drawn to Tiborne, where Perken read his former confession as before he had done in Cheape, taking on his death the same to be true, and so he and John a Water asked the King forgiuenesse, and take their deaths patiently.

Earle of Warwike be headed.

Also Edward Plantagenet, the forenamed Earle of Warwike, son to George D. of Clarence, brother to Edward the fourth, being about the age of foure and twentie yeres, on the one and twentieth of November was arraigned at Westminster before the Earle of Oxford then high Steward of England, of treason, in minding to haue escaped (as they said) and he was perswaded to confesse, which he did, and submitted himselfe to the Kings mercy: vpon which confession he had iudgement, and was executed on a scaffold on the tower hill, but buried at Bisham by his ancestors: also shortly after, Walter Blewet and Thomas Astwood were hanged at Tyborne.

1500. This yere was a great plague of pestilence whereof men died very sore in many places, especially in and about London, where died in that whole yere (as it was thought) about the number of 30000. people.

Also in the month of October deceased Iohn Morton Archbishop of Canterbury at his manor of Knole: this Morton born in Berry besides Blenkford in the County of Dorset, Doctor of lawes, aduocate of the Archbishop, parson of S. Dunstons in the East of London, Bishop of Ely, who passed by the Ile of Ely into Flanders, where he continued a student, till the fall of Richard the 3. after which time he was called home to his bishoprieke, and made Chancellor of England and within three yeres after Archbishop of Canterbury, in the yere 1486. in the moneth of September: this Morton late Chancellor and Archbishop 13. yeres, and was buried vnder the quier at Canterbury; he repaired and builded a great part of his place at Lambeth, he did the like at Maidstone, at Allington parke, at Charing, at Ford, and also at his place at Canterbury.

Thomas Langton Bishop of Winchester deceased, and was buried at Winchester: he gaue to Pembroke hall in Cambridge, a cup of siluer ouer gilt, which I haue seene, with this inscription: Thomas Langhton, Winton, episcopus, aulæ Pembrichicolim socius, dedit hanc tassiam coopertam eidem aulæ 1497. qui alienabit anathema sit 67. ounces. Richard Fox sometime Bishop of Exceter, after of Durham, was translated to Winchester. Henry Deane sometime Prior of Lanthony, then Bishop of Salisbury, was now translated to the archbishoprick of Canterbury. Richard Redman, succeeded in the bishoprick of Ely, & Ric. Nien in the bishoprieke of Norwich, Thomas Savage first Bishop of Rochester, then of London, was now translated to the sea of Yorke.

The Lord Denham treasurer of England deceased, and on the 30. of Ianuary was buried in the Grey Friers Church at London, on the south side of the quire.

This yere when the King had finished much of his new building at his manor of Shine, and againe furnished and repaired that before was perished with fire, in the 13. yere of his raigne, forasmuch as in the time of that hideous fire, many notable and rich iewels, and other things of superabundant value, were perished by the violence thereof, it pleased him to command it should be called his manor of Richmond, and not other wise. He also this yere builded anew Bainards castle in London, and repaired his manor of Greenwich.

In the moneth of May the King kept a royal turney and iusts in the Tower of London, of his Lords, Knights and other.

About this time Edmond de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, sonne to Iohn Duke of Suffolke and Lady Elizabeth sister to king Edward the fourth was inuited of murther, for slaying a weane person in his rage and furie (as it was saide) and he was perswaded to confesse, but was pardoned by the King, yet because he was brought to the bar afore the kings bench, and arraigned (which he take as a great blemish to his honor) shortly after he fled into Flanders, vnto the Lady Margaret his aunt. Nuertheless (saith Hall) he returned againe, and excused himselfe to the King, so that he was thought to be guiltles of any crime. But after this Earle, with his brother Richard, fled againe into Flanders. Which departure of the Earle sore vexed the King, who doubted of some trouble to ensue thereof.

In this meane time the Lady Katherine of Spaine was sent by her father K. Ferdinando with a puissant Nauy of shippes into England, where she arriued in the hauen of Plimmouth, the 2. of October.

This yere 1501. Ferdinando King of Aragon, by the fauour of the King of Spaine, recouered his kingdome of Aragon, and the yere before was Charles the first Emperor borne in Gaunt in Flanders, and in the yere 1502. Lodwicke of France, and the king of Spaine, made League together, and chaced Ferdinando king of Aragon, out of the kingdome of Naples, and presently after they fell at strife betwixt themselues for the kingdome, in which fight the French were put to the worst and 11000. slaine on both sides.

The 9. of November Prince Arthur with a goodly company came through Fletstreet of London to S. Paules, and so to the wardrobe by the Blacke friers, and there was lodged. And the same day came the Lady Katherine Princesse to Lamberth, where she with her Ladies was lodged in the Archbishops Inne of Canterbury: and vpon the Friday next following about two of the clocke at afternoone, the saide Lady Princesse accompanied with many Lords and Ladies, in most sumptuous manner apparelled, came riding from Lambeth into Southwarke so to London bridge, where was ordained a costly pageant of S. Katherine and S. Vrsula, with many virgins: from thence they rode to Grace Streete, where was ordeined a second pageant, from thence to the conditt in Cornehill where was another pageant. The great conditt in cheape ran with Gascoine wine, and was fornished with Genstre. Against Soperlane end was another pageant. At the standard in cheape was ordeined the 5. pageant. At Pauls gate was the 6. pageant: by which the Princesse rode through Paules Church-yard vnto the Bishop of Londons palace, where she and her people was lodged.

Now within the Church of S. Paul, to wit, from the West gate of it vnto the vppermost greese or step at the going in of the quier, was made a pace of timber and boords to go vpon, from the said west doore vnto the forenamed greese, greese of the height of 6. foote from the ground, or more: and rose a mount the place where the commissaries court is kept within the said Church, was ordeined a standing, like vnto a mountaine with steps on euery side, which was couered ouer with red worsted, and in like wise was all the railes against which mountaine vpon the north side, within the foresaid place of the commissaries court was ordeined a standing for the king, and such other as liked him to haue: and on the south side almost, for against the kings standing was ordained a scaffold, whereupon stode the Maior and his brethren.

Then vpon the 14 of November being Sunday, vpon the above named mountaine, was Prince Arthur about the age of 15. yeres, and the Lady Katherine about the age of 18. yeres, both clad in white sattine, married by the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted by 19 Bishops and abbots mitered. And the King, the Queene, the king's mother stood in the place aforenamed where they heard and beheld the solemnization, which being finished, the said Archbishop and Bishops take their way from the mountaine, vpon the said pace couered vnder sat with blew rey-cloth vnto the quier, and so to the high altar, whom followed the spouse and spouses, the Lady Cicile sister to the Queene bearing her traine, after her followed 100. Ladies and gentlewomen, in right costly apparell, then the Maior in a goune of crimson veluet, and his brethren in scarlet, with the sword born before the Maior, and sate in the quier the while, the Archbi. of Yorke sate in the deanes place, and offred as chiefe, and after him the Duke of Buckingham &c. Wonderfull it was to behold the riches of apparel worne that day, with the portant chaines of gold: of which, two were specially noted, to wit, sir T. Brandon knight, master of the kings horse, which that day ware a chaine valued at 1400. pounds: and the other W. de Riuers esquire, master of the king hautes, whose chaine was valued at a 1000. pound: many mo were of 200. 300. & so forth, these were not noted for length, but for the greatnesse of the linkes. Also the Duke of Buckingham ware a goune wrought of Needle worke and set vpon cloth of tissue, furred with sables, the which Gowne was valued at 1500. Land sir Nicholas Vause knight ware a gown of purple veluet, pight with pieces of gold so thicke and massie, that it was valued in golde, besides the silke and fur, a thousand pound: which chaines and garments were valued by gold smithes of best skill, and them that wrought them. The masse being finished, the Princesse was led by Henry Duke of Yorke, and a Legate of Spain, to the foresaid pace into the palace, going before her men of honor, to the number of 160. with gentlemen and other. There came vnto the Maior, sir Richard Crofts Steward of the Princes house, which brought him and his brethren the Aldermen, into the great hall, and at a table vpon the west side of the hall, caused them to be set to dinner, where honorably were they serued with 12. dishes to a messe at the first course, 15. the second course, and 18. dishes the third course. In this hall was a cupbord of fiue stages height, being triangled, the which was set with plate valued 1200. l. the which was neuer moued at that day: and in the vtter chamber where the Princesse dined, was a cupbord of gold plate, garnished with stone and pearle, valued aboue 20000. pound. The tuesday following the King and Queene, being all this season at Bainards castle came vnto Pawles, and heard there masse, and then accompanied with many nobles went into the place, and there dined with the Princesse. This day Sir Nicholas Vause, ware a coller of Esses which weyed, as the goldsmithes that made it reported 800. pound of nobles: And the same day at afternoon, the said Princes were conueyed with many Lords and Ladies, vnto Pauls wharffe, where the said estate take their barges, and were rowed to Westminster, vpon whom the Maior attended, with the Aldermen and fellowships in barges, garnished with banners and other deuises, musicke, &c. Thus much for that marriage.

The 20. of Ianuary at Paules crosse was declared the assurance of Iames K. of Scots, and of the Lady Margaret, eldest daughter to King Henry of England, in reioycing whereof Te Deum was sung, and bonefiers made through the City, and at 12. of the bonefiers were set, 12. tert to king hogsheads of Gascoigne wine, to be drunke of all men freely.

There was apprehended Wil. Lord Courtney, son to the Earle of Deuonshire, which had maried the Lady Katherine daughter to K. Edward the fourth, and William de la Pole, brother to the Earle of Suffolke, sir Iames Tyrell, Sir Iohn Windham, &c. When the Earle of Suffolke before fled (as ye haue heard) vnderstood what wait was laid for him in Flanders, he wandred about Germany and France, to purchase succor, if by any meanes he might, but in the end, hee submitted himselfe vnder the protection of Phillip Archduke of Austrich which was to his owne destruction as proued after.

When King Henry had settled things to his contentment & pleasure, there sodainly happened to him a lamentable chance, for in the beginning of the moneth of Aprill, there died that Noble & vertuous Prince Arthur the kings eldest sonne, vnder the age of 16. yeres, in his castle of Ludlowe, and with great funerall obsequie was buried in the Cathedrall Church of Worcester.

On the 2. of May were arraigned in Guildhall at London, sir Iames Tyrrell knight, lieutenant of Guines castle, Sir Iohn Windham knight, Welborne seruant to the said sir Iames and a ship man, foure persons were indicted of treason, for aiding sir Edmond de la Pole Earle of Suffolke, they were condemned to be drawn hanged and quartered.

On the 4. of May, sir Iames Tyrrell, and sir Iohn Windam, were beheaded on the Tower hill, their bodies and heads were buried in the Augustin friers church of London, and the ship man was hanged at Tyborne.

This yere were brought vnto the king three men taken in the new found Ilands, by Sebastian Gabato, before named, in anno 1498. these

This tempest was strange to many men, because the violence thereof had blowne downe the eagle of brasse from the spire of Pauls church in London, and in the falling, the same eagle brake and battered the blacke eagle which hong for a signe in Paules churchyard, that time being but low houses, where now is the schole of Paules.

This yere the King began to be diseased of a certaine infirmity, which thrice euery yere, but especially in the spring time, sore vexed him.

King Henry sickened.

All the sweating sickines, which (as ye haue heard) in the first yere of this Kings raigne first afflicted the people of the realme, now afresh failed them againe, howbeit, by the remedy found at the beginning of it, nothing like the number died thereof, now this second time, as died the first.

1507.

This yere in the Lent season, the King deliuered many prisoners out of sundry prisons, in so much, that as many as lay in Ludgate, and both Counters for 40. shillings and vnder, bee redeemed and deliuered, and ouer that he redeemed that lay for tenne pound, and other larger sums as was said.

The Kings Prymoters.

This yere or rather somewhat sooner, sprang much sorrow through the land, by meane of grieuous persons, which named themselues the kings Prymotors, many forgotten statutes, made hundreds of yeres passed, were now quickened, and sharpely called vpon, to the great vnquietnesse of many the kings subiects, all well the rich as the other that had competent substance. And albeit that other yeres before passed, since the time of Sir Wil. Caples trouble, which was in the 10. yere of this Kings raigne, many times were called to sundry recognings, and were faine to seke their ends to to their charge: yet now, since Empson and Dudley were set in authority, many mo in number were called before them, for many surmised causes, of the which none escaped without paying of fines. And if it were such a matter, as somewould abide the triall of the law, then had they false Iurors so sired vnto them, that they were well assured, that they would passe against their wils, for all was done in the Kings name, and yet the most profit came to other mens coffers.

This yere amongst many other was Sir W. Caple againe newly troubled, for things done in time of his being Maior of London, where of the report was, for the false money came to his sight, and he did not due correction vpon the party that to him was accused to be the owner of it: but were this the cause or other, truth it is, that in great trouble he was fo it, and finally, (for he would fall to no agreement) he was by Derby, Simson, and other of their company, which as then the whole Iury of them, were falsly bound to the girdles of Empson and Dudley, that as they would, the verdict alwayes passed, and so was he by them indicted, and after by neglect of Dudley at the kings commandement put in prison, and so continued long time, and at length, for somuch as he would not agree to pay to the King 2000. l: was by the forenamed Dudley commanded to the Tower, where he lay till it was nere Whitsontide after, before which time K. THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF KING HENRY THE EIGHTH.

HENRY the eight borne at Greenewich, second sonne to King Henry the seuenth, about the age of 18. yeres began his raigne by the decease of his father, on the two and twentieth of Aprill: but was proclaimed on the foure and twentieth, in Anno Christo 1509. and the same day in the afternoone he was conueyed to the Tower of London, where hee lodged for a season. Of personage he was tall, and mighty, in wit and memory excellent, of such mateckie and humanity as was comely in such a Prince. By the aduice of his grandmother, Margaret countesse of Richmond and Darby, diuers graue personages were elected to be of his priuy councell, whose names were Wil. Warham Archbishop of Canterbury and Chancellor of England, Richard Foxe Bishop of Winchester, Thomas Howard Earle of Surrey, and treasurer of England, George Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury and Lord steward of the Kings house-hold, Charles Somerset Lord Chamberlaine, sir Thomas Louel, sir H. Wyat, Doctor T. Ruthall, sir Edward Poinings. These graue Counsellors, fearing lest such abundance of riches and wealth as the K. was now possessed of, might moue his young yeres vnto riotous forgetting of himselfe, gate him to be present with them when they sate in counsell, to acquaint him with matter partaining to the politike government of the Realme, with the which at the first he could not well endure to be much troubled, being rather inclined to follow such pleasant passimes as his youthfull yeres did more delight in.

Names of the Kings counsellors.

In the same 24. day of Aprill, the Lord Henry Stafford brother to the D. of Buckingham, was arrested and committed to the Tower: & doctor Ruthall was nominated bishop of Durham.

Henry Lord Stafford arrested.

The fiue and twentieth of Aprill was proclaimed the Kings consent to the generall pardon granted by his father, and that himselfe was contented to forgiue all such persons as had bin vered for any cause, so that it touched not felony or treason: and ouer that, in the same proclamation was compiled, that all vagabonds and sturdy beggers, should auoid the city of London, and resort vnto such countries as they were borne in, vpon paine appointed. Also proclamation was made, that if any man could prone himselfe to be deprined of his goods wrongfully by the late commissioners of the forfeitures, he should present his plaint to the K, who was ready to satisfie euery one of al iniuries sustained. After which publication many such as had bin constrained either by right or wrong to pay any thing for forfeitures of lawes or customes by them transgressed, flocked to the court, and there declared their griefes: the counsell heard euery mans complaint, and such as were found to haue paid any thing without plaine proofe of iust cause, such order was taken, that they had their money againe: but the complainants came in so thicke, that the commissioners and other that had dealt in the forfeitures perceiuing that it was hard, and almost vnpossible to satisfie them all, refused to heare any further complaints or suites for restitution, but thought it best to commit those to prison, by whom the complainants pretended themselues to haue bene wronged, and thereupon was sir Richard Empson knight, and Edmond Dudley Esquire, by a politike meane brought into into the Tower, where they were accused of treason, and so remained prisoners, thereby to quiet mens minds, that made such sute to haue their money againe restored. And shortly after were many of their promoters (for so they termed themselues) called to a reckoning, and cast into sundry prisons, as Page, Michael Canby, Henry Tost, Smith, and sundry others, but Baptist Grimald, the most cruell wretch of them all, went to Westminster, and there registred himselfe a Sanctuary-man.

King Henry married.

The 3. day of June, King Henry in his closet at Greenwich, married the Lady Katherine his first wife, who had bene late the wife of Prince Arthur deceased, and was dispensed with by Pope Iuly.

The 6. of June, John Derby, John, Smith John Simson, ringleaders of false inquests in London, rode about the citty, with their faces to the horse tailes, and papers on their heads, & were set on the Pillory in Cornhill, & after brought againe to Newgate, where they dyed for very shame.

On the 21. of June, King Henry came from Greenwich by land, and so rode to the Tower of London, with whom came many well apparelled Noble men, but especially the Duke of Buckingham, who rode in a Gowne of Goldsmiths worke, a thing of great riches: the King reeked there from Thursday, till Saturday, in which season, he made 24. Knights of the Bath. And vpon Saturday the 24. of June, King Henry with Queene Katherine, and their Nobility, rode from the Tower, through the Citty in most honorable wise, before whom rode the said knights of the Bath, the Duke of Buckingham rode next before the King, except the Maior and certaine Sergeants at Armes and Heralds, the which Duke rode in a long gowne wrought of needleworke right costly and rich, and bare a little staffe of siluer in his hand, in token that he was high steward of y feast of coronation, & the said Duke had about his necke a broad and flat close chaine of a new deuice, not before vsed, set with precious rubies, and other stones of great value. On the morrow being Sunday, and Midsommer day, the King and Queene were crowned at Westminster in most solemne manner by the Archbishop of Canterbury and other assisting.

Margaret, Countesse of Darby deceased.

The 29. of June, the most vertuous Princesse of her time knowne to the world, Margaret Countesse of Richmond and Darby, mother to King Henry the 7. dyed at Westminster, and was there buried, whose notable acts, and charitable deedes all her life-time exercised, cannot in a small volume be expressed.

About the same time, deceased Iohn Vere, Earle of Oxford, and was buried in the Priory of Colne in Essex.

The King ordained 50. Gentle-men to be Speares, euery of them to haue an Archer, a Demilance, and a Custrill, and euery Speare to haue three great Horses to be attendant on his person, of the which band, the Earle of Essex was Lieutenant, and Sir John Pechie Captaine, which ordinance continued not long, the charges was so great: for there were none of them, but they and their horses were apparelled and trapped in cloath of Gold, & Iuer, and Goldsmiths worke.

50 Speares appointed to wait on the King.

Dudley arraigned.

The 17. of July, Edmond Dudley was arraigned in the Guild-hall at London, where he was condemned, and condemned, drawne, hanged, and quartered, and committed to the Tower againe, where hee lay long after, insomuch, that the fame went the Queene had purchased his pardon, but that was not so, as after shall appeare. And like as in this while to the comfort of the Kings subiects many things were ordered, as generall pardons for all forc-done offences, treason, felony, and debt by specialties, and a few other excepted: so in like manner, to the discomfort of all the fornamed Promoters was many and diuers waies fought and found to vex and trouble them right wisely, that before had vered many a true man wrongfully: by means whereof, they were daily taken in diuers Counties of England, and brought to the Tower and other prisons, where they remained long. In the mean which time, many opprobrious rimes in derision of them were made, whereof I haue seene some, especially one against Sir Richard Empson, made by Cornish of the Kings Chappell, at the request of the Earle of Kent, forsaunch, as the Kent enemy, to Empson said Empson had deceiued him of a part of his Ro. Fabian. Lens, and in sinister waies had to informed the King of him, that he was long holden vnder, and put to great vnbearance, But (sayeth mine Author) what cause soeuer moued the said Earle and other at that time, let no man thinke, that for any cause hee had remembred it, saue onely, that wise men may, by the sudaine rising and falling of these men, be well ware how they guide them, when they be put in great authority, and especially such as this man was, the which suddenly rose from pouerty (as being the Sonne of a Sieue-maker, in Towcester) vnto inestimable authority and riches. And such other as were of his affinitie, especiall Dudley, that at the time of his fall was in possession of Lands and Fees, with Offices, to the yeerely value of 800. pound. and in ready coyne 20000. pound, ouer many more riches, as Iewells, plate, and rich stuffe of household, the which was shortly gathered, for not 13. yeeres before, he was by labour of friends brought into the Office of vnder-shrieffe-wick of London, where he continued with the fauour of the Citizens, by the space of 6. yeeres or more, after which season he sold his Office, and drew him to the Kings Court, where shortly after he grew in such fauour, that hee was chosen Speaker of the Parliament, in the 19. yere of King Henry the seuenth, and soone after the Kings President, by reason of which Office, he had such authority, that the chiefe Lords of England were glad to be in his fauour, and were faine to sue to him for many vrgent causes, whereupon the Lords, and all men as they durst, had him in disdaine, which was his ouerthrow in the end. Thus much for example may suffice.

Empson arraigned.

In the moneth of October, Sir Richard Empson was conueyed into Hogth-hamptonshire, and there araigned, and lastly demed to be drawne, hanged, and quartered, and then was brought again to the Tower.

This yere, King Henry kept his Christmas at Richmond with great royalty.

Parliament Empson and Dudley attainted.

The 21. of January, began a Parliament, whereof Sir Thomas Ingleby was chosen speaker: in the which Parliament, Sir Richard Empson, and Edmond Dudley, were attainted of high treason.

King Henry kept his Shrouetide at Westminster, with great banquettings, dauncings, and other pastimes.

This yere came Ambassadors not only from the King of Aragon, and Castile, but also from the Kings of France, Denmarke, Scotland, and other Princes, which were highly welcomed, and royally entertained. And on the 20. of April a peace waas proclained betwixt England and France, during the liues of King Henry the 8. of England, and Lewis the French King.

An. Reg. 2. Peace proclaimed.

On Midsommer eue at night, King Henry came priuily into West-cheape of London, being clothed in one of the Coats of his garde: and on S. Peters night the King and the Quéen came royally riding to the signe of the Kings head in Cheape, and there beheld the watch of the City, which watch was set out with diuers goodly shewes, as had béene accustomed.

King Henry and Quéene beholde the watch at London.

King Henry riding on his progresse for his disport, there was brought before him and his Councell many grieuous bills of complaints against Empson and Dudley, wherefore he sent commandement to the Constable of the Tower, charging him that they should shortly after be put to execution. Whereupon the Sheriffes of London were sent for, and commanded by a speciall writ to see the said execution performed and done. And they vpon that went to the Tower, and receiued them on the 17. of August, and from thence brought them vnto the Scaffold on the Tower-hil, where their heads were stricken off: which being done, the body of Empson was buryed in the White-fryers Church, and the body of Dudley in the Blacke-fryers Church. This Edmond Dudley, in the time of his imprisonment in the Tower, compiled one notable booke, which he intituled, The Tree of common wealth, dedicated vnto King Henry the eighth, but neuer came to his hand.

Empson and Dudley executed.

On Newyeres day at Richmond, the Quéen was deliuered of a Prince, to the great reioycing of the whole Realme, he was named Henry: but deceased on the 22. of February next following at Richmond, and was buryed at Westminster.

In the moneth of Febr. came Ambassadors from the King of Aragon and Castile, to require an ayde of 1500. Archers to be sent to the same King, hauing at that time war with the Moores, enemies to the Christian faith: the King granted their request, and because the Lord Thomas Darcy, a Knight of the Garter, made humble suit to the King to be generall of that ayde, the King granted his desire: there were appointed to goe with him, the Lord Anthony Grey, brother to the Marques Dorset, Henry Guilford, Weste, Browne, and William Sidley, Esquires of the Kings house, Sir Robert Constable, Sir Roger Hastings, and Sir Ralph Elderton, with diuers other Gentlemen to be Captaines.

Archers sent and aide to the Moore.

They departed out of Plimouth Hauen with 4. ships royall, and on the first of June arriued at Caleis in South Spaine, where they were honorably receiued by a Bishop and other of the Kings Councell: but an abstinence of war being taken, the Lord Darcy and the rest were required to returne home againe, money was sent to pay the souldiers their wages, for their conduction againe into England, with diuers gifts giuen to the Lord Darcy, and the other Gentlemen, and after returned into England.

An. reg. 3.

During the time that the Lord Darcy was in Spaine, the Lady Margarer, Dutches of Sauoy, and daughter to Maximilian, the Emperor, and gouernor of Flanders, Brabant, Holland, Zeland, and other the low countries, appertaining to Charles the yong Prince of Castile, sent in the end of May to the King of England requiring to haue 1500. archers to aid her against the D. of Gelders, which sore troubled the Countries aforesaid: the King granting her request, appointed Sir Ed. Poynings, Knight of the Garter, and controller of his house, a baliant Captaine, to be Lieutenant and leader of the said 1500. Archers, which accompanied with his son in law, the L. Clinton, Sir Math. Browne, Sir Io. Digby, Ioh. Werton, Richard Wetherall, and Shirley, Esquires, with other Gentlemen and Peomen to the aforesaid number: they took their ships besides Sandwich the 18. of July, and landed at Ermew on the 19. from whence they were conducted to Barrow, &c. whither the Lady Regent came to welcome them, on the 27. of July they departed to Rosseyndale, and on the last of July they came to Bruxelles, and the next day the whole Army of Almaines, Flemings, and other appertaining to the said Lady, met with our English-men, where they set forth in order, the Lady Regent being there present, which tooke her leaue of all the Captaines. The Army to the number of 10000. beside the 1500. Englishmen and passed forward, and the tenth of August came before a little Castle, standing on the higher side of the Maze, called Byzinnoit, belonging to the Bastard of Gelderland.

Archers sent to aide the Lady Margaret, Dutches of Sauoy.

The same night, Thomas Hart, chiefe gouernour of the English ordinance, made his approach, and in the morning made battery, so that the assault thereupon being giuen, the fortresse was won, and the Captaine with 80. and odde men were slaine, and 19 taken, of the which 11. were hanged.

John Morton, Captaine of an hundred English-men, and one Guyet an Esquire of Burgogne, gogne, crying, Saint George, were the first that entred, at which assault there was but one English man slaine.

On the 14. of August, the army ferried ouer the Riuer of Maze into Gelderland, the next day they came to a little Towne, called Aylke, the people were fled, but there was a little Castle, raised and cast downe: vpon the next day they burnt the said Towne of Aylke, and all the Countrey about it, and came at the last to a Towne called Stranule, being very strong, double diked, and walled, within it were 360. good men of warre, besides the inhabitants. At the first, they shewed good countenance of defence, but when they saw their enemies approach nere vnto them with ramparts and trenches, they yeelded by composition, so that the souldiers might depart, but the Townsmen rested prisoners at the will of the Prince of Castile. And so on S. Bartholomewes day, the Admirall of Flanders, and Sir Edward Poynings entred the Towne with great triumph.

The 26. of August, the army came before Venlow, and sent an Herald, called Arthoys, to summon the Towne: but they within would not heare, and yet they shot guns at him. Sir Edward Poynings, at this siege had ordinance pertaining to King Henry as followeth: Serpentines the 12. signes: Armies of England, the Antelope, the Greyhound, the Dragon, the Griffon, the Snake, the Permayde, the Vise, the Maze, the Cocatrise, the Slange, the Vnicorne, the Panter, the Hart, the Hinde, the Plenant, the Falcon, the Partion of Coztenes, the Rake, the Somerset, the Richmond, the March, the Nozwamp, the Rose, the Tateis, in all 36. pieces. The army remooued vnto the North side of Venlow, and part went ouer the water, and made trenches to the water, and so besieged the Towne, but for all they could doe without, they within kept one gate open. At length, the English Captaines perceiuing, that they lay there in vaine, considering the strength of the Towne, and also how the army was not in number sufficient to inuiron the same on each side, wrote to the King, who willed them with all speede to returne, and so they did. Sir Edward Poynings went to the Court of Burgorne, where he was receiued right honorably of the young Prince of Castile, and of his Aunt, the Lady Margaret. Io. Norron, Iohn Fogge, Iohn Scot, and Thomas Lynde, were made Knights by the Prince. And the Lady Margaret, seeing the souldiers coats to be worne, and foule with lying on the ground, gaue to euery yeoman a Coat of woollen cloath, coloured white and greene, red and yellow, the white and greene for the King of Englands liuery, the red and yellow for the Duke of Burgoynes liuery, and these foure colours were medled together, this she did to her great commendation: after that, Sir Edward Poynings had beene highly feasted, he returned with his crue into England, and had not lost fully one hundred persons.

King Henry being at Leicester, heard tidings that one Andrew Barton, a Scottish man, and Pirate of the sea, saying that the King of Scots had warre with the Portingalls, robbed euery Nation, and stopped the Kings streames, that no Merchant almost could passe, and when hee tooke English-mens goods, hee bare them in hand, that they were Portingalls goods, and thus he robbed at euery Hauens mouth. The King displeased herewith, sent Sir Edward Howard, Lord Admirall of England, the Lord Thomas Howard, Sonne and heyre to the Earle of Surrey, and Iohn Hopton to the Sea, which made ready two ships, and taking ten by chance of weather were seuered. The Lord Howard lying in the Downs, perceiuing where Andrew was making toward Scotland, chased him so hard, that he ouer-tooke him, so there was a sore battell betwixt them: Andrew cast out his whistle to encourage his men: but at length the Lord Howard and the English-men did so valiantly, that by cleane strength, they entred the maine decke. The Scots fought sore on the hatches: but in conclusion, Andrew was taken, and so sore wounded, that he dyed there, the remnant of the Scots were taken with their Ship, called the Lyon. All this while was the Lord Admirall in chase of the Barke of Scotland, called Lenny Perwin, which was wont to saile with the Lyon in company, and he with other did so much, that he laid them aboord, and though the Scots manfully defended themselues yet at length the Englishmen entred the Barke, slew many, and take all the residue. Thus were these two ships taken and brought to Blackewall, the second of August. The Scots taken prisoners were sent to London, where they were kept as prisoners in the Archbishop of Yorkes Palace, now called White Hall, and after sent into Scotland.

Andrew Barton ouercome.

About this season, the French King made sharpe warre against Pope Iuly: wherefore the King of England wrote to the French King that he should leaue off to vexe the Pope in such wise, being his friend and confederate: but when the French King seemed little to regard that request, the King sent him word, to deliuer to him his inheritance, both of the Dutchy of Normandy and Guien, and the Counties of Anioy and Pam, and also of his Crowne of France, or else he would come with a power, that by fine force he would obtaine his purpose: but notwithstanding, the French King pursued his warres in Italy, whereupon the King of England ioyned in league with Maximilian the Emperour, and Ferdinando, King of Spaine, and with diuers other Princes, resolued by the aduice of his Councel to make war on the French King and his Countries, and made preparation both by Sea and Land, setting foorth ships for safegard of his Merchants.

King Henry kept his Christmas at Greenewich, with great and plentifull cheere. The fourth of February began the Parliament at Westminster, vpon the which day, the King and his Lords, Spirituall and Temporall, with many of the Common house being present in the Parliament chamber, William Warham Archbishop of Canterbury then Chancelour of England land, made a famous and elerkely proposition, grounded on this Text. Justicia & Pax osculate sunt, whereupon he stood well a large houre and an halfe, declaring how Justice should be ministred, and Peace should be nourished, and by what meanes Justice was put by, and Peace turned into warre. The which he approued by examples of the old and new Testament in right sufficient wise, to his great commendation, and singular comfort of the hearers. On the nert morrow began the conuocation in Pauls Church: and on the nert day, Sir Robert Sheffield, Knight, and sometime Recorder of London, was chosen speaker of the Parliament, and on the nert morrow, being the 8. of Februarry, before the King and Lords he made his proposition, excusing himselfe, and beseeching the King (as the manner is) to be dismissed of that Office, for the which proposition he was well allowed and admitted. On the same day the King dubbed Sir Henry Gilford, and Sir Charles Brandon, Knights. In this Parliament was granted two fifteenes of the temporality, and of the Clergy two dismes or tents. During which Parliament, a preman of the crown, named Newbolt, slew within the Palace of Westminster a seruant of Master Willoughby, for the which fact, the King commanded to be set vp a paire of Gallowes in the same place where the said seruant lost his life: and vpon the same, the said Newbolt was hanged, and remained on the Gallowes by the space of two daies.

An. 1514. King Henry sent an army into Scotland against the French.

The King of Arragon hauing warre with the French King, wrote to King Henry of England, to send ouer an army into Biscay; and so to inuade France on that side, for the recouery first of his Dutchy of Guienne, and he would ayd them with ordinance, horse-men, beasts, and carriages, with other necessaries, appertaining to the same.

The King of England and his Councell putting their affiance in this promise of King Ferdinando, prepared an Noble armie all of footmen, and small artillery, appointed Lord Tho. Grey, Marques Dorset to be chiefe conductor of the same. Moreouer, King Henry daily studying to set forward the warre which he had begun against the French King, caused Sir Edmond Howard Admirall, with all diligence to make ready diuers goodly ships, as the Souereigne and others, to the number of 18. besides smaller vessells, and therewith hauing in his company Sir Weston Browne, Griffith Dun, Edward Cobham, Tho. Windham, Tho. Lucy, William Perton, Henry Shiborne, Stephen Bull, George Witwage, John Hopton, William Gunstone, Thomas Draper, Edmond Cooke, John Burdet, and diuers other, he tooke the Sea, and scowring the same about the midst of May he came before Portesmouth. About the same time the Lord Marques Dorset, and other Noble men appointed for the iourney to Mitray, as the Lord Howard, son and heyre to the Earle of Surrey, the Lord Brooke the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Ferrers, the Lord Iohn, the Lord Anthony, the Lord Leonard Grey, all three brethren to the Marques, Sir Griffith ap Rice, Sir Maurice Barkeley, Sir William Sands, the Baron of Burford, Sir Richard Cornwall, brother to the said Baron, W. Husse, Iohn Molton, W. Kingstone, Esquires, Sir Henry Willoghby, and diuers other, with the number of 10000. souldiers, amongst the which were 500. Almains all clad in white, vnder the leading of a Fleming, named Cuint, came to Southampton, and there mustered their bands. The 16. of May, they were shipped in Spanish vessells, and landed in Biscay, where they were bidden welcome, but had no such aid sent to them as was promised, whereby they lost the doing of some great exploit against the French men, on the frontiers of Gascoigne: after the army had lane 30. daies in the campe, there came from the King of Arragon messengers, to desire the Marques & his people to take patience for a while, and they should see that such preparation should be made for the furnishing of their enterprize. In the meane time, the Englishmen for the most part, were victualled with Garlike, and drank hot Wines, and eate hot fruits, which procured their blod to boyle in their bodies, whereby they fell sicke, and died more then 800. persons: in the end, many promises being made by the King of Spaine, and none performed, the English-men embarked, and landed in England in the moneth of December. The King of Spaine seemed to be sore discontented with their departure, affirming, that if they had tarryed till the nert Spring, he would in their company haue inuaded France.

About the moneth of August, the Nauies of England and France, meeting at Bitaine bay, fought a cruell battell, in the which the Regent, or Soueraigne of England, and a carieke of Brest in France, being grappled together, were burned, and their Captaines with their men all drowned: the English Captaine, was Sir Thomas Kneuer, who had with him, Sir Io. Carew, and 700. men. In the French Carieke was Sir Pierce Morgan, with 900. men, were all drent or drowned.

The Regent of England, 3 Ships burned.

King Henry hearing of the losse of the Regent, caused a great Ship to be made, such a one, as the like had neuer beene seene in England, and named it, Henry grace de Dieu.

Great Harry a ship made.

By fire this yeere, a great part of the Kings Palace of Westminster, and the Chappell in the Tower of London, and many other places in England were brent.

Scala temp. Kings Palace at Westminster brent.

In the moneth of November, the King called his high Court of Parliament, in the which it was concluded, that the King himselfe in person, with an army royall should inuade France, whereupon notice thereof being giuen to such as should attend, they made their purueyance with all diligences that might be. In this Parliament was granted to the King two fifteenes, and foure demies, and had monyes of euery Duke ten marks, and Earle fiue pound, a Lord foure pound, a Knight foure marks, and euery man valued at 800. pound in goods, to pay 4. markes and so after that rate, till him that was valued at at forty shillings paid twelue pence, and euery man that was 40. shillings wages 12. pence, and euery man and woman of 15. yeeres or vpward 4. pence.

An. 1515. The King kept his Christmas at Greenwich with great solemnity, dauncing, disguisings, and mummeries in Princely manner.

After Candelmasse, the King created Sir Charles Brandon, Viscount Lisle.

King sent to the Sea.

In the moneth of March, was the Kings Nauy of ships royall, and other set forth to the number of 42. besides balengers, vnder the conduct of the Lord Admirall, accompanied with Sir Walter Deuereux Lord Ferrers, Sir Wollam Browne, S. Edw. Ichingham, Sir Anthony Pomes, Sir Iohn Wallope, Sir Tho. Windham, Sir Stephen Bull, William Fitz Williams, Arthur Plantagenet, William Sidney, Esquires, and diuers other valiant Captaines.

An. Reg. 5

Vhese made saile into Brittaine, and came to Barthyam bay, where they lay at Anchor for a time, at length, minding to enter the Hauen of Brest, on the 25. of Aprill, the Lord Admirall with a pike of the enemy, was throwne ouerboord, and so drowned, all the other escaped very hardly away, for if they had tarryed, the tyde had failed them, and then all had beene lost. The Lord Ferrers and the other Captaines for sorrowfull of this chance, returned into England. King Henry being sory for the losse of his Admirall, called to him Thomas Howard, eldest sonne and heyre apparant to the Earle of Surrey, whom he made Admirall, willing him to reuenge his brothers death. The Lord Howard humbly thanked his grace of the trust that he put in him, and so immediatly went to the Sea, and scoured the same, that no French man durst shew himselfe on the coast of England.

Edward Howard Lord Howard drowned.

On May euen, Edmond de la Pole, Earle of Suffolke was beheaded on the Tower hill, his brother Richard de la Pole, called the White Rose, was afterwards slaine before the City of Pauie, In Anno 1524.

Earle of Suffolke de la Pole beheaded.

King Henry hauing all his prouisions ready for the warre, and meaning in person to passe the Sea, appointed George Talbot, Earle of Shrewsbury, high Steward of his houshold, to be Captaine generall of his foze-ward, and in his company were appointed to goe, Thomas Stanley, Earle of Darby, Lord Dacwray, Prior of S. Johns, Sir Robert Ratcliffe, Lord Fitzwater, the Lord Hastings, the Lord Cobham, Sir Ric ap Thomas, Sir Thomas Blunt, Sir Richard Sacheuell, Sir Iohn Digby, Sir Iohn Askew, Sir Lewis Bagot, Sir Thomas Cornewall, and many other Knights and Esquires, and souldiours, to the number of 8000. men, these passed the Sea, and came to Calcis about the midst of May. Charles Somerset, Lord Herbert, Chamberlaine to the King, in the end of that moneth followed with 6000. men.

King Henry hauing sent other a great and puissant army into France to besiege the City of Turwine, himselfe accompanied with many Noble men, and six hundred archers of his guard, in white gabberdines, tooke his ship at Douer on the last of June in the morning. When the King was shipped, and made saple, all his army followed, to the number of foure hundred shippes, and the wind was so, that they were brought the same night into Calcis Hauen.

King Henry besieged Turwine.

On the nert morrow, being the first of July, Thomas, Lord Howard, Admirall of England, landed at Whitsand bay, and entred, spoyled, and brent the Towne, and returned to his ships.

The twenty one of July, the King passed out of the Towne of Calcis in good array of battell, and tooke the field, and notwithstanding that the foreward of the Kings great army were before Turwine, yet the King of his owne battell made three battells: the Lord Lisle Marshall of the hoste, was Captaine of the foreward, and vnder him 3000. men: Sir Richard Carew with 300. men was the right hand wing to the foze-ward, and the Lord Darcy with 300. men, wing on the left hand. The scowrers and foze-riders of this battell, were the Northumberland men on light Geldings. The Earle of Esser was Lieutenant generall of the speares, and Sir Iohn Pechy was Vice-gouernor of the horsemen. Before the King went 800. Almains all in a plumpe: after them came the Standard with the red Dragon, next the Banner of our Lady, and nert of the Trinity, vnder the which were all the Kings houshold. Then went the Banner of the armes of England, borne by Sir John Gifford, vnder which Banner was the King himselfe, with diuers Noble men and other, to the number of 3000. men. The Duke of Buckingham with 600. men, was on the Kings left hand. On the right hand was Sir Edward Poynings, with other six hundred men, equall with the Almaines. The Lord of Burgainy, with eight hundred men, was wing on the right hand: Sir William Compton with the retinue of the Bishop of Winchester, Fox, and Master Thomas Wolsey, afterward Cardinall, of eight hundred, was in manner of a reereward: Sir Anthony Oughtred, and Sir John Neuil, with the Kings speares that followed were foure hundred, and so the whole armie was eleuen thousand and three hundred men. The Master of the ordinance set forth the Kings artillery, as faulcons, slings, bombards, powder, stones, bowes, arrowes, and such other things necessary for the field, the whole number of the carriages were thirteene hundred, the leaders and drivers of the same were nineteene hundred men. The King lay the first night betwixt Calkwell and Freidon: the nert night before the Castle of Guisnes at Becard: the nert night he lay beside Arde, a good way without the English pale, and when he was a little beyond Dernoine, there came a great hoste of French-men, that purposed to haue set vpon him: but the King with his hoste kept their ground, and shot their great ordinance, wherewith the array of the French men was broken.

The 4. of August, the King in good order of battell, came before the City of Turwine, and planted planted his siege in war-like wise.

The 11. day of August, Maximilian the Emperour, came to King Henry, who was received with great triumph betweene Aire and the campe. The Emperour and his retinue were in blacke, as mourners for the Empresse lately deceased.

The Emperour and all his seruants were retained with the King of England in wages by the day, euery person according to his degree, and the Emperor as the Kings souldier weare a crosse of S. George with a rose, and so hee and all his traine came to the Kings campe the 13. of August, and there was receiued with great magnificence.

Turwine yeelded to K. Henry.

The 23. of August, the Towne of Turwine was giuen ouer vnto the King of England, with condition, that all men in the Towne might safely passe with horse and harnesse: and so on the 24. of August, there came out of the Towne 4000. men of warre, and moe well appointed, whereof 600. were well horsed, their standards borne before them.

Turwine raced and burnt.

The 26. of August, the King remooued to Singate, and there it was agreed, that the walls, gates, bulwarks, and Towers of Turwine should be defaced, and razed, and cast downe: of which conclusion the Emperor sent word to Saint Owers and to Aire, which being tydings of that tidings, sent thither pioners, and so they and the English pioners brake downe the walls, gates and Towers, and filled the ditch, and fired the Towne, except the Cathedrall Church and the Palace, and all the ordinance was by the King sent to Aire, to be kept to his vse.

After this, it was concluded, that the King in person, should lay his siege to the Citty of Turney, wherefore he set forward their goodly battells: the first was conducted by the Earle of Shrewesbury: the second battell led the King himselfe, with whom was the Emperor: the rereward was conducted by the Lord Harbert, and so in the first night they lay in campe beside Aire.

The 14. of September, the King and his army came to Beatwin, and on the morrow passed forward, and came to a strait, where was a Ford, which with great difficulty they passed: and the next day they passed a bridge called Fount Anandoien, &c.

The 21. day of September, the King remoued his campe toward Turney, and lodged within three miles of the Citty, the which might came to him the Emperor and the Paulsgraue: the people about Turney were with their goods fled to the Citty, and yet the Citty had no men of warre to defend it, but with multitude of inhabitants the Citty was well replenished.

King Henry besieged Turney.

The King came in array of battell before Turney, planted his ordinance round about the City, diuers trenches were cast, and rampiers made, so that no Cittizens could issue out, nor no aide come to them. Whereupon at length, to wit, on the nine and twentieth of September the Cittie was yeelded.

Turney yeelded to King Henry.

Then the King appointed the Lord Lisle, the Lord Burgeyny, and the Lord Willoughby, to take possession, which with 6000. men entred the Citty, and take the Market-place and the walls, and then Maister Thomas Wolsey, the Kings Almoner, called before him all the Cittizens, and sware them to the King of England: the number of which Cittizens were threescore thousand.

On the 2. day of October, the King entred the Citty of Turney, and there ordained Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the order of the Garter, to be his Lieutenant, with Captaines, horse-men, Archers, and artillery conuenient: he made his Almoner, Thomas Wolsey, Bishop of Turney, and then returned to Calcis, and sayled from thence to Douer on the 24. of October: from whence hee rode post to Richmond where the Quéene lay.

Thomas Wolsey, Bishop of Turney.

In the meane time, Iames, King of Scots, assembled the whole power of Scotland, wherewith hee approached to the Borders, and coming to Norham Castle, layd siege thereunto, and after he had beaten the Castle with his ordinances, by the space of 6. dayes, the same was deliuered by into his hands.

Iames, King of Scots, besieged Norham.

And hee (sayeth Paulus Iouius) made the same to bee layd leuill with the ground, and from thence marched (wasting with fire and sword) to besiege the strong Towne of Barwicke.

Now had the Earle of Surrey, Lieutenant of the North, in absence of King Henry, giuen order to assemble a power of 26000. men, and comming to Alnwike, tarried there til the whole number of his people were come: amongst other, his sonne, the Lord Admirall, with 5000. souldiers, and men of warre, which had beene at Sea, came to his father, whereof he greatly reioyced. The Earle appointed his battells, with wings, and horsemen necessary: first of the forward was ordained Captain the Lord Howard Admiral, with the L. Clifford, the L. Coniers, the L. Lattimer, the L. Scrope, the L. Ogle, the Lord Lumley, Sir Nicholas Appleyard, Maister of the ordinance, Sir Stephen Bull, Sir H. Sherborne, Sir William Sidney, Sir Edw. Echingham, Sir William Bulmer, with the power of the Bishoppike of Durham, Sir William Gascoigne, Sir Christopher Ward, Sir I. Eueringham, Sir Th. Metham, Sir Walter Griffith, &c. Of the wing on the right hand of the forward was Captaine Sir Edmond Howard, Knigt Mathall of the horse, and with him Brian Tonstall, Ralfe Brearton, John Laurence, Richard Bold, Esquires, Sir John Bothe, Sir Thomas Butler, Knights, and other. Of the wing on the left hand was Captaine, Sir Marmaduke Constable with his sonnes, Sir William Percy, and of Lancashire, a thousand men. Of the rereward was Captaine, the Earle of Surrey, the Lord Scrope of Bolton, Sir Philip Tilney, Sir George Darcy, Sir Thomas Barkeley, Sir John Rocliffe, Sir Christopher Pickering, Richard Tempest, Sir John Stanley, &c. Now the Earle of Surrey was informed, that King Iames lay imbattelled vpon a great Mountaine, called Flodan, a place of such such strength as was vnpossible for the Englishmen to come neer them, he sent Rouge Crosse, pursuant to the K. of Scots, to shew him, that where he had contrary to his oath and league, inuaded this his brothers Realme, and done great hurt in casting downe Castles, Towers, and houses, burning and destroying the same, &c. The said Earle would be ready to try the said rightwilenesse of the cause with the King in battell, by Friday next comming, if hee of his Noble courage would giue him tarrying and abode. Rouge Crosse went and did his message to Iames, King of Scots, as he was appointed: And hereupon King Iames sent to the Earle an Herald, named Ilay, who deliuered to the Earle a Letter, written by the Kings secretary, as followeth.

King Iames letter to Thomas Earle of Surrey.

As to the causes alledged of our comming into England, against our band and promise (as is alledge) thereto wee answere: Our brother was bound as farre to vs, as wee were to him. And when wee sware last before his Ambassadors, in presence of our Councell, wee expressed specially by oath, that wee would keepe to our brother, if our brother kept to vs, and not else: wee sware our brother brake first to vs, and sith his breake, wee haue required diuers times him to amend: and lately wee warned our brother, as he did not to vs he brake, and this we take for our quarrell, and with Gods grace shall defend the same, at your assured time, which with Gods grace wee shall ayde.

Earle of Surreys letter to Iames, King of Scots.

Right High and mighty Prince, so it is, that lately I sent vnto you Rouge Crosse, pursuant at armes, and by him aduertised your grace, that I and other my Soueraigne Lords subiects, were come to represse and resist your inuasions of this the Kings my Soueraign Lords Realme, and for that intent I offered to giue you battell on this halfe Friday next comming: which my message your grace tooke pleasure to heare, as I am informed, and by your Herald, Ilay, ye made answere, that ye were right toyous of my desire, and would not faile to accomplish the same, and to abide me there, where yee were at the time of my message to shewed vnto your grace. And albeit it hath pleased you to change your said promise, and put your selfe into a ground, more like a Fortresse of campe, then vpon any indifferent ground for battell to be tryed, wherefore considering the day appointed is fo nigh approaching, I desire you of your grace, that for the accomplishment of your honorable promise, you will dispose your selfe for your part, like as I shall doe for mine, to be to morrow with your host in your side of the plaine of Pilfield, in likewise as I shall doe for mine, and shall be with the subiects of my Soueraigne Lord, on my side of the plaine of the said field, to giue you battell betweene 12. of the clocke and 3. in the after noone, vpon sufficient warning by you to be giuen by 8. or 9. of the clocke in the morning, by the said Pursuant. And like as I and other Noble men of my company, binde vs by our writing subscribed with our hands, to keepe the same time, to the intent abouesaid: It may like your grace, by your honorable letters subscribed with your hand, to binde your grace for the accomplishment of this our desire, trusting you will dispatch our said Pursuant immediately: for the long delay of so honourable a iourney, wee thinke should sound to your dishonor. Written in the field of Woller Hangh the 7. day of September, at 5. of the clocke in the after-none. Subscribed, Thomas Surrey, Thomas Howard, Thomas Dacre, Clifford, Henry Scrope, Ralph Scrope, Richard Latimer, William Coniers, John Lumley, R. Ogle, William Percy, Ed. Stanley, William Molineux, Marmaduke Constable, William Gascoygne, William Griffith, George Darcy, William Bulmer, Thomas Strangwais, &c.

Now the time of battell being come, the Earle of Surrey diuided his army into 3. battells: vnto the vauntgard whereof, the Lord Howard was Captaine, his brother, Sir Edm. Howard was toyned as a wing, the Earle himselfe led the middle ward, and the rereward was guided by Sir Edward Stanley. The Lord Dacres, with a number of horse-men stood apart by himselfe, to succour where nede should appeare to be. The ordinance was planted in the front of these battells, and in places betweene, and in this order they marched forward.

In the meane time, Iames, King of Scots, beholding the behauiour of the English-men from the heighth of the hil, commanded his standards to be raised and spread, and euery man to resort to his place, that they might forth-with encounter with their enemies: And without delay King Iames putting his horse from him, all other, as well Nobles, as meane men, did the like, that the danger being equall, and all hope of succour taken away, they might be the more willing to shew their manhod: Then was the army diuided into 5. wards, to the intent that the battell wherein the King himselfe stood, with his standard, might be inclosed, as it were with two wings: their Ordinance was lodged in places most conuenient, though by reason they marched downe the hill, their shot did small damage to the English-men comming vpwards. And herewith Sir Edmond Howard with his wing was got vp on the hill side, with whom the Lord Hume, and the 2. Earles of Lineor and Argill incountred with such violence, that this battell of Scots with speares on foote, beat downe and brake that Wing of English-men in such wise, that Sir Edmond Howard was in manner left alone, and felled to the earth: but Bastard Heron came to his rescue, or else he had beene slaine. This Bastard Heron brought with him a strong troupe of horse-men, which hee bring of late banished both from England and Scotland, had cunningly trained vp in robberies. And on the other side, the Lord Dacres watching to ayde where neede should happen, came in on the sides of the Scots, and gaue a charge on them with his horse-men, whereby Sir Edmond Howard escaped to the English Vauntgard, which was led by his brother the Lord Howard, who being now also got aloft on the hill, pressed still forward to renew the battell, and to succour those whom he saw put to the worst, whereby they tooke courage vnto them, and layd about. Herewith the Earle of Crowford, and Mount-rose came with their battell of speares, also on foote, and encountring with the said Lord Howard, after soze fight on both sides, both the said Earles were slaine, besides a great number of other, the whole battell which they led being put to slight, and chased out of the field. On the left hand, Sir Edward Stanley, and with him Sir William Molineux, Sir Henry Kickley, and other of Lancashire, Cheshire, having beguine to encounter with the Scots on that side, forced them to come downe into a more euen ground, and brought to that point, with such incessant shot of arrowes, that to anoyde that sharpe storme, the Scots were constrained to breake their array, and to fight one separate from another: which thing, when Sir Edward Stanley perceiued, forthwith bringing about three Bands which he had kept in store, he inuaded the open sides of his enemies, by a fresh onset, and put them in sunder in such disorder, that they were not able any longer to abide the violence of the Englishmen, so that taking themselues to slight, and running downe the hill, they escaped to the wood: but the Earles of Argile and Lenior were slaine in the same place. In the meane time, the King, who a little before had ioyned with the Earle of Surrey, perceiuing that the Wings of the battells were distressed, and that his enemies beganne to inclose him on each side, here-with rushing forth vpon his enemies, a new battell beganne to rise, for that battell being well armed, passed little for the Arrowes of the Englishmen, insomuch, that piercing the Earles battell, they entered well neere to farre within the same, that they were at a point to haue ouerthrowne his Standards. The King himselfe on foote, euen in the foremost Ranke, fought right valiantly, encouraging his people, as well by example as by perswasions to doe their best. Neyther did the Earle of Surrey faile in the duty of a worthy Generall: but whilest the battell was thus foughten about the Standards, with doubtfull chance of victory, the Lord Howard and Sir Edward Stanley hauing vanquished the enemies in eyther Wing, returned to the middle ward, and finding them there thus occupied, they set on, in two seuerall parts, with great violence, and at the same time, the Lord Dacres came with his horsemen vpon the backes of the Scots, so that they being thus attapted behinde and before, and on eyther side, were constrained to fight in a round compasse. King James, as he beheld Sir Adam Forman his standard-bearer beaten downe, thought surely there was no way for him but death: wherefore to deliuer himselfe from the reproach as was like to follow, he rushed forth into the chiefest prese of his enemies, and there fighting in most desperate manner, was beaten downe and slaine, and a little beside him, there dyed with like courage, diuers honorable Prelates, as the Archbishop of S. Andrewes, and two other Bishops, besides two Abbots, 12. Earles, and 17. Lords, besides Knights and Gentlemen: and about 8000. Scots slaine, and almost so many taken, saith Iouius. All their ordinance and stuffe was taken by the English.

Thus on the 9. of September, King James the fourth of that name, King of Scots, was slaine at Bramstone vpon Piperd hill, and his army discomfited by the Earle of Surrey, Lieutenant to Henry the 8. King of England: there was taken prisoners, Sir William Scot chancellor to the said King; and Sir John Forman his Serieant porter, with diuers other. Also in manner all the Scottish ensignes were taken, and 22. peeces of great ordinance, amongst the which were seuen Culuerings, very faire peeces, whom the King for their likenesse one vnto another, had named the 7. Sisters. There was slaine and taken of our men, aboue 1500. men (saith Hall) during the time of the fight, and in the night following, many English-men lost their horses, and such stuffe as they left in their tents, by the robbers of Tindale, and Tiuidale: when the field was done, the Earle gaue thanks to God, and made Knights to the number of 35. whose names I ouerpasse in this place. The body of the King of Scots was not found till the next day, and then being found and knowne by the Lord Dacres, there appeared in the same diuers deadly wounds, his throat cut halfe asunder, his left hand in two places almost cut off, and many other wounds, as well with Arrowes, as other wise: his body was bowelled, rebowelled and inclosed in lead, and so kept at Barwike till the Kings pleasure were knowen. After that the Earle of Surrey had taken order, and set the North in good quiet, he returned to the Queene, with the dead body of the Scottish King, which body inclosed in Lead, (as before is shewed) as I haue beene informed, was conueyed to Shine, a Monastery in Surrey, founded by King Henry the 5. where it remained for a time, in what order I am not certaine, but since the dissolution of the house, to wit in the raigne of king Edw. the 6. Henry Grey, then Duke of Suffolke, there keeping house, I haue beene shewed the same body (as was affirmed) so lapped in Lead, thrusted into an old wast roome, amongst old Timber, Stone, Lead, and other rubble.

James King of Scots slaine at Bramstone field.

When King Henry was returned into England, from his conquest made in France, of the Cities of Turwin, and Turney, he forgate not the good seruice of those that had beene with the Earle of Surrey, at the battell of Bramstone, wherefore he wrote to them his louing Letters, with such thankes and fauourable words that euery man thought himselfe well rewarded. The tenor of his letter was this.

The Kings letters to sir William Molineux, of Lancashire.

TRusty and well beloued, we great you well, and vnderstand as well by the report of our right trusty Cousin and councellor, the Duke of Norfolke, as otherwise, what acceptable seruice you auowrest of late haue done vnto vs, by your valiant towardnesse in the atchiuing of our said enterprise our great enemy, the late King of Scots: and how courageously you as a very hearty louing seruant, acquited your selfe, for the ouerthrow of the said late King, and distressing of his malice and power to our great honour, and the aduancing of your no little fame and praise, for which we haue good cause to fauour and thanke you, and so we full heartily doe. And assured may you bee, that we shall in such effectuall wise remember your said seruice in any your reasonable pursuites, as you shall haue cause to thinke the same right well imployed to your comfort, and weale hereafter. Given vnder our Signet, at our Castle of Windsore, the 27. of November. To our trusty and well beloued, William Molineux Knight.

This yeere was a death of the pestilence in England, especially about London, so that in one house, to wit, the Minories without Aldgate, there dyed of Nunnes professed, to the number of twenty and seuen, besides other that were Lay-people, and seruants in that house.

Great pestilence.

About the feast of the nativity of our Lady, deceased William Smith, Bishop of Lincolne, he founded Brazenose College in Oxford, and before that being Bishop of Lichfield, he ordained an hospitall there, for a Master 2. Priests, 10. poore men: he set there also a Schoolemaster, and an vsher to teach Grammer to poore mens children, in a schole by him erected. King Henry the 7. gaue vnto it an old hospitall, called Donhall in Warham, in Chestershire, with the lands &c. Also at Farnworke where the said Smith and his parents had originall, he bestowed ten pound the yere for euer, to one that should teach a Grammar Schole.

Will. Smith, Bishop of Lincolne deceased.

1514. States created.

On the day of the purification of our Lady, in the Archbishops palace at Lambeth, the King created the Earle of Surrey Duke of Norfolk, with an augmentation of the Armes of Scotland, and otherwise rewarded him: he likewise the same day created Sir Charles Brandon, Vicount Lisle (son to Sir William Brandon, that bare King Henry the 7. Standard at Bosworth field, and was there slaine) Duke of Suffolke, and Sir Thomas Lord Howard, high Admirall, Earle of Surrey, Sir Charles Somerset, Lord Herbert, his chiefe Chamberlaine, Earle of Worcester, and not long after, he made Sir Edward Stanley Lord Mounteagle.

An. Reg. 6. In the moneth of March following, Thomas Wolsey, the Kings Almoner, & Bishop of Turney, was created Bishop of Lincolne.

Great iusting.

In the moneth of May, the King and the Duke of Suffolk were challengers at the tilt, against all commers, in the which iusts were broken 100. and 14. staues.

Cap of maintenance.

The 19. of May was received into London a Cap of maintenance, and a Sword sent from Pope Iuly the second, with a great company of Noble men and Gentlemen, which Cappe and Sword was presented to the King on the next Sunday with a great solemnity in the Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul. French-men landed with their Galleies and foists on the bowers of Sussex in the night season and came to Wyghthamsted and Hyenthit, taking such goods as they there found, but in the morning they were constrained to flye.

The Lord Admirall sent Sir John Wallope to the Sea, with diuers ships, which sayling to the coasts of Normandy, landed there, and hyent 21. villages and Townes, with diuers ships in the hauen of Trapoze, Staples, and other places.

Sir John Wallope hyent Crayport.

In the moneth of May, Sir Thomas Louell tooke the seas, and landed at Calais, with 400. men of warre: also Sir John Pechy, the Lord Burgauney, the Lord Clinton, the Lord Cobham, Sir Richard Lewes, Sir John Rainsforth, Sir William Scot, Sir John Scot his Sonne, Sir Edward Guilford, Sir Henry Guilforth, Sir John Norton, Sir John Fogge. Sir Matthew Browne, and Sir James Dorcie, with diuers Esquieres and Gentlemen, and men of warre, to the number of 5000. The Lord Burgauney, being chiefe leader. These were sent ouer to strengthen the Townes of Calais, and other fortresses within the English Pale, for doubt of any sudden attempt to be made by the Frenchmen.

Richard Tirrie pin.

The French King perceiuing what losses he had sustained by the warres against England, and doubting lest one euill lucke should still follow another, determined to make suite for peace, and first agreeing with the Pope Leo, desired him to be a meane for the procuring of some agreement betwixt him and the King of England.

Whereupon the Popes Letters, the French King by an Herald at armes sent to the King of England, requiring of him a safe Conduct for his Ambassadors, which should come to intreat for a peace to be concluded betwixt them and their Realmes.

Upon grant whereof attained, the French KING sent a Commission with the President of Roane, and others, to entreat of peace.

And because they vnderstood that the marriage was broken betweene the Prince of Castile and the Lady Mary, they desired that the said Lady might be ioyned in marriage with the French King, offering a great Dowry, and surely for the same, so much was offered, that the King moued by his Councell consented vpon condition, that if the French King dyed, then shee should, if it stood with her pleasure, returne into England with her Dowzie and riches.

Peace with France proclaimed.

After that they were recoyded vpon the peace, and that the French King should marry this young Lady, &c. And then was the claimed peace proclaimed on the thirteenth of August, &c.

In the moneth of September, the Lady Mary was conueyed to Doner, by the King her Brother, and the Queene: and on the second day of October, shee was shipped, and such as were appointed to giue their attendance on her, as the Duke of Norfolke, the Marquesse Dorset, the Bishoppe of Durham, the Earle of Surrey, the Lord de la Ware, the Lord Berners, the Lord Mountcagle, the foure brethren of the said Parquesse, Sir Maurice Barkeley, Sir John Pechy, Sir William Sands, Sir Thomas Bullen, Sir John Car, and many other Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and Ladies. They set out from Douer with 14. great shippes, and had not sayled past a quarter of their voyage on the Sea, but that the winde rose, and severed the ships, driuing some of them to Calcis, some into Flanders, and her ship, and three other, with great difficulty, was brought to Bologne, not without great heoped op at the entring of the Hauen, for the Water ranne the Ship hard on shore, but the Boats were ready, and received the Lady out of the Ship, and Sir Christopher Garnish stood in the water, and tooke her in his armes, and so bare her to Land, where the Duke of Vandosme, and a Cardinall, with many other great Estates, received her with great honour.

In this voyage, King Henries great ship, with foure tops, called the Lubeke, was broken and lost, a little from Sangate West toward Calcis: there was in her at that time, almost fiue hundred men, souldiours and marriners, whereof more then foure hundred were lost, for there escaped not one hundred of the company. From Bologne, the Lady Mary was conueyed vnto Abuile, and there entred the eighth of October, and on the next morrow, the marriage was solemnized betwixt the French King and the said Lady, with all honour and royalty. When the feast was ended, the English Lords returned with great rewards into England: before whose departure from Abuile, the Dolphine of France, Francis, Duke of Valois caused solemne Iustes to be proclaimed, to be kept at Paris, in the moneth of November next ensuing: the said Dolphine, with his 5. aydes to answere all commers, being Gentlemen of name and armes. When this proclamation was proclaimed in England, the Duke of Suffolke, the Marques Dorset, and his foure brethren; the Lord Clinton, Sir Edward Neuill, Sir William Sidney, Sir Giles Caple, Thomas Cheyny and other, got licence of the King to goe ouer to this challenge, and thereupon preparing themselues for the purpose, departed toward France, the twenty of October, they landed at Calcis, all in greene coates and hoods, because they would not be knowne. The twenty fire of October, Sir Henry Guilford landed at Calcis, with two Sergeants at armes, and 20. yeomen of the Crotchne and Kings guard, these went to the Citty of Paris, with tenne or twelue goodly Horses to be at the Iustes, at the Oxonation of the Queene: they came all to Paris about the latter end of October. The Dolphine desired the Duke of Suffolke, and the Lord Marques Dorset, to be two of his immediate aydes, which thereto gladly assented. On the fifth of November being Sunday, the Queene was crowned with great solemnity, in the Cathedrall Church of Dionese: and on the next day, she was receiued into Paris, with all honor that might be deuised. On the seuenth of November, beganne the Iustes, which continued by the space of three daies, in the which were answered three hundred and fiue men of armes, and euery man ranne fiue courses with sharpe Speares. The English Lords and Knights did as well as the best, not onely in the Iustes, but also at the Tourney and Barriers, namely, the Duke of Suffolke, the Marquesse Dorset, and his brother the Lord Edward Grey: when the great triumph was done, the Lords of England tooke their leaue, and came into England before Christmas.

King Henry his great ship called the Lubeke lost.

Mary, Sister to King Henry married to the French King.

Iusting to be holden at Paris.

In the meane time, to wit, in the moneth of Nouember, the Queene was deliuered of a Prince, which liued not long after.

Richard Hun, a merchant taylor of London, dwelling in the parish of S. Margaret in Bridge-streete, who (for denying to giue a mortuary, such as was demanded by the Parson for his child being buried) had been put in the Lollards tower, about the end of October last before passed, was now the 5. of December, found hanged with his owne girdle of silke, in the said tower, and after he was burned in Smithfield.

Richard Hun hanged in Lollards Castle.

This peere dyed at Rome the Archbishop of Yorke, and Cardinall, called Doctor Bambridge, which was the Kings Ambassador there, and was poysoned by an Italian, one of his owne house-hold Chaplaines, he was there honorably buried. And King Henry gaue the said Archbishoprieke to Thomas Wolsey, then Bishop of Lincolne, who shortly after gat to be Cardinall and Lord Chancellor.

On Newyeeres euen, dyed the French King, Lewes the 12. after he had beene married to the Lady Mary of England, the terme of 82. dayes.

The French King deceased. 1515.

The King of England being thereof aduertised, caused a solemne obsequie to be kept for him in S. Pauls Church of London, with a costly hearse, at the which obsequy, many Nobles were present. Then the King sent a letter to comfort the Quéene his sister, requiring to know her pleasure, whether shee would continue still in France, or returne into England. And when he was aduertised of her minde, which was to returne into England, the Duke of Suffolke, Sir Richard Wingfield, deputy of Calcis, and Doctor Welt, with a goodly band of Gentlemen, and yeomen, all in blacke, were sent into France, and comming to Paris, were well entertained of Francis, the new French King, to whom they declared the effect of their commission, which was to receiue the Quéene Dowagar, according to the couenants. The Councell of France by the Kings appointment, assigned for her dowry, and the Duke of Suffolke put in officers, and then was the Quéen deliuered to the Duke, who behaued himselfe so towards her, that he obtayned her good will, to bee her husband. It was thought that when the King created him Duke of Suffolk, he perceiued his sisters good will toward the said Duke, and that hee meant then to haue bestowed her on him, but that a better offer came in the way, but howsoeuer it was, now he was her loue, so as by her consent, hee wrote to the King her brother, meekely beseeching him of pardon in his request, which was humbly to desire him of his good will and contentation. The King after some suite, agreed that the Duke should bring her into England vnmarryed, and at his returne, to marry her in England: but for doubt of change, he married her secretly at Paris, as was said.

The 9. of April, a new peace was concluded betweene the King of England, and Francis the new King of France.

After that the Duke of Suffolke had receiued the French Queene with her Dowzie appointed, and all her apparell, Jewells, and household stuffe deliuered, they tooke leaue of the new French King, & so passing thorow France, came to Calcis on the 25. of April, where they were honorably receiued, from whence on the 2. of May, they sayled ouer into England, and the same night landed at Douer. And on the 12. of May, they were solemnely married at Greenwich.

An. reg. 7. Duke of Suffolke married the Lady Mary the Kings Sister.

This yeere, in the moneth of May, were sent out of England 1200. Masons and Carpenters, and 300. Labourers to the Citie of Turney, to build a castle there, to challice the city, if it chanced to rebell, and thereby to diminish the garison that then lay there to the Kings great charge.

Castle of Turney buil-ded.

In the moneth of September, King Henry after his returne from progresse in the West, being at his manor of Oking, Thomas Wolsey coming thither to him, there was brought to him a letter from Rome to aduertise him that he was elected Cardinall, which he seemed to mislike of, but the King willed to take it vpon him, and from thencefoorth called him My L. Cardinall.

Tho. Wolsey, Cardinall.

In the moneth of Nouember, the King assembled a Parliament at Westminster, especially for order in apparell. In the end of which Parliament, Doctor Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, and then Lord Chancellor, gaue vp into the Kings hands his office of Chancellor, and deliuered to him the great seale, which seale incontinently the King deliuered vnto the L. Cardinall, and so made him Chancellor. And here I think good to set down for example to posterity, some part of the proceedings of this so oft named Thomas Wolsey Archbishop, his ascending vnto honorous estate, and sudden falling againe from the same, as I haue been informed by persons of good credit. Truth it is, this Cardinall Wolsey was an honest poore mans sonne of Ipswich, in the County of Suffolke, and there borne, and being but a child, very apt to be learned: wherefore, by the meanes of his parents, or of his good friends and maisters, he was conueyed to the Vniuersity of Oxford, where he shortly profited so in learning, as himselfe reported, as he was made Batchler of Art, when he passed not 15. yeeres of age, and was called moste commonly thorow the Vniuersity the boy Batchelor. Thus profpering in learning, he was made fellow of Maudelin college, & after ward appointed to be Schole-maister of Maudelin Schole, at which time, the Lord Marques Dorset had 2. of his sonnes there at schole, committing vnto him as well their education, as their instruction. It pleased the said Lord Marques against a Christmas season, to send as well for the Schoolemaister, as for his children home to his house for their recreation, in that pleasant and honorable feast. Then being there, the Lord their Father perceiuing them to be right well imployed in learning for their time, he hauing a benefice in his gift at Limington, bring at that time voyd, gaue the same to the Schole-maister for his paines, and in reward of his diligence, at his departure after Christmas to the Vniuersity, and hauing the presentation thereof repaired to the Ordinary for his institution or induction, and being furnished of all his ordinary instruments, made speede to the benefice, to take thereof possession, and being there for that intent, one Sir Amias Poulet, Knight, dwelling thereabout, tooke an occasion of displeasure against him, vpon what ground I know not, but Sir, by your leaue, he was to bold to set the Schoolemaster by the feet, during his pleasure, which after was neyther forgotten, nor forgiuen: for when the Schoolemaster mounted to the dignity to be Chancellor of England, he was not oblitious of his old displeasure, cruelly ministred vnto him by maister Poulet: but sent for him, and after many sharpe words, enioyned him to attend vntill he were dismissed, and not to depart out of London without licence obtained, so that he continued there within the middle Temple, the space of 5. or 6. yeeres, who lay then in the gatehouse next the street, which he re-edified very sumptiously, gaue nothing the same all ouer the out-side, with the Cardinals armes, with his hat, cognisances, and other deuices in so glorious a sort, that he thought thereby to haue appealed his old displeasure. Now may this be a good example and president, to men in authority (which will sometime worke their will without wit) to remember in their authority, how authority may decay, and whom they doe punish of will, more then of iustice, may after be aduanced to high honor and dignities in the Common Weales, and they bared as law: who will then seeke the meanes to be reuenged of such wrongs, which they suffered before? Who would haue thought then when Sir Amias Poulet punished this poore scholler, the Schoolemaster, that euer he would haue mounted to so high dignity, as to be Chancellor of England, considering his baseness in euery degree? These be wonderfull works of God and fortune. Therefore I would with all men in authority and dignity, to know and feare God in all their triumphs and glory, considering in all their doings, that authorities be not permanent, but may slide and vanish as Princes pleasures alter and change. Then as all liuing things must of very necessity pay the due debt of nature, which no earthly creature can resist: it chanced the said Lord Marques to depart out of this present life, after whose death, this Schole-master then considering with himselfe, to be but a simple beneficed man, and to haue left his fellowship in the Colledge) for I vnderstand, if a fellow of that house be once promoted to a benefice, he shall by the rules of the same be dismissed of his fellowshippe) and perceiuing himselfe also to be destitute of his singular good Lord, and also of his fellowship, which was much of his relicke, though not long to be inioyed of some other helpe, or mastership to defend him from all such stormes, as hee lightly was vexed with, and in his trauell thereabouts, he fell in acquaintance with one Sir Iohn Naphant, a verie graue and ancient Knight, who had a great roome in Caleis vnder King Henrie the 7. this Knight obserued, and behaued himselfe so discreetly, that hee obtained the especiall fauour of his Master, insomuch, that hee committed all the charge of his Office vnto his Chaplaine, and as I vnderstand, the Office was the Treasurership of Caleis, who was in consideration of his great age, discharged of his roome, and returned againe into England, intending to liue more in quiet, and through his instant labour and good fauour, his Chaplaine was promoted to be the Kings Chaplaine, and when hee had once cast Anchor in the port of promotion, how he wrought, I shall somewhat declare. Hee hauing there a iust occasion to be in the sight of the King daille, by reason hee attended, and said masse before him in his Closet, and that being done, hee spent not the day forth in idlenesse, but would attend vpon those whom hee thought to beare most rule in the Councell, and to be most in fauor with the King, the which at that time was Doctor Fox, Bishop of Winchester, Secretary, and Lord of the priuy Seale: And also Sir Tho. Louell knight, a verie sage Counsellor, a witty man, being master of the wards, and Constable of the Tower: These ancient and graue Counsellors in processe of time, perceiued this Chaplaine to haue a verie fine wit, and thought him a meete person to be preferred to witty affaires: It chanced at a certaine season, that the King had an vrgent occasion, to send an Ambassador vnto the Emperour, Maximilian, who lay at that present in the low Country of Flanders, not far from Caleis. The Bishop of Winchester and Sir Thomas Louell, whom the King most esteemed as chiefe of his Councell, the King counselling and debating with them vpon this ambassage, saw they had a conuenient occasion to preferre the Kings Chaplaine, whose wit, eloquence, and learning they highly commended vnto the King: the King giuing eare vnto them, and being a prince of an excellent iudgement and wodesty, commanding them to bring his Chaplaine, whom they so much commended, before his presence, with whom hee fell in communication of great matters, and perceiuing his wit to be verie fine, thought him sufficient to be put in trust with this Ambassage, commanding him thereupon to prepare himselfe to his iourney. And for his dispech, to repaire to his grace and his Councell, of whom hee should receiue his commission and instructions, by meanes wherof, he had then a due occasion to repaire from time to time into the Kings presence, who perceiued him more and more to be a very wise man, and of a good intendement. And hauing his dispatch, tooke his leaue of the King at Richmond about noone, and so came to London about foure of the cloke, where the Barge of Caleis was ready to launch forth, both with a prosperous tyde and winde, without any abode hee entered the Barge, and so passed forth with such happy speede, that hee arrived at Graues-end within little more then three houres, where hee tarried no longer then his post-horses were prouiding, and then trauelled so spedily, that hee came to Douer the nert morning, whereas the passengers were ready vnder saple to Caleis, into the which passenger without tarrying hee entred, and sayled forth with them, that long before noone hee arriued at Caleis, and hauing post-horses in a readinesse, departed from thence without tarrying: and hee made such hasty spéede, that hee was that night with the Emperor. And hee hauing vnderstanding of the comming of the King of Englands Ambassador, would in no wise delay the time, but sent for him incontinent, his affection to King Henry the seuenth was such, that hee was glad when hee had any occasion to shew him pleasure. The Ambassador disclosed the whole summe of his Ambassage vnto the Emperor, of whom hee required speedy expedition: the which was granted him by the Emperor, so that the nert day he was clearely dispatched, with all the Kings requests fully accomplished and granted. At which time hee made no longer delay, but take post-horses that night, and rode toward Caleis, conducted thither with such persons as the Emperor had appointed, and at the opening of the gates of Caleis he came thither, where the passengers were as ready to returne into England, as they were before at his iourney forward, in so much that he arriued at Douer by 10. or 11. of the cloche in the forenoone, and hauing post horses in a readinesse, came to the Court at Richmond the same night, where he taking some rest vntill the morning, repaired to the King at his first comming from his bed-chamber, to his closet to masse, whom when the King saw, hee checked him, for that he was not on his iourney: Sir (quoth hee) if it may please your highnesse, I haue already béene with the Emperor, and dispatched your affaires, I trust to your graces contentation, and with that presented the King his letters of credence from the Emperor. The King being in a great confuse, and wonder of his spédy returne and proceedings, dissembled all his wonder and imagination in that matter, and demanded of him, whether hee encountered not his Pursuiant, the which hee sent vnto him, supposing him not to be scantly out of London, with letters concerning a verie necessary matter neglected in their consultation, the which the King much desired to haue dispatched amongst the other matters of Ambassage: Yes forsooth (quoth the Chaplaine) I met with him yesterday by the way, and hauing no vnderstanding by your graces letters of your pleasure, haue notwithstanding béene so bold vpon my discretion (perceiuing that matter to be very necessary in that behalfe) to dispatch the same: and for as much as I haue recorded your graces Commission, I most humbly require your graces remission and pardon: the King reioycing inwardly not a little, said: Wée

Tho. Wolsey gat a benefice.

Sir Iohn Naphant, seruant of Caleis, the Wolsey his seruant.

The Wolsey was Chaplaine to Henry the 7.

The Wolsey Ambassador to the Emperour.

Wée doe not onely pardon you thereof, but also giue you our princely thankes, both for the proceeding therein, and also for your good and spédy exploit, commanding him for that time to take his rest, and repaire againe after Dinner, for the further relation of his ambassage. The king then went to masse, and after a conuenient time went to dinner. It is not to be doubted but that this ambassador hath in all this time béene with his great friends the Bishop, and sir Thomas Louell, to whom he hath declared the effect of all his spéed: nor yet what ioy they received thereof.

The Ambassador when he saw time, repaired before the King and councell, where he declared the effect of his affaires so exactly, with such grauity and eloquence, that all the councell that heard him, commended him, esteeming his expedition to bée almost beyond the capacity of man. The King gaue him at that time the deanery of Lincolne, which was at that time one of the worthiest promotions that he gaue vnder degree of a Bishopricke, and thus from thence forward he grew more and more into estimation and authority, and after was promoted by the King to be his almoner.

The Wolsey the Kings almoner.

Here may all men note the chances of fortune that followeth some, whom she intendeth to promote, and to some her fauour is cleane contrary, though they trauell neuer so much with all the possible diligence that they can deuise or imagine, whereof for my part, I haue talked the experience. Now ye shall vnderstand that all this tale that I haue declared of the good expedition of the kings ambassador, was reported by his owne mouth after his fall, lying at that time in the great parke of Richmond, vnto George Cauendish his gentleman Vsher, taking then occasion vpon diuers communications to tell this iourney with all the circumstances, as I haue here before rehearsed.

When death, that fauoureth none estate, had taken King Henry the seuenth out of this prelent life, who for his wisedome was called the second Salomon, what practises and compasses were then vsed about King Henry the eight: and the great prouision made for the funerals of the one, and the costly deuises of the coronation of the other, I omit. After the finishing of these solemnities and costly triumphs, and that our naturall young and lusty courageous Prince King Henry the eight, entering into the flower of lusty youth, and taking vpon him the royall Sceptre and imperiall Diademe of this Realme, which at that time flourished in all abundance and riches, whereof the King was inestimably furnished, called then the golden world, such grace raigned then withm this Realme.

The Wolsey of the priuy counsell.

Now the almoner hauing a head full of subtill wit, perceiuing a plaine pathe to walke in toward his iourney to promotion, handled himselfe so politikely, that he found the meanes to be made one of the kings councell, and to grow in fauour and good estimation with the King, to whom the King gaue an house at Bridewell in Flietstreet, sometime Sir Richard Empsons, where hee kept house for his family, and so daily attended vpon the King, and in his especiall fauour, who had great suite made vnto him, as councellors in fauour most commonly haue. His sentences and witty perswasions in the councell chamber were alwayes so pithy, that the councell as occasion mooued them, continually assigned him to bée the expositor to the King in all their proceedings: in whom the King received such a leaning fantastie, and in especiall for that hee was most learned and readiest of all the councell, to aduance the Kings will and pleasure, hauing no respect to the cause: the King therefore perceiuing his abilitie a meete instrument for the accomplishment of his deuised pleasures, called him more nére vnto him, and esteemed him so highly, that all the other counsellors were put from the great fauour that they before were in: insomuch, that the King committed all his will vnto his disposition, which the almoner perceiuing, toke vpon him therefore to discharge the King of the waighty and troublesome businesse, perswading the King, that hee should not néede to spare any time of his pleasure for any businesse that should happen in the councell: and whereas the other counsellors would diuers times perswade the King to haue sometime recourse into the councell chamber, there to heare what was done, the almoner would perswade him to the contrarie, which delighted him much: and thus the almoner ruled all that before had ruled him: such did his policy and wit bring to passe. Who was now in high fauour but maister almoner? Who had all the suite but maister almoner? And who ruled all vnder the King, but maister almoner? Thus he perseuered in fauour, vntill at last in came presents, gifts, and rewards so plentifully, that I dare say hée lacked nothing that might eyther please his fantasie, or enrich his cofers: fortune smiled so fauourably vpon him, but to what end she brought him, yée shall heare hereafter. Therefore let all men to whom fortune extendeth her grace, not trust to her subtill fauor, and pleasant promises, vnder colour whereof, she carrieth venemous gall.

This almoner thus proceeding in fortunes blisfulnes, it chanced the wars betwéene the Realmes of England and France to be open, in so much, as the King being fully perswaded in his royall person, to inuade his forraine enemies with a puissant army, wherefore it was necessary that this royall enterprise should be spédily prouided and furnished in euery degrée of things apte and conuenient for the same, the expedition whereof, the King thought no mans wit to méete for pollicy and painefull trauell, as was his almoner, to whom therefore he committed his whole trust therein, and he being nothing scrupulous in any thing that the King would commaund him to doe, although it séemed to other very difficult, toke vpon him the whole charge of all the businesse, and brought all things to good passe in a decent ryder, as all manner of victuals, prouisions, and other necessaries conuenient for so noble a voiage and army.

All things being by him perfected, the King aduanced to his royall enterprise, passed the seas and marched forward in good order of battel, vntill he came to the strong Towne of Turwine, to the which he laid his siege, and assailed it very strongly continually with such vehement assaults, that within short space it was yelded vnto his maiestie: vnto the which place, the Emperor Maximillian repaired vnto the King with a great army like a mighty Prince, taking of the King his grace wages, which is a rare thing and but seldome seene, an Emperor to fight vnder a Kings banner.

Thus after the King had obtained this puissant fort, and taken the possession thereof, and set all things there in due order, for the defence and preseruation thereof to his vse, he departed thence, and marched toward the City of Turney, and there laide his siege in like manner, to the which he gaue so fierce and sharpe assault, that they were constrained of fine force to render the towne vnto his victorious maiestie: at which time the King gaue the almoner the Bishopricke of the same seat towards his paines and diligence susteyned in that iourney. And when the King had established all things agreeable to his will and pleasure, and furnished the same with noble captaines, and men of war for the safegard of the towne, he returned againe into England, taking with him diuers noble personages of France being prisoners, as the Duke of Longuile, and vicount Clarimont, with other, which were taken there in a skirmish. After whose returne, immediatly the sea of Lincoine fell voide by the death of Doctor Smith, late Bishop there: the which benefice his grace gaue to his Almoner, late Bishop of Turney elect, who was not negligent to take possession thereof, and made all the speede he could for his consecration, the solemnization whereof ended, he found the meanes that he gate the possession of all his predecessors goods into his hands. It was not long after that Doctor Bambridge Archbishop of Yorke died at Rome, being there the Kings Ambassador, vnto the which sea, the king immediately presented his late and new Bishoppe of Lincoine: so that he had three Bishoprickes in his hands in one yere giuen him: then prepared he for his translation from the sea of Lincoine vnto the sea of Yorke: after which solemnization done, hee being then an Archbishop, Primas Angliæ, thought himselfe sufficient to compare with Canterbury, and thereupon erected his crosse in the court, and euery other place, as well within the precinct and iurisdiction of Canterbury, as many other place. And for as much as Canterbury claimeth a superiority ouer Yorke, as ouer all other Bishoprickes within England, and for that cause claimeth as a knowledge of an ancient obedience of Yorke, to abate the aduancing of his Crosse in presence of the crosse of Canterbury: notwithstanding, Yorke nothing minding to desist from bearing thereof in manner as I said before, caused his Crosse to be aduanced, as well in the presence of Canterbury, as else where: wherefore Canterbury being moued therewith, gaue vnto Yorke a certaine checke for his presumption, by reason whereof there engendered some grudge betweene Yorke and Canterbury, Yorke intending to prouide some such meanes, that he would beare superiority in dignity to Canterbury, that to be eyther obedient or equall to him: wherefore hee obtained to be made Pyrell Cardinall, and Legatus de Latere: vnto whom the Pope sent a Cardinals hatte with certaine buls for his authority in that behalfe: Yet you shall vnderstand, that the Pope sent him this worthy hatte of dignity, as a iewell of his honour and authority, the which was conueyed in a verlets budged, who seemed to all men to be but a person of small estimation.

Wherefore Yorke being aduertised of the baseneste of this messenger, and of the peoples opinion, thought it meete for his honor, that this iewell should not be conueyed by so simple a person, and therefore caused him to be stopped by the way immediately after his arriuall in England, where hee was newly furnished in all manner of apparell, with all kinde of costly suites, which seemed decent for such an high Ambassador: and that done, he was encountred vpon Black-heath, and there receiued with a great assembly of Prelates, and lusty gallant gentlemen, and from thence conducted through London with great triumph. Then was great and speedy preparation made in Westminster Abbey, for the confirmation and acceptance of this high order and dignity, the which was executed by all the Bishoppes and Abbots about or nigh London, with their rich miters and copes, and other ornaments, which was done in so solemne a wise, as had not beene seene the like, vnlesse it had beene at the Coronation of a mighty Prince or King. Obtaining this dignity, he thought himselfe meete to beare authority among the temporall power, as among the spirituall iurisdiction; wherefore, remembring as well the taunts sustained of Canterbury, as hauing a respect to the aduancement of worldly honor and promotion, found the meanes with the King, that he was made Lord Chancelor of England, and Canterbury which was Chancelor dismissed, who had continued in that roome since long before the decease of Henry the seuenth. Now being in possession of the Chancelorship, and moued with the promotions of the Archbishop and Cardinall De Latere, hauing power to correct Canterbury, and all other Bishoppes and spirituall persons, to assemble his conuocation when he would assigne, he toke vpon him the correction of matters in all their iurisdictions, and visited all the spirituall houses, hauing in euery Diocesse all manner of spirituall ministers, as commissaries, scribes, apparitors and all other officers to furnish his courts, and presented by preuention whom he pleased vnto all benefices throughout all this Realme.

Thomas Wolsey Bishop of Turney.

Thomas Wolsey Bishop of Lincoine.

Thomas Wolsey Archbishop of Yorke.

Thomas Wolsey Cardinall.

Thomas Wolsey Bishop of Winchester.

Thomas Wolsey Lord Chancelor.

And

And to the aduancing further of his legatine iurisdiction, and honour, he had matters of his faculties, matter Ceremoniarum, and such other to the glorifying of his dignity.

Then had he his two great crosses of siluer, the one of his Archbishoprike, the other of his legacie, borne before him whither soeuer hee went or rode, by two of the tallest Priests that he could get within the realme. And to increase his gaines, hee had also the Bishoprieke of Durham, and the Abbey of Saint Albons in Comendam. And after, when Doctor Foxe Bishoppe of Winchester died, he surrendred Durham into the Kings hands, and toke to him Winchester. Then had he in his hand (as it were in farme) the Bishoprieke of Bathe, Worcester, and Hereford, notwithstanding the incumbents of them were strangers, and made their abode continually beyonde the seas in their owne countries, or else at Rome, from whence they were sent in legation to this realme vnto the King, and for their reward at their departure, King Henry the seuenth gaue those Bishoprickes, and they being strangers, thought it more meete for the assurance, to suffer the Cardinall to haue their benefices for a conuenient summe of money payde them yerely where they remained, than eyther to be troubled with the charges of the same, or to be yerely burdened with the conueiance of their reuenues vnto them: so that all the spirituall promotions and presentations of these Bishoprickes were fully in his disposition, to prefer whom he liked. Hee had also a great number daily attending vpon him, both of Noble men and worthy Gentlemen, with no small number of the tallest yeomen that he could get in all the realme, in so much that well was that Noble man and Gentleman, that could prefer a tall yeoman to his seruice. He shall vnderstand that he had in his hall continually three boords kept with three seuerall principall officers, that is to say, a Steward which was alwayes a Priest, a treasurer a Knight, and a controller an esquire: also a coferer being a Doctor, three marshals, three yeomen vshers in the hall besides two grooms, and almoners. Then in the hall kitchen, two clearkes of the kitchen, a clearke controller, a surueior of the dresser, a clearke of the spicerie, the which together kept also a continuall messe in the hall. Also in his hall kitchen he had of master cooks two, and of other cookes, labourers, and children of the kitchen, twelue persons: foure yeomen of the scullerie, and foure yeomen of the siluer scullerie: two yeomen of the pastrie, with two other pastelers vnder the yeomen. Then in his priuie kitchen a master cooke, who went daily in veluet or in sattin, with a chaine of golde, with two other yeomen and a groome: In the scalding house a yeoman and two grooms In the pantrie two persons: In the butterie two yeomen, two grooms, and two pages: And in the pewrie likewise: In the seller three yeomen and three pages: In his chaunderie two: In the wafarie two: in the wardrobe of beds, the maister of the wardrobe, and teane other persons: In the launderie a yeoman, a groome, thirty pages, two yeomen purueyors and one groome: In the backehouse a yeoman and two grooms: In the wood-yeard a yeoman and a groome: In the barne one: In the Garden a yeoman and two grooms: Porters at the gate, two yeomen and two grooms: A yeoman of his barge, and a maister of his horse. A Clearke of the stable, a yeoman of the same: the saddler, the farrier: a yeoman of his chariot: a sumpter man: a yeoman of his litrop: a muleter: sixteene grooms of his stable, euery of them kept foure geldings: In the almorie a yeoman and a groome: In his chappel he had a Deane: a great diuine, and a man of excellent learning: a subdeane, a repeater of the quire: a gospeller, a Pistoller, of singing priests ten: a maister of the Children: Seculars of the Chappell, singing men twelue: singing children ten, with one seruant to waite vpon the children: in the Reuestrie a Yeoman and two Groomes, ouer and besides diuers retainers that came thither at principall feasts. For the furniture of his Chappell, passeth my capacitie to declare, the number of costly ornaments and rich iewels that were to be occupied in the same continually: there hath bin seene in procession about the hall. 44. very rich Coapes of one suite worne, besides the rich crosses and candlesticks, and other ornaments to the furniture of the same. Hee had two crosse-bearers, and two pillar-bearers in his great chamber: and in his priuie chamber these persons: first the chiefe chamberlaine, and vice chamberlaine: of gentlemen vshers, besides one in his priuy Chamber, hee had twelue daily waiters: and of gentlemen waiters in his priuy chamber he had six, and of Lords nine or ten who had each of them two men allowed them to attend vpon them, except the Earle of Darby, who had allowed fiue men: then had hee of Gentlemen, of cupbearers, caruers, and sewers both of the priuy chamber and of the great chamber, with gentlemen daily waiters there, fortie persons: of yeomen vshers 6. of groomes in his chamber 8. of yeomen in his chamber fiue and fortie daily: he had also almes men, some more in number than other sometime.

The order of the Cardinals house.

There was attending on his bord of Doctors and chaplaines, besides them of his chappell sixteene daily: a clearke of his closet: secretaries two: and two clearkes of his signet; foure counsellers learned in the law. And forasmuch as it was necessary to haue diuers officers of the chauncerie to attend vpon him, that is to say, the clearke of the crowne, a riding clearke, a clearke of the hamper, and a chafar of the war: then a clearke of the checke; as well vpon the Chaplaines, as of the yeomen of his chamber: hee had also foure Footemen, which were garnished in rich running coats, whensoeuer he rode in any iourney: then had hee an hearault of armes, and a sergeant of armes, a Phisition, an apothecary, foure minstrels, a keeper of his tents, an armorer, an instructer of his wards, two yeomen of his wardrobe wardobe of his robes, and keeper of his chamber continually in the court: he had also in his house the surueior of Poyse, and a clearke of the grene cloth. All these were daily attending, boyne lying, and by rising, and at meales he kept in his great chamber a continuall boord for the Chamberers and Gentlemen officers, hauing with them a messe of the young Lords, and another of Gentlemen: and besides all these there was neuer an Officer, Gentleman, or worthy person, but hee was allowed in the house some thare, some two, and all other one at the least, which grew to a great number of persons. Thus farre out of the Chekerol, besides other officers, seruants, retayners, and suiters that most commonly dined in the hall.

Tho. Wolsey sent Ambassador to the Emperor Charles.

After that hee was thus furnished, he was sent twice in ambassage to the Emperor Charles the fift, for diuers vrgent causes touching the Kings Maiestie, it was thought, that to so noble a Prince (the Cardinall) was most meete to be sent: wherefore, being ready to take vpon him the charge thereof, was furnished in all degrees and purposes most like a great Prince: for first he proceeded forth furnished like a Cardinall; his Gentlemen being very many in number, were clothed in liuery coates of crimson veluet of the best, with chaines of gold about their neckes, and his yemen and meane officers in coates of fine scarlet, garded with blacke veluet a hand broad.

Thus furnished, hee was twice sent into Flanders to the emperor, then lying in Bruges whom he did most highly entertaine, discharging all his charges and his mens. There was no house within the Towne of Bruges, wherein any gentlemen of the Cardinals were lodged or had recourse, but the owners were commanded by the Emperors officers, that they, vpon paine of their liues, should take no money for any thing that the Cardinals seruants did take of any kinde of victuall, no although they were disposed to make any costly banquets: commanding furthermore their saide hosts, to see that they lacked no such things as they honestly required for their honestie and pleasure. Also the Emperors officers euery night went through the Towne from house to house, whereas any English gentlemen did repaire or lodged, and serued their liueries for all night, which was done in this manner. First, the officers brought into the house a cast of fine manchet, & of siluer two great pots with white wine, and sugar to the weight of a pound: white lights and yellow lights of wax: a boll of siluer with a goblet to drinke in, and euery night a staffe-torch. This was the order of liueries euery night and in the morning when the same officers came to fetch away their staffe, then should they account with the hosts for the gentlemens costes spent in the day before.

Thus the Emperor entertained the Cardinall and all his traine for the time of his embassage there. And that done, he returned into England with great triumph.

How of his order in going to Westminster Hall daily in the terme: first ere he came out of his priuy chamber, he heard seruice in his closet, and there said his seruice with his Chaplaine: then going againe to his priuy Chamber he would demand, if his seruants were in a readines, and had furnished his chamber of Presence, and waiting Chamber, being thereof then aduertised, came out of his priuy Chamber about eight of the clocke, apparelled all in red, that is to say, his vpper garment either of fine Scarlet, or else fine Crymson Taffata, but most commonly of fine Crymson Satten engrayned, his Pillion of fine Scarlet, with a necke sette in the inner side with blacke Velvet, and a Tippet of Sables about his necke, holding in his hand an Orange, whereof the substance within was taken out, and filled vp againe with the part of a Spunge, wherein was Vineger and other confections against the Pestilent Ayres, the which hee most commonly held to his nose when he came among any presse, or else that he was pestered with many suters: and before him was borne, first the Broad Seale of England and his Cardinals Hatte, by a Lord or some Gentleman of worship right solemnely: and as soone as he once entered into his chamber of Presence, his two great Crosses were there, attending to bee borne before him: then cryed the Gentlemen Vshers, going before him bare headed, and saide: On before my Lords and maisters, on before, make way for my Lords grace. Thus went he down through the hall with a Seriant at armes before him, bearing a great Mace of siluer, and two gentlemen carrying two great pillers of siluer, and when he came at the Hall doore there was his mule, being trapped all in crimson velvet, with a saddle of the same, and gilt stirrops.

Then was there attending vpon him, when hee was mounted, his two Crosse Bearers, and his Piller Bearers in like case vpon great horses, trapped all in fine Scarlet. Then marched he forward with a Traine of Noblemen and Gentlemen, hauing his seruemen, foure in number about him, bearing each of them a gilt Polar in their hands: and thus passed he forth, vntill he came to Westminn Hall doze, and there lighted, and went vp after this manner into the Chauncery, or into the Star Chamber: howbeit, most commonly he would go into the Chauncery, and stay a while at a Barre made for him beneath the Chancery on the right hand, and there commune sometime with the Iudges, and sometime with other persons: and that done, he would repaire into the Chancerie, and sitting there vntill eleuen of the clocke, hearing of suites, and determining of other matters, from thence he would diuers times go into the Star Chamber as occasion serued. There he neither spared high ne low, but iudged euery state according to his merits and desert. Hee died also euery Sunday to resort to the Court, then being for the most part of all the yere at Grenwich, with his former tryumphes, taking his Barge at his owne Stayres, furnished with yemen, standing vpon the Bayles, and his Gentlemen being within about him, and lauded againe at the three Cranes in the Vintry: and from thence he rode vpon his Mule, with his crosse, his Pillars, his Hatte, and Broad seale carryed afore him on Horse-backe through Thamis Streete, vntill he came to Bellinsgate; and there take his Barge againe, and so was riuyed to Grenwith, where he was receiued of the Lords and chiefe officers of the Kings house, as the Treasurer, Controller, and other, and so conueyed into the kings chamber: then the Court was wonderfully furnished with Noblemen and gentlemen: and after dinner among the Lords, hauing some consultation with the King, or with the Councell, he would depart homeward with the like triumph.

Thus in great honour, triumph, and glorie, hee raygned a long season, ruling all things within the realme appertayning vnto the king. His house was alwayes resorted to with noblemen and Gentlemen, feasting and banqueting Ambassadours diuers times and all other right nobly: and when it pleased the king for his recreation, to repaire to the Cardinals house as he did diuers times in the yere: there wanted no preparations, or furniture: Banquets were set forth with maskes and mummeries, in so gorgeous a sort, and costly manner, that it was an heauen to behold. There wanted no Dames or Damosels, mete or apte to daunce with the maskers, or garnish the place for the time: then was there all kinde of musicke, and harmony, with fine voices both of men and children.

A maske at a banquet.

One time the King came sodainly thither in a maske with a dosen maskers all in garments like Shepheards, made of fine cloth of Golde, and Crimosin Satten paned, and Chappes of the same, with Vysars of gold bullonny, their haires and beardes, either of fine golde-wire silke, or blacke silke, hauing firetorche-bearers, besides their drums, and other persons with vizars, all clothed in Satten of the same colour: and before his entering into the Hall, hee came by water to the water gate, without any noyse, where were laid diuers chambers and guns charged with shot, and at his landing they were shot off, which made such a rumbling in the ayre, that it was like thunder: It made all the Noblemen, Gentlemen, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, to muse what it should meane, comming so sodainly, they sitting quiet at solemne banquet vnder this sort: First ye shall vnderstand, that the Tables were set in the Chamber of Presence full couered, and the Lord Cardinall sitting vnder the cloth of Estate, there hauing all his seruice alone: and then was there set a Lady with a Nobleman, or a Gentleman and a Gentlewoman throughout all the Tables in the Chamber on the side, which were made and ioyned as it were but one Table, all which order and deuice was done by the Lord Sandes then Lord Chamberlain, to the King, and by sir Henry Guilford Comptroller of the kings Maiesties house. Then immediately after the great Chamberlaine, and the said Comptroller sent to aske what it should meane (as though they knew nothing of the matter,) they looking out of the windowes into the Thames, returned againe and shewed him, that it seemed they were Noblemen and Strangers, arrived at his bridge, comming as Ambassadors from some forraine Prince: with that, quoth the Cardinall, I desire you, because you can speake French, to take the paines to goe into the Hall, there to receiue them according to their Estates, and to conduct them into this Chamber, where they shall see vs and all these Noble Personages, being merry at our Banquet, desiring them to sit downe with vs, and to take part of our fare. Then went he incontinent downe into the Hall, whereas they receyued them with twenty new Torches, and conueyed them by into the Chamber, with such a noyse of Drummes and Flutes, as seldome had bene heard the like. At their entering into the Chamber two and two together they went directly before the Cardinall where he sate, and saluted him reuerently, to whom the Lord Chamberlaine for them saide: Sir, for as much as they be Strangers, and can not speake English, they haue desired me to declare vnto you, that they hauing vnderstanding of this your triumphant Banquet, where was assembled such a number of excellent Dames, they could not be lesse vnder supporte of your Grace, but to repayre hither, to view as well their incomporable beautie, as for to accompany them of Mummechance, and then to daunce with them: and Sir, they require of your Grace licence to accomplish the said cause of their comming. To whom the Cardinall said, he was very well content they should so doe.

Then went the Maskers, and first saluted all the Dames, and returned to the most worthiest, and there opened their great cup of gold filled with crownes, and pieces of gold, to whom they set certaine pieces of gold to cast at.

Thus perusing all the Ladies and Gentlewomen, to some they lost, and of some they won: and perusing after this manner all the Ladies, they returned to the Cardinall with great reuerence powring downe all their gold to left in their cup, which was about two hundred crownes: At all (quoth the Cardinall) and so cast the dice and wanne them, whereat was made a great noyse and ioy. Then quoth the Lord Cardinall to the Lord Chamberlaine I pray you (quoth he) that you would shew them, that me seemeth there should be a Noble man amongst them, who is more mete to occupy this seate and place then I am, to whom I would most gladly surrender the same according to my duty, if I knew him. Then spake the Lord Chamberlaine to them in French, and they rounding him in the eare, the Lord Chamberlaine said to my Lord Cardinall: sir (quoth he) they confesse that among them there is such a noble personage, whom if your grace can appoint him out from the rest, he is content to disclose himselfe, and to accept your place: with that the Cardinall taking good advisement among them, at the last queth he, me seemes the gentleman with the blacke beard should be owner: with that he arose out of his chaire, and offered the same to the gentleman in the blacke beard, with his cap in his hand. The person to whom he offered the chaire was sir Edward Neuill, a comely knight that much more resembled the Kings person in that maske than any other.

The King perceiuing the Cardinall so deceiued, could not forbeare laughing, but pulled downe his visar, and maister Neuils also, and dashed out such a pleasant countenance and chare that all the noble estates there assembled perceiuing the King to bee there among them, reioyced very much. The Cardinall effsones desired his Highnesse to take the place of estate to whom the King answered, that he would go first and shift his apparell, and so departed into my Lord Cardinals chamber, and there new apparelled him: in which time the dishes of the banquet were cleane taken vp, and the Tables spread againe with new cleane perfumed clothes, euery man and woman sitting still, vntill the King with all his maskers came among them againe all new apparelled: then the King tooke his seate vnder the cloth of Estate, commanding euery person to sit still as they did before: In came a new banquet before the King and to all the rest throughout all the tables, wherein were serued two hundred diuers dishes, of costly deuices and subtilties. Thus passed they forth the night with banquetting, dancing, and other triumphes, to the great comfort of the King, and pleasant regard of the Nobility there assembled. Thus passed this Cardinal this time from day to day, and yere to yere, in such great wealth, ioy, triumph, and glory, hauing alwayes on his side the kings speciall fauour, vntill fortune enuied his prosperous estate, as is to the world well knowne, and shall be partly touched hereafter.

Lady Mary the Kings daughter borne.

Lady Mary King Henries Daughter was borne at Greenewich on the 11. of February.

The Queene of Scots fleeth into England.

Margaret Queene of Scots, King Henries eldest sister, who had after the death of her first husband (James king of Scots slaine at Bramstone) married Archibald Douglas, Earle of Angusse fled into England for feare of the Duke of Albany, that had taken her two sonnes the lay at Harbottle, where she was deliuered of a childe called Margaret. But shortly after Archibald Douglas her husband went home againe into Scotland without leaue taking: wherefore the King sent for her to London, where shee was royally receiued and lodged at Baynards castle, and there she tarried a whole yere ere she returned.

The King for the honor of his sister Margaret, Queene of Scots, on the 19. and 20. day of May, prepared and kept solemne Iusts, where in the tilt himselfe, the Duke of Suffolke, the Earle of Essex, and Nicholas Carew Esquier, answered all commers.

This yere the Cardinall caused all these to be called to accompts, that had dealt with the Kings money, and had the occupying thereof in the warres, or elsewhise. This audit troubled many, for some were found in arrerages, and some tained themselues by policie, and surely he so punished periurie with open infamy, causing the offenders to weare papers, and so forth, that in his time it was lesse vsed then in long time before: he punished also, Lords, Knights, and men of all degrees, for riots, for bearing out wrongs, and for maintenance practised in the countries, whereby the poore men liued quietly, and no man durst vse boisterring, for feare of imprisonment. It was a strange matter to see, a man not trained vp in the lawes, to sit in the seat of iudgement, to pronounce the law, being aided at the first by such as according to the ancient custome did sit as associates with him: but hee would not sticke to determine sundry causes, neither rightly decided, nor iudged by order of law: and againe such as were cleare cases he would sometimes prohibite the same to passe, call them into iudgement, frame an order in controuersies, and punish such as came with vntrue surmises, after the iudges themselues, which had received such surmises, and not well considered of the controuersies of the parties: he ordained by the Kings commission, diuers vnder courts, to heare complaints by bill of poore men, they might the sooner come by iustice: so that wise men have reported, never to haue seene this realme in better obedience, and quiet, then it was in the time of his authority and rule, ne iustice better ministred with indifference.

The Duke of Norfolke departed home into his country, and also the Duke of Suffolke followed shortly, for he hauing spent liberally in his iourneies into France, as also in the solemnization of his marriage, and in house keeping, sith he was married, borrowed great summes of money of the king, which hee hoped should haue beene forgiuen him: but the Cardinall had called him as all other to account.

In the moneth of October, Matthew Visshop of Sion or Sitten, a Cardinall of the Swissers, came into England from the Emperor Maximilian: At the contemplation of which Cardinall, the king lent to the Emperor a great summe of money: but the greatest matter that moued the K. to be so free to Maximilian, was because the same money should bee employed on men of warre against the French king, toward whom of late the king had conceiued a grudge. Hereupon was Richard Pace, sent first into Germany with a great summe of money to wage the Swissers, which vnder the conduct of the Emperor Maximillian, inuaded the Dutchie of Millaine, but without any great gaine returned from thence, leauing Millaine in the French mens hands at that time. And now for a new reliefe was this Cardinall sent from Millaine, at vtmost instance money was assigned to be deliuered vnto certaine Merchants vnder take the ereby, which made not payment at the day, although they had received it 1517. A great dearth in Winter, and a great frost.

This yere was a great drouth, for there fell no rain to be accounted of from the beginning of September, till the moneth of May in the next yere, wherethrough in some places, men were faine to driue their cattell, 3. or 4. miles to water.

Also for a time the Thames was frozen, that men with horse and carts might passe betwixt Westminster and Lambeth.

The number of strangers in London multiplied.

About this season, there grew a great hart burning, and malicious grudge amongst the Englishmen of the city of London, against strangers and namely the artificers found themselues sore greeued, for that such numbers of strangers, were permitted to resort hither with their wares, and to exercise handy crafts, to the great hinderance & impouerishing of the Kings liege people: and this malice grew to such a point, that one Iohn Lincolne a Broker, busied himselfe so far in the matter, that about Palme Sunday or the fift April this eighteene of the kings raigne, he came to one doctor Standish with these words: Master Standish you shall preach at the Spittle on mundaie in the Easter weeke, and so it is, that Englishmen both merchants and other are vndone, by strangers, who haue more liberty in this land than they, which is against all reason, and also against the common Weale of this Realme: I beseech you therefore to declare this in your Sermon, and in so doing, ye shall deserue great thankes of my Lord Maior, and of all his Brethren, and herewith he offered vnto the saide Doctor a Bill, conteyning the matter more at large: but Doctor Standish (wisely considering that there might more inconuenience rise thereof, than he would wish, if he should deale in such a sorte) both refused the Bill, and told Lincolne plainely, that he ment not to meddle with any such matter in his Sermon. Whereupon the saide Lincolne went vnto one Doctor Bell, a Chanon of the foresaid Spittle, that was appointed likewise to preach vpon Tuesday in Easter weeke at the same Spittle, whom he perswaded to read his sayde bill in the pulpit, which bill in effect contayned the greefes that many found with strangers for taking the liuing away from artificers, and the intercourse from merchants, the redresse whereof must come from the commons knit in one: for as the hurt touched all men, so must all set to their helping hands: which letter he read, or the chiefest part thereof, comprehending much seditious matter, and then he began with this sentence, Cœlum, cœli Domino, terram autem dedit filijs hominum, and vpon this text he entreated, how this land was giuen to Englishmen, and as birds defend their nestes, so ought Englishmen to cherish and maintaine themselues, and to hurt and grieue aliens for respect of their common-wealth: and vpon this text. Pugna pro patria, he brought in how by Gods law it was lawfull to fight for their countrey: and thus he subtilly moued the people to rebell against strangers: by this Sermon many a light person tooke courage and openly spoke against strangers. And as vnhap would, there had bin diuers euill parts plaid of late by strangers, th and about the city of London which kindled the peoples rancor the more furiously against them.

The 28. day of April, diuers young men of the city picked quarrels to certaine strangers, as they passed by the streets, some they did strike and buffeted, and some they threw into the channel, wherefore the Maior sent some of the Englishmen to prison, as Stephen Studley skinner, Stephenson, Bets and other. Then sodainely rose a secret rumour, and no man could tell how it began, that on May day next, the Citie would rise all the aliens, in so much, that diuers strangers fled out of the city. This rumor came to the knowledge of the kings Councell, whereupon the L. Cardinall sent for the Maior, and other of the councell of the city, giuing them to vnderstand what he had heard. The Maior, as one ignorant of the matter, told the Cardinall, that he doubted not but to gouerne the City as peace should be obserued. The Cardinall willed him so to do. and to take good heed that if any riotous attempt were intended, he should with good policy preuent it. The Maior comming from the Cardinals house about 4. of the clocke in the afternoone on May eue, sent for his brethren to the Guildhall, yet was it almost 7. of the clocke ere the assembly was set. Vpon conference had of the matter, some thought it necessary that a sufficiantiall watch should be set of honest Citizens, which might withstand the euil doers, if they went about any mischiefe: other were of contrary opinion, but rather thought it best, that commandement should be giuen to euery man to shut in his doores, and to keepe his seruants within. Before eight of the clocke the Recorder was sent to the Cardinall, with these opinions, who hearing the same, allowed the latter. And when the Recorder and sir Thomas More, late vnder sheriffe of London, and now of the Kings councell came to the Guildhall, halfe an houre before nine of the clocke, and there shewed the pleasure of the Kings Councell: whereupon euery Alderman sent to his ward, that no man should stir after nine of the clocke out of his house, but to keepe his doores shut, and his seruants within till nine of the cloke in the morning. After this commandement giuen, in the euening, as sir Iohn Mundy Alderman came from his ward, and found two young men in cheape playing at the bucklers, and a great many of young men looking on them (for the commandement was scarce published) he commanded them to leaue off, and for that one of them asked him why, he would haue sent him to the counter: but the prentises resisted the alderman, taking the young man from him, and cried prentises and clubs, then out at euery doore came clubs and other weapons, so that the Alderman was faine to flie. Then more people rose out of euery quarter, and forth came seruingmen, watermen, cuntiers and other, so that by 11. of the clocke there were in cheape, 6. or 700. and out of Paules churchyard came about 300. so out of al places they gathered, and brake vp the counter, tooke out the prisoners that had bin thither committed by the Maior, for hurting of strangers. Also they went to Newgate, and and toke out Studley and Peris, committed thither for the likecause: the Maior and Sheriffes were present, & made proclamation in the Kings name, but nothing was obeied. Herewith being gathered in plumps, they ran through S. Nicholas Shambles, and at S. Martins gate, there met with them sir Tho. More, and other, desiring them to go to their lodgings: and as they were thus entreating, and had almost perswaded the people to depart, they within S. Martins threw out stones and bats, so that they hurt diuers honest persons, that were with sir Tho. More, perswading the rebellious persons to cease: insomuch as at length, one Nicholas Denis a Sergeant at armes, being there sore hurt, in a furie cried downe with them, and then al the mistuled persons ran to the doores and windowes of the houses within S. Martins, and spoiled all that they found: After that they ran into Cornehill, and so forth to an house east from Leaden Hall, called the Spergate, where dwelt one Mewras a Pickard or Frenchman, whose house dwelled diuers Frenchmen whom they likewise spoiled, and if they had found Mewras they would haue stricken off his head: some ran to Blanchapleton, & there brake up the strangers houses and spoyled them: they continued thus til three of the clocke in the morning, at what time they began to withdraw: but by the way they were taken by the Maior and other, and sent to the Tower, Newgate, and counters, to the number of 300. The Cardinall was aduertised by S. Tho. Parre, whom in all haste he sent to Richmond to informe the King, who incontinently sent to vnderstand the state of the city, and was truely informed, Sir Richard Cholmeley lieutenant of the Tower during that time of this busines, that off certaine pieces of ordinance against the city, but did no great hurt. about fiue of the clocke in the morning, the Earles of Shrewsbury, and Surrey, Tho. Dokwrey Lord Prior of S. Johns, George Neuill L. Burgauenny, and other came to London, with such powers as they could make, to did the Iames of Court: but before they came, the businesse was done as ye haue heard. Then were the prisoners examined, and the sermon of Doctor Bell called to remembrance, and he sent to the Tower. A commission of Oyer and determiner directed to the D. of Norffolke and other Lords, for punishment of this insurrection. The 2. of May the commissioners with the Lord Maior, Aldermen, and Iustices went to the Guild-hal, where many of the offenders were indicted, wherevpon they were arraigned, and pleaded not guilty, had day giuen till the fourth of May: on the which day the L. Maior, the D. of Norffolke, the E. of Surrey, & other came to sit in Guild-hall. The Duke of Norffolke entred the city with 1300. men: the prisoners were brought through the streets tied in ropes, some men, some lads, but 13. or 14. yeres old to the number of 278. persons: that day John Lincolne and diuers other were indicted. The next day 13. were adiudged to be hanged, drawne and quartered, for execution whereof, were set vp 10. paire of gallowes in diuers places of the city, as at Ald-gate, Blanchapleton, Grace-streete, Leaden-hall, before eyther counters, at Newgate, S. Martins, at Aldersgate, and at Bishops gate, these gallowes were set on wheeles to be remoued from streete to streete, and from doore to doore, whereunto the prisoners were brought, & there executed. On the 7. of May was Lincolne Shirwin, and two brethren called Bets, and diuers other adiudged to die. They were on hardels drawne to the standart in Cheape, and first was Lincolne executed, and as the other had the rope about their necks, there came a commandement from the King to respite the execution, and then were the prisoners sent againe to prison and the armed men sent out of London. For it is to be noted that 3. Queenes, to wit, Katherine Dowager of England, and by her meanes Mary the French Queene, and Margaret Dowager of Scots, the Kings sisters, (then resident in England) long time on their knees before the King had begged their pardon, which by perswalion of the Cardinall Wolsey (without whose Councell hee would then doe nothing) the King granted vnto them.

Three Queenes obtained pardon for the Londoners.

On the thirteenth of May, the King came to Westminster Hall, and with him the Lord Cardinall, the Dukes of Norffolk and Suffolke, the Earles of Shrewsbury, Esser, Wiltshire, and Surrey with many Lords, and other of the Kings councell, the Maior of London, Aldermen and other chiefe citizens, were there in their best liueries by nine of the clocke in the morning: Then came in the prisoners, bound in ropes in a ranke one after another in their shirtes, and euery one had a halter about his necke, being in number 400. men & 11. women. When they were thus come before the Kings presence: the Cardinall laid fore to the Maior and Aldermen their negligence, and to the prisoners he declared how iustly they had deserued death. Then all the prisoners together cried to the King for mercy, and therewith the Lords beseought his grace of pardon, at whose request the King pardoned them all. The generall pardon being pronounced, all the prisoners threwe out at once and cast their halters towards the roofe of the hall. The prisoners dismissed, the gallowes were taken downe, and the Citizens tooke more heed to their seruants.

The 18. of May, Margaret Queene of Scots departed from London towards Scotland, right ship appointed and prepared of all things necessary for her estate through the Kings great liberality. She entered into Scotland the 13. of June and was receiued at Wertwike, by Archibald Dowglas Earle of Anguise her husband. In the moneth of June there were with the King diuers Ambassadors from forraine parts: In honor of whom, and for their solace, he prepared costly iusts, he himselfe and 12. other, taking vpon them to iust with the Duke of Suffolke, and 12. of his partakers: there were broken betweene the parties on both sides 108. speares.

Margaret Queene of Scotland returned into Scotland.

continued till Michaelmas, many died thereof in the court, as the Lord Clinton, the L. Grey of Wilton, and many other Knights and Gentlemen, by reason of which contagious sickenes, Michaelmas terme was adiourned: After this, to wit, in the winter was a great death of pestilence, almost ouer all England in euery towne more or lesse, wherefore the King kept himselfe with small company about him, willing to haue no resort to the court for feare of infection.

Cardinall Campeius come into England

In the moneth of July Laurence Campeius borne in Bolognie la grace, commonly called Cardinall Campeius legate de latere, from Pope Leo the 10. to require and exhort King Henry, to make war on the Turke.

Cardinall Wolsey made legat.

At the request of the K. of England, and also of the French King (which sought now to be reconciled into friendship with the K. of England) Pope Leo constituted Cardinall Wolsey his legate in England, ioyning him in commission with the foresaid Cardinall Campeius.

There was at the same time other legates, sent into other parts of christendome, about the same matter, as into France, Spaine, and Germany: but Cardinall Campeius hearing that their suite toke no place in other parts, left off his suite about it, and returned to Rome.

After long suite made of the French king and his councell, it was agreed, that the City of Tourney should be deliuered to the French K. he paying 600000. crownes for the City to bee paid in 12. yeres, and 400000. crownes for the castle, the which the K. had builded (which was not fully performed: and also he should pay 23. thousand pound Turnois, the which sometime the citizens of Turney ought to the K. of England for their liberties and franchises. Moze the French King should pay to the Cardinall of England 1200. marke of yeerely pension, in recompence of his Bysshoprieke of Tourney. It was further agreed, that the young Dolphine, son and heire to the French king, should marrie with the Lady Mary king Henries Daughter of England, if they both so liked each other when they came to age. And then Charles Bewford Earle of Worcester, Lord chamberlaine of England, with the Bishop of Ely and other, were sent into France, to make deliuery of the said City of Tourney, which was done on the 10. of February. The captaine sir Richard Jerningham was discharged, and the Frenchmen suffered to enter, the Englishmen returned into England sore displeased, for thereby many a tall yeoman lacked liuing, the which would not labour after their returne, but fell to robbing, and leud life.

The 8. of March solemne iusts were holden, the king himselfe and 8. young gentlemen taking vpon them to mainteine the D. of Suffolke and 8. other commers with him.

This yere 1519. died Maximillian the first Emperor of Welsia a City in Austria, being sixty yeres of age, and after him was Carolus Quintus elected Emperor with wonderous great applause, this Charles beeing Archduke of Austria and King of Spaine, was Crowned Emperor triumphantly: and in the yere 1522. the Spaniards got great hold of Genua in Italy.

Charles the first chosen Emperor Genua got by the Spaniards

This yere K. Henry held his feast of S. George at Windsor, with as great solemnity as it had bene the feast of a coronation, where were present all the Knights of the order then within the Realme.

Anno 1519

Shortly after certain gentlemen of the privy chamber, which through the Kings lenity in bearing with their lewdnes, forgetting themselues, and their duty towards his grace in being too familiar with him, not hauing due respect to his estate and degree, were removed, by order taken by the Councel, vnto whom the King had giuen authority to vse their discretions in that behalfe, and then were 4. sad & ancient knights put into the Kings priuy chamber, whose names were, sir Richard Wingfield, sir Richard Jernigham, sir Richard Weston, and Sir William Kingstone, and besides these diuers officers were changed in other places.

The French King desirous to continue the friendship lately begun betwixt him and the K. of England, made means to the Cardinall, that they might in some conuenient place come to an enterview together, that he might haue further knowledge of King Henry, & King Henry like wise of him. The Cardinall therefore breaking with the King of this matter, declaring how honorable, necessary, and conuenient it should be for him to gratifie his friend herein. And thus the King conceiued an earnest desire to see the French K. and thereupon appointed to go ouer to Caleis, and so into the Marches of Guisnes, to meete with the French King. Then were sent vnto Guisnes, Sir Nicho. Vaux, Sir. Edward Belknape, Sir Wil. Sands Knights of the garter, commissioners to ouer-see the making of a palace before the Castle gate of Guisnes: these lanued at Caleis on the 16. of March. There were also sent, the Kings master mason, master carpenter, 300. masons 500. carpenters, 100. ioyners, besides many painters, glasiers, tailors, smithes, and other artificers both out of England, and prouided in Flanders, in all to the number of more than 2000.

The said palace was begun on the 19. of March, for the which palace the timber was before bought in Holland, and was so long, for the most part, that the same was faine to bee bound together and drawne after ships to Caleis, for no ship might receiue it. The other timber and bord was conueyed out of England. This palace was framed in diuers places, all the roofes whereof was couered within with cannas curiously painted, and also the wals from the second plat downward: it was also glased with the best and clearest glasse that could be gotten from the ouer plat into the second plat of the stone worke, and round about were houses of office, as pantry, buttry, cellar, and other. And thus was there builded the goodliest Palace of timber, that euer was wrought in these westerly parts of the world.

Then was prouision made in England and in Flanders for victuall, wine, and all other things necessary for the furniture of feasts and banqueting.

Herewith were letters written to all such Lords, Ladies, Gentlemen and Gentlewomen, which should giue their attendance on the King and Quéene, which incontinently put themselues in a readines, after the most sumptuous sort. Also it was appointed that the King of England and the French King in a campe betwéene Arde and Guisnes, with 18. dayes, should in the month of June next ensuing abide all commers being Gentlemen, at the tilt, at the tourney, and at barriers. Then came into England Orliance King of armes in France, and made proclamation at the Court, that the King of England and the French King in campe betwéene Arde & Guisnes with 18. dayes, in June next insuing should abide all commers, being Gentlemen, at the tilt and tourney, and at barriers. And the like Proclamation was made in the Court of France, by Clarencius king of armes of England: also in the court of Burgoigne, in Almaine, and Italy. For the furnishing of these iusts there was deuised a tilt, and all things necessary for that enterprise, in a goodly plaine betwéene Guisnes and Arde. About the which was cast a great dike or trench, and a costly house or gallery for the Kings and Quenes, Lords and Ladies, to stand in, and behold the iust and other things there done.

King Henry being informed, that his Realme of Ireland was out of order, discharged the Earle of Kildare of his office of deputy, and thereunto was appointed the Earle of Surrey, Thomas Howard Lord Admirall: wherefore the said Earle in the beginning of Aprill, tooke leaue of the King, and the Duke of Norfolke his father, and passed into Ireland with diuers Gentlemen, or such as had béene of the garrison of Tourney, and had with him 100. yeomen of the Kings guard, and other to the number of one thousand men, and there hee continued two yeres and more, in which space hee had many battailes and skirmishes with the wilde Irish.

Ipmounted or the king came into France.

There were appointed to attend vpon the King ouer sea to Calais, and so to Guisnes, Thomas Wolsey, Cardinall, 12. chaplaines, 50. gentlemen, 228. seruants, 150. horses: the Archbishop of Canterbury: the Bishop of Durham Lord priuy seale: the Bishop of Ely: Chester, and Worcester: the Archbishop of Armacan: the Duke of Buckingham and of Suffolke: the Marques Dorset: the Earles of Shrewsbury, Essex, Deuonshire, Westmerland, Stafford Kent, Wiltshire, Worcestershire, Northumberland, Oxford and Kildare: besides Lords, and Knights, Ladies, and Gentlewomen, in great number.

King Henry with his traine remoued on the one and twentieth of May, from his mannor of Greenewich towards the Sea, first to Otford, then to Léds, then to Charing, and so on the 25. came to, Canterbury intending there to keepe his Whitsontide.

On the next morrow, the Emperor Charles the fift returning out of Spaine, arriued with his Nauy of ships at Pithe in Kent, where hee was saluted by the Vice-admirall of England, sir William Fitz William, with fiue of the Kings great ships, which lay for the safegard of passengers betwixt Calais and Douer: toward euening the Emperor entred his boat, and Tho. comming toward land was met and receiued of Charles the in whose company was the Quéene of Aragon with diuers noble estates, and faire Ladies of his countrey and blood, which were receiued at the sea side, by the Lord Legate Cardinall and other Lords and gentlemen. The Emperor so accompanied at ten of the cloche at night by torch light, was brought to the castle of Douer where he rested, and there sir Edward Poinings warden of the fiue ports, brought to the Emperor the keyes of the Castle, who refused them 01 saying, he knew well that he was out of all danger, and as safe, as if he were at home in his owne realme. The same night about two of the cloche after midnight, the King came to Douer by torch light, and as soone as the Emperor heard of his comming, he arose, and met with the King at the staire head, where eyther embraced other in armes, and there they talked together a long time, and alwayes the king had the Emperor on his right hand, on the morrow 20 which was Whitsonday, the King and the Emperor with all the other estates rode vnto Canterbury, the sword borne, by the Earle of Darby, ryding betweene them both, by the Kings commaundement, into the which Princes rode to Canterbury, and to Christs Church, where they were receiued with generall procession, by the Lord Cardinall and other. The King and the Emperor went both vnder one canapie vnto Thom. Beckets shrine, where they made their prayers and oblations, and then went to the archbishops palace, where the Quéene of England the Emperors Aunt, met him going into the great Chamber, of whom he was ioyfully receiued and welcomed. The Emperor and the King take a little recreation, and then went to high masse, where they offered, first the Emperor, and then the King, and so returned to their trauerses set a part, and after went to dinner, at which seruice the Emperours trumpets 40 sounded and not the Kings. On Monday at nine of the cloche at night, was begun a banquet, which endured till the next morning at three of the cloche, at the which banquet the Emperor, the King and the Quéene did wash together, the Duke of Buckingham giuing the water, the Duke of Suffolke holding the towel, next them did wash the Lord Cardinall, the Quéene of France, and the Quéene of Aragon. At which banquet the Emperor kept the estate, 50 the King sitting on the left hand, next him the French Quéene and on the other side sate the Quéene, the Cardinall, and the Quéene of Aragon, which banquet was serued by the Emperors owne seruants. On Tuesday these estates departed out of Canterbury: The Emperor brought the Quéene his Aunt to horseback to Douer-ward. Then the Emperor and the King kept company together till they came to the Downes, where they parted. The Emperor 60 went to Sandwich, and so to his fléete, which were in number great ships with two tops the piece, 44.

King Henry tooke shipping toward Calais.

The King went to Douer, where he rested that night, and on the thursday tooke shipping to Calais, where he landed about eleuen of the cloche, where he remained fiue dayes, and with him the Quéne and Ladies, and many nobles of the realme. The number of persons on the King and Quéenes side were 4334. and of horses, 1637. besides the persons on the French Quéenes, and Duke of Suffolke her husbands, and of the Cardinals.

On the fourth of June, the King with all nobles, as well the Quéene with her traine of Ladies as other, with the whole number of nobles remoued from Calais to Guisnes, into the most noble and royall lodging before séene, for it was a Palace made quadrant, and euery quadrant was 328. foote long, which was in compasse 1312. foote about, set on stages with great cunning.

The 7. of June, the kings of England and France met at the campe betwéene Guisnes and Arde, with both their swords drawne and borne before them.

The tenth of June, the king of England dined with the French Quéene in the towne of Arde: and the French king dined the same day with the Quéene of England, in the new palace made before the Castle of Guisnes, which house was the most sumptuous, and costly of riches that hath béene séene.

And after this, these two Kings met euery day after at campe, with diuers Lords, and there iusted and turneyed 14. dayes: and the two Quéenes met at Guisnes and at Arde diuers times.

The 24. of June these two Kings & Quéenes with their retinues, met at a campe where the iusts were kept, and there they banqueted and daunced with maskings and disguising, that the like had not béene lightly séene, almost all the night following, and then take their leaue and departed: and on the 25. of June, the king of England and the Quéene, and all the court, 40 remoued from Guisnes to the towne of Calais, where they rested.

On the tenth of July, the King with a goodly company rode to the towne of Gaueline in Flanders, and there met with Charles the Emperor, and on the next morrow, the Emperor, & the Lady Margaret, the Emperors Aunt Dutchesse of Sauoy, with many other great estates came with the King of England to the towne of Calais, whereby all the Lords and states of England were displaced of their lodgings: and Banqueting manner, as I thinke was neuer séene, with fif- Rich. Turpin.

teene principals made of great masses, betwixt euery mask foure and twenty foote, and all the out-sides closed with bord and canuas, within the which, and round about were raised scaffolds of three stages high, for men and women to stand vpon: and in the midst of the same banqueting house was set vp a great pillar of timber made of 8. great masts, bound together with yron bondes for to holde them together, for it was 134. foote of length, and cost 6. l. 13. s. and 4. d. to set it vpright. The banquetting house was couered ouer with canuas, fastened with ropes and yron as fast as might be deuised.

And within the saide house was painted the Heauens, with starres, sunne, moone, and clouds, with diuers other things made aboue ouer mine heads: and there were great Images of timbers couered with canuas painted, representing men of diuers strange nations, and diuers reasons were written by them of the countries that they were likened to be of, and the armes of those countries hanging by them. Also there was made as it were many ships vnder saile, and windmils on the hils winding: especially there was on the one side set out all the armes of the Kings of England, with the kings petigrée: and on the other side, the Emperors armes and descent, and about the high pillar of timber in the midst was framed diuers stages, for organs, and other instruments of musicke to bee placed with men, and children, as well to play on them, as for to set forth their musicall voices, & to haue made, as it were, an heauenly noise. But when the Emperor and the King of England, and the other states should haue sit downe to their banquet, this house, and all things els in great abundance being prepared for furnishing thereof, it fortuned, that in the morning of the same day, the wind began to rise, and increasing till the euening, it then on a sodaine blew off all the canuas heauen with planets, &c. and blew out more than 1000. torches and other lights of war prepared to haue giuen light to the banquet. The seates which were with great riches prepared for the Emperor and the King, were bathed and lost. The same night the King of England with 15. persons more richly apparelled in a maske, went to the Emperors lodging, and in the chamber of presence danced and reuelled, and then departed.

Banqueting house decked, the canuas heauen blowne downe.

The twelfth of July, the Emperor, and the Lady Margaret slipped with the King & Quéene of England, at the Orcheguer, where the same night were eight companies of maskers, and in euery company were 12. persons, all in gold, siluer and veluet, richly apparelled. The Emperor and the King in this meane time, besides their pastimes, caused the charters before times concluded to be read, all the articles of the league tripartite, agréed betwixt the Emperor and the King of England, and the French King were at full declared, to the which the French King had condescended: and for the more exemplifying of the same, he sent monsieur de Roch with letters of credence, to signifie to the Emperor, that in the word of a Prince he would obserue and kéepe all the same articles, for him, his realme, and subiects.

The 8. of July the Emperor Charles and the Lady Margaret, departed out of Caleis. The King gaue to the Emperor a Bare Courser, trapped with goldsmithes worke, set with stones and pearle, in which place the Emperor alighted from his horse, and mounted vpon the saide courser, wherein he take great delight, and take him vp with the spurres lustily, and so departed lowingly from Caleis, and rode to Gaunelin. The King remayned at Caleis some few dayes, and then take Shipping with the Quéene and Nobility, and had faire wind to Douer, where he arriued the same night with all his company in safety.

This yere King Henry kept his Christmas at his manor of Greenwich, with great royalty & open court, and on the 10. of February in his owne person iusted with all commers. 1521.

About this time the king being moued by such of his councell as had regard to the common wealth of this Realme, considering how for the space of fiftie yéres past and more, the nobles and gentlemen of England, being giuen to grasing of cattell, and kéeping of shéepe, to the great decay of husbandry and tillage, furnishing the ground with beasts, cheep and deere, & inclosing the fields with hedges, pales, and ditches, as might stand most to their owne priuat commoditie: Wherefore the King causing such good statutes as had béene deuised and established for reformation in this behalfe, to be renued and called vpon, and also directing forth his commission vnto Iustices of peace, and other such magistrates, that presentement should be made of all such inclosures, and decay of husbandry as had chanced within the space of 50. yeres before that present time. The Iustices and other magistrats, according to their commission executed their authority: and so commandement was giuen, the decayed houses should be built againe, that the husbandmen should be placed ottsomes in the same, and that inclosed grounds should be laid open, & sore punishment appointed against them that disobeyed. Order taken against inclosers.

In this meane time Edward Duke of Buckingham was accused of high treason, wherefore the King directed his letters to the said Duke, being at his manor of Thornebury in Glocestershire, that incontinently he should come to his presence, which commandement the Duke obeyed, and came to London, where hee was straight waies arrested by sir Henry Marney Captaine of the gard, and conueyed to the Tower of London on the 16. of Aprill: before which time sir Gilbert Parke the Dukes Chancellor was taken, which had confest matter of high treason, concerning the Kings person. There was also attached one Nicholas Hopkins a monk of the order of Carthusians, being of Penton priory in Sommersetshire, and John de la Court the Dukes confessor, and other, these were prisoners in the Tower. D. of Buckingham accused and arrested.

After the apprehension of the Duke, inquisitions were taken in diuers shires of him, so that by the knights and gentlemen he was indicted of high treason for certaine words spoken by the said Duke at Blechingly in Surrey, to George Neuill Lord Burgauenny, and thereuith was the same Lord attached for concealement, and so likewise was the Lord Montague, and both conueied to the tower: and sir Edward Neuill brother to the said Lord of Burgauenny was forbidden the Kings presence. Hall.

Moreouer, in the Guild hall of London, before Sir John Bruge knight, then Maior of the same City, by an inquest, the said D. was indicted of diuers points of high treason, as by the same inditement (which I haue séene and read) it appeareth, inferring, that the said duke intending to exalt himselfe, and to vsurpe the crowne, the royall power, and dignity of the Realme of England, and to depriue the King thereof, that hee the sayde Duke might take vpon him the same against his allegeance, had the tenth day of March, in the second yére of the kings raigne and at diuers times before, and after, imagined and compassed the Kings death and destruction at London, and at Thornebury in the County of Glocester: and for the accomplishment of the wicked intent and purpose, the 24. of Aprill, in the fourth yére of the Kings raygne, he sent one of his Chaplaines called John de la Court, vnto the priory of Penton in Somersetshire, which was an house of Carthusian Monkes, there to vnderstand of one Nicholas Hopkins, a monke of the same house (who was bainely reputed by way of reuelation to haue foreknowledge of things to come) what should happen concerning this matter, which he had imagined: which monke, causing the said de la Court first to sweare vnto him, not to disclose his words to any manner of person, but onely to the Duke his master, therewith declared that his master the said duke should haue all, willing him for the accomplishment of his purpose to séeke to winne the fauour of the people. De la Court came backe with this answere, and told it to the Duke at Thornebury the morrow after, being the 25. of Aprill. And on the 22. of July the same fourth yére, the Duke sent the same de la Court with letters vnto the saide Monke, to vnderstand of him further of such matters, and the Monke told to him againe for answere, that the Duke should haue all: and being asked as well now as before at the first time, how he knew this to bée true, he saide by the grace of God, and with this answere, de la Court now also returning, declared the same vnto the Duke, on the 24. of July at Thornebury aforesaid. Moreouer, the saide Duke sent the same de la Court againe vnto the said Monke with his letters the 26. of Aprill, in the 5. yére of the Kings raigne, when the King was to take his iourney into France, requiring to vnderstand what should become of these warres, and whether the Scottish King should in the kings absence inuade this realme or not. The Monke among other things, for answere of these letters, sent the Duke word that the King should haue no issue male. Against the said Duke the 20 day of Feb. in the 6. yére of the Kings raigne, being at Thornebury, spake these words vnto Ralph Earle of Westmerland: Well, there are two Dukes created in England, but if ought but good come to the King, the Duke of Buckingham should be next in blood to succéede to the Crowne. After this the said Duke on the 16. day of Aprill, in the said first yére of the Kings raigne, went in person vnto the Priory of Penton, and there had conference with the foresaid Monke Nicholas Hopkins, who told him, that hée should bée King: whereunto the Duke said, that if it chanced, hée would shew himselfe a iust and right louing Prince. The Monke also told the Duke that he knew by his relation, and willed him in any wise to procure the loue of the commons, the better to attaine his purposed intention. The Duke the same time gaue, and promised to giue yerely vnto the saide Priory 6. pound, therewith to buy a tunne of wine: and further promised to giue him of the said Priory in ready money twenty pounds, whereof ten pounds he gaue in hand, towards the conueying of water vnto the house by a Conduit. And to the saide Monke Nicholas Hopkins, he gaue at that present in reward three pound, and at one other time forty shillings, and at another time a marke, and at another time fiue shillings and eight pence. After this, on the twentieth day of March, in the tenth yere of the kings raigne, he came to the same priory, and oftimes had conference with the saide Monke, to bée more fully informed by him in the matters aboue specified, at what time the Monke also told him that he should be King, and the Duke in talke told the Monke, that he had done very well to binde his Chaplaine John de la Court, vnder the seale of confession, to kéepe secret such matters, for if the Kings should come to knowledge thereof, it would be his destruction. Likewise, the twentieth day of October, in the seuenty yére of the Kings raigne, and at diuers other times, as well before as after, the saide Duke had sent his Chancellor Robert Gilbert, Chaplaine vnto London, there to buy certaine clothes of golde, siluer, and veluets, euery time so much as amounted to the value of three hundred pound, to the intent, that the saide Duke might bestow the same, as well vpon Knights, Esquires, and Gentlemen of the Kings house, and yeomen of his gard, as vpon other the Kings subiects, to winne their fauours and friendships to affist him in his euill purpose: which clothes the saide Gilbert did buy, and brought the same to the said Duke, who on the 20. day of January in the saide seuenth yére, and diuers other dayes and yéres before and after, did distribute, and giue the same to certaine of the Kings subiects, for the purpose before recited. Furthermore, the saide Duke the tenth of July, in the tenth yére of the Kings raigne, and diuers other dayes and times, as well before as after, did constitute more seuerall and particular offices in his Castles, honors, Lordships, and landes, than hee was accustomed to haue, to the end they might be assistant to him vnder colour of offices, to bring his euill purpose to passe. Moreouer, the same Duke sent to the king the tenth day of May, in the ninth yére of his raigne, for licence to retaine any of the Kings subiects, whom it should please him, dwelling within the shires of Hereford, Glouester, and Somersetshire: and also, that he might at his pleasure conuey diuers armours, and habiliments for warre into Wales, to the intent to vse the same against the King, for the accomplishment of his naughty purpose, which was to destroy the king, and to vsurpe the royal gouernment and power to himselfe: which suite for licence to haue Retayners, and to conuey such armours and habiliments of war, the said Gilbert the twentieth day of May, in the sayde ninth yere, and diuers other dayes before and after at London, and East Granewich did follow, labouring earnestly, both to the King and counsell, for obtaining of the same. And the twentieth day of July, in the said ninth yere, the said Duke sent the said Gilbert vnto Henton aforesaid, to vnderstand of the aforesaid Monke Nicholas Hopkins what he heard of him: and the Monke sent him word, that before Christmas next there should be a change, and that the Duke should haue the rule and gouernment of all England. And moreouer, the twentieth day of February, in the eleuenth yere of the Kings raigne, at Blachingly in Surrey, the sayde Duke sayde vnto the saide Robert Gilbert his Chancellor, that he did expect and tarry for a time more conuenient to atchieue his purpose, and that it might easily be done, if the nobles of the Realme would declare their minds together: but some of them mistrusted and feared to shew their minds. Hee sayde further the same time vnto the saide Robert Gilbert, that whatsoeuer was done by the Kings Father, was done by wrong: and still the Duke murmured against all that the King then presently raigning did. And further he said, that he knew himselfe to be so wicked a sinner, that hee wanted Gods fauour, and therefore he knew, that whatsoeuer he toke in hand against the King had the worse successe. And furthermore, the saide Duke (to alienate the Kings subiects minds from dutifull obedience, towards him and his heires, the twentieth of September, in the first yere of his raigne) bring then at London, reported to Robert Gilbert, that he had a certaine writing, sealed with the Kings great seale, comprehending a certaine act of Parliament, in the which it was enacted, that the Duke of Somerset, one of the Kings progenitors was made legitimate. And further, that the said Duke meant to haue deliuered the same writing vnto King Henry the seuenth, but (said he) I would not that I had so done for ten thousand pounds. And furthermore, the same Duke the fourth day of November, in the eleuenth yere of the Kings raygne, at East Granewich in the County of Kent, said vnto one Charles Kneuet Esquire, after the King had repraued the Duke for retayning William Bulmer knight vnto his seruice, that if he had perceiued that he should haue bin committed to the tower, as he doubted he should haue bene, he would haue so wrought, that the principall doers therein should not haue had cause of great reioycing, for he would haue played the part, which his father intended to haue put in practise against King Richard the 3. at Salisbury, who made earnest suit to haue come to the presence of the same King Richard, which suite if hee might haue obtained, he hauing a knife secretly about him, would haue thrust it into the body of King Richard, as he had made semblance to kneele downe before him: and in speaking these words, he maliciously laid his hand vpon his dagger, and said, that if he were so euill vsed, he would doe his best to accomplish his pretended purpose, sweating to confirme his word, by the blood of our Lord.

And beside all this, the same Duke the 10. of May, in the 12. yere of the Kings raigne at London, in a place called the Rose, within the parish of S. Laurence Poultney in Candlestreet ward, demanded of the said Charles Knewet Esquire what was the talke amongst the Londoners, concerning the Kings iourney beyond the seas: and the said Charles told him, that many stode in doubt of the iourney, lest the Frenchmen meant some deceit towards the King: whereunto the Duke answered, it was to be feared lest it would come to passe, according to the words of an holy monke, for there is (saith he) a certaine Chartar house monke, that diuers times hath sent to me, willing me to send vnto him my chancellor, & I die send vnto him I. de la Court my chaplain, vnto whom hee would not declare any thing, till de la Court had sworne vnto him to keepe all things secret, & to tel to no creature liuing what he should heare of him, except it were to me, and the said monke to de la Court, that neither the King nor his heires should prosper, and that I should endeuour my selfe to purchase the good wils of the communality of England, for I (the same D.) and my blud should prosper and haue the rule of the realme of England. Then said Charles Knewet, the monke may be deceiued through illusion of the deuil, and that it was euill to meddle with such matters. Well said the Duke, it cannot hurt me, and so the duke seemed to reioyce in the Monks words. And further, the same time the Duke told the said Charles, that if the King had miscarryed now in his last sickness, hee would haue chopped off the heads of the Cardinall, of sir Tho. Louell knight, and of others: and also said, that he had rather die for it, than to be so vsed as he had beene. Moreouer, the 10. day of September in the said 11. yere of this Kings raigne, at Blechingly in the county of Surrey, walking in the gallery there with George Neuill knight, L. of Burgauenny, the Duke murmuring against the kings counsellors, and their gouernment, said vnto the said George, that if the King died, he would haue the rule of the realme in spite of whosoeuer said the contrary, & with all said, that if the said L. of Burgauenny would say, that the Duke had spoken such words, hee would fight with him, & lay his sword vpon his pate, and this he bound with many great oathes. These were the points and articles compiled in the indictment, and laid to his charge, whereof he was by the inquest found guilty.

On the 13. of May, the said D. was brought from the Tower by water vnto Westminster hall, before the D. of Norffolke high steward of England, to accomplish the high of appeale of the peere of peeres of the realme, and to discerne and iudge the cause of the peeres. There were also appointed to sit as peres and iudges vpon the Duke of Buckingham, the Duke of Suffolke, the Marques Dorset, the earles of Worcester, Deuonshire, Eller, Shrewsbury, Kent, Orford, and Darby, the L. Lords of S. Johns, de la Ware, Fitz Waren, Willoughby, Brooke, Cobham, Herbert, and Morley. There was made within the hall at Westminster a Scaffold for these Lords, and a pressence for the Iudge railed, and counterrailed about, and barred with degrees. When the Lords had taken their place, the Duke was brought to the Barre, and vpon his arraignement pleaded not guilty, and put himselfe vpon his peres. Then was the indictment read, which the Duke confessed to bee true, and (as he was an eloquent man) alleaged reasons to falsifie the indictment, very pithily. The kings attorney against the Duke reasons, alleaged the examinations, confessions and proofes of witnesses. The Duke desired the witnesses might be brought forth: and then came before him Charles Kneuet, Sir Gilbert Perke his Chancellor, John de la Court his Confessor, and Nicholas Hopkins the monke of Henton that had fed his humour with faire speeches: diuers presumptions and accusations were laid to him by Charles Kneuet, which he would haue couered. But the depositions being read, and the deponents deliuered prisoners to the officers of the Tower, finally, he was found guilty by his peres, and hauing iudgement to suffer as in case of treason is vsed, was led againe to his barge, and so conueyed, by water, to the Temple staires, where he was set a land, and from thence by land through London to the Tower with the axe afore him, Sir William Sands hauing him by the right arme, and Sir Nicholas Vaux by the left arme. And on the 17. of May, being the fryday before Whitsunday, he was deliuered to the Sheriffes of London, who led him to the scaffold on the Tower hill, about 11. of the clocke, and there he was beheaded, in the presence of sir Thomas Louel and all the people, his body with the head was borne by the fryers Augustines to their church, and there buried in the chappell church for the close. And now followeth the publication at the disgrading of the saide Edward late Duke of Buckingham knight & companion of the most noble order of S. George, named the Gartar, which was read and published by Gartar king at Armes, at the feast of Saint George, in the quire of Windsor Colledge, standing on the high pase at the dore, all the other officers of armes about him, there being also present the Lord Marques Dorset knight of the same order, then being the Kings deputy for the feast, the Earle of Esser, the Earle of Wiltshire, the Earle of Kent, sir Thomas Lovel, and the Lord le Ware, knights of the said order, with other great audience assembled there on the eight of June, the thirteene yere of Henry the eight, the yere of Christ, 1521.

Duke of Buckingham beheaded.

Duke of Buckingham disgraded.

Disgrading of a knight of the Gartar.

Vee it knowne vnto all men, that whereas Edward late Duke of Buckingham knight, & companion of the Noble order of S. George, named the Gartar, hath lately done and committed high treason against the King our soueraigne Lord, and soueraigne of the saide order of the Gartar, in compassing and imagining the destruction of the most Noble person of our said soueraigne Lord the King, contrary to his oath and due allegeance, and for the which high treason the said Edward hath bin iudged, arraigned, conuicted, and attainted, for the which detestable offences and high treason, the saide Edward hath deserued to bee disgraded of the said noble order, and expelled out of the saide companp, and not worthy that his Armes, enfignes, and hatchments should remaine among other noble enfignes of the other noble, vertuous, and approued knights of the said Nobls order, nor haue the benefit of the said noble order: wherefore our said soueraigne Lord the King, soueraigne of the saide Noble order of S. George, named the Gartar, by the aduise of the other knights of the said Noble order, for his saide offences, and committing of the said high treason willfully and contumaciously, that the said Edward Duke of Buckingham be disgraded of the said Noble order, and his Armes, Enfignes, and hatchments clerely expelled, and put from among the Armes, Enfignes, and hachments of the other noble knights of the saide order, to the intent, that all other Noble men thereby may take ensample hereafter, not to committe any like haynous and detestable treason and offences, as God forbid they should.

God saue the King.

It is to be remembred, that Somerset Herault was in the rowe left behind the hachments of the saide Duke Edward: and when Gartar spake these words, expelled and put from the armes, then the saide Somerset violently cast downe into the quire, his creast, his banner, and sword. And when the publication was all done, the officers of armes, spurned the saide hachment with their feete, out of the quire into the body of the Church, first the sword, and then the banner, and then was the creast spurned out of the said quire through the Church out at the west doze, and so to the Bridge, where it was spurned ouer into the ditch. And thus was the said Edward late Duke of Buckingham fully disgraded of the order of S. George named the Gartar.

The Duke of Buckingham had begun a great and sumptuous building of his Manor of Thornebury, but left the same vnfinished. The foundation of a very spacious hale Court was there begun, and certaine gates and towers in it castle like. It was of a foure or fiue yards high, and so remained, a token of a noble piece of worke purposed. Hee made a faire Parke hard by the castle, and toke much faire ground into it very fruitfull of corne, now faire lands for courting. The inhabitants cursed the Duke for those lands so inclosed. There was afore Duke Edwards time a Parke at East Wood, a myle or more off: but Duke Edward at two times enlarged it to the compasse of 6. myles, not without many curses of the poore tenants. John Leiland.

In this meane while, were the Emperor and the French King fallen at variance, so that the warre was renued betwixt them. For the pacifying whereof, Cardinall Wolsey with the Bishops of Ely and Durham were sent ouer, there went with them the Earle of Worcester the Lord Chamberlaine, the Lords S. Iohn Ferrers. Warre betwixt the Emperor & the French King.

Ferrers, and Herbert, the Primate of Armacane, Sir Thomas Bolleigne, Sir John Pechy, Sir John Hussey, Sir Richard Wingfield, Sir Henry Gildford, and many other Knights, Esquires, and Gentlemen, these arrived at Caleis on the 2. of Auguſt.

The ſame day came to Caleis Ambaſſadors from the Emperor: and on the 4. of Auguſt, came the Chancellor of France, and the county de Pallace, with 1400. horſe, by which meanes, there met at Caleis, the Lords of England (before named) of Burgoygne, Spaine, Flanders, and France, with the Popes Orator, to make peace betwixt the Emperor and the French King. Cardinall Wolſey would have furthered a league betwixt the Emperor, the King of England, the King of France, and the Pope, but the Popes Ambaſſador wanted commiſſion therto, and therefore were letters ſent to Rome, and the French men remained ſtill at Caleis, till anſwer came from thence.

Cardinall Wolſey rode to Gaſnes, to the Emperor.

The Cardinall Wolſey on the 12. day of Auguſt rode into Flanders, to ſpeake with the Emperor, which as then lay in Bruges: a mile without Bruges, the Emperor received him, and did to him as much honour as could be deviſed: the cheare was great which was made to the Engliſh-men, and of every thing there was ſuch plenty, that there was no want of things neceſſary. The Cardinall after he had ſolourned in Bruges by the ſpace of 13. dayes, and concluded diuers matters with the Emperor, and accomplished his commiſſion, he tooke leaue of the Emperor, and the 29. of Auguſt, returned to Caleis, where the Ambaſſadors of France tarried his comming.

The firſt of September, the Cardinall Chancellor of England, the Chancellor of France, and the Chancellor of Burgoygne rode from Staple Inne, to our Lady Church in Caleis. The fourth of September, the Regent of Naples came to Caleis, to the great Councel there: and the 27. of September, the Chancellor of Hungary came to the ſame Councell, but in fine nothing was concluded, but onely that the fiſhermen of both Princes might freely fiſh in the Seas, without diſturbance, till the ſecond of February next. Thus when no concluſion of agreement could be accorded, the Cardinall ſent to the Emperor the Lord of Saint Johns, and Sir T. Boleine, Knight, to adverriſe him what was done.

During the continuance of the Cardinall at Caleis, all Writs and Patents were there by him ſcaled, and no Sheriffes of ſhire choſen for lacke of his preſence, having there with him the Great Seale, and full power in things, as if the King had beene there in perſon. After the returne of the Engliſh Ambaſſadors from the Emperor and the French King, the Cardinall returned into England about the latter end of November, he landed at Caleis, and from thence tooke his tourney to Blechingley, where the King welcomed him, and gaue him thankes for his great paines.

King Henry wrote againſt Luther.

King Henry wrote a booke againſt Luther in Germany, and therefore Pope Leo the tenth, named him Defender of the faith. To the which booke Luther anſwered very ſharply, nothing ſparing his authority or Maieſty.

Doctor Pace, Deane of Paules.

Pope Leo dyed this yere, whereupon Doctor Pace, Deane of Pauls, was ſent to Rome to make friends in the behalfe of Cardinall Wolſey, who was brought into a vaine hope, through the Kings fauour and furtherance, to be elected Pope: But Adrian the firſt was choſen before Doctor Pace could come to Rome, and ſo that ſuite was daſhed. This Pace was a right worthy man, and one that gaue in Councell faithfull advice, learned he was alſo, and endued with many excellent good gifts of nature, courteous, pleaſant, and delighting in muſicke, highly in the Kins fauour, and well heard in matters of waight.

A mighty inundation in Holland, Zealand, and Brabant.

This yere, 1521. the Sea ſwelled ſo exceedingly, and being encountred with the ſtrong ſtreames of the River of Reigne, Maſe, and others, by meanes whereof the waters overflowed their bankes and bounds, and overwhelmed 72. billages, and drowned above 100000. people with much cattell, and in the yere 1530. the River Tyber overflowed her bounds in the night, and did great damage to the Citty and Cittizens of Rome.

Rome annoyed with an inundation.

Great death and dearth in England.

This yeere was a great death in London and other places of the Realme: many men of honour and great worſhip dyed, and amongſt other, Doctor Fitz James, Biſhop of London, in whoſe place was elected Doctor Tunſtall. Alſo a great dearth in London and other places, for Wheate was ſold for twenty ſhillings the quarter.

1521. The Earle of Surrey returned out of Ireland, and came to the Court on the 25. of January.

Many complaints to the King were made by the Merchants of the French-men, which ſpoyled them by Sea of their goods, for by reaſon the warrs were open betwixt the Emperor and the French King, many ſhips of warre were abroad on both parts, and now and then the Engliſhmen fell into their hands, and were uſed as Enemies, namely, by the French-men, whereof the French Ambaſſadors promiſed reſtitution, but little was recovered. In the moneth of January, therefore the King commanded all his ſhips to be rigged, and made ready, which was done with all diligence.

Ships rigged to the Sea.

In this meane time, grudges and diſpleaſures ſtill grew and increaſed betweene the King of England and the French King, till at length the Duke of Albany returned into Scotland, contrary to that which was covenanted by the league. The French King alledged that he was not privy to his going thither, and wrote to the King, that the ſaid Duke was entred Scotland without his aſſent. Hereupon the King ſent fiue ſhips to the Sea well appointed, the Admirall whereof was Chriſtopher Coo, an expert Sea-man, his commiſſion was to ſafegard the Merchants, and other the Kings ſubiects that were in danger to be grieuouſly ſpoyled and robbed on the Sea by the French-men, Scots, and other rouers.

The

The eyghth of February, the Lord Dacres, Warden of the Marches, fore anent Scotland, entred into Scotland with fiue hundred men, by the Kings commandement, and there proclaimed that the Scots ſhould come into the Kings peace by the firſt of March following, or elſe to ſtand at their perills: the Duke of Albany being then within fiue miles with a mighty power of Scots.

The 11. of February, the Lord Burgauenny was brought from the Tower to Weſtminſter, and there in the Kings Bench, confeſſed his indictment of miſpriſion.

The Lord Montague was about the ſame time reſtored to the Kings fauour.

This yeere dyed the Lord Brooke, Sir Edward Poynings, Knight of the Garter, Sir Iohn Pechy, and Sir Edward Belknape, valiant Captaines.

A Scottiſh rouer, called Duncan Camell, after long fight was taken on the Sea by I. Arundell, Eſquire of Cornwall, who preſented him to the King, and he committed him to the Tower, where he remained a long ſeaſon.

The 6. of March, the French King commanded all Engliſhmens goods being in Burdeaux to be attached, and put under arreſt, and retained not onely the money due to be paid, for reſtitution of Turney, but alſo with-held the French Queenes dower. The French Ambaſſador therefore was called before the Councell, and the Cardinall laid fore to his charge, that contrary to his promiſe at all times made on the French Kings behalfe, affirming, that he meant nothing but peace and amity to be obſerued in all points with the King of England, yet now the Engliſh Merchants had not only their goods ſtaped at Burdeaux, but alſo they and their factors were laid in priſon in full breach of all peace and amity afore time concluded. The Ambaſſador as well as he could, excuſed his Maſter, but in the end hee was commanded to keepe his houſe, and the French hoſtages that were appointed here to remain for the money to be paid for the deliuery of Turney, were committed to ſafe keeping: wherewith alſo all the French-men in London were arreſted, committed to priſon, and put to their fines: but they were after ten daies ſet at liberty, vpon finding ſureties to appeare before the Maior, or elſe afore the Councell at a certaine day, and to pay the fine vpon them aſſeſſed, which time the King pardoned to diuers of the poorer ſort.

Anno reg. 14.

There were ſent to the ſea vnder the conduct of Sir William Fitz Williams, Vice-admirall, 28. great ſhips well manned and furniſhed for the warres, and 7. other ſhips were ſent toward Scotland, which entred the Forth, and proffered to enter the Scottiſh ſhips that lay in the Hauens, but the Scots ran their ſhips a land, and the Engliſhmen followed with boats, landed, and ſet the ſhips on fire, and at the ſame tooke certaine priſoners, which they brought into England: and ſtill the Kings great Many kept the narrow Seas: for then was neyther peace betwixt England and France, nor open warre.

The King vnderstanding that the Emperor would come to Calleis, to to passe into England, as he went toward Spaine, appointed the Lo. marques Dorset to goe ouer to Calleis, there to receiue him, and likewise the Lord Cardinall was appointed to receiue him at Douer.

Cardinall Wolsey rode toward Douer to receiue the Emperor.

The 26. day of May, Cardinall Wolsey rode through the City of London toward Douer, there to meete and receiue the Emperor, being accompanyed with 2. Earles, 6. Knights, 100. Gentlemen, eight Bishops, ten Abbots, thirty Chaplaines, all in veluet and satten, and seuen hundred yeomen.

The Marques Dorset, with the Bishop of Chester, the Lord de la Ware, and diuers other, at Graueline receiued the Emperor in the name of the King of England, on the fiue and twenty day of May, and with all honour brought him to Calleis, where he was receiued with procession, and by the Lord Barners Lieutenant of the towne, by the Maior and merchants of the Staple, in the best manner that might bee deuised. On the 26. he take ship at Calleis, and landed at Douer, where the Cardinall with a great number of Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen of England, was ready to receiue him, and with all the honour that might bee, brought him to the castle, where he was lodged.

On the 28. of May the King came to Douer, and there with great ioy the Emperor and he met, and saluted each other. On the 30. of May he rode from Douer to Canterbury, and so from thence, by easie iourneyes they came to Grauesend, where the Queene receiued her Nephew with all the ioy that might be. On the first of June, the King and the Emperor with all their company marched towards London, where the City was prepared for their entry, after the manner as is vsed at a coronation; so that nothing was neglected that might sette forth the honor of the City wherein they were receiued by the Maior, Aldermen, and commons: the Crosse in Cheape was new gilt, and eleuen pageans were deuised on stages very faire and excellent to behold. The Emperor was lodged at the Blacke Freers, and all his nobles in the new builded house of Bridewell.

The Emperor harbles into London.

On Whitsunday the eight of June, the Emperor and the King rode to the Cathedrall Church of S. Paul, and there heard masse, which was sung by the Cardinall. The Emperor rode to diuers places, being feasted by the King, at Windsor they tarryed a whole weeke, where on Corpus Christi day the Emperour weare his mantle of the garter, and sate in his stall. The same day both the Princes receiued the Sacrament and sware their corporall oathes to kepe and obserue the league concluded betwixt them. On the morrowe after they departed from Windsor, and came to Winchester on the 22. of June.

The first of July, the Emperors nauy came before Hamuton, containing 1180. goodly ships. Then the Emperor toke leaue of the King, of whom he had many gifts and sends of money by way of loane, and so the first of July he take shippe, and made saile towards Spayne, where he arriued in safety the tenth day after.

Earle of Surrey Lord Admirall, Brent Mooles in Bytaine, and then returned: not long after, he passed ouer to Calleis, entred Picardie, and burnt diuers townes and Castles. He besieged Hedoing, but because Winter was neere, he raised his siege, and returned.

Brent Mooles in Bytaine. I. Skelton.

The D. of Albany in Scotland began to enter this land with a great army, but hearing that the Earle of Shrewsbury was comming he take a truce for fiue moneths.

The Rhodes besieged.

In the beginning of this yere, Sultan Soliman Pac, called the great Turke, which was the 8. of the line of Ottoman the first that take vpon him to be great Captaine or ruler, and to whom Sultan Solime, his father had left the Empires of Constantinople, Trapesond, Alexandry, and Babylon, with many diuers kingdomes and realmes: which Sultan Soliman the yere before had gotten the towne of Belgrade, being the key of Hungary, because he saw at the Princes in Christendome now at discord, thought it most for his honor & profit to make war on the Ile of the Rhodes, and to take the same: which Ile had been kept the space of 224. yeers, by the brethren of knights of the order of S. Iohn of Ierusalem. Diuers things moued him to take this enterprise, one was because this Ile stood so, that the religious of the same oftentimes take & destroyed his ships as they came with gold, and other riches from Egypt, Sire, and other East parts to Constantinople, so that by them of that Ile he sustained more hurt than by all Christendome, because the said Ile stod in the very entry toward Constantinople. Another motion was, because his father when he dyed, charged him to assay to take the Rhodes, for to bee reuenged of the shame that they had done to their grandfather Mahomet the great Turke, which was with dishonour beaten from the siege of the Rhodes. But the greatest occasion of all was the exhortation of a great Counceller of the Religion called Andrew Amirall borne in Poytiers, which knew the whole estate, and in what case the Towne stod in. The cause why this Andrew Amirall bare malice to his Religion was, because after the death of his brother Fabrica de laretto Lord master of their religion, he was not elected to that honor, but one Phillip de la Villiers de Lisle Adame of France was named to be Lord maister, wherefore the said Andrew prouoked the Turke to come to the Rhodes.

The Rhodes besieged by two hundred thousand Turkes. Why the Turke coueted the Rhodes.

The great Turke seing so great an occasion offered, and desiring honor, and also knowing the fortresse of the Rhodes to lacke munitions, for the brethren of the order were both of such wealth and pride, & also of such wicked life, that they toke no heede of their vow and solemne profession, nor foresaw things to come, and so their towne vnfurnished was sone surprised. The said Turke prouided for 300. saile, in in the which he conueyed all his artillery, and other things necessary. In the which Army were 60000. miners and pioners prepared to dig and vndermine, the rest of the army came by land to a place called Fisco, which standeth so directly against the Rhodes, that a fire may be seene from the one side to the other: from the which place the Turke sent Letters to the aboue named Phillip de Villiers Lord master of the Religion, signifying to him, that he would haue the said Ile, for the great damage that they had done to him and his people: and if they would yeld to him the said Ile, he promised on his faith, and by Mahomet his first Prophet, they should haue no damage nor hurt by him, and that they that would depart should goe in safety, and they that would tarry and serue him, should haue good wages: and if they refused this to doe, bee sware that he would subuert the walles of their Fortresse, and destroy them all. and make them slaues, which letter was dated at Constantinople, the first of June.

Chap-stone ordaind pioners sent to the Rhodes.

The said Lord master and his company were greatly abashed at this letter, but yet like hardie gentlemen they intended to defend them, and made all the preparations that they could doe in so short space, and wrote to all Christian Princes of their distresse. But the Turke knowing the great diuision amongst the Christian Princes, so that they could send no succour to the Rhodes: sent 200000. Turkes, which arriued in the Ile of the Rhodes on Midsommer day, which was the festiuall day of the Rhodes in honour of S. Iohn Baptist, which sodden coming sore abashed the Rhodians, being but 600. knights, & 5000. other met to beare armis: yet of noble courage & trusting in God, they determined to defend themselues against the enemies of God. And on the 28. of July the Turke arrined there in his owne person, which much encouraged his people: he sent his ordinance toward the Towne, but did no great harme, wherefore he caused all his pioners to cast earth one banke ouer another till til they came within a bow shotte of the wals: and although that many of the pioners were slaine with ordinance of the towne, they neuer ceased till they had made a banke of earth higher by ten sote than the wall of the towne, and laid there their ordinance, so that no person durst stir on the wals or bulwarkes. Thus with mounts of earth was the towne environed, & behind the mountaines lay the Basheaw and cheifetians of the Turke, which were euer ready to take their aduantage, and daily they shot into the towne, and beat downe houses, and slew the people in the streets, for they vpon the mount might easily see into the towne: besides this, the Turke caused so many mines to be made in diuerse places, that they within were not able to make countermines for lacke of people, in somuch, as women were set at worke, to dig and carry, by reason whereof a great part of the wals were ouerthrowne, and if they within had not made countermines, the towne had bin gotten within a short space. Also the Turke in the moneth of September gaue to the Rhodians foure great assaults, but the Christians so valiantly defended them, that at euery assault they lost 10000. Turkes and more.

The great Turke seing the losse of his men at the assaults, sent for Mostaffa Bashaw, and much blamed him, that he had perswaded him that he might haue taken the towne in 12. daies, or in a moneth at the most; wherefore in his fury he would haue put him to death: but in conclusion the Turke determined cleerely to raise his siege, and to depart, and so had done, if that same night sir Andrew Amirall, & a Iew with in the Rhodes had not written letters, and shot them out on quarels into the Turkes army: by which letters the Turke knew the necessity of the towne, and feeblenes of the people, which caused him to change his purpose: but this treason was espied, the traitors taken, and put to terrible execution. The Turke caused so many mines to bee made, that both bulwarkes, wals, and towers were ouerthrowne. and so on S. Andrewes euen he caused a great assault to be giuen: but yet the Christians so valiantly defended themselues, that they slew 3000 Turks, and kept them from entering that day: but the citizens of the Rhodes after this assault came to the Lord master, and prayed him to haue compassion on them, the Lord master comforted them with faire words: but by chance about the same time the great Turke sent a letter into the Rhodes, willing them to deliuer the towne, and they all should haue their liues and goods, and they that would tarry should remaine quiet. This letter being knowne, the people of cyprc out on the Lord master to take the offer, wherefore calling all his councell, for diuers wants amongst them, they sent to the Turke two of the religion, for the assurance of his promise, who were well entertained, and had writings sealed of all things that they desired. To the which two Knights, Aymech Bashaw sweare, that there were slaine at that siege 64000. Turks, and 40000. dead of mortality & more. And on Christmas day, the great Turke himselfe entered into the Rhodes, and toke possession thereof, and the Lord master and all his religion, the first day of January toke shippe, and sayled to Candy, and so to Rome, and there declared his chance and aduenture. Thus was the towne and the Ile of the Rhodes taken by the great Turke, which was a great succour to all Christian men, reseruing to the east parts of the world, which chance was much lamented (but too late) throughout all Christendome, and much blame put in Princes, because they sent no succour to them of the Ile.

Yeelding of Cyprc to the Turkes.

Register of the Grey Friers.

Lady Alice Hungerford beheaded.

The 20. of February, the Lady Alice Hungerford a Knights wife, for murthering her husband, was led from the Tower of London to Holbourne, and there put in a Cart with one of her seruants, and so carried to Tyborne, and both hanged: she was buried in the Grey Friers church at London.

Thomas Howard Earle of Surrey, burned 27. villages in Laydon, dispeopled the countrey from the East marches to the West, and ouer thiewe diuers holds.

Thomas Ruthall Bishop of Durham being deceased, the King gaue that Bishoprike vnto Cardinal Wolsey, who resigned the Bishoprick of Bathe to Doctor Iohn Clarke maister of the Rolles: And sir Henry Marney that was vicechamberlaine, was made Lord priuy seale, and shortly after he was created Baron Marney at Richmond.

Doctor Blych Bishop of Chester was attached for treason, but he acquit himselfe.

Parliament, or the Blacke Fryers.

The 15. of Aprill began a Parliament at the Blacke Fryers in London, and that day the King came into the Parliament chamber, and there sate in the state royall, and at his feet on the right side sate the Cardinall of Yorke, & the Archbishop of Canterbury: and at the raile behinde stod Doctor Tunstall Bishop of London, which made to the whole Parliament an eloquent oration, declaring the office of a King. First he must be a man of iudgement, according to the saying of the Prophet Dauid, Deus iudicium tuum regi da, &c. Also he must bee a man of great learning, according to the saying of the Prophet, Erudimini qui iudicatis terram. According to which saying, he said that God had sent vs a Prince of great iudgement, of great learning, and great experience, which according to his Princely duty forgat not to study to set forwards all things, which might be profitable to his people and realme, lest might be laid to his charge the saying of Seneca, Si rex, & non habes tempus esse rex? Art thou a King, and hast no time to be a King: Which is as much to say, as art thou a King, and doest nothing profitable to thy people? Art thou a King, and seest the people haue an insufficient Law? Art thou a King, and wilt not prouide remedy for the mischiefe of thy people? These things haue indeed caused the Kings highnesse to call this high court of Parliament, both for remedie of mischiefes which be in the common law, as receiuories, forein vouchers, and corrupt tryals; and for making and ordering of new statutes, which may be to the high aduancing of the common wealth: wherefore he willeth the commons to repaire to the common house, and there to elect them a speaker, & their common mouth, and to certifie the Lord Chancellor of the same, which should thereof make report to the Kings most noble grace, which should declare his pleasure when he would haue him presented before his person.

Oration of Sir Thomas Moore.

This was the cause of the Parliament, he said, but of these things no one word was spoken in the whole Parliament, nor any good act made, except the grant of a great subsidy. The Commons chose for their speaker Sir Thomas Moore Knight, and presented him the saturday after in the Parliament Chamber. Where he according to the vsage, disabled himselfe, both in wit, learning, and discretion to speake before the King, and brought in for his purpose, how one Phormio desired Hannibal to come to his reading, which thereto assented, and when Hannibal was come, hee began to reade De remissionis, that is, of chiualrie: when Hannibal perceiued him, he called him arrogant fole, because he would presume to teach him, which was master of chiualrie in the feats of warre: to the speaker saide, If I should speake before the King of learning, and ordering of the common wealth, and such other like, the King being so well learned, and of such prudence and experience, might say to him as Hannibal to Phormio: wherefore he desired his grace that the Commons might chose another speaker. The Cardinall answered, that the King knew his witte, learning, and discretion by long experience in his seruice: wherefore he thought that the Commons had chosen him as the most meetest man of all, and so he did admit him. Then Sir Thomas Moore gaue to the King his most humble thankes, and desired of him two petitions: the one, if he should bee sent from the Commons to the King on message, and mistake their intent, that hee might with the Kings pleasure resorte againe to the Commons, for the knowledge of their true meaning. The other was, if in communication and reasoning, any man in the common house should speake more largely than of duty they ought to doe, that all such offences should bee pardoned, and that to be entred of record: which two petitions were granted, and thus begunne the Parliament. And euen as there was much ado amongst them of the common house, about their agreement to the subsidy then required, so was there as hard hold for a while amongst them of the clergy in the conuocation house, namely, Richard Foxe Bishop of Winchester, and Iohn Fisher Bishop of Rochester held fore against it, but most of all Sir Rowland Philips vicar of Crodoione, one of the Canons of Paules, a famous and notable preacher in those dayes, spake most against that paiment. But the Cardinall taking him aside, so perswaded the matter with him, that he came no more into the house, willingly absenting himselfe, thus he giuing ouer his hold, the other perswaded, and so was granted the halfe of all their reuenues spirituall for one yere, to bee paide in 5. yeres following. Now on the 29. of Aprill, the Cardinall accompanied with diuers Lords, as well spirituall as temporall, came into the common house, where he eloquently declared to the commons, how Francis the French King the first, called the most Christian King, had oft-times broken promise with the King of England, and his nephew Charles the Emperor, that the King of his honor could no longer suffer. For he first declared that the meeting of the said 2. Princes at Guisnes, the said French King was sworne to keepe all the articles contained in the league, sith the which time he hath made warre on the Emperors dominions, &c. he also hath withholden his tribute, and other paiments which he should pay to the K. of England, for redemption of Turney and Turwine, &c. Wherefore of necessity the King was driuen to warre, which in no case could bee maintained without great summes of money, and hee thought no lesse than 800000. pound, to be raised of the first part of euery mans goods and

There were not 13000. parishes then in England as I haue obiected.

and lands, that is to say, foure shillings of euery pound: for he sayde that the yere following, the King and the Emperor should make such warre in France as had not beene seene.

After that hee had declared his matter at length, exhorting the commons to ayde their Prince in time of necessity, he departed out of the common house.

The morow after, sir Thomas Moore declared all the Cardinals oration againe to the commons, and enforced his demand, saying, that of duty men ought not to deny to pay foure shillings of the pound. But for all that it was denyed, and proued manifestly, that if the first part of substance of the Realme were but 800000. and if men should pay to the King the first part of their goods in money or plate, it was proued that there was not so much money out of the Kings hands in all the Realme, for the first part of euery mans goods is not in mony nor plate: for although fiue men were well monyed, fiue thousand were not so, the gentleman of lands hath not the first part of the value in coine: the marchant that is rich in silke, woll, tin, cloth, and such like, hath not the first part in money, &c. And then consequently, if all the money were brought to the Kings hands, then men must barter cloth for victuall, and bread for cheese, and so one thing for another. Then consider that after this valuation, the King hath had by the way of loane two shillings of the pound, which is 400000. pound, and now to haue foure shillings of the pound, which amounteth in the whole to 12. hundred thousand pound, which first and last is fiue shillings of the pound, which is almost the third part of euery mans goods, which in coine cannot be had within the realme: for the proofe whereof was alleaged, that if there were in England but 15000. parishes and euery parish should giue 100. marks, that were but fifteene hundred thousand marks, which is but ten hundred thousand pound: and how many parishes be in England one with another, able to spare a hundred markes, out of cities and townes: and where it is written, that in England there be forty thousand parish Churches, it was proued that there were not 13000. parishes. Then account, the whole sum cannot mount aboue tenne hundred thousand pound, and the King demandeth 800000. and bee after this valuation hath had 400000. pound, therefore it was thought the sum impossible to be leuied: and if all the coine were in the Kings hand, how should men liue? Also the King had of the spirituall men the last yere, foure shillings of the pound, &c. To conclude, after a long debating, the commons granted two shilling of the pound of euery mans goods and lands that were worth 20. pound, or might dispend twenty pound by yere, and so vpward, and from forty shillings to twenty pound, twelue pence of the pound: and vnder forty shillings of euery head fifteene yeres and vpward, foure pence to be paid in 2. yeres. This Parliament the 21. of May was adiorned to Westminster among the blacke monks, and ended in the Kings Pallace at Westminster the fourteene of August, at nine of the clocke in the night.

The 27. of Aprill, was sir Arthur Plantagenet a bastard son to King Edward the fourth, at Calice created Viscount Lisle, in the right of his wife, which was sometime wife to Edm. Dudley beheaded, Sir Mauris Barkley lieutenant of Caleis was made L. Barkley, sir Will. Sands, L. Sands, and sir Nich. Vaux, L. Vaux.

Viscount Lisle.

Christerne King of Denmarke and his Queene, arryuing at the Downs besides Douer the 15. of June, came to London on the 22. of June, and were lodged in the Bishop of Bathes place. The first of July, they returned againe to Caleis.

The K. and D. of Denmarke arryued in England.

In this season the King hauing put an army of men in a readinesse, caused the same to be transported ouer to Caleis, and appointed the Duke of Suffolke to haue the leading thereof, and to make a iourney into France. The Duke according to his commission came to Caleis on the 24. of August, and there abiding the army, caused all things to be prepared for the same, as victuall, munition, and such like. There were appointed to attend him in this iourney, the L. Mountacute, and his brother sir Arthur Poole, the Lord Sands, the Lord Barkley, the Lord Powes, and the baron of Curson, and of knights, sir Richard Wingfield Chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaster, sir Iohn Vere, sir Edward Neuill, sir William Kingstone, sir Richard Westone, sir Andrew Windsor, sir Robert Wingfield, Sir Anthony Wingfield, sir Ed. Gilford, sir Edward Greuile, sir Edward Chamberlaine, sir Thomas Lucy, sir Edward Digby, sir Adrian Fortescue, sir Richard Cornwall, sir William Courtney, sir William Sidney, sir Henry Owen, and many other. The whole army consisted in 600. Demilances, two hundred Archers on horseback, 3000. Archers on foote, and 5000. Bill-men. To these also were adioyned 1700. taken out of the garisons of Hames, Guisnes, and Caleis, so that in all they were 10500. well armed and appointed for the war, besides 2600. labourers and pioners. These set out of Caleis on the 19. of September. The first enterprise that they attempted was the winning of Well castle, which they beate downe, and sent the Frenchmen prisoners to Caleis.

Duke of Suffolke entered France with a power.

In this season was the D. of Burbon high Constable of France reuolted from the French King to the service of the Emperor, & the King of England: for after it was knowne that this Duke had his minde alienated from the French King, Sir Iohn Russell (that was after Earle of Bedford) was sent into France vnto the saide Duke, which in disguised apparell ordered himselfe so wisely, that in couert manner he came to the Duke and so perswaded him, that he continued in his former determination, and auoided the Realme of France. The Duke of Suffolke remoued to Arde, and so into Picardie. At Cozdres a village betweene Turwine, and Saint Omers, there came to him the Lord of Iselton, and with him of Spaniards, Almaines, Clemeners, and after, 3000. footmen, and 500. horsemen. The D. being thus furnished with new ayde, marched forward, sending out diuers companies of his men to take townes, and fetch bootes. The Frenchmen were so afraide of the Englishmen, that they fled out of their houses, and left the townes and villages voyd. The Duke passed forth till he came to the towne of Bray, in the which were 1600. men of war, vnder the gouernance of Captaine Adrian.

The 20. of October the Duke caused his ordinance to be brought afore it, the which is so well applied in making batterie to the walles of the towne, that the towne was made assaultable, and then the Englishmen and other made forward, got the ditches, and after entred vpon the Wals, and so into the towne, and sodainely the French men fled, and thus was gotten the towne of Bray. The 21. of October, the army with their ordinance passed the riuer, and came to a towne called Enap, al the inhabitants were fled, but they had left good plenty of wine behind them. The Duke sent to them of Roy, requiring to haue the towne deliuered to him, which they graunted to doe, because they had no garrison of souldiers to defend them: thither was sent Sir Richard Cornwall, with 400. men, which receiued the towne, and kept it in good quiet, till the Duke came thither.

The 25. of October, the Duke remoued to a Village called Lyhowe, where the souldiours had great pillage. The next day they went to Dueuehier, and the 27. they came before the towne of Montdedier, in the which were 1000. footemen, and 500. horsemen: but after Sir William Seuingron had made battery foure houres, they within yelded the Towne vnto the Duke. The Duke remained in Montdedier till the laſt of October, and then remoued to Roy, where on Allhalowne day the Duke made Knights, the Lord Herbert, the Lord Powes, Oliuer Manners, Arthur Poole, Richard Sands, Robert Iernigham, Robert Salisbury, Edmond Beningfield, Richard Corber, Tho. Wentworth, William Sorton, Walter Mantill, George Warham, Edward Seymer. The next morrow the Army remoued to a place called Neale. The Souldiers being thus led from place to place, began to grudge, because of the winter season.

Duke of Suffolke maketh Knights.

The 6. of Nouem. the whole army came to a village called Ycau, & there rested that night, on the morrow they came to a place called Beuford: at this passage the Duke made John Dudley, and Robert Vrsright Knights.

The 8. of November, the Duke remoued to Mount S. Martine, and the Army remoued to Perwent, and there rested for a time. The Westlinen murmured that they might not returne home: but there were to the number of 1000. persons vnder the leading of Sir John Wallope, which had little wages or none, and liued as aduenturers, and therefore were so called, and of some called Brokers, these by spoyling of townes, taking of prisoners, and other such practises, brought daily to the campe, Horses, Victuals, Cloth, and other necessaries, which stood them in great stead.

Aduenturers or Brokers.

The 13. of November the Duke removed to a place with in 2. miles of Bogham castle, there the Westlinen set out great shouts and cryed: home, home, and as fast the Brokers cried: hang, hang, whereof great busines was like to haue ensued: the Frenchmen yelded the castle of Bogham, and all the Artillery, which was 76. peeces great and small. The Duke broke vp his army and returned, and left at Valencenus all the great ordinance, and returned into England the 30. day of December.

In December, at the City of Couentry, Francis Phillip Schoolemaster to the Kings Henrmen, Christopher Pickering clearke of the Kings larder, and Anthony Manuile gentleman, intended to haue taken the Kings treasure of his subsidy, as the collectors of the same came toward London, therewith to haue raysed men, and to haue taken the Castle of Killingworth, and then to haue made battell against the King, for the which they were drawne, hanged, and quartered at Tiborne the 11. of Feb. the other of their conspiracy were executed at Couentry.

An. reg. 16.

The 25. of May, deceased sir Thom. Louell Knight of the Garter, at Endsfield, and was buryed at Halywell an house of Nuns besides London, vnto the which house he had done a great benefactor, not onely in building of a beautifull Chappell, wherein his body was interred, but in many other godly buildings, and indowing the same with lands: And the same moneth deceased Thomas Lord Howard Duke of Norffolke, and was honourably buried at Chatford, and after at Fremingham, where he resteth.

The souldiers of Guisnes toke a great booty at a faire in the towne of Norguilon, and sir Rob. Iernegan with certain dimilances of Caleis, toke diuers French prisoners.

The first of September, Doctor Tho. Hanibal maister of the rols, was received into London as ambassador from Clement the 7. Pope, which brought with him a Rose of golde for a token to the King, which was presented to him at Windsor. This tree was forged of fine gold, and wrought with branches, leaues, and flowers, resembling roses, set in a potte of Golde, which pot had 3. feete of antike fashion, of measure halfe a pint. In the vppermost rose was a faire saphire loupe pearced, the bignes of an Acorne. The tree was of height halfe an English yard, and in breadth a foote.

It chanced in the yere passed, as partly hath been touched, a grudge to breake out betweene the French king, and the Duke of Burbon, insomuch that the Duke for the safegard of his life fled out of the French kings dominions, whereof the Cardinall Wolsey hauing intelligence, compiled in his heade, that if the King our our soueraigne Lord could obtayne him to be his generall in the warre against the French king, and considering further that the Duke of Burbon was fledde vnto the Emperour to inuite him to a like purpose, wherefore he hauing this imagination in his head, thought it good to moue the King in the matter, and after the King was once aduertised hereof, and conceiuing the Cardinals inuention, at last it came to a consultation among the Councell, so that it was concluded, that an Ambassage should be sent to the Emperour about the matter, with whom he was, that the King and the Emperour should ioyne in hole warres against the French King, and that the Duke of Burbon should be our Kings Champion and Generall in the fielde, who had great number of good Souldiers, ouer and besides the Emperours Army, which was not small: and that the King should pay vnto the Duke monethly wages, both for himselfe and his retinue, insomuch, as Sir John Russell lay continually beyond the seas in a secret place, both to receiue money of the King, and to pay the same monethly to the Duke, so that the Duke beganne the warres with the French King in his owne territory and Dukedome, which the King had confirmed in his owne hands, being not perfectly knowne vnto the dukes enemies that he had any aid out of England, and thus he wrought the French King much displeasure, insomuch, as the French king was constrained to prepare a puissant army, and in his owne person to resist the Dukes power, and with force the King drawe him to take Pauia, a strong Towne in Italy, with his horse, for their securitie, where as the king encamped him wonderously strong, intending to enclose the Duke that he should not issue forth, yet notwithstanding, the Duke did many times issue forth and skirmished with the King.

The Duke of Burbon champion for the King of England against the King of France.

Sir John Russell.

John Iokin messenger from the French king.

1525. Now let vs returne againe to the Cardinall Wolsey, who seemed to be sodainely altered, and to be more French than Emperiall, howsoeuer it came to passe: but the French king lying in his Campe, sent secretly into England a priuy person, a very witty man, to treate a peace betwixt the French King, and our King: this person was named John Iokin, who was kept as secretly as might be, for he was no Frenchman borne, but an Italian, a man of no great estimation in France, and for his subtill witte, elected to entreate of such Ambassage, as the French King had giuen him in commission. This Iokin was secretly conueyed into Richmond, and there remained, till the Cardinall resorted thither vnto him, where after Easter terme ended, he kept the feast of Whitsontide vere solemnely, in which season the Cardinall caused diuers times this Iokin to dine with him. Thus continued this Iokin in England long after, vntill at the last, as it should seeme, he brought to passe the matter that he had in commission. After this, there was sent out immediatly a restraint to sir Io. Russell, into those parts where he made his abiding beyond the seas, that hee should retaine that moneths wages still in his hands, vntill the Kings pleasure were to him knowne, which should haue beene paid to the Duke of Burbon, being then with his retinue encamped within the towne of Pauy, for want whereof at his day the Duke and his men were sore dismaid, when they saw there was not money brought as it was wont to be: and being in so dangerous a case, and where victualles began to be scant and very deere, they imagined many wayes what should be the lette, some sayde this, and some sayde that, so that they mistrusted nothing lesse, then the very cause thereof, insomuch, as at the last, what for want of victualles, and other necessaries, the Souldiours and Captaynes beganne to grudge and mutter, and at last, for lacke of victualles were like all to perish. The Souldiers being in this extremitie, came before their Captayne the Duke of Burbon, and sayde: Sir wee must bee of very force and necessitie constrayned to pelell by vp to our enemies, and better it were for vs so to do, then to sterue like Dogges. When the Duke saw their extremitie, hee saide vnto them with weeping eyes: Sirs (quoth hee) ye are both valiant men, and of Noble hearts, who haue serued me here right worthily, and for your necessitie (whereof I am participant) I ode not a little lament: but I shall desire you as you are Noble in heart and courage, so to take patience for a day or twaine, and if succour come not then from the King of England, as I doubt nothing that he will deceiue vs, I will well agree that wee shall all putte our selues and our liues into the mercie of our Lord, wherewith they were all agreeable. And tarrying the comming of the Kings money, vntill the terme of two dayes were past: the Duke seeing no remedie, called his Noble Captaines and Souldiours before him, and weeping sayde: Ye noble men and Captaines, I see no remedy in this necessitie, but either wee must yelde vs vnto our enemies, or else famish: and to yelde the Towne and our selues, I know not the mercie of our enemies, as for my part I passe not for their cruelties, for I know very well that I shall suffer death most cruelly, if I come into their hands: it is not for my selfe therefore that I so declament, but it is for your sakes, it is for your liues, and safegarde of your persons, for to that ye might escape the danger of our enemies hands, I would most gladly suffer death, therefore good companions, and most noble Souldiers, I shall require you all to consider the dangerous miserie and calamitie that wee stand in, to sell our liues most derely, rather than to bee murthered like beasts: if ye will bee agreeable, wee will take vpon vs this night to giue our enemies an assault, and by that meanes wee may either escape, or else giue them an ouerthrow, and thus if wee better to dye in the Fielde like men, than liue prysoners in captiuitie and miserie, to the which they all agreede: then (quoth the Duke) ye perceiue that our enemies Campe is strong, and that there is no way to enter vpon them but one, and that is so planted with ordinance and strength of men, that it is not possible to attayne to our enemies that wayes to fight with them in Campe: And also now of late you perceiue they haue had but small doubt of vs, insomuch, that they haue kept but very slender watch, therefore my deuice shall be thus: There shall issue out of the Towne about the dead of the night from vs a number of you that be of the most deliuerest to assault their Campe, and they shall giue the assault right secretly, euen directly against the place of the entrie which is very strong and inuincible, your fierce and valiant assault shall be to them of the Campe so doubtfull, that they will turne their strength of the entry that lyeth ouer against your assaulte, to beate you from your purpose; then will I issue out of the Posterne, and come to the place of their strength newly turned, and there or they bee aware will I enter, and fight with them in their Campe, and winne their Ordinance, which they haue newly turned, and beate them with their owne peeces, and then may you come and ioyne with mee in the Fielde. This deuice pleased them woonderfull well. Then prepared they all that day for the purposed deuice, and kept them secret and close without any noyse, or shotte off peeces within the Towne, which gaue their Enemies the lesse feare of the assaulte: but at night went to their Tentes, and cowched quietly, nothing mistrusting that after happened vnto them. When the time came that all men were at rest, the assaylants issued out of the Towne, and there according to their appointment, they gaue so cruell and fierce assaulte, that thee in the Campe had as much to doe as was possible to resist them: and euen as the Duke declared before to his Souldiours, they within were compelled to turne their shotte that lay at the entry, against the assaylants. With that issued out the Duke, and with him about fiftene or sixtene thousand men, or more, secretly in the night, his Enemies being not pryuie of his comming vntill hee was entered the Fielde, and at his entry hee take all the Ordinance that laye there, and slewe the Gunners, then he charged the peeces against his Enemies, and slue them woonderfully, hee cutte downe the Tentes and Pauilions, and murthered many with in them, ere they were ware of his comming, suspecting nothing lesse than his entry, so that hee wanne the Fielde or euer the King could arise to the rescue; insomuch, as the King was taken in his lodging by the Vice-roy of Naples or euer he were harnessed, his Tentes were robbed and spoyled, which were woondrous rich, and in the spoyle and search of the Kings Coffers, the Duke of Burbon found the league vnder the great Seale of England, newly made betweene the King of England, and the French King, which once perceiued by him, began to smell the impediment of his money which should haue come vnto him from the King, hauing vpon diligent search intelligence, that all the matter was deuised by the Cardinall of England. The Duke conceiued such an indignation hereupon against the Cardinall, that incontinently he went to Rome, and there intended to sack the towne, and to haue taken the Pope, where at the first assault of the walles, the Duke was the first man that was slaine: yet notwithstanding, his Captaines continued their assault, and at the last won the Towne, and the Pope fled vnto the Castle of Saint Angell, where he continued long in calamity. All this notwithstanding, which ye haue heard, when newes was brought into England of the taking of the French King, great triumph was made for ioy thereof, on the 9. of March. Another triumph on the fiftene of March, for ioy that Richard de la Pole was slaine in the battell of Pauy. This battell of Pauy is at large set downe by Paulus Iouius.

French King taken prisoner.

Rome sacked

About such time as Cardinal Wolsey was determined to erect his new Colledges in Oxford and Ipswich, he obtained licence and authority of Pope Clement the 7. to suppresse about the number of 40. Monasteries of good fame, and bountifull hospitality, wherein the King bearing with all his doings, neyther Bishop, nor temporall Lord in this Realme durst say any word to the contrary. Now he manifested his pride vpon further hope of future greatnes.

Cardinall Wolsey suppresseth priories to build his colledges in Oxford & in Ipswich.

In the executing of this businesse, 5. persons were his chiefe instruments, who on a time made a demand to the Pope and couent of the monastery of Deintry, for occupying of certaine of their grounds, but the monks refusing to satisfie their requests, straight-way they picked a quarrell against the house, and gaue information to the Cardinall against them, who taking a small occasion, commanded the house to be dissolued, and to be conuerted to his new Colledge, but of this irreligious robbery done of no conscience, but to patch vp pride, which priuate wealth could not furnish, what punishment hath since ensued at Gods hand (saieth mine Author) partly our selues haue seene, for of those 5. persons, two fell at discord betweene themselues, and the one slewe the other, for the which, the Surviuor was hanged: the third drowned himselfe in a Well: the fourth being well knowne, and valued worth two hundred pound, became in thee yeeres so poore, that he begged till his dying day: and the fift called Doctor Allane, being chiefe executor of these doings, was cruelly maimed in Ireland, euen at such time as hee was a Bishop: the Cardinall falling after into the Kings grieuous displeasure, was deposed, and died miserably: the Colleges which hee meant to haue made so glorious a building, came neuer to good effect: the one at Ipswich cleane pulled downe, and the other in Oxford vnfinished: and Pope Clement himselfe by whose authority these houses were throwne downe to the ground, was after inclosed in a dangerous siege within the Castle of S. Angel in Rome by the Emperials, the City of Rome was pitifully sacked, and himselfe narrowly escaped with his life, as shall be shewed in anno. 1527.

E. Hall. Ambassadors to the Emperor Charles

In the moneth of March, King Henry sent Cuthbert Tunstall Bishop of London a famous clearke, sir Richard Wingfield chancellor of the Dutchy, and Knight of the Garter, into Spaine, to common with the Emperor for causes concerning the taking of the French King, for warres to be made into France on euery side.

The first part of all mens goods demanded to the King in his warres.

The King being thus determined to make warres in France, and to passe the Sea himselfe in person, his councell considering that a-bone all things, great treasure and plenty of money must needs be prouided, deuised strange commissions, and sent commissioners in euery shire, with privy instructions how they should proceede in the sittings, and order the people to bring them to their purpose, which was, that the first part of euery mans substance, should be payd in money or plate to the King without delay, for the furniture of his warre: whereof followed such euciing, weeping, and exclamation against both King and councell, that pity it was to heare. And notwithstanding all that could be said by the commissioners, to perswade the people to this contribution, the same would not be granted: but in excuse of their denialls, it was alleaged that wrong was offered and the ancient customes and lawes broken, which would not any man to be charged with such payments, except it were granted by the estates of the realme in Parliament.

The like answere was made by them of the spiritualty, of whom was demanded the fourth part of their goods.

The Emperors Ambassadors departeth secretly out of England.

Monsieur de Parate the Emperors Ambassador, whether offended for admitting of Iokin in the Realme, as before ye haue heard, or for some other cause, on the ninth of Aprill departed out of England, not taking leaue of the King, Cardinall, or rest of the Councell, and did so much, that he passed through France in Post, and came to the Emperor before the Ambassadors of England came thither, and whether it was by his report, or otherwise, the accustomed fauour that the Emperour and his Councell shewed to the Englishmen began to decay, and the Emperor withdrew his good opinion from the Cardinall, which the Cardinall soone perceiued.

King Henry in danger of drowning.

In this yere (saith Hall) King Henry following his hauke, lept ouer a ditch beside Pitchen, with a pole, and the pole brake, so that if one Edmond Mody a seruingman, had not lept into the water, and lift vp his head, which was fast in the clay, he had beene drowned.

An. Reg. 17.

The Commissioners in all shires sitting for the leuy of the first part of all mens goods, as ye haue heard, the burthen was so grieuous, that it was denyed, and the commons in euery place were so mooued, that it was like to haue growne to a rebellion: when this mischiefe was shewed to the King he said, that he neuer knew of that demand, and therefore with great diligence hee sent his letters to the City of London, and to other places, in the which hee gently wrote, that yet would he demand no sum certaine, but such as his louing subiects would grant to him of their good wils, toward the maintenance of his warres.

The demand of the first part of mens goods remitted.

Wherefore the Cardinall on the 26. of Aprill sent for the Maior of London, the Aldermen, with most substantiall persons of the common councell, and when they were come to Westminster, he said: that the King our soueraigne Lord, most graciously considereth the great loue, zeale, and obedience, which you beare vnto him and where like louing subiects, without any grudge, or gaine-saying of your louing mindes you haue granted the first part of all your goods and substance, freely to be paid according to the firth valuation, the which louing grant and good mind, he so kingly accepted, that it was marueile to see: but I my selfe do consider the great losses, and other charges that daily hath and doth to you growe, and that notwithstanding, any losse or charge that happeneth to you, yet you neuer with stood no, gainst said any of the Kings demands or commissions, as it appeareth now of late, of which things I haue highly the King informed, for the which hee gaue you harty thankes. Then I kneeled downe to his grace, shewing him both your good mindes toward him, and also the charges that you continually sustaine, the which at my desire and petition, hee was content to call in, and abrogate the same Commission. And where hee by reason of your owne grants might haue demanded the said summe as a verie debt, yet he is content to release and pardon the same, and will nothing take of you but your benevolence: wherefore take heere with you the Kings letter, and let it bee reade to the commons, and I doubt not but you will gladly doo as louing subiects would doo. The 28. of Aprill, in the common Councell of the City was read the Kings letter, according to the effect aboue rehearsed. Wherefore the Citizens sent 4. Aldermen, and 12. commoners to Hampton court to giue thankes to the Lord Cardinal, which for busines as was said, could not speake with him, wherefore they returned not content. Then euery Alderman assembled his ward in their places accustomed, and gently mooued them of a benevolence to be granted to the King, the which they openly denyed, saying: That they had paid enough before, with many euill words. The 8. of May the Cardinall againe sent for the Maior and his brethren, which shewed him what they had done. Then said the Cardinall, You haue no such commission to examine any man, I am poor commissioner, I will examine you one by one my selfe: & then I shall know the good will that you beare to your Prince, for I will aske a benevolence of you in his name. Then was it answered to the Cardinal by a Counsellor of the City, that by the law there might no such benevolence be asked, nor men so examined, for it was contrary to the Statute made the 1. yeere of king Richard the third. Also some persons comming before your grace may for feare grant that, that all dayes of their life they shall repent, and some to win your fauor will grant more than they be able to pay of their owne, and so runne in other mens debts, to their vtter decaie and vndoing: and shall not be masters of themselues, but as men distraied, shall grant that, that their wiues and children shall soze rew. The Cardinall heard this saying very patiently, and answered quietly: Sir, I maruell that you speake of Richard the third, which was an diuerer and a murtherer of his owne nephewes: then of so euill a man, how can the acts bee good, make no such allegations, his acts be not honorable: And it please your grace, said the Counsellor, although he did euill, yet in his time were many good acts made, not by him onely, but by the consent of the body of the whole Realme, which is the Parliament. Then Sir William Baily Lord Maior kneeled downe, and besought his grace, that sith it was enacted by the common councell of London, that euery Alderman should sit in his owne ward for a beneuolence to be granted, which he perceiued to bee against the law, that the same act by the same common councell might be reuoked, and no otherwise. Well said the Cardinall, I am content. But now will I enter into the Kings commission: You Maioz, and you master Alderman, what will ye giue? My Lord, said the Maioz, I pray you pardon me, foz if I should enter into any grant, it might foztune to cost me my life. Your life, said the Cardinall, that is a meruellous word, foz your good will toward the King, will the citizens put you in ieopardy of your life, that were strange; foz if they would that way, then must the King come with a strong power them to oppresse, wherefoze speake no more such words, and with that he fwited a little, and said: My Lord Maioz, let you and your Citizens, if you be grieued with any thing, in this demand, humbly and after a good fashion come to me, and I shall so intreat you, that you shall be content, and no displeasure arise, and so I pray you shew your neighbors: so the Maioz foz that day departed. The Maioz (saith Hall) did wisely not to assent to grant to any thing, foz although he and the Aldermen had assented, the common councell would neuer haue assented. So on the next morow it was declared to the common councell, that their act that was made, that euery Alderman should sit foz a beneuolence to be granted, was against a statute law: wherevpon the said act was annulled: and then was it declared that euery man should come to the Cardinall, and to grant plainly what he would, with the which saying the Citizens were soze grieued: then the Maioz gently shewed them, how hee durst warrant that they should be intreated gently, & exhozted them to go thither when they were sent for: which saying so offended them, that in their furie they would haue had Richard Gresham and John Hewster mercers, and Richard Gibson sergeant at armes and merchant tailer, banished out of the common councell, and so without and were made what they would do, they deuorted home.

This demand through the Realme was vterly denyed, so that the commissioners could not bring things to passe, & yet they assaied both by faire and foule meanes. For in Kent the Lord Cobham was commissioner, and handled them roughly, and by reason one I. Skudder answered him clubbishly, he sent him to the Tower of London: for which doing the people muttered against the lord Cobham, and said expressely that they would pay no money, and they began to account the loanes and subsidies granted, so that they reckoned the Kings treasure innumerable: for they accounted that the R. had taken of his Realme 20. fifteens sith the 14. yere of his raigne, and in this grudge they euill intreated Sir Thomas Boleine at Maidstone.

The people were generally offended both with the king and Cardinall for this matter.

In Essex the people would not assemble before the commissioners in no houses, but in open places. And in Huntingdon shire diuers resisted the commissioners, and would not suffer them to sit, which were apprehended and sent to the fleete. The Duke of Suffolke sitting in commission about this subsidie or taske in Suffolke, perswaded by curteous meanes the rich clothiers to assent thereto: but when they came home, and went about to discharge and put from them their spinners, carders, fullers, weauers, and other artificers, which they kept in woze afoze time, the people began to assemble in companies, whereof when the Duke was aduertised, he commanded the Constables that euery mans harnesse should be taken from them: but when that was knowne, the rage of the people increased, railing openly on the Duke, and Sir Robert Drurie, and threatned them to death, and the Cardinall also: and herewith there assembled together, after the manner of rebels, foure thousand men of Lanam, Sudbery, Hadley, and other Townes there about, which put themselues in harnesse, and rang larams to increase their number. The Duke of Suffolke perceiuing this, began to gather such a power as he could, but that was very slender: yet the bzidges being bzoken, those rebels were letted of comming against the Duke, the Cardinall still endeuoured to please the King, hoping thereby to maintains his owne greatnes.

The Duke of Norffolke treasurer of England raised a power in Norffolke, and came to the Duke of Suffolke, he first sent to the people, to know their griefe. They answered, that as they had some matters that grieued them, so had they will to spend their liues in the Kings service as obedient subiects. Then the Duke rode to them, and demanded what was the cause of their disquiet, and who was their captaine? Unto whom one John Greene a man of fiftie yeres olde answered, that poverty was both cause and captaine. For the rich clothiers, Spring of Lanam, and other had giuen ouer occupying, whereby they were put from their ordinarie worke, and liuing. The Duke with curteous words willed them to depart home, promising them, that he and the Duke of Suffolke would intreat the King for them, whereupon they became quiet, and returned, & in token of repentance, they came to Saint Saint Edmondsbury in their shirts, and hallers about their neckes desiring pardon: the two Dukes take a few of them to London, which after some imprisonment were pardoned and deliuered.

Great councell called to Yorke place by Westminster.

Then the King at Yorke place, where the Cardinall lay, called a great Councell, in the which hee openly protested, that his minde was neuer to aske any thing of the commons, which might sound to the breach of his lawes, wherefoze he willed to know by whose means the commissions were so straightly giuen foztb, as to demand the 5ft part of euery mans goods. The Cardinall answered and saide, that when it was moued in the Councell, how to leuy money to the Kings vse, the kings councell, and namely the Judges said, that he might lawfully demand any summe by commission, and that by the consent of the whole councell it was done, and toke God to witnes, that he neuer desired the hindrance of the commons, but like a true counseller deuised how to enrich the King: and the spirituall men say, that it standeth with Gods law, for Ioseph caused the king of Egypt, to take the 5ft part of euery mans goods: but because euery man layeth the burthen from him, I am content to take it on me, and to endure the fame and noyse of the people, for my good will toward the King, and comfort of you my Lozds, and other the Kings counsellors, but the eternall God knoweth all. Well said the King, some haue informed me, that my Realme was neuer so rich, and that there should neuer trouble haue risen of that demand, and that men would pay at the 5ft request, but now I finde all contrarie: then euery man held his peace. Then the King saide, I will no more of this trouble, let letters be sent to all shires, that this matter may no more be spoken of. I will pardon all that haue made deniall openly or secretly: then all the Lozds kneeled downe, and hartily thanked him. Then letters were sent, in the which were shewed, that the Lozds and the Judges, and other of the Kings councell, deuised that demand, and that the Cardinall followed the mind of the whole councell. And thus was the Kings great iourne into France staied for this time.

This yere the Tower at Greenewich was newly repaired and builded.

Creations at Bridewell. The King dignifies his base sonne wonderously.

The 18. of June, at Bridewell Henry Fitz Roy, which King Henry the eight had by Elizabeth daughter to sir John Blunt knight, was created Earle of Nottingham, Duke of Richmond and of Somerset, lieutenant generall from Trent northward, warden of the East, middle, and west marches, foz anewst Scotland, he was borne in the manno2 place of Blackamoze in Essex, it was then the Priors house of Blackamoze. Henry Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, cosen german to the King, was created Marques of Exceter: Henry Brandon sonne to the Duke of Suffolke, was created Earle of Lincolne: sir Thomas Manners Lord Rosse, Earle of Rutland, sir Henry Clifford Earle of Cumberland, and the Lord Fitz water, sir Robert Ratcliffe was created Vicount Fitz Water, and sir Thomas Boleine treasurer of the Kings houshold, was created Vicount Rochford.

This yere 1525 Charles King of Spaine made fierce war vpon Francis the French King in Italie, and tooke the French King prisoner, and led him prisoner into Spaine, and the next yere the Emperour set the French King at liberte and married the Emperours sister. The French king taken prisoner by the Emperor.

In this winter was a great death in the city of London, so that the terme was adiourned, and the King kept his Christmas at Eltham with a small company, wherefoze it was called the still Christmas.

The Cardinall ketcheth an order in the kings house.

The Cardinall about this time comming to the court at Eltham, take order foz altring the state of the Kings house, many officers and other seruants were discharged, and put to pensions. In which number were 64. yeomen of the gard, which before having 12.d. the day with cherke, were now allowed 6.d. the day without cherke, and commanded to goe home into the countries. He also made new officers in the house of the Duke of Richmond, which was then newly beginne. Also at that time he ordained a councell, and established another houshold foz the Lady Mary, then being Princesse of the Realme, so that all things, that were done, was done by him, foz to him was the charge of all things committed. At this time the saide Cardinall gaue to the King the lease of the manno2 of Hampton court, which he had of the leafe of the Lozd of S. Johns, and on which he had done great cost in building: In recompence whereof, the King licenced him to lie in his manno2 of Richmond at his pleasure, and so he lay there at certaine times, the Cardinals double diligence and ambition was his ouerthzow. Hampton court builded by the Cardinall, and given to the King.

On Shzouetuesday, there was holden soz Iusts at Greenwich. solemne iusts at Greenwich, the King and 11. other on the one part: and the Marques of Exceter with 11. other on the contrarie part. At these iusts by chance of thinering of a speare, sir Francis Brian lost one of his eyes.

The 11. of February, foure merchants of the Stilyard did pennance at Paules crosse, and an Augustine Fryer called Doctoz Barnes bare a fagot: there was present the Lord Cardinall with 11. Bishoppes, John Fisher Bishop of Rochester made the Sermon, which was against Martine Luther of Germany, and his doctrine. Stilyard merchants did pennance.

A truce was taken betweene England and France foz a certaine space, and Ambassadors were sent into Denmarke, foz reasoning of their King: but the Danes would grant nothing thereunto, they did so deadly hate him foz his cruelty.

The 28. of April came to the court at Greenwich Monsieur Briond, President of Roane, and Iohn Iockin, which President before the King and his nobles made in the Latin tong a solemne oration, the effect whereof was, how dreadfull the warres had bene betweene the Realmes of England and France, the declared An. Reg. 28. Peace with France.

clared further of what power the King of England was, and what conquest hée might haue made in France, the French King being prisoner, where of he humbly thanked him of his pitty and compassion that he had on them in their necessitie, that he would consent to peace: To the which oration, sir Thomas More Chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, made answere, saying: that it much reioyced the king, that they first considered, how by his power he might haue oppressed, and how by his pitie he had relieued them: wherefore he would hereafter, that for kindnes they should shew him nons unkindnes, but inuiolably keepe that league which was concluded.

Proclamation against vnlawfull games.

In the month of May, was proclamation made against all vnlawfull games, and commissions awarded into euery shire, for the execution of the same, so that in all places, tables, dice, cardes, and boules were taken and brent: but when yong men were restrained of these games and pastimes, some fell to drinking, some to forretting of other mens cornes, & stealing of Déere in parkes, and other vnthriftines.

Gold enhaunced.

In this season the angell noble was the first part of an ounce troy, so that fiue angels were iust an ounce, which was 40. s, sterling, and the angell was worth two ounces of siluer, so that fiue angels were worth 12. ounces, which was but 40.s, in siluer. By reason of the good weight, and low valuation of the English coine, merchants daily caried ouer great store because the same was much enhaunsed there: so that to méete with this inconuenience (as it was said) Proclamation was made in the moneth of September the first day, throughout England, that the angell should go for 7. shillings 4. pence, the royall for 11.s. and the crowne for 4.s.4. pence. And on the 5. of November following againe by proclamation, the angell was enhaunsed to 7.s.6.d. and so euery ounce of gold should be 45.s. and an ounce of siluer at 3.s.9. in bullion.

1527.

Great raine and land waters.

In the moneths of November, December, and January fell such raine, that thereof ensued great floods, which destroyed corne-fields pastures, and beasts, then was it day till the twelfth of Aprill, and from that time it rained euery day and night till the third of June, whereby Corne failed sore in the yére following.

Ambassadors into France.

King Henry sent Thomas Boleine Vicount Rochford, and sir Anthony Browne knight ambassadors into France, which came to Paris to the Bishop of Bathe that lay there for the king as legat, and then these three went to the court and saw the French king take the oath to kéepe the league and amitie, concluded betweene him and the King of England.

Ambassadors to the Emperor.

Also king Henry sent Sir Francis Poines knight, Ambassador to Charles the Emperor, & with him Clarentius king at armes, to demand the one halfe of the treasure and ordinance which was taken at Pauie, for so much as the war was made as well at the Kings charge as at the Emperors. Also they were commanded to demand one of the French Kings sons, which lay in hostage with the Emperor, that is to wit, the Duke of Orleance to be deliuered to the King of England: and further that he should call backe his army out of Italy, and if so were that he refused these requests, then should they in the kings name denounce open warre against him.

In this meane time Rome was taken by the Emperials, & the Pope brought into captiuitie, as ye shall heare: Charles Duke of Burbon, and the Emperors army, which all the last winter lued in great pouerty, without clothes, victuals, or wages, so that they were in manner desperate, went toward Parma, and Bonony, belonging to the sea of Rome. The Pope hearing this, sent messengers to the D. to redeeme his townes, so that they should not be spoiled. The Duke asked 350000. Duckats, for sauing of the Popes land, and if they might haue so much mony, they would depart to Naples: but when they saw they could not haue their demand, they turned toward Florence, whereof hearing the Romans they were glad, for they thought that the Florentines would hold god warre with them, and then the Romans would giue the looking on: but the chance turned, as ye shall heare.

Edward Hall. The City of Rome taken and sacked.

The Duke of Burbon had thought to haue gone to Florence for this cause: there was a gentleman in Florence called Peter de Saluito which had a brother that serued the Emperor in his warres, which promised to deliuer the City, for he determined to cause the commons to rebell in the City against the heads, and in the meane season the Dukes companie should scale the walles: when this Peter knew that the Emperors army was come to a place called le Chase, within twelue miles of the City, to bring his purpose to conclusion, hée with such as he had trained to him, cried in the city, Liberate de populo, that is to say, liberty of the people: which voice the people étirred, and came to the palace in great number, and there they toke the fire Lords of the Councell, which had the rule of the wealth of the city, clue one of them. The familie of Medices, which were the popes kindred were at this time sore afraide. Thus this Peter de Saluito with the commons, gate that palace, and rang the common bell. In this season was in Florence a Captaine of the French king called Frederico de Bedso, he had with him three hundred men, and when he saw this rebellion, he came to the commons and said: sirs if you continue in this case, your faire City is like to be subuerted, for your enemies bée at hand: which notwithstanding that you beare some fauour to the Emperor, as appeareth, yet their nédinesse and pouerty is such, that without mercy they will robbe, murther and slay you, your wiues and children, and set fire on your beautifull city. This Captaine much feared the citizens, notwithstanding that twenty or more persons were slaine in the ruffle: yet they were well auoided, and suddenly entred into into the City the Duke of Vrbine, which lay but 6. miles from Florence, and 18. miles from the Emperors army, whom hee had coasted: but he thought no aduantage to medle. This Duke brought with him 5000. foote men, and 600. horsemen, and when hée was entred the Citie, a crie was made that all things were pardoned, so that euery man departed home, and deliuered his weapon, and thus the City was appeased the 28. of Aprill. All this doing within was vnknowne to the Emperors army, and so for lacke of knowledge this enterprise was lost: which was happie for the Florentines. Sore displeased were the Emperors Captaines when they knew of this chance, and how the Duke of Vrbine was entred into the City of Florence. And so shortly they departed, and came to the City of Seines thirty miles off, and there they lost their great ordinance, and toke councell to goe to Rome, notwithstanding the truce concluded betwéene the Pope, and the vice Roy of Naples and Hugo de Moncada, and so much they trauelled by night and day, that the 6. of May with banners displaide they came before the City of Rome. The Romanes make Bulwarks, raumpiers, and other defences, and laid ordinance on the wals, and shot at them fiercely. The Duke of Burbon waying that it were not best to lye still and bée slaine, considering that they were all naked people, and without great Ordinance: determined to take the chaunce, and to giue the assaulte, and so manfully they approched the wals, betweene the Burgo nono and old Rome, but the Romans valiantly defended them, with hand-guns, pikes, stones, and other weapons, so that the enemies were faine to retire. The Romanes were glad, set many faire banners on their Towers, and Bulwarks, which séing, the Duke of Burbon cried to a new assault: then euery man with a Ladder mounted, and at the first encounter the Romans against put them a little backe: which perceiuing the Duke, he cried, God and the Emperor: then euery man set on manfully, there was a sore fight, many a man felled, but at the last the Emperials gotte the wall: and betweene euery assault fell a misse, so that they within could not sée what part they without would assaile, which was profitable to the Emperials. At the third assault were slaine three hundred Switchers of the Popes guarde. In this last assault was the Duke of Burbon stricken in the thigh with a hand-gunne, of which he shortly died, in a chappell of S. Syth, whither his souldiors had brought him. And this chance notwithstanding, the army entred into Rome, and toke the Popes palace. The same day that these three assaults were made, Pope Clement passed little on the Emperors army, for he had accursed them on the Saturday before, and in his curse he called the Almains Lutherans, and the Spaniards, Puritns or Mores. And when he was hearing of masse, sodainly the Almains entred the church, and slue his guard, and diuers other. He séing that fled, by a priuie way to the Castle Angell: and all they that followed him that way and could not enter, were slaine. The Cardinals and other Prelats fled to the Castle Saint Angell ouer the bridge, where many of the common people were ouer-prelled, and drowned as they gaue way to the Cardinals, and other states that passed toward the Castle for succour. The Cardinall of Seines, of Sefarine, of Cudertine, of Jacobace and of the Vale, tarried so long, that they could not get the Castell for multitude of people: wherefore they were compelled to take another house called the Palace of S. George, where they kept themselues for a while, as secretly as they might. You must vnderstand, that through the City of Rome runneth a famous Riuer called Tiber, and on the other side of the Riuer standeth the Castle of Saint Angell, or the Borough of Saint Angell: and the other side is called Burgo nouo. This bridge is called the bridge of Sixt, which lieth directly before the Castle. At the end of this Bridge was a wonderous strong Bulwarke, well ordinanced, and well manned. The Emperials saw they could doe nothing to the Pope, not to the port of the city but by the bridge, determined to assaile the Bulwarke: and so as men without feare came to the Bridge: and the Romanes so well defended them, that they slue almost foure thousand men. That séeing the Prince of Orenge, and the Marques of Guasto, with all spéede gaue assaulte, and notwithstanding that the Romanes shot great Ordinance, Handguns, Quarels, and all that might be shot, yet the Emperials neuer shranke, but manly entered the Bulwarke and slue, and threw downe out at the loupes all the Romans that they found, and after raced the Bulwarke to the ground. The Pope in the Castle Angell beheld this fight, and with him were three and twentie Cardinals, of which one called the Cardinall Sanctorum quatuor was slaine, and with him were a thousand Prelats and Priests, fiue hundred gentlemen, fiue hundred souldiors: wherefore immediately the Captaines determined to lay siege to the Castle Angell, lest they within might issue out and turne them to damage: wherefore sodainely a siege was planted round about the Castle: In the meane season, the Souldiers fell to spoyle, neuer was Rome so pilled, neyther of the Gothes nor Vandals, for the Souldiers were not content with the spoile of the Citizens, but they robbed the Churches, brake vp the houses of close religious persons, and ouerthrew the Cloisters, they spoiled virgins and rauished wiues, men were tormented if they had not to giue euery new asker or demander: some were strangled, some were tormented vp the prime members, to cause them to confesse their treasure. This woodnes continued a great while, and some man might thinke, that when they had gotten so much, then they would cease and bée quiet, but that was not so, for they played continually at dice, some 500. some 10000. duckats at a cast: he that came to play necessitie place, went away againe almost euery night, and then fell to rifling againe: Many of the Citizens which could not patiently suffer that vexation, drowned themselues in Tyber. The Souldiers that laye at the siege easily made it fall out of the Pope, sometime they had one victory that the Pope, with a whoze behinde him, sometime he blessed, and sometime he cursed, and sometime they would with one voyce call him Antichriſt. They went about to vndermine the Castle, and to haue thzowne it downe on his head, but the water that encompaſſeth the Castle disappointed their purpoſe. In this season the Duke of Vrbine with fifteene thousand men came to aide the Pope: but hearing that Rome was taken, he tarried 20. mile from Rome till he heard other word. The Marques of Seſaire, and Sir Fredericke de Bedſo with 10000. fatemen, and 1000. hoſsemen, were at Viterbe the 10. of May, where they hearing that the City of Rome was taken, also tarried: the Cardinall of Colonne came with an army of Neapolitanes to helpe the Emperozs men: but when he saw the cruelty of the Souldiers, he did little to helpe them, but hasted them much. The Bishoppe of Rome was thus beſieged till the eight of July, at which day he yeelded himſelfe, foz neceſsitie and pzomiſe of all things in the Castle. And then he was restozed to giue graces and graunt buls, as hee did before: but he tarried still in the Castle Saint Angell, and had a great number of Almaines and Spaniards to keepe him: but the Spaniards bare moſt rule in the Castle, foz no man entred noz came out of the Castle, but by them. When the moneth of July was come, rayne beganne to faile in Rome, and the pestilence beganne to waxe strong, wherefore the great armie remoued to a place called Narnya 40. mile from Rome, leauing behind them such as kept the Pope. When they were departed, the Spaniardes neuere were contented, till they hadde gotten the Almaines out of the Castle of Saint Angell, and so they had the whole custody of the Pope. Thus Rome continued in peace till the moneth of September, that the army came againe from Narnia: for then the Almaines feare, that they would set the City and all on fire except the Pope would pay them their wages. The Pope sent to commune with them, two Archbishoppes, two Bishoppes and two Gentlemen, these six persons the Almaines take as pledges, contrary to the Popes meaning, and saide they would keepe them there, till they were paid, and to put them in a strong Chamber, in the Palace of Saint George: and euery day almost they would bring them foath openly, and scoffe with them, and threat to hang them if they were not paide, and so they kept them imprisoned in a Chamber, and watched them day and night without the Chamber: and yet for all that, they gatte out at a chimney on Saint Andrew euen, and were no more sene of them. The Almaines were so wroth with this chance, that they came to the Prince of Orenge their generall Captaine, and demanded money of him, in such rigozous manner, that he was faine secretly to flye to Senes: and then for him they chose Captaine, the Marques of Guasto, which governed them till February, that he brought them to Naples.

In the meane space, by means of great armies prepared by the Kings of England, of France, and other for the Popes deliuerance, the Emperor sent letters to the Pope, and excused himselfe, that he neyther willed nor commanded such mischiefe to bee done, and streightly commanded his Captaines to deliuer him. The Prince of Orange and other Captaines of the Emperor, hearing his commandement, take agreement with the Pope and his Cardinals, and so he and twelue Cardinals were bound to performe certaine articles to the number of eleuen, and then he was deliuered out of the castle Saint Angell, the 10. of December, and was conueyed to Orpot, where after he had payd certaine money for the souldiers wages, hee was put at full liberty, and the Emperors people departed from him, and from thence hee remoued to Ancona: the Emperors Captaines (fearing the French armie prepared) caused all the Souldiers to depart out of Rome in the beginning of February: and so came into the Realme of Naples, and fortified certaine townes as they passed, and so came to a towne called Troy, and there stayed. This remouing was to them profitable, for if they had tarried at Rome, they had beene set on, by the Italians on the one side, and the Frenchmen on the other side, that by euery mans iudgement they should haue beene slaine or taken. Thus much for the sacking of Rome. Pope Clemens deliuered.

Also about this time, diuers complaints being made of Geralde Fitz Gerald Earle of Kyldare, late deputie of Ireland, that he wilfully winked at the Earle of Desmonde, whom hee should haue attached by the Kings letters, that hee curryed acquaintance, and affinitie with more Irish Enemies, that he hanged, and beheaded rashly good subiects, whom hee mistrusted to leane to the Butlers friendshippe, wherefore Kyldare was commanded to appeare which hee did, leauing in his roome Fitz Geralde of Kerlip, whom they shortly deposed, and chose the Baron of Delue, whom Oconnor Faley poisoned, and there the Earle of Ossory, to shew his liability of seruice, brought to Dinsline an army of Irishmen, having Captaines ouer them, Oconnor, Omer, and Ocarrall, and at S. Mary abbey was chosen deputy by the kings councell. In whose office being himselfe (saue onely in feates of armes) a simple Gentleman hee bare out his honour, and the charge of gouernment very worthily, thorowe the singular wisedome of his Countesse, a Lady of such port, that all Estates of the Realme crouched vnto her, so politike, that nothing was thought substantially debated without her aduise, manlike and tall of stature, very rich and bountifull, Gerald Fitz Gerald departed of Ireland accused.

bountifull, a bitter enemie, the onely meane at those dayes, whereby her husbands countrey was reclaimed from the sluttish and vncleane Irish custome, to English habit, bedding, house-keeping, and ciuilitie: but to these bertues was yoked such a selfe-liking, and Maiestie aboue the tenure of a subiect, that for assurance thereof she kicked not to abuse her husbands honor against her brothers folly: notwithstanding I learne not that she practised his vndoing, which indeed, and was to her vndoubtedly great heauines, as vpon whom both the blemish thereof, the sufferance of that whole family depended after, but that she by indirect meanes cogged her brother out of credit to aduance her husband, the common voice and the thing it selfe speaketh. All this while abode the Earle of Kyldare at the court, and with much ado found shift to be called before the Lords to answere solemnly, they set vpon him diuerslie affected, and in especiall the Cardinall Lord Chancellor, disliked his cause, comforted his accusers and inforced the articles obiected, and what else soeuer could be gathered thereof in these words.

Cardinall Wolsey his speech to the Earle of Kildare.

I wotte well (my Lord) that I am not the meetest man at this boorde to charge you with these treasons, because it hath pleased some of your pew fellowes to repoze that I am a professed enemy to all nobility, and namely to the Geraldines: but saying euery course boy can say as much when he is controlled, and saying these points are so weighty, that they should not be dissembled of vs, and so apparant that they cannot be denied of you, I must haue leaue (notwithstanding your stale slander) to be the mouth of these honorable at this present and to trumpe your treasons in your way, howsoeuer you take me. First, you remember how the lewd Earle your kinsman, who passeth not whom hee serue, might be change his master, sent his confederates with letters of credence to Francis the French King and hauing but cold comfort there, to Charles the Emperour, proffering the helpe of Monstere and Connagh toward the conquest of Ireland, if either of them would helpe to winne it from our King: how many letters, what Pzecepts, what messages, what threats haue beene sent you to apprehend him, and yet not done? Why so? forsooth I could not catch him: Nay, nay, Carle, forsooth, you would not watch him. If hee be iustly suspect, why are ye partiall in so great a charge? if not, why are you fearefull to haue him tried? possible it will be sworne and deposed to your face, that for feare of meeting him, you haue winked, wilfully shunned his sight, altered your course, warned his friends, stopped both eares and eyes against his detections, and whensoeuer you take vpon you to hunt him out, then was he sure afore hand to hee out of your walke: surely this iugling and false play, little became either an honest man called to such honour, or a noble man put in such trust: had you lost but a cow or a carran of your owne 200. kerneghes would haue come at your whistle to relcue the pray from the furthermost edge of Ulster, all the Irish in Ireland must haue giuen you the way: but in pursuing so notable a matter as this was, meruell God, how nice, how dangerous, how wayward haue you beene? One while for to from home, another time he kepeth home, sometimes feare, sometimes in the borders, where you dare not venture. I was my Lord, there be thicke bugs in the borders, for the Earle of Kildare, to feare the Earle, nay the king of Kildare, for when you are disposed you raigne more like then rule in the land: where you are the malicious, the truest subiects stand for Irish enemies, where you are pleased the Irish enemies stand for duttifull subiects: hearts, and hands, liues and lands, are all at your curtesie, who fauneth not thereon, he cannot rest within your smell, and your smell is so rancke, that you tract them at your pleasure: whilest the Cardinall was speaking, the Earle chafed and changed colour, and sundry profers made to answere euery sentence as it came, at last he brake out, and interrupted him thus. Treasons laide to the Earle of Kyldare. The Earle interrupted the Cardinal

My Lord Chancelor, I beseech you pardon me, I am short witted, and you I perceiue intend a long tale: if you procede in this order, halfe my purgation will be lost for lacke of carriage, I haue no Schoole trickes, nor Art of memory, except you heare me while I remember your words, your second processe will hammer out the former.

The Lords associate, who for the most part tenderly loued him, and knew the Cardinals manner of taunts so lothsome, as wherewith they were tried many yeres ago, humbly besought his grace to charge him directly with particulars, and to dwell in some one matter, till it were examined thoroughly, that granted.

It is good reason, quoth the Earle, that your grace beare the mouth of this Chamber, but my L. those mouths that put this tale into your mouth are very wide mouthes, such as indeed haue gaped long for my wracke, and now at length for want of better stuffe, are faine to fill their mouthes with smoake: what my cosen Desmond hath compassed as I know not, so I beshrew his ricked hart, for holding out so long if hee can be taken by my engins that presently waite for him, then haue mine aduersaries betraied their malice, and this heape of heinous words shall resemble a man of straw, that seemeth at a blush to carry some proportation, but when it is felt and poysed, discouereth a vanity serning onely to frap crowes. And I verily trust your honours will see the proofe, by the thing it selfe within these foure dayes: but go to, suppose he neuer be had, what is Kildare to blame for it more than my good brother of Osery, who notwithstanding his high promises, hauing also the Kings power, is yet content to take egges for his money, and to bring him in at leisure? Can not the Earle of Desmond shift, but I must be of counsell? cannot hee behold except I winke? if he be close, am I his mate? if he be friended, am I a traitor? This is a doughty kind of accusation, which they wage Kyldares reply to the Cardinall.

against me, if herein they are stabled and mired, at my first denyall: you would not see him, say they, who made them so familiar with wine and sights? & when was the C. in wine cognies, & who stood by when I let him slip, & where are the tokens of my willful bad winke? & but you sent him word to beware of you: & who was the messenger, where are the letters? Convince my negatives: for how lasely this idle reason hangeth: Desmond is not taken: well you are in fault, why? because you are: who proves it: no body: what conjectures? so it seemeth: to whom, to your enemies: who told it them? they will sweare it: what other ground? none: will they sweare it my Lords? why, then of like, if they know it, either they have my hand to shew, or can bring forth the messenger, or were present at a conference, or privy to Desmond, or some body had credit with them, or themselves were my carriers, or Vicegerents therein, which of these parts will they chuse, for I know them too well, to reckon my self to commit by their words, or bad selle practises, or trayterous acts: my letter were some read, were any such writing extant, my servants and friends are ready to be tried: if my cosen of Desmond they may lye lawfully, since no man here can well contrarie their tong: my self, I never noted in them either so much wit, or so fast faith, that I would have gaged upon their silence the life of a good horse: much less mine owne self. I doubt not, may it like your honors to appose them how they came to knowledge of these matters, which they are so ready to depose, but you shall find their tongs chained to another mans trencher, and as it were Knights of the post suborned to say, sweare, and stare, the uttermost they can, as those that passe not what they say, nor with what face they say it, so they say no truth but of anetter thing it concerth me, that your good grace, whom I take to be wise and sharp and who of your own blessed disposition wisheth me well, should be so farre gone in crediting those corrupt informers, that abuse the ignorance of your state and countrey to my perill: little know you my Lord how necessary it is, not onely for the governor, but also for every Noble man in Ireland to hamper his unruly neighbors at discretion, where if they waited for processe of law, and had not those lives and lands you speake of within their reach, they might hap to lose their owne lives and lands without law: you heere of a rase, as it were in a dreame, and feele not the smart that vereth us. In England there is not a meane subject that dare extend his hand to fillip a pere of the Realme: In Ireland, except the Lord have carrying to his strength, and strength to save his credit, and sufficient authority to take thames and Darbies when they serve, he shall finde them the same to fall, that it will be too late to call for succor: if you will save our service take effect, you must not tie us allwayes to these judicial proceedings, where with your Realme thanked be God, is cumbred. As touching my Kingdome, my Lord, I would you and I had exchanged kingdoms but for one month, I would trust to gather by more crums in that space, then twice the revenues of my poore Carbrome but you are well and warme, and so I wish you, and upbraide not me with such an odious farme: I sleepe on a cabben, when you lye soft in your bed of downe: I serve under the coope of heaven, when you are served under a canopie: I drinke water out of my scull, when you drinke wine out of golden cups, my exercise is trained to the field, when your gennet is taught to amble: when you are be-graced and be-lorded, and crowched and kneeled unto, then find I small grace with our Irish bedarers, except I cut them off by the knees.

The Cardinall perceived that Ryldare was no babe, and rose in a fume from the Councell table, committed the Earle, deferred the matter, till more direct probations came out of Ireland.

After many mettings, and objections wittily refelled, they pressed him soze with a traiterous errand sent by his daughter lady of Clane to all his brethren, to Oneal, Occonor, and their adherents, wherein he exhorted them to warre upon the Earle of Osery then deputy, which they accomplished, making a wicked conspiracy against the English of Ireland, and many a bloudy skirmish. Of this treason hee was found guiltie, and reprived in the Tower a long time, the gentleman betooke himselfe to God, and the time: was heartily loved of the Lieutenant, pitied in all the Court, and standing in so hard a case, scarred little of his accusshomed bow, con forted other Noble men Prisoners with him. discoursing his owne sozrow. One night when the Lieutenant, and he for his disport were playing at chouell gioat, sodainely commeth from the Cardinall, a Mandatum to execute Ryldare on the morrow. The Earle marking the Lieutenants deepe sigh in reading the bill, by S. Bride Lieutenant quoth he, there is some mad game in that scrole: but fall out how it will, this thow is for a bedde: when the worst was told him, now I pray thee (quoth he) do no more but learne assuredly, from the Kings owne mouth, whether his grace be writing therto or not: for doubted the Lieutenant to displease the Cardinall, yet of very pure devotion to his friend, he posteth to the K. at midnight, and said his errand, for at all houres of day or night the Lieutenant hath accesse to the Prince upon occassions. King Henry controlling the fawtines of the Priest (for those were his termes) take him his signet in token of countermand, which when the Cardinall had seene, he began to breath out unseasoned words which the Lieutenant was loth to heare, and so he left him fretting. And within few yeeres after, Sir William Scenington was sent over deputie, who brought with him the Earle pardoned, and rid from all his troubles. Here arose about this time a bruit in London, that divers great Clearkes had tolde the King that the marriage between him and the lady Katherine, sometime wife to his brother Prince Arthur, was not lawfull: whereupon the K. should see a divorce, and marry the Dutchesse of Alanson, sister to the

the French King, the Towne of Caleis this Sommer, and the occupon Vicount Rochefozd had brought with him the picture of the same Lady: but the K. being offended with the tales, sent for Sir Tho. Seymere Maior of London secretly, & charged him to see that the people ceased, from such talke. But whatsoever the commons talked, true it was, that the king had mind to depart from Quene Katherine his wife, aunt to the Emperor, and Daughter to the King of Spaine, for that shee was before espoused to his brother, Prince Arthur late deceased, and that the Pope could not dispence with one woman to marrie with two brothers: but the King was letted by the Emperor, and his Ministers, so that he could not well bring the matter about without the assistance of the French king. Upon which respect, he granted more than the French King desired: that is, the 400000, crownes, which was one of the principall sums of the millions, which should be payd presently he lent the same to the French K. to repay in 5. yeeres: and the 600000. crownes forfeit by the Emperor, he gave to the French King: and the flower deluce, valued at 50000. crownes he gave to his god son Henry D. of Orliance. And further with the said Monsieur de Langie, there was sent Sir Francis Brian then one of the Gentlemen of the Kings privy Chamber, as well with the obligations and acquittances, as also the said flower-deluce, to bee delivered by the French King when time should serve. And for the said Monsieur de Langie, was a Gentleman greatly favoured, as well in the Universities of Italy and Germany, as in the Universities of France, and Brother to the Cardinall Bellay then Bishop of Paris, hee was at that time travelled withall to procure the opinions and judgements of the Doctors and chiefe learned men, subscribed with their hands and confirmed with their Seales of the chiefe Universities, as of Paris, Orliance, and other of France, and of Padua, Vienna, and Bolonia in Italy, declaring by the same, that the Pope could not dispence with the said marriage as being by Gods law prohibited, which afterward was procured by the said Monsieur de Langie, travelling in person to every the saide Universities with the King of Englands commission, who had the French kings letters of singular commendations to the uttermost aid therein: whatsoever the commons talked it was concluded by the King and his Councell, that the Cardinall should passe into France as high Ambassador, but for what cause, no person knew but the King till his returne. Gwichardine saith, hee brought with him treasure amounting to 300000, crownes, both to furnish his expences, and to impart with the French King by way of loue if need were. The cause of this voiage was saith G.C. this, certaine great estates and Lords of the councell bearing little good will to the Cardinall, lying in waite to espy a convenient time, and occasion to take the Cardinall in a brake thought it now were a necessary time to cause him to take upon him the kings commission to travell beyond the sea in this matter, and by his wit to compasse a perfect peace among these great princes and prevent attempts: and incouraging himselfe thereto, alleaged that it was more meete for his high wit, discretion, and authority, to bring so weighty a matter to passe then any other within this realme. Their intent was none other, but if they might get him from the King out of the realme, then thought they sufficiently abused him to depraue him unto the Kings highnes, and to him in his absence to bring him in displeasure with the king, or at the lest to be of lesse estimation: Well what will you more? this matter was so handled, the Cardinall was commanded to prepare himselfe to this iourney, which he take upon him, but whether it were with his good will or no, I am not able well to tell you: but that I know he made a short abode after the perfect resolution thereof, but caused all things to bee prepared onward toward his journey: and every one of his servants were appointed that should attend upon him in the same. When all things were concluded, and for this noble ambassage prounded and furnished, then was there no more to doe, but auance forwards in the name of God. My Lord had with him such of the Lords and Bishops, and other worthy persons, as were not of the Councell or conspiracy, to wit, the Earle of Darby, the Bishop of London, Lord privy seale, sir Henry Gilford Knight of the Garter, controller of the kings house, the Lord Sands knight of the garter: Lord chamberlaine of the kings house, doctor Taylor, Maister of the rols. sir Th. Moore knight, chancelor of the duchy of Lancaster: the Bishop of Diuelin, the L. Mounteagle, the L. Hatrenden, sir, John Dudley knight, M. Ratcliffe, M. Willoughby, M. Parker, M. Sturton: Vicounts and Barons, sons and heires. Sir Fra. Brian. sir Ed. Seimer, sir Ro. Gernigam, doctor Stephen Gardener secretary, doct. Peter Vannes secretary: of the privy chamber, maister Hennege, maister Arundell, maister Knevet, maister Alford: Phisitions, doctor Francis, doctor Smith: Gentlemen Ushers of the priuie chamber, M. Walgraue, M. Elles, Sir Thomas Denis high Chamberlaine, M. Sentclere vicechamberlaine: Gentlemen Ushers. M. Wentworth, M. Hansard, master Pemercy, master Constable, M. Warren: of houshold, M. Cade steward, sir William Gascoigne treasurer, M. Goslike Controller, master Broughton, master of the hose: doct Allen, doct. Bekes, doct. Duke, deane of the Chappell, doctor Capon Almoner, the archdeacon of Canterbury, the archdeacon of Carleile: sir John Sent-John, Sir Richard Sands knights, &c. in all to the number of 900. The Pourhoses. Then marched hee forward from his lodging owne house at Westminster, through London ouer London bridge, having before him of Gentlemen a great number, three in a ranke in velvet coates, and the most of them great chaines of Gold about their neckes, and all his Yeomen followed him with Noblemens, & Gentlemens servants, all in Orenge tawney coates, with the Cardinals Hatte, and a T.C. for Thomas Cardinall, embroidered upon all the coates, as well of his owne servants, as of all the rest of the Cardinall Wolsey sent Ambassador into France.

Ric. Tit.

Gentlemens seruants: and his sumptermules which were twentie or more with all his carriage of carts, and other of his traine were passed before. He rode like a Cardinall very sumptuously on his mule, with his spare mule and spare horse trapped in crimosin velvet vpon velvet, and stirrops gilt following him: and before him he had his two great Crosses of siluer, his two great Pillars of siluer, the kings broad seale of England and his Cardinals hat, and a Gentleman carrying his balence, otherwise called his clokebag which was made of fine scarlet, altogether embrodered very richly with gold, having in it a cloake. Thus passed he forth through London, and all the way every day in his iourney he was thus furnished, hauing his Harbengers in euery place before, which prepared lodging for his traine.

The first iourney that hee made, was two miles beyond Dertford in Kent, vnto Sir Thomas Wiltshires house, and the rest of his traine were lodged in Dertford, and in the countrey thereabouts. The next day he marched to Rochester, where he was lodged in the Bishops palace, & the rest of his traine in the City and in Strowde. The third day he rode to Feuersham, and there was lodged in the Abbey, and his traine in the towne there, and some in the countrey thereabouts. The fourth day he rode to Canterbury where hee encountered with the worshipfull of the towne and countrey, and lodged in the Priory of Christ Church, and all his Traine in the City, where hee continued three dayes, in which season there was a great faire in the Towne, by reason it was the feast of Thomas of Canterbury. At the which day there was a solemne procession, wherein the Cardinall then went apparelled in his legantine ornament, with his hat on his head, who commanded the monks and the Quyre to sing the Letanie, after this sort Sancta Maria, ora pro Papa nostro Clemente, the Cardinall kneeling at a stole before the Quyre dore all the while the monks and their Quyre sood in the body of the Church singing the Letanie: at which time the Cardinall was seene to weepe bitterly for heauines to see the Pope in such calamity and danger of the Lanceknights.

The 11. of July the Cardinall arriued at Calis, who was received with all the officers and councell of the towne, the Maior of the towne, and the Maior of the Staple in procession, and in the Lanterne Gate, he kneeled and made his prayers: that done they passed on before vntill he came to S. Maries Church, from whence he departed with a great number of Noblemen and gentlemen being peeres of the towne, vnto a place called the Cheker, where he was lodged, and kept his house as long as he abode in the towne. When all his traine and carriage was landed, and euery thing prepared for his iourney, he called all his Noblemen and Gentlemen, being seruants vnto him, into his priuy Chamber, where they being all assembled before him, he said: I haue called you hither to the intent to declare vnto you, that I consider the duty you beare me, and the good will that I assuredly beare to you, seeing your intendement to further the authority that I haue by commission: which your diligent seruice I will remember hereafter, and therefore I meane to declare the same directly to the King. Secondly, to shew you the nature of the Frenchmen. And thirdly, to instruct you how and with what reuerence ye shall vse me for the honor of the Kings maiesty, and then to enioyne you how ye shall entertaine and accompany the French men, when ye shall meete at any time.

The first point ye shall vnderstand, that the kings maiesty for certaine weighty affaires of his graces, hath for more aduancement of his royal dignity, assigned me to be in this iourney his Lieutenant, and what reuerence belongeth to the same I will tell you: for my part I must by vertue of my commission and Lieutenantship assume and take vpon me to be esteemed in all honor and degrees of service, as to his highnesse psalence is meetest due, and that by me nothing to be neglected that to his royall estate is due and appertinent. And for my part ye shall see me, that I will not omit one iote thereof. Therefore because that ye shall not be ignorant of your duty in this case, as one of the chiefe causes of this your assembly, willing you as you will haue myfauour, and also charge you in the Kings name, that ye doe not forget the same in time and place, but that euery one of you doe obserue your duty vnto me accordingly, as ye will at your returne auoide the Kings indignation, or obtaine and deserue his highnesse thanks, the which I will set forth as each of you shall deserue. Now to the second point, the nature of the Frenchmen is such that at the first meeting they will be as familiar with you as they had beene acquainted with you long before, and commune with you in their French tong, as though ye vnderstode euery word, therefore vse them in like manner, and be as familiar with them as they be with you. If they speake in their naturall tong, speake you againe vnto them in the English tong: for, if you vnderstand not them, no more shall they vnderstand you: and speaking merily to one of the Gentlemen there, being a Welshman said, Rice (quoth he) speake you Welsh to them: I doubt not but that they speech shall be more diffuse to him, than his French shall be to thee.

And thus quoth he againe to them all, let all your entertainement and behauior be according to the order of all gentleness and humility, that it may be reported after your departure from thence, that ye be gentlemen of right good behauior, and of much gentlenesse, and that ye are men, who know your duties to your Soueraigne Lord, and to your Maister, offeming much your great reuerence. Thus shall ye not onely obtaine to your selues great commendation and praise for the same, but also aduance the honor of your Prince and countrie. Now go your wayes, being admonished of all these points, and prepare your selues against to morrow, for then we intend (God willing) to set forward. The next morrow, being Mary Magdalens

Note this speech and the wit.

Magdalens day, all things being furnished, the Cardinall aduanced out of Calis, with such a number of blacke velvet coates, as hath beene seldome seene with an Ambassador, all the Speres of Calais and Guines, with all other Gentlemen besides his traine, being garnished in blacke Velvet Coates and Chaines of gold. Thus passed he forward with his Traine of Gentlemen before him three in a Ranke, which by suppofall endured three quarters of a mile or more in length, hauing his Crosses and all other his accustomed and glorious furniture carried before him, as I haue before rehearsed, except the Broad Seale, the which he left in Calais with Doctor Taylor, then master of the Rolles vntill his returne. Passing thus on his way, and being scarcely ridden a mile, it began to raine so vehemently, as lightly had not beene seene the like, which endured vntill they came to Wologne, and ere they came to Sandingfield, the Cardinall of Lorraine a goodly young Gentleman, encountred the Cardinall of England, and received him with great ioy and reuerence, and so passed forth with the Cardinall in communication vntill they came nigh vnto the faide Sandingfield, which was a place of Religion, standing betweene the English, French, and the Emperors dominions, being a Nonne, holding of no other of them. There awaited for him Le Countie Brian captaine of Picardie, with a great number of Stradiates or Albenois, standing in array in a great peece of grene oates, all in barres vpon high horses, passing on with the Cardinall in a wing vnto Wologne, and so after through Picardy: for the Cardinall doubted somewhat the Citizens, that he should lay some ambush to betray him, for which cause the French King commanded them to attend vpon him for the assurance of his person. Thus rode he vntill he came within one English mile of Wologne, where encountred him the worshipfull Citizens of the Towne of Wologne, hauing a learned man that made vnto him an Oration in Latine, vnto the which the Cardinall semblably made answere: And that done Monsieur de Bees Captaine of Wologne with the retinue there of gentlemen, met with him on horsebacke, and then with all this assemble he rode into the towne lighting at the abbey gate, and from thence conueyed with procession into the abbey church there offered, then went he into the Abbey to his lodging, and all his traine were lodged in the high and base courts. The next morning after, he rode to Montreuil sur Lonoie, where he was in like sale encountered with the worshipfull of the towne all in one liuery, hauing a learned man to make an oration vnto him in Latin, whom he answered also againe in Latine. And as he entred at the gates, there was a cannpy made vpp of fine embroidered with lettice, and as that ouer his head on their coates, and when that he was lighted, his footcloth had the same as a Foe due to the office. Now hauing made diuers Pageants for the ioy of his comming, who was called in the French tong Foere, and in all other places through the Realme where he rode or came, Le Cardinall pacifique. The next day he take his iourney towards Abuile, where he was encountred with diuers Gentlemen of the Towne and Countrey, and so receiued into the towne with pageants, as he rode through the towne hauing a like canopie borne ouer him, but more richer, and so brought to his lodging: in this towne he remained more than eight dayes, where resorted to him daily diuers of the French Kings councell, sitting with him in councell euery day and continually feasting with him and other. When the time came of his departing out of the towne he rode to the castle beyond the water of Some, called le Chastel de Pequen, adioyning to the said water vpon a Rocke, within which there was a College of Priests, the situation whereof was much like the castle of Windsore, and there he was receiued with solemne procession, comming thorough the Church, and after into the castle to his lodging. At this castle sometimes vpon the bridge that goeth ouer the water of Some, king Edward the 4 met with the French king, as I haue made in our Chronicle: when my Lord was settled in his lodging (with mine author) I heard that the French king should come that day into the towne of Amiens, which was not past six English miles from thence. And being desirous to see his comming thither, tooke with me one or two of my Lords gentlemen, and rode incontinently thither, as well to furnish me of a conuenient lodging, as to see the King. And when we came thither, being but strangers, tooke vp our inne at the signe of the angell, directly against the West dore of the Cathedrall Church de nostre Dame. After we had dined there and tarried vntill 3. or 4. of the clocke, expecting the Kings comming, in came mabam Regent, the Kings mother, riding in a very rich chariot, and with her therein was the Queene of Nauarre her daughter, furnished with 100. or more of Ladies and gentlewomen following: euery one riding vpon white palfreis: besides others and many Ladies some in rich horse-litters, some in chariots, who lighted at the next doore with all this traine of Ladies and Gentlewomen, besides her gard, which was not small in number. Then within two houres after the King came in with a great shotte of gunns, and diuers pageants made onely for ioy of his comming, hauing about his person and before him, beside the wonderfull number of Noblemen and gentlemen, three great guards apparelled diuersly; the first was of Switzers, the Burgonians with gunne pikes: the second was of Frenchmen, some with bowes and arrowes, and some with billes: the third guard pour le corps, was of full Scots, which were more equierly personed then all the rest. The French guard and the guard of Scots had one liuery, being apparelled with rich coates of white cloth guarded with a rich garde of cloth of gold of an hand full broad. The King sate in his open Chariot in a gowne of purple veluet, and lighted at the great Chirch, and so conueyed with

Procession like the Bishops palace, where he was lodged, and also his mother. The next morning I rode againe to Picardy, to attend upon my Lord, at which time of my repast, my Lord was ready to go to horseback: he toward Amiens and passing on his way, he was incountred with diuers noble personages, making vnto him diuers Oratiõs in Latin, to whom he made answere ex tempore. Then was word brought him, that the King was comming to encounter him, wherefore he had none other shift, but to light at an old chappell that stood hard by the high way, and there he new apparelled himselfe into rich apparell, and so mounted againe vpon a mule very richly trapped, with a cote cloth altogether of crimsin velvet vpon velvet, purled with gold, and fringed about with gold fringe very costly: his stirrops of siluer and gilt, the bosses of the same, and the cheekes of his mules bit were all gilt. And by that time that he was mounted againe, after this gorgeous sort, the King was come very neere, within lesse than a quarter of an English mile, mustering vpon a hill, his guard standing in array vpon the top of the same hil, expecting my Lords comming, to whom my Lord made as much hast as he conueniently might, till he came within a paire of buts length, and there he stayed. The King perceiuing that, hauing two worthy young Gentlemen with him, the one called Monsieur Vadamont, and the other Monsieur de Guise, both brethren to the cardinall of Loraine, and to the Duke of Loraine: also being like apparelled, as the King was in purple velvet, lined with cloth of siluer, their coates cut: The King called Monsieur Vadamont to him from him, and rode to my Lord Cardinall to know the cause of his tarrying: and this Monsieur being mounted vpon a faire great geanet, take his race with his horse vntill he came euen to my Lord, and there caused his horse to come aloft twice or thrice, to shew my Lords mule that hee was in doubt of his horse, and with that he alighted, and doing humble reuerence, did his message to my Lord, and that done he mounted againe, and made his horse to do the like at his departing, as before he had done, and so repaired againe vnto the King: and his mulkers ended to the King, the King aduanced forwards. That seeing, my Lord did the like: and in the midway they met, embracing each other, with amiable countenance and entertainement. Then drew into the place all Noble men and Gentlemen on both parts, with wonderfull chere made one to another, as though they had beene of old acquaintance. The preasse was such and so thicke, that diuers had their legges hurt with horses. Then the Kings officers cried, march, march, deuaunt ale deuaunt. Then the King and the Cardinall on his right hand rode forth towards Amiens, euery English gentleman accompanied with another of France. The traine of these two Princes entered two long English miles, they were nobly receiued into the Towne of Amiens with shot of gunnes and costly pageants, till the King had brought the Cardinall to his lodging, and then departed for that night, the King being lodged in the Bishops palace. The next day after dinner the Cardinall rode to the court to the King, at which time the King kept his bed: yet neuertheless the Cardinall came into his bed Chamber, where, on the one side of the bed sate the Kings mother, and on the other side the Cardinall of Loraine, accompanied with diuers other Noble men of Fraunce, and after a short communication and drinking of a cup of wine with the kings mother, he departed to his owne lodging, accompanied with diuers Gentlemen and Noble men, where they supped with him. Thus continued the Cardinall and the King in Amiens, the space of a fortnight and more, consulting and feasting each other diuers times. In Amiens the King and my Lord heard masse, and both of them receiued the Sacrament. And vpon our Lady day the assumption, my Lord said masse before the Regent and the Quæne of Nauarre, and gaue them the Sacrament. And there the King dyssed a number of sicke folkes. Then the King and the Cardinall removed to a City called Champain, which was more then 20. English miles from Amiens, they were both lodged in the great castle of the towne, whereof the Cardinal had the one halfe alligned him for his lodging, and the King the other halfe. And likewise they diuided a long Calery betweene them, where was made in the middest a strong wall, with a window and a doore. The King and the Cardinall would many times meete at the same window and talke: and diuers times they would go into the other at the said doore. Then came there to my Lord Cardinall the Lord Chancellor of France, with all the kings councellers, where they tooke great paines daily in consultation, insomuch that the Cardinall of England fell out with the Chancelor of France, taking to his charge, that he went about to hinder the league which before his comming was concluded, insomuch that Madam Regent herselfe and many Nobles of France with much labour and trauell could scarcely bring the Cardinall to his former state of communication, he was in such a wrath against the Chancelor: by these meanes, he brought other things to passe, that before he could not attaine, which was more for feare than for any affection to the matter, he had the heads of the councell to vnder his girdle. The next morning after, his councell he rose early about foure of the clocke, and sate him downe to write letters, into England, vnto the K. commanding one of his chaplaines to prepare him ready to say masse, insomuch that the chaplaine stood in his vestures vntill foure of the clocke in the afternoone: all which season the Cardinall never rose to eate or drinke, nor to make water, but continually wrote letters with his owne hand, hauing all that time his nightcap and his kercheefe on his head, and about the houre of foure in the afternoone hee made an end, commanding Christopher Gunner the Kings seruant, without delay to ride post into England with these letters, whom he dispatched away euen he drunke, and then went to masse, and said his seruice with his Chaplaine, and then went and walked in a garden the space of an houre and more, and saide his euensong, and after went both to dinner and supper all at once, and after Supper, making but little tarrying, scant an houre, but that he went to bed and take his rest.

The next night after the Cardinall made a great supper for Madam Regent, for the D. of Nauarre and other great estates of Ladies and Noble women, and at the middest of the saide banquet, the Kings of France and of Nauarre, came sodainely in vpon them bolstred for, and take their place in the lowest part of the banquet. The supper and banquet being finished, the Ladies and Gentlemen fell to dansing, and so passed away the most part of the night ere they departed. There was nat onely plenty of fine meats, but also much mirth and solace, as well in merry communication, as with the noise of my Lords minstrels, who played there all that night so cunningly, that the King take therein great pleasure, insomuch that he desired my Lord to lend them vnto him for the next night, and after supper their banquet finished, the Ladies and Gentlemen fell to dansing, among whome one Madam Fountaine a maide had the price. And thus passed they the most part of the night ere they departed. The next day the King take my Lords minstrels, and rode to a Noblemans house where was some Image to whom he vowed a pilgrimage, to performe his deuotion. When he came there, whith was in the night, he damned, and caused other to doe the same, after the sound of my lords minstrels, who played there all night, and neuer rested, so that whether it were with extreame labour of blowing, or with poyson (as some iudged) because they were commended by the King more than his owne, I cannot tell, but the Player on the Shalme (who was very excellent in that instrument) died within a day or two after. Then the King returned into Champaigne, and caused a wilde Boze to be lodged for him in the Forrest of Champaigne, and thither the Cardinall rode with him to see him hunt, where the Lady Regent with a number of Ladies and Damosels went standing in Chariots, looking on the toile on the out side: which was pitched there for that purpose: among whom stood the Cardinall to regard the hunting, in Madam Regents Chariot, and with in the toyle was the King with diuers vnknowen Gentlemen of France, ready furnished to his high and dangerous enterprise of the hunting of the perilous wilde swine, the King being in his doublet and hosen all of shapes colour cloth, hauing in his fist a brace of great white Greyhounds, who were trained as the manner there is: and the rest of the Kings Gentlemen being appointed to hunt this Boze, were likewise in theire doblets and hose, holding each of them in their hands very sharpe Boarspeares. Then the King commanded the keepers to vncouch the Boze, and that euery person being within the toyle should go to a standing, among whom were diuers Gentlemen and Peomen of England, and incontinent the Boze issued out of his den, and followed with an hound, came into a plaine, where being scaled a while, and gazing vpon the people, and incontinent pierced by the Hound, he spied a little bush standing behinde a banke, ouer a ditch (vnder the which lay two French Gentlemen) and thither fled, trusting there to haue defended himselfe, who thrust his head snuffing into the sand bush, which caused the two Gentlemen to fly from thence, as from the danger of death. Then was the Boze by pursuit of hunters and the hound, driuen from thence, who ran straight to one of the Cardinals footemen, a very tall yeoman, who had in his hands a Janeline, with the which hee was faine to defend himselfe from the Boze a great while, the Boze continually foyning at him with his Tuskes, so that he was faine at last to pitch his Janeline in the ground betweene him and the Boze: the which the Boze brake with the force of his foyning and with that the yeoman drew his sword, and stood at defence, and therewith the hunters came to the rescue, and put him once againe to flight: with that he sleadde to another young Gentleman of England, called master Henry Ratclife, who was sonne and heire to the Lord Fitz Walter, since Earle of Sussex, who had bestowed by chaunce of a Frenche Gentleman, a very fine and sharpe Boze Speare, where with he thrust the Boze in the mouth, and so into the throate, whereupon the pastime was ended. In the time of the Cardinalls abode in France, many displeasures were done against him, for all the payne and trauell he had taken for the qualifying of the French kings ransome: and amongst other this was one: there was no place where hee lodged, after he entred the territorie of France, but that he was robbed in his priuy chamber either little or much, insomuch that at Campaigne he lost his Standish, which was all of Siluer and gilte, and there it was espied, and the party taken, which was a boy of twelue or fourteene yeres old, a ruffians page of Paris, which hanted my Lords lodging without suspition, vntill he was taken lying vnder my Lords priuy Staires, vpon which occasion he was apprehended, examined, and confessed all things that he had stolen, the ruffian his maister had receiued, maintained, and procured him so do. The Cardinall reuealed this to the councell, by meanes whereof the ruffian was apprehended, and set on the Pillory in the middle of the Market place, which was but a small punishment for such an offence. Another displeasure was this: foure lewd person had ingraued in my Lords Window, vpon the leaning stone there, a Cardinals hat, with a paire of Gallowes ouer it, in derision of my Lord, with diuers other vnkinde dealings, the which I omit to write, they be so slaunderous matters. The Cardinall passing diuers dayes in consultation, and in other matters, expecting the returne of Christopher Gunner, at the last he returned with letters againe, vpon receipt whereof the Cardinall intended to remoue:

Many displeasures done against Car. Wolsey in France.

being then at maſſe in his Cloſet, hee conſecrated the Chancellor of France Cardinall, and put vpon him his habite, his hat and Cap of Maieſtie, and then take his tourney, returning againe into England, making ſuch neceſſary expedition, that he came to Guiſnes, where he was nobly received by the Lord Sands then Captaine there, with all the retinue of the ſame. And from thence he rode to Calais, where hee tarryed the ſhipping of his ſtaffe, horſes, and traine. And in the meane time, he eſtabliſhed there a Mart for all Nations. Theſe things and other, for the Weale of the Towne and garriſon by him perfect, hee tooke ſhipping and arriued at Douer the twentie foure of September, from whence he rode to the Court, the King being in his Progreſſe at Sir Henry Wyats houſe in Kent, by whom he had long talke, and continued two or three dayes there in the Court, and then returned to his houſe at Weſtminſter, where he remained vntill Michaelmas terme, which was in leſſe then a fortnight after, and executed to roome of Chancellorſhip as he was accuſtomed.

Scarcitie of bread.

Such ſcarcitie of bread was in London, and all England, that many dyed for default thereof: the King of his goodnes ſent to the Citie of his owne proviſion 600. quarters, or elſe for one weeke there had bin little bread. The bread Carts comming from Stratford toward London were met at the mile end by the Citizens, ſo that the Maior and Sheriffes were forced to goe and reſcue the ſame carts, and to ſee them brought to the Markets appointed. Wheat was then at 15. ſhillings the quarter: but ſhortly after the Marchants of the Stilyard brought from Danſke ſuch ſtore of Wheate and Rye, that the ſame was better cheape to be ſold in London, than in any other part of the Realme beſides.

After the beginning of the Terme the Cardinall cauſed to be aſſembled in the Star Chamber, all the noble men, Iudges, and Iuſtices of peace that were in Weſtminſter hall at that time preſent: and there made to them a long Oration, declaring the cauſe of his Ambaſſage into France, and of his proceeding there: among the which he ſaid he had concluded ſuch an amitie, as never was heard in the realme before, as well betweene the Emperor and vs, as betweene the King our ſouereigne, and the French King with a perpetuall peace, the which ſhould be confirmed in writting, ſealed in fine gold, affirming further, that the King of England ſhould receiue yerely his tribute by that name out of the Dutchy of Normandie, with all the coſts which he had ſuſteined in the warres. And alſo, where there was a reſtraint made in France of the French Queenes dowry (whom the Duke of Suffolke had married) for diuers yeres during the warres, it was concluded, that ſhe ſhould not onely receiue it againe, but alſo the arrerages that were vnpaid. This peace thus concluded, there ſhould be ſuch amitie betweene the gentlemen of each Realme, and entercourſe of Marchants, that it ſhould ſeeme to all men both territories to be but one Monarch: gentlemen may trauell from one Countrey to another, for their recreation and paſtime: the Marchants being in either countrey arriued, ſhall be aſſured to trauell about the affaires in peace and tranquility, ſo that this Realme ſhall ioy and proſper for euer, &c.

The 20. of Octo. were received into London certaine Ambaſſadors out of France, about 80. in number, of the moſt noble and worthy gentlemen in all France: they were lodged in the Biſhops palace in Pauls churchyard, to whom diuers Noble men reſorted and gaue them diuers preſents, eſpecially the Maior of the City of London, as wine, ſugar, war, capons, wildfoule, beefes, muttons, and other neceſſary things in great abundance, for the expences of their houſe. Then they reſorted vnto the court, being at Greenwich, where they were received by the King. They had commiſſion to eſtabliſhe the K. in the order of France, for whom they brought for that intent, a collar of fine golde, with the Michaell hanging therat, and robes to the ſame order appertinent, the which was of blew velvet richly embrodered. And the King to gratifie the French King with the ſemblable, he ſent a noble man of the order here in England, with Garter the Herault into France to eſtablish the French King, in the order of the Garter, with a ſemblable Collar, with a Garters and Robes according to the ſame.

Ambaſſadors out of France.

The Ambaſſadors remaining here vntill their returne, all things being concluded concerning the perpetuall peace vpon ſolemne ceremonies and oathes contained in certaine inſtruments touching the ſame, which was confirmed by receiuing of the Sacrament in Pauls Church of London by the King, and the grand maiſter of France, who repreſented the King his maſter, and there the inſtruments were ſealed with gold, and the King put his hand thereunto, and the grand maiſter did the like: betweene whome the Cardinall diuided the Sacrament. And that done, they departed, the King rode with the Cardinall to Weſtminſter, and there dined with the Frenchmen, paſſing all the day after with conſultation of weighty matters, touching the concluſion of the ſaide Article of the perpetuall peace.

The King then departed againe by water to Greenwich, at whoſe departing it was concluded by the deuiſe, that all the Frenchmen ſhould reſort to Richmond, and hunt in euery one of the Parkes there: and from thence to Hampton court, and there to hunt, and the Cardinall to make there a Supper or banquet, or both to them. And from thence they ſhould ride to Windſor, & there to hunt: & after to returne to London, and ſo to Greenwich, and there to banquet with the King. Then was there made great preparation of all things for this great aſſembly at Hampton court: the Cardinall called before him his principall officers, as Steward treaſurer, controller and clearke of his Kitchin, to whom he declared his mind, touching the entertainment of the Frenchmen at Hampton court: his pleaſure to them knowne, they ſent out out takers, purueiors, and other, the Cookes wrought both night and day in ſubtleties, the preomen and grommes of the Wardrobes were buſſed in hanging of the Chambers, and furniſhing the ſame with beds of ſilke and other furniture: there were prouided two hundred and eighty beds, furniſhed with all manner of furniture to them belonging, too long particularly to be rehearſed.

The day was come to the Frenchmen aſſigned, and they readie aſſembled before the houre of their appointment, wherefore the Officers cauſed them to ride to Hamworth, a place and a Parke of the kings within three miles, there to hunt and ſpend the day vntill night, at which time they returned againe to Hampton court, and euery of them conueyed to their ſeuerall Chambers, hauing in them great fires and wine for their comfort, remaining there vntill the ſupper was ready. The Chambers where they ſupped and banqueted, were ordered in this ſort: firſt, the great waiting Chamber was hanged with rich Arras, as none were better than other, and furniſhed with tall yeomen to ſerue. There were ſet tables round about the Chamber banquet-wiſe couered, a Cupboord was there garniſhed with white ſilver plate, hauing alſo in the ſame Chamber to giue the more light, foure plates of ſilver ſet with great lights, and a great fire of wood and coales. The next Chamber being the Chamber of preſence, was hanged with very rich Arras, and a ſumptuous cloth of eſtate furniſhed with many goodly Gentlemen to ſerue the tables, ordered in manner as the other Chamber was, ſauing that the high Table was remoued beneath the cloth of eſtate toward the middeſt of the Chamber couered. Then was there a Cupboord, being in length as broade as the Chamber, with fire deskes of height, garniſhed with guilt plate, hauing with lights one paire of Candleſticks of ſilver and guilt, being curiouſly wrought, which coſt three hundred markes, and ſtanding vpon the ſame two lights of ware burning as bigge as torches to ſet it forth. This Cupboord was barred round about, that no man could come nigh it, for there was none of all this plate touched in this banquet, for there was ſufficient beſides. The plates that hung on the walls to giue light were of ſilver and guilt, hauing in them great pearchers of ware burning, a great fire in the chimney, and all other things neceſſary for the furniture of ſo Noble a feaſt. Now was all things in a readines. The trumpets were blowne to warne to Supper: the Officers diſcretly conducted theſe Noble men from their Chambers into the Chambers where they ſhould ſuppe, and cauſed them there to ſit downe, and that done, their ſeruice came vp in ſuch abundance both coſtly and full of ſubtilties, and with ſuch a pleaſant norſe of inſtruments of muſicke, that the Frenchmen (as it ſeemed) were rapt into a heauenly Paradiſe. The Cardinall was not yet come, but they were merry and pleaſant. Before the ſecond courſe, the Cardinall came in booted and ſpured, all ſodainly amongſt them, and bade them Preface: at whoſe comming there was great ioy, with rifling euery man to his place. The Cardinall cauſed them to ſit ſtill and keepe their rowmes, and being in his apparell as hee rode, called for a chayre and ſate in the middeſt of the high table. Anone came vp the ſecond courſe, with ſo many diſhes, ſubtilties, and deuiſes, aboue a hundred in number, which were of ſo goodly proportion and coſtly, that I thinke the Frenchmen neuer ſaw the like, the wonder was no leſſe than it was worthy indeed. There were Caſtles with Images, in the ſame Pauls Church, for the quantity, aſwell counterfeited, as the Painter ſhould haue painted it on a cloth of wall. There were beaſts, birds, and perſonages, moſt liuely made and counterfeited, ſome fighting with ſwords, ſome with gunnes, and crobbowes, ſome daughting and leaping, ſome dancing with Ladies, ſome on horſes in complete harneſſe, iuſting with long and ſharpe ſpeares, with many more deuiſes. Among all other was a cheſſe-bord made of ſpiced plate, with men there of the ſame, and for the good proportion, and becauſe the Frenchmen be very expert in that play, my Lord Cardinall gaue the ſame to a Gentleman of France, commanding there ſhould be made a goodly caſe for the preſeruation thereof in all haſt, that hee might conuey the ſame into his countrey. Then tooke my Lord a bole of golde filled with hypocraſe, and putting off his cap, ſaid: I drinke to the King my ſouereigne Lord, and next vnto the King your maſter, and therewith dranke a good draught: and when he had done, he deſired the grand maiſter to pledge him cup and all, the which was well worth 500. markes, ſo cauſed all the lords to pledge theſe two royall Princes: then went the cups ſo merrily about, that many of the Frenchmen were faine to be led to their beds.

Then roſe vp the Cardinall, and went into his priuy chamber to pull off his bootes, and to ſhift him, and then went he to Supper in his priuy chamber, and making a very ſhort ſupper, returned into the chamber of preſence among the Frenchmen, vſing them ſo louingly and familiarly, that they could not commend him too much: and whileſt they were in communication and other paſtimes, all their liueries were ſerued to their Chambers, euery Chamber had a baſon and an ewer of ſilver, a great liuery pot of ſilver, and ſome guilt, yea and ſome Chamber had two liuery pots, with wine and beere: a ſilver candleſticke, both white and plaine, hauing in it two ſtaues, and a paſte torch of ware, a fine manchet, and a cheat loafe. Thus was euery Chamber furniſhed through all the houſe: and yet the Cupboords in the two banquetting Chambers were not once touched.

Thus, when it was more than time conuenient, they were conueyed to their lodgings, where they reſted that night.

In the morning they dined with the Cardinall, and ſo departed to Windſore. After the returne of the ſtrangers from Windſore, which place, with the order thereof they much commended.

wended. The day approched that they were by the King inuited to the Court, where first they dined, and after dancing and other pastimes by them done, the time of supper came on. Then was the banquetting chamber in the tylt yard at Greenewich, to the which place these strangers were conducted by the noblest personages in the Court, where they did both suppe and banquet. But to describe to you the order, the dishes, the subtilties, and strange deuises of the same, I lacke both a head of fine wit, and also cunning in my bowels to declare these wonderfull deuises. But this ye shall vnderstand, although it were maruellous sumptuous at Hampton Court, yet that notwithstanding this banquet excelleth the same, as far as gold doth exceede siluer in value of weight for weight, and the beholders professed neuer to haue seene the like.

In the middest of this banquet there was iousting at the barriers, with lusty gentlemen in complete harnesse, very gorgeous on horse. Then was there the like on horse-backe. And after all this, was the most goodliest disguising or enterlude made in Latin, the plaiers being so rich and of so strange deuises, that it passeth my capacity to expound.

This done, there came such a number of the fairest Ladies and Gentlewomen that bare any brute of beauty in all the realme, in the most richest apparell that might be deuised, with whom the Gentlemen of France danced, vntill a gorgeous maske came in of Gentlemen, who danced and masked with these Ladies. This done, came in a maske of Ladies: these Ladies take each of them one of the Frenchmen to dance and to maske: these Women maskers spake good French to the Frenchmen, which delighted them very much to heare these Ladies speake to them in their mother tongue.

Thus was this night consumed, from 5, of the clocke vntill three of the clocke after midnight, and then euery man departed to their lodgings. After all this solemne cheere at a day appointed, they resorted to the Court to take their leaue of the King and other Noble-men: then came they to Westminster vnto the Cardinall, of whome they receiued the Kings rewards, the which were these: euery man of honour and estimation had plate, some to the value of three or foure hundred pound, and some more, and some lesse, besides other great gifts receiued before of the King, as gownes of velnet with rich furres, great chaines of gold, and goodly beades, with diuers other gifts, and the least of them had a yeare of Crownes of gold: the which part amongst them had 20. Crownes for his part: and being thus nobly rewarded they departed.

A French Craer chased to the Tower wharfe of London.

¶ A French Craer, of 30. tun, being manned with 38. Frenchmen, and a Flemmish craer of fifteen and twenty tunne and fower and twenty Flemmings, landing at Margate, the one chased the other along the riuer of Thamis to the Tower wharfe of London, where sir Edmond Wellingham Lieutenant of the Tower, stayed them both, and tooke both their Captaines and men.

The 17. day of June, the terme was adiourned to Michaelmas, because of the sweating sickenes that then raigned in the city of London, and there was no such watch at Midsommer, as before time had bene accustomed: of this sickenesse dyed many sodainly in the Kings court, namely sir William Compton, Sir Francis Poynts, and other, who dyed with little warning. The King for a space remoued almost euery day till he came to Titenhanger, a place of the abbot of S. Albons, and there hee with the Quéene, and a small company about them, remained till the sickenes was past.

Before the Cardinals going into France, in the preceding yéere, it was talked among the people, that King Henry (as yée haue heard) was by some perswaded, that his marriage with Quéene Katherine could not bée good nor lawfull, wherefore hée determined to haue the case examined, cléered and adiudged by learning, law, and sufficient authoritie. The Cardinall was by some put in blame for that scruple now cast into the Kings conscience, for the late hee bare to the Emperor, and therefore hée did not onely procure the King of England to ioyne in friendship with the French King, but also (as they say) sought a diuorce betwixt the King and the Quéene. But howsoeuer it came about that the King was thus troubled in conscience concerning his marryage, it followed, that to haue the doubt clérely removed, hee called together the best learned of the Realme, which were of seuerall opinions, wherefore he thought to know the truth by indifferent iudges, lest peradeuenture the Spaniards and other would say that his owne subiects were not indifferent iudges in this behalfe, and therefore wrote his cause to Rome, as also (as ye haue heard) sent to the Vniuersities of Italy and France for their opinions: and desired the court of Rome to send into the Realme a Legate which should bée indifferent, and of great & profound iudgement to heare the cause debated. At whose request the whole consistory of the College of Rome, sent thither Laurence Campeius a priest Cardinall, a man of great wit and experience, which had bene sent hither before in the tenth yeare of this King, as yé haue heard, and with him was ioyned in commission the Cardinall of Yorke, and Legate of England. This Cardinall Campeius by long iourneyes came into England, and much preparation was made to receiue him triumphantly into London: but hee was sore vexed with the gout, that her refused all such solemnities, and desired that he might without pompe be conueyed to his lodging for his more quiet and rest, and so on the ninth of October he came from S. Mary Oueries by water to the Bishop of Bathes place without Temple barre, where he was visited of the Cardinall of Yorke, and diuers other estates and Prelats: and after he had rested him a season, he was brought to the Kings presence, then being at Baidewell, by the Cardinall of Yorke, and was carryed in a chaire betwéene foure persons, for he was not able to stand, and the the Cardinall of Yorke and he sate both on the right hand of the Kings throne, and there one Francisco Secretarie to Cardinall Campeius made an eloquent Oration in Latin: in which he rehearsed first, with what cruelties the Emperors souldiers had handled the Pope, what tyrannye they had shewed to the Cardinals and Priests, what sacrilege and spoile they had committed in Saint Peters Church, how they had violated virgins, rauished mens wiues, and in conclusion, spoyled, robbed, and tormented all the Romans and inhabitants in the Citie of Rome. And further he shewed what friendship the College of Rome found at the Kings hands, and the French Kings in time of that tribulation, that if they had not ioyned together, the Citie of Rome with all their governours had bin brought to vtter ruine: for the which hee saide, Pope Clement and all his College of Cardinals, and the Senators of the Citie, with all the Citizens rendred to the King their harty thankes, and promised him their loue and fauour, and amity perpetuall.

Oration answered.

To the which Oration doctor Fore Provost of Cambridge, made a discrete answere: and as to the first point, hee declared that the king much lamented to heare his friends; yea, of any other Christian men to bee handled with such tyrannie: and as touching the second point, hee saide that the King did but the duty of a Christian Prince to relieue his friends being in captiuity, for the which he would that the whole City of Rome should giue thankes to God, and not to him. After which answere made, the 2. Legates communed secretly with the King a long space, and after departed to their lodging. Of the comming of this Legate the people, especially Women, talked largely, and saide, that the King would for his owne pleasure haue another wife, and had sent for this Legate to bée diuorced from his Quéene, with many foolish words, insomuch, that whosoeuer spake against the marriage, was of the common people abhorred and reproued, which common rumour was related to the King. Wherefore to like a prudent Prince, willing all men to know his intent and purpose, caused all his nobilitie, iudges, and Counsellors, with diuers other persons, to come to his place of Bridewell on Sonday the 8. of November at afternoone, in his great chamber, and there to them spake, as nere as I could carrie away (saith Hall) in these words following: Our trustie and welbeloued subiects, both you of the Nobility, and you of a meaner sort, it is not vnknowne to you that wee, both by Gods prouision, and true and lawfull inheritance, haue raigned ouer this Realme almost 20. yeeres: during which time, wee haue so ordered vs, thanked be God, that no outward enemie hath oppressed you, nor taken any thing from vs, nor we haue inuaded no Realme but wee haue had victory and honour, so that we thinke you nor none of your predecessors neuer liued more quietly, more wealthy, nor in more estimation vnder any of our Noble progenitors. But when we remember our mortality, and that we must dye, then we thinke that all our doings in our little time are cleerely defaced, and worthy of no memorie, if we leaue you in trouble at that time of our death. For if our true heirs be not knowne at the time of our death, for what trouble shall succéede to you and your children. The experience thereof some of you haue séene, after the death of our Noble grandfather Edward the fourth, and some haue heard what manslaughter continued in this Realme betwéene the houses of Yorke and Lancaster, by the which dissention this Realme was like to haue bene clerely destroyed. And although it hath pleased God to send vs a faire daughter of a noble woman and me, begotten to our great comfort, yet it hath bene told vs by diuers great Clarkes, that neyther she is our lawfull daughter, nor her mother our lawfull wife, but that we liue together abhominably and detestably in open aduoutry, insomuch, that when our Ambassage was last in France, and motion was made, that the Duke of Orleance should marry our said daughter, one of the chiefe counsellors to the French King said: It were well done to know whether she bee the King of Englands lawfull daughter, or not: for well knowne it is, that he begate her on his brothers wife, which is directly against Gods law, and his precept. Thinke you (my Lords) that these words touch not my body and soule? thinke you that these doings doe not daily and sourely trouble my conscience and bere my Soules Pes, wee doubt not but if it were your owne cause, euery man would séeke remedie, when the perill of your soule, and the losse of your inheritance is openly laid to you. For this onely cause I protest before God, and in the roome of a Prince, I haue asked counsell of the greatest Clearkes in Christendome, not for this cause I haue sent for this Legate, as a man indifferent, onely to know the truth, and to settle my conscience, and for none other cause, as God can witnesse. And as touching the Quéene if it be iudged by the law of God, that she is my lawfull wife, there was neuer thing more acceptable to me in my life, both for the discharge of my conscience, and also for the good qualities and conditions which I know to be in her: for I assure you all, that beside her noble parentage of the which she is descended (as all you know) she is a woman of most gentlenes, of most humilitie, and buxumnes, yea, and of all good qualities appertaining to nobility, she is without comparison, as I these twenty yeres almost haue had the true experiment, so that if I were to marrie againe, if the marriage might be good, I would surely chose her aboue all other women: but if it be determined by iudgement, that our marriage was against Gods law and cleerely voide, then I shall not onely sorrow the departing from so good a Lady and louing companion, but much more lament and bewaile my infortunate chance, that I haue so long liued in aduoutry to Gods great displeasure, and haue no true heire of my body to inherite this Realme. These be the causes that

Dere I will make these be the pangs that trouble my conscience, and for these griefes I seeke a remedy therefore I require of you all as our trust and confidence is in you, to declare to our subiects our intent, according to our true meaning, and desire them to pray with vs that the truth may be knowne, for the discharge of our conscience, and saving of our soule: and for declaration hereof I have assembled you together, and now you may depart.

To see what countenance was made amongst the hearers of this Oration, it was a strange sight, for some sighed and said nothing, other were sory to heare the King so troubled in his conscience: others fauouring the Q. much sorrowed, that this matter was now opened, and so every man spake as his heart serued him: thus much Hall. And thus G.C. The Cardinall of Yorke, saith he, being prouoked to declare his opinion, and wilfe done in the aduancement of the Kings purpose, who thought it not meete to wade too far alone, or to giue his hasty iudgement in so weighty a matter, desired of the king licence to aske counsell of men of famous learning, both in the diuine and ciuill lawes. That obtained, by his legantine authority, hee sent his commission out, for all the Bishops of the realme that were learned in either of the said lawes, or had in any high estimation for their prudent counsell and iudgement, in priuely assaires of long experience. Then assembled those noble Prelats and notable Clearks of both Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, as also of diuers Cathedrall Churches of this realme accounted learned, and of witty discretion in determination of doubtfull questions. Then was this matter of the Kings case consulted of from day to day, that it was to the learned a goodly hearing: but in fine the ancient fathers of both lawes, departed with one iudgement, contracte to the principall expectation. Then was it thought expedient, that the King should send out his commissioners into all the Universities of Christendome, to bring with them the definition of their opinions in the same vnder the seale of euery Universitie, which they obtained. Having now a sure staffe to stand by, these proceedings declared to the Cardinall, he sent againe for the Bishops, to whom he declared the trauell of these commissioners. And for affirmance thereof, he vsed them the instruments of euery Universitie vnder their seuerall seales. They went once againe to consultation. It was then concluded, that the King should send to the Pope, declaring the opinions of these Universities, authorised by their common seales: to the which it was thought that the consent of these Prelats of this realme should be necessary to be sent thither, altogether compiled in an instrument sealed with all their seales annexed to the said instrument. Not long after the Ambassadors were addressed to trauell in the matter, hauing certaine instructions, among which one was this, that if the Pope would not giue iudgment definitiue in the Kings case, to require another commission to bee granted vnder lead, to stablish a Court to be kept in England, for that purpose directed to the Legt Cardinall and Legate of England, and to the Cardinall Campeius, who was then (though he were a stranger) Bishop of Bathe (the which the King had giuen him) to determine, and iustly to iudge according to conscience and discretion: To the which, after long suite made, and the good will of the same Cardinall obtained to trauell into England, the Pope granted to their suite, and the Cardinall arriued in England, as ye before haue heard.

Now after some deliberation and consultation in the ordering and ding of the Kings matters, and his commission, and the articles of his ambassage seene and read, and digested, it was determined, that the King and Quéene his wife should bee lodged at Bridewell. And then in the blacke Fryers a certaine place was there appointed most conuenient for the King and Quéenes repaire to the Court, there to be kept for the disputation and determination of the cause, whereas these two Legats sate as iudges, before whom the King and Q. were sited and commoned to appeare: which was a strange sight, and the newest deuise that euer was reade or heard of before in any region, story, or chronicle, a King & a Quéene to be constrained by processe compellatory to appeare in any Court as common persons within their owne realme and dominion, to abide the iudgements and decrees of their owne subiects, being the royall Maiestie and prerogatiue thereof. Ye shall vnderstand (as I haue said before) that there was a Court erected in the blacke Fryers in London, whereas sate these 2. Cardinals for iudges in the same, in the moneths of April, May, Iune, and July. Now will I set you out the manner and order of the same Court: first, there was a Court platted in Tables and Benches in manner of a Consistorie, one seate raised higher for the Iudges to sitte on than the other were. Then as it were in the middest of the said Iudges also aboue them 2. degrees high, was a cloth of estate hanged, with a chaire royall vnder the same, wherein sate the King, & besides him, same distance from him sate the Q. & vnder the Iudges sate sate the scribes and other necessary officers for the execution of the processe, and other things appertaining to such a court: the chiefe scribe was doctor Steuens after Bishop of Winchester, and the apparator, who was Caller of the court, was one Cooke (most commonly called Cooke of Winchester) Then before the King and the Iudges within the court sate the Archbish. of Canterbury D. Warham, and all the other Bishops. Then vnder at both ends within, the Counsellors learned in the lawes, as well the Kings as the Quéenes. The Doctors of law for the King, were doctor Simpson that was after Bish. of Chichester, and Do. Bell, that was after Bishop of Worcester, with diuers other, and proctors in the same law on the same side were, doctor Peter, doctor Tregonel, with others. On the other side for the Q. were doctor Fisher B. of Rochester, Doct. Standish, and Doct. Ridley, a very small man of stature, but surely a great and excellent clearke in diuinitie.

diuinitie. Thus was the Court furnished. The Iudges commanded the Cryer to proclaime silence whilest their commission was read, both to the Court, and to the people assembled. That done, the Scribes commanded the Cryer to call the King by the name of King Henry of England, come into the court, &c. With that the King answered and said: Here. Then called hee the Quéene, by the name of Katherine Quéene of England, come into the Court, &c. Who made no answere, but rose incontinent out of her Chayre, and because shee could not come to the king directly, for the distance seuered betweene them, shee went about the Court, and came to the King, kneeling downe at his féete in the sight of all the Court and people, to whom she spoke in effect these words, as followeth: Sir (quoth shee) I desire you to doe mee iustice and right, and take some pitty vpon mee, for I am a poore woman, and a stranger, borne out of your dominion, hauing here no indifferent counsell, and lesse assurance of friendship: Alas sir, what haue I offended you, or what occasion of displeasure haue I shewed you, intending thus to put mee from you after this sort? I take God to my iudge, I haue béene to you a true and an humble wife, euer conformable to your will and pleasure, that neuer contraried or gainsaid any thing thereof, and being alwayes contented with all things where in you had any delight or daliance, whether little or much, without grudge or countenance of discontentation or displeasure: I loued for your sake all them whome you loued, whether I had cause or no cause, whether they were my friends or enemies. I haue béene your wife, these twenty yéres or mo, and you haue had by me diuers children, and when ye had me at the first, I take God to be my iudge, that I was a very maid, and whether it be true or no, I put it to your conscience. If there be any iust cause that you can alledge against me, either of dishonesty, or matter lawfull to put me from you, I am content to depart to my shame and rebuke: and if there bee none, then I pray you to let me haue iustice at your hand. The King your Father was in his time of such an excellent witte, that hee was accounted among all men for wisedome to be a second Salomon, and the King of Spaine my Father Ferdinando, was reckoned one of the wisest Princes that raigned in Spaine many yeres before: it is not therefore to be doubted, but that they had gathered as wise Counsellers vnto them of euery realme, as to their wisedoms they thought méet, and as to me séemeth there were in those dayes as wise and well learned in both the Realmes, as be now at this day, who thought the marriage betweene you and me good and lawfull: therefore it is a wonder to mee to heare, what new inuentions are now inuented against me that neuer intended but honestly: and now to cause me to stand to the order and iudgement of this Court, yee should (as séemeth me) doe me much wrong, for ye may condemne me for lacke of answere, hauing no counsell but such as yée haue assigned mee: yee must consider that they cannot be indifferent on my part when they bée your owne subiects, and such as yée haue taken and chosen out of your owne Councell, whereunto they be privy, and dare not disclose your will and intent. Therefore I humbly desire you in the way of charity to spare mee, vntill I may know what counsell and aduise my friends in Spaine will aduertise me to take, and if you will not, then your pleasure be fulfilled: and with that she rose vp, making a low curtesie to the King, and departed from thence, supposing that she would haue resorted againe to her former place. But she took her way straight out of the court, leaning vpon the arme of one of her seruants, who was her generall receiuer, called Spatt. Griffith. The King being aduertised that shee was ready to go out of the house, where the court was kept, commanded the Cryer to call her againe, who called her by these words, Katherine Quéene of England, come into the court: with that quoth Spatt. Griffith, Madam, ye be called againe. On, on, (quoth she) it maketh no matter, it is no indifferent court for me, therefore I will not tarry, go on, your wayes: and thus shee departed without any farther answer at that time or any other, and neuer would appeare after in any Court. The K. perceiuing shée was departed thus, and considering her words which she pronounced before him, saying to the audience these words in effect: For as much (quoth he) as the Q. is gone, I will in her absence declare vnto you all: She hath béene vnto me as true, as obedient, and as conformable a wife, as I would wish or desire: she hath all the vertuous qualities that ought to bee in a woman of her dignity, or in any other of baser estate: shée is also surely a noble woman borne, her conditions will well declare the same. With that (quoth Cardinall Wolsey) Sir, I most humbly require your highnesse, to declare before all this audience, whether I haue béene chiefe and the first mouer of this matter into your Maiesty or no, for I am greatly suspected herein. Ye L. Cardinall (quoth the King) I can well excuse you in this matter: many (quoth he) ye haue béen rather against me in the tempting thereof, than a setter forward or mouer of the same: the speciall cause that moued mee vnto this matter, was a certaine scrupulosity that pricked my conscience, vpon certaine words spoken I a time when it was, by the B. of Bayon the French Ambassador, who had béene hither sent, vpon the debating of a marriage to be concluded betweene the Princesse our daughter the Lady Mary, and the Duke of Orleance, second sonne to the King of France, and vpon the resolution and determination of the same, he desired respite to aduertise the King his master thereof, whether our daughter Mary should be legitimate, in respect of this my marriage with this woman, being sometime my brothers wife: which once conceiued within the secret bottome of my conscience, engendred with such a scrupulous doubt, that my conscience was incontinently accombred, vexed, and disquieted, where-

whereby I thought my selfe to be greatly in danger of Gods indignation, which appeared to be (as me seemed) the rather, for that he sent vs no issue male: all such issues male as my said wife had by me died incontinent after they came into the world, so that I doubted the great displeasure of God in that behalfe. Thus my conscience being tossed in the waues of a scrupulous conscience, and partly in despaire to haue any other issue than I had already by this Lady now my wife, it befell me further to consider the state of this Realme, and the danger that it stood in for lacke of a Prince to succeed me, I thought it good in release of the weighty burden of my weake conscience, and also the quiet estate of this worthy Realme, to attempt the law therin, whether I may lawfully take another wife more lawfully, by whom God may send me more issue, in case this my first copulation was not good, without any carnall concupiscence, and not for any displeasure or mislking of the Queenes person and age, with whome I would be as well contented to continue, if our marriage may stand with the lawes of God, as with any woman alioe: in which point consisteth all this doubt that we go about now to try, by the learning, wisedome, iudgement, of you our Prelats, and Pastors of all this our realme, and dominion now here assembled for the purpose to whose conscience and learning I haue committed the charge and iudgement, according to the which, I will (God willing) be right well content to submit my selfe, and for my part obey the same: wherein, after that I perceiued my conscience so doubtfull, I moued it in confession to you my Lord of Lincolne then ghostly father: for as much as then you your selfe were in some doubt, you moued me to aske the counsell of all you my Lords: wherevpon I moued you my Lord of Canter. whom first, to haue your licence, in as much as you were metropolitane, to put this matter in quest: for so I did of all you my L. to which you granted vnder your seales, and that I haue lore to bee thewed. That is truth, if it please your grace, quoth the Archbishop of Canterbury, I doubt not but my brethren here present will acknowledge the same: No sir, not so, vnder your correction, quoth the bishop of Rochester, for you haue not mine: No, oh, quoth the King, take here, is not this your hand and seale, and thewed him the instrument with seales? No forsoth, quoth the Bishop. How say you to that, quoth the King to the Archbishop of Canterbury? Sir, it is his hand and his seale, saide my Lord of Canterbury. No my Lord (quoth the Bishop of Rochester) indeed you were in hand with mee to haue both my hand and seale, as other of my Lords haue done, but then I said against to you, that I would never consent to any such act, for it was much against my conscience, and therefore my hand and seale should never be set to any such instrument, God willing, with much more matter touching the same communication betweene vs. Ye say truth, quoth the Archbishop of Canterbury, such words you had vnto me, but you were fully resolued at light, if at I should subscribe your name, and put to your seale my selfe, and you would allow the same. All which, quoth the Bishop of Rochester, vnder your correction my Lord, is not true. Well, well (quoth the king) it maketh no great matter, we will not stand with you in argument, you are but one man. And then the King rose vp, and the Court was adiorned vntill another day.

The next Court day the Cardinals sate againe, at which time the councell on both sides were there ready to answere: the Kings councell alleaged the matrimony not to bee lawfull at the beginning, because of the carnall copulation had betweene Prince Arthur and the Q. This matter being very vehemently touched on that side, and to proue it, they alleadged many reasons and similitudes of truth, and being answered negatively against on the other side, it seemed that all their former allegations were very doubtfull to bee tried, and that no man knew the truth. Yes (quoth the B. of Rochester) I know the truth: how know you (quoth my Lord Cardinall) the truth, more than any other person: Yes forsoth my Lord (quoth he Quia ego sum professor veritatis, therefore I know the truth: I know that God is truth it selfe, and he never saith but truth, and God said: Quos Deus coniunxit, homo non separet. And for as much as this marriage was ioyned and made by God to a good intent, I say that I know the truth, and that no man can breake vpon any wilfull occasion that which God hath made and constituted. So much doth all faithfull men (quoth my Lord Cardinall) know as well as you, yet this reason is not sufficient in this case, for the Kings councell doe alleage diuers presumptions to proue that it was not lawfull at the beginning. Ergo it was not ordained by God, for God doth nothing without a due order, therefore it is not to bee doubted, but if the presumptions be true, which they do alleadg to be most true, then the coniunction was not could not be of God. Therefore I say to you my Lord of Rochester, yee know not the truth, vnlesse ye can auoide their presumptions by iust reasons. Then quoth Doct. Ridley, it is a shame and a great dishonor to this honorable presence that any such presumption should bee alleaged in this open Court, which bee to detestable to bee rehearsed: what (quoth my Lord Cardinall) Domine Doctor magis reuerenter? No, no, my Lord (quoth he) there belongeth no reuerence to be giuen to this matter, for an vnreuerent matter would be vnreuerently answered: and there they left, and proceeded forth with other matter.

Thus the Court passed from session to session, and day to day, that at a certaine day of their session, the King sent for my L. Cardinall to come to him to Bridewell, who to accomplish his commandement went to him, and being there with him in communication in his priuy Chamber from eleuen vnto twelue of the clocke at noone and past, my Lord Cardinall departed from the King, and take his barge at the Blacke Fryers, & went to his house at Westminster. The Bishop of Carlile being in his barge barge, said vnto him winding his face, it is a hot day quoth hee: Yea my Lord (quoth the Cardinall if yee had beene as well chafed as I haue beene within this houre, yee would say it were very hot: as soone as hee came home to his house at Westminster, hee went incontinent to his naked bed, where hee had not laine full two houres, but that my Lord of Wiltshire came to speak with him of a message from the King. My Lord vnderstanding of his comming, commoned hee should bee brought to his bed side, and he being there, the wed him the K. pleasure was that he should incontinent goe with the other Cardinall vnto the Queene, (who was then in Bridewell in her Chamber there) to perswade with her by their wisedoms, and to aduise her to surrender the whole matter into the Kings hands, by her owne consent and will, which should be much better to her honour, than to stand to the triall of law, and thereby to be condemned, which should seeme much to her dishonour. To fulfill the K. pleasure, my L. said he was ready and would prepare him to go thither out of hand, &c. Then my L. arose, and made him ready, taking his barge and went straight to Bath place to Card. Campeius, and so went together to Bridewell, directly to the Q. lodging, and being in her chamber of presence, they shewed the gentleman Vsher that they came to speak with the Q. grace The gentleman Vsher aduertised the Queene, that the Cardinals were come to speake with her: with that the rose vp, and with a skeine of white thread about her neck, came into her chamber of presence, where the cardinals were attending, at whose comming, quoth the, alacke my Lords, I am very sorie to make you attend vpon me, what is your pleasure with me? If it please your Grace (quoth Cardinall Wolsey) to goe into your priuy chamber, we will shew you the cause of our comming: My Lord (quoth she) if ye haue any thing to say, speake it openly before all these folke: for I feare nothing that ye can say against me, but that I would all the world should heare and see it, and therfore speak your mind openly I pray you. Then began the Cardinall to speak to her in Latin: May good my L. (quoth she) speak to me in English, for I can (I thank God) both speak and vnderstand English, although I vnderstand some Latin. Forsooth (qo. the Cardinall) good Madam, if it please your Grace, we come both to know your minde how you are disposed to doe in this matter betweene the King and you, and also to declare secretly our opinions and counsell vnto you, which we doe onely for very zeale and obedience we beare vnto your grace. My Lord (quoth thee) I thanke you for your good will: but to make you answer in your request, I cannot so sodainely, for I was set among my maids at worke, thinking full little of any such matter, wherein there needeth a longer deliberation, & a better head than mine to make answere; for I need of counsell in this case, which toucheth me so neere, and for any counsell of friendship that I can find in England, they are not for my profit: what thinke you I pray you my Lords, will any English man counsell me, or be friendly to me against the K. pleasure, that be his subiects may know? and as for my counsell in whom I will put my trust, they bee not here, they be in Spaine in mine owne country: and my Lords, I am a poore woman lacking wit to answere to any such noble persons of wisedome as you bee in so weighty a matter, therefore I pray you, be good vnto me poore woman destitute of friends here in a forraine region, and your counsell also I will be glad to heare: and therewith the rose the Cardinall by the hand, and led him into her priuy chamber with the other Cardinall, where they tarried a season talking with the Q. what communication ended, they departed to the K. making to him relation of her talke, and after returned home to supper. Thus this case went forward from Court to Court, til it came to iudgement, so that euery man expected iudgement would be giuen the next day, at which day the King came thither, & set him down in a chaire within a dore, in the end of the gallery) which opened directly against the iudgement seate) to heare the iudgement giuen, at which time all their proceedings were openly read in Latine. That done, the K. counsell at the bar called for iudgement. with that (quoth Cardinall Campeius) I will not giue iudgement till I haue made relation to the Pope of all our proceedings, whose counsell and commandement in this case I will obserue, the matter is too high for vs to giue any hasty iudgement, considering the highnes of the persons, and the doubtfull occasions alleaged: and also whose commissioners we be, vnder whose authoritie we sit: it were therefore reason that we should make our chiefe head a Counsell in the same, before wee proceed to iudgement definitiue. I come not to please for fauour, meed, or dread of any person alive, to be King or otherwise, I haue no such respect to the person, that I will offend my conscience, I will not for the fauor or displeasure of any high estate, do that thing that should be against the will of God, I am an old man both weake and sickly, that looke dayly for death, &c. And for as much as I do vnderstand, hauing perceiuerance by the allegations in the matter, the cause is very doubtfull, and also the party defendant will make none answere, but doth rather appeale from vs, supposing that we be not indifferent, considering the K. high dignity and authority within his owne Realme, which hee hath ouer his subiects, & we being his subiects, the thinketh that we cannot do iustice for feare of displeasure. Therfore to auoid all these ambiguities and doubts, I will not wade any further in this matter, vnlesse I haue the iust opinion and assent of the Pope, and such other of more experience, or as he seme better in such doubtfull lawes, than I am: wherefore I will adiorn the court for this time, according to the order of the Court of Rome, from whence semblable iurisdiction is deriued: and if we should goe further than our commission doth warrant vs, it were great folly and much to our blames, and may be accounted breakers of the order of the high Court, from which (as I said) our authorities be derived. And with that the Court was dissolued, and no more done. Then stept forth the Duke of Suffolke from the king, and spake with an haut countenance these words: It was neuer merry in England (quoth hee) while we had any Cardinals among vs: which words were set forth both with countenance and vehemencie, that all men maruelled what he intended. to whom no man made answere. Then the D. spake against in great despight, to the which our Cardinall (perceiuing his vehemencie) soberly made answere, &c. This matter continued thus a long season, and my Lord Cardinall was in displeasure with the king, for that the matter in his suite toke no better incesse to his purpose, notwithstanding my Lo. excused him by his commission, which gaue him no authority to proceed in iudgement without knowledge of the Pope, who referred the same to himselfe. At the last they were aduertized by their post, that the Pope would take deliberation in the matter, vntill his Courts were opened, which should not be before Bartholomewtide next. The K. considering the time so long ere it should be determined, thought it good to send an Ambassadge to the Pope to perswade with him, to shew such honourable fauor vnto his maiestie, that the matter might sooner be ended than it was like to be. D. Stephen Gardiner Secretary was thither sent, and there tarryed till the latter end of Sommer. The King commanded the Quene to be removed out of the Court, and sent to another place: and his Highnes rode in his progresse. And when M. Secretary was returned from Rome, Cardinall Campeius made suite to be discharged, and was admitted to returne to Rome.

Stephen Gardiner the K. Secretary sent Ambassador.

Cardinall Campeius tooke his iourney towards Rome, with the kinges reward, but what it was I am vncertaine: neuertheless after their departure, it was reported vnto the king by the Councell, that Cardinall Campeius was departed, and carried with him great treasures of my L. Cardinals of England, to be conueyed in great sums to Rome, whither they surmised he would secretly repaire out of the Realme: insomuch, as they caused a post to ride after the Cardinall to search him. And when they ouertooke him at Calcis (where he was staid vntill search was made) there was not found so much money as he receiued of the K. reward, so he was dismissed, and went his way.

After that Cardinall Campeius was thus departed and gone, Michaelmas terme drew on, against which time my L. Cardinall resorted to his house at Westminster: and when the terme began, he went into the Hall in such like sort and gesture, as hee was accustomed most commonly to doe, and sate in the Chancery being then Chancellor: after which day he neuer sate more.

The next day he tarryed at home, expecting the comming of the Dukes of Suffolke and Norfolke, who came not that day: but the next day, to wit, the 18. day of October, they came thither vnto him, to whom they declared the K. pleasure, which was that he should surrender & deliuer by the great Seale into their hands, and to depart simply vnto Asher, which was an house situate nigh vnto Hampton Court, belonging to the Bishoprike of Winchester. The cardinall demanded of them their commission that gaue them such authoritie: who answered again, that they were sufficient commissioners, and had authoritie to do no lesse by the K. mouth: notwithstanding he would in no wise agree in that behalfe, without further knowledge of their authority, saying: That the great seale was deliuered him by the K. person, to enioy the ministration thereof, with the rome of the Chancellor, for the terme of his life, whereof for his suretie he had the K. letters patents: which matter was greatly debated betweene him and the dukes, with many great and haynous words, insomuch that the dukes were fain to depart again without their purpose, & rode to Windsor to the K. and made report accordingly: but the next day they returned againe, bringing with them the K. letters. Then the Cardinall deliuered vnto them the great Seale, and was content to depart simply, taking with him nothing but only certaine prouision for his house: and after long talke betweene him & the D. they departed with the great Seale of England, and brought the same to the K. Then the Card. called all his officers before him, & tok account of them for all such stuffe wher of they had charge, & in his Galery were set diuers Tables, whereupon lay a great number of goodly rich stuffe, as whole pieces of silke of all colours, veluet, satin, damosk, taffata, grograin, and other things: also there lay 1000. pieces of fine Holland cloth. There was laid on euery table bokes, reporting the contents of the same, & so was their inuentories of all things in order against the K. coming. He caused to be hanged the walls of the galery on the one side, with cloth of gold, cloth of tissue, cloth of siluer, and rich cloth of bodkin of diuers colours: on the other side were hanged the richest suite of copes of his own prouision made for his Colledges of Oxford and Ipswich, that euer was seene in England. Then had he two chambers adioyning to the galery, the one most commonly called the gilt Chamber, and the other the councel-chamber, wherein were set by 2. bord and long tables vpon trestles, whereupon was set such a number of plate of all sorts, as was almost incredible. In the gilt Chamber were set out vpon the Table nothing but gilt plate, and vpon a cupbord and in a windowe was set no plate, but gold very rich: and in the Councell-Chamber was all white and parcell gilt plate, and vnder the Table in baskets was all old broken siluer plate, and tokes sette by them, purpoyting euery kind of plate, and euery parcell, with the contents of the ounces therof. Thus was all things prepared, giuing charge of all the said stuffe, with all other remaining in euery office, to be deliuered to the K. to make answer to their charge: so the order was such that euery officer was charged with the receipt of the stuffe belonging to his office by indenture. Then all things being ordered, as is before rehearsed, Cardinall discharged of the great seale, and departed from Yorke place simply.

rehearsed, my Lord prepared him to depart by Water, and before his going, Sir William Gascoine being his treasurer, came vnto him, (to whom hee gaue among other the charge of the deliuerie of the said goods to bee deliuered vnto the King) and said vnto the Cardinall then being his Lord and Master. Sir (quoth he) I am sory for your Grace: for yee shall goe straight way to the Tower, as I heare say. Is this the good comfort and counsell (quoth my L. Cardinall vnto him) that you can giue your Master in aduersitie? It hath been alwayes your naturall inclination to be very light of credit, and much more lighter of reporting lies. I would you should know Sir Will. & all those reporters, that it is vntrue, for I neuer deserued to come there, although it hath pleased the King to take my house ready furnished for his pleasure at this time. I would all the world knew that I haue nothing but it is his of right; for by him, and of him I haue receiued all that I haue: therefore it is of conuenience & reason, that I render vnto his Highnesse the same again with all my heart: therfore go your wayes, and attend well to your charge. And therewithall he made him ready, and then with his traine of gentlemen and yeomen, which was no small number, he tok his barge at his priuie staires, and so went by water vnto Putney: at the taking whereof, there was walking by and downe in Thamis as full of boates, filled with people of London, expecting the Cardinals departing by water, supposing that he should haue gone to the tower, wherof they hoped sory much. Of wauering and new fangled multitude, is it not a wonder to consider the mutability of this vncertaine world, the common people desireth allwayes those things for the nouelties sake, which after turneth them to small profite or commodity? For if the sequele be well and directly weighed and considered, they had small cause to reioyce at his fall. What hath succeeded, wise men doe know, and the common sort themselues haue felt: wherfore to wonder at it, were but a folly, to study the remedy, it profiteth not: for thus it hath euer been, and will alwayes be, do what ye will to redresse the faute, it boteth not. I cannot see, but alwayes men in authority be disdained with the common sort of people, and they most of all that do obserue and minister iustice: for where they please some one that receiueth the benefit of the law at their hands according to iustice, they likewise displease the contrary part, supposing to sustaine wrong where they haue right. Thus all Iustices be in contempt with the people alwayes, for ministration of their duty, yet must some such be alwayes elected and deputed so to doe, for els if the world should be without inquisition and order, there should be too much erro & abomination. When he was arriued with all his traine at Putney, being vpon the land, he toke his Mule, and euery man toke their horses; and riding not past a paire of Buts length, he espyed a Gentleman come riding in poste downe the Hill in the Towne of Putney: And demanding of his Gentlemen about him, what he was that came riding downe so fast for sooth Sir (qd. they) itis master Norris, as it seemeth vs: and by and by, he came to my Lord, saluting him, and said: Sir, the Kings Maiestie commendeth him vnto you, and commaunded me to shew you, that you be as much in his fauour as euer you were, and so shall he: therefore he would that you should be of good chere, and take no thought, for you shall not lacke. And although he hath done thus vnkindly towards you, it is more for the satisfying of some, than of any indignation. And yet you know well that he is able to recompence you againe, and restore you to twise so much: and thus he bad me that I should shew you, and willed me to bid you to take all this matter in patience: and Sir, for my part I trust to see you in better estate then euer ye were. But when he heard Master Norris report the good and comfortable words of the King, he quickly lighted from his Mule, all alone, as though he had been the yongest amongst his men, and incontinent kneled downe in the dirt vpon both his knees, holding by his handes for ioy of the Kings most comfortable message: master Norris lighted also, stepping him to soone vpon his knees, and kneeled by him, and toke him in his armes, and asked him how he did, calling vpon him to credit his message: Mast. Noris (quoth he) when I consider the ioyfull newes that you haue brought me, I could do no lesse than greatly reioyce, euery wood pierced to my heart, that the sodaine ioy surmounted my memory, hauing no regard or respect to the place, but I thought it my duty, that in the same place where I receiued this comfort, to laud and praise God vpon my knees, and most humbly to render to my soueraigne L. my hearty thanks for the same. And as he was talking thus vpon his knees to Mast. Noris, he would haue pulled off a veluet night-cap which he ware vnder his blacke hat, and scarlet cap, but he could not vndoe the knot vnder his chin: wherefore with violence hee rent his laces of his cap, and pulled his said cap from his head, and kneeled bareheaded: and this done, he rose vp, and mounted againe vpon his mule, and so rode forth vp the high way in the towne, talking with master Noris. And when he came vpon Putney-heath, where M. Noris should depart from him, Mast. Noris gaue him a ring of gold with a stone, and said vnto him, that the K. sent him the same for a token of his good will, which ring (quoth he) the K. saith ye know very well. It was the priuie token betweene the King and him, when the K. would haue any especiall thing sped at his hands: then said he to Master Noris, if I were Lord of the Realme, the one halfe thereof were too small a reward to giue you for your paines and good newes: but good M. Noris, consider with me that I haue nothing left me, but my clothes vpon my backe, therefore I shall desire you to take this small reward at my hand (the which was a little chaine of golde made like a flagen chaine, with a crosse of gold, wherein was a peece of the holy Crosse, which he continually weare about his necke next his body:) and said wauering of the new-fangled multitude described.

Cardinall Wolley arriued at Putney, & what followeth there at that time.

said sur thermore: master Noris, I assure you, when I was in prosperity, although it seeme but small in value, yet I would not gladly have departed with the same for a thousand pound, therefore I shall require you to take it in good worth, and to weare it about your necke continually for my sake, and to remember me to the king, when ye shall see opportunity, unto whose highnes I shall most instantly require you to have me most humbly commended, for whose charitable disposition toward me, I can but pray for the preservation of his royall estate. I am his obedient subiect, his poore Chaplain, and bead man, and so will be during my life, accounting my selfe nothing, nor to have any thing but onely of him, and by him, whom I have iustly and truely served to the best of my grosse wit: and with that he take Mast. Noris by the hand bare-headed, and so departed. And when he was gone but a small distance, he returned againe, and caused master Noris to be called to him: when Master Noris was returned, hee said unto him, I am sory (quoth he) that I have no token to send to the king: but if ye will at my request present the king with this poore fole, I trust he will accept him: for he is for a Noblemans pleasure, for sooth worth 1000. pounde: so Master Noris take the fole, with whom my Lord was faine to send fire of his tallest yeomen to helpe him to convey the fole to the Court, for the poore fole take on like a tyrant rather then he would have departed from my Lord, but notwithstanding they conueyed him, and so brought him to the Court, where the king received him very gladly.

Parch the L. Cardinalls foole guen to the king.

After departure of M. Noris with his token to the king, my L. rode straight to Asher, which is an house belonging to the Bishoprick of Winchester, situate in the County of Surrey, not far from Hampton Court, where my L. and his family continued the space of 3. or 4. weekes, without either beds, sheets, table-clothes, or dishes to eate their meat in, or wherewith to buy any, howbeit there was good prouision of all kinde of victuall, and of beere, and wine, whereof there was sufficient, and plenty enough: but my Lord was compelled of necessity to borrow of Master Arundell, and of the Bishop of Carlile, plate, and dishes, both to drinke in, and eate his meate in. Thus my L. with his familie continued in this strange estate vntill after Hallowntide.

On Allhalowne day, when the Cardinall had finished his service, he returned into his Chamber, and called for his dinner, who was served in his privy Chamber, and there dined among diuers his Doctors, among whom master Thomas Cromwell dined: and sitting at dinner, it came to passe that in communication of his Gentlemen and seruents true & faithfull seruice which my Lord much commended, Master Cromwell tooke an occasion, to tell my Lorde that hee ought in conscience to consider the truth, and good service that they had done in his necessitie, which did not forsake him in weale nor woe, and sayd: Sir, it shall be well done for your grace, to call them before you, both Gentlemen which be worthy persons, and also Yeomen, and let them vnderstand, that ye right well consider their paines and trueth, with their faithfull service, and to giue them your commendation, with good words, the which shall bee to them great courage, to sustaine your misery with paines and patience, and to spend their life and substance in your service. Alas, Thomas (quoth my Lord) ye know I have nothing to giue them, and words without deedes bee not often well taken, for if I had but as I late had, I would depart with them so frankly, as they should bee well content: But nothing hath no sauour: and I am both ashamed and also sorie, that I am not able to requite their faithfull service. And although I doe reioyce, as I may, to consider the fidelitie that I see in the number of my seruants, who will not forsake me in my miserable estate, but be as diligent and as serviceable about me, as they were in my great triumph and glorie: Yet doe I lament againe as behemently the want of substance to distribute amongst them: Why Sir, (quoth Master Cromwell) have ye not heere a number of Chaplaines, to whom yee have departed liberally with spirituall promotions, insomuch, as some may dispend by your Graces preferment a thousand pound by yere, and some fiue hundred markes, and some more, and some lesse: You have not a Chaplaine within your house, or belonging vnto you, but hee may spend well at the least by your procurement and promotion, three hundred markes yeerely, who have had all the profite and gaines at your hands: and your other seruants nothing: and yet haue your seruantes taken much more paines in one day, then all your idle Chaplaines haue done in a yere. Therefore if they will not freely and friendly consider your liberalitie, and depart with you of the same goods gotten in your service, now in your great indigence and necessity, it is pitty that they line, and all the world will have them in indignation and hatred for their ingrattitude to their Master. I thinke no lesse Thomas (quoth my Lord:) wherefore I pray you cause all my seruants, to assemble without in my great Chamber after dinner, and see them stand in order, and I will declare vnto them my mind. After that the words cad was taken by, Master Cromwell came to the Gentleman-Usher and said. Heard you not (quoth hee) what my Lord said. Yes Sir, (quoth he) I did; why then (quoth hee) call all the Gentlemen and Yeomen vp into the great Chamber, and so it was done: the Gentlemen placed on the right side of the Chamber, and the Yeomen on the other side, and at the last my Lord came out with his Rochet vp on a violet gowne like a Bishop, who went straight to the vpper end of the said Chamber, where was the great window standing there a while, his Chaplains about him, beholding the godly maners of his seruants, who could not speake vnto them vntill the teares ran down his cheekes, which which few teares perceiued by his seruants, caused the fountaines of water to gush out of their faithfull eyes in such sort, as it would cause a cruell heart to lament. At the last, after he had turned his face to the window, and dried his moisted cheekes, he spake to them in this sort in effect. Most faithfull Gentlemen, and true-hearted Yeomen, I doe not lament to see you about me, but I lament in a manner, a certaine ingratitude on my behalfe towards you all, in whom hath beene a great default that in my prosperity have not done so much for you as I might have done either in deed or in word, which lay in my power then to doe, but then I knew not the iewel and speciall treasure I had in my house of you my faithfull seruants but now experience hath taught me, and with the eies of my discretion I do perceiue the same. There was neuer thing that repented me more that euer I did, then both the remembrance of my great and most oblitious negligence, and vnkind ingrattitude, that I have not promoted, preferred, and aduanced you all, according to your demerits: howbeit, it is not vnknowne vnto you all, that I was not so fully furnished of temporall promotions in my gift, as I was of spirituall preferments: and if I should have preferred you to any of the Kings offices, then should I have runne in the indignation of the Kings seruants, who would not much let to repost behinde my backe that there could no office in the Kings gift escape the Cardinall and his seruants: and thus should I have runne in open slander before all the world. But now it is come to this passe, that it pleased the King to take all that euer I have into his hands, so that I have nothing to give you: for I have nothing left me but my bare clothes vpon my backe, the which are simple in comparison that I had: howbeit, if it might doe you any good, I would not sticke to deuide the same among you: but my good Gentlemen and Yeomen, my trustie and faithfull seruants, and of whom no Prince had the like, I shall require you to take some patience with me a while: for I doubt not but that the King considering my suggested offence by mine enemies, which is put against me to be of small griefe or hurt for so great and sodaine an ouerthrow, will shortly restore me to my liuing, so that I shall be more able to deuide my substance among you, whereof ye shall not lacke; for whatsoeuer shall chance hereafter to be the ouer-plus and superfluity of my reuenewes, at the determination of my yerely account, it shall be distributed among you: for I will neuer during my life, observe the goods or riches of this world any other wise, then which shall bee sufficient to maintaine the state, that God hath, and shall call me to. And if the King doe not so shortly restore me, then will I write for you, either to the King, or to any Noble-man within this Realme, to retaine your service: for I doubt not but the King or any Noble-man of this Realme will credite my Letter in your commendation: therefore in the meane time I would aduise you to repaire home to your wives, such as haue wiues, and some of you that haue no wiues to take a time to visite your parents in the Countrey. There is none of you all, but once in a yeere ye would require licence to see and visite your wife and other your friends: take this time therefore in that respect, and in your returne I will not refuse you to beg with you. I consider that your service in my house hath beene such, that ye be not apt to serue any vnder the degree of a king: therefore I would aduise you to serue no man but the King, who I am sure will not refuse you. Therefore I desire you to take your pleasure for a moneth, and then ye may come againe: and by that time I trust the King will extend his mercy vpon me. Sir (quoth Master Cromwell) there bee diuers of these your Yeomen that would be glad to see their friends, but they lacke money: therefore heere be diuers of your Chaplaines who have received at your hands great Benefices, and Livings, let them shew themselues vnto you as they be bound to doe: I thinke their honestie and charitie is such, that they will not see you lacke that may doe you good or pleasure. And for my part, although I have not received of your Graces gift one peny toward the increase of my living, yet will I give you this toward the dispatch of your seruants: and therewith deliuered to my Lord, fiue pound in gold: and now let vs see what your Chaplaines will doe, I thinke they will depart with you much more liberally than I, who be more able to give you a pound then I a penie, goe to masters (quoth hee) to the Chaplains: I so much as they gaue to my L. liberally, some ten pound, some twenty nobles, some fiue pound and so some more, & some lesse, as their powers would extend at that time: by meanes whereof my L. received among them, as much mony as paid the Yeomen ten shillings a peece towards their quarters wages, and as much money as would pay euery of them for a moneths bond wages: and then they departed downe into the Hall, where some determined to goe to their friends, and some would not depart from my Lord, vntill they might see him in better estate. My Lord returned into his Chamber lamenting the departure from his seruants, making his moane to Master Cromwell, who comforted him the best he could, and desired my Lord to giue him leave to goe to London, whereas hee would either make or marre (which was alwayes his common word.) Then after a little communication with my Lord in secret, he departed, and tooke his horse, and rode to London. At whose departing he said to the Lords, Gentlemen, farewell, ye shall heare shortly of me, and if I speede well, I will not faile to be heere againe within these two dayes, and so hee rode on his iourney, Ralph Sadler since a Knight, was then his Clearke, and rode with him. After my Lord had supped that night, and all men got to bed, Allhallowne day about mid-night, one of the Porters wakened the Gentleman-Usher, and told him that there were a great number of horsemen at the gate, that would come in, saying that it was Sir John Russull: the Gentleman Vsher bad the porter goe downe, and make a great fire in the lodge to burne them, for it had raigned all that night most vehemently. The said gentleman-Vsher rose, cast on his night-Gowne, and went to the gates, and asked who was there: with that Maister Russell spake, and the gates were opened, Sir John Russell went to the fire to drie him, and said he came from the King on message to my Lord, Sir, quoth the gentleman Vsher, I trust your newes be good. Yea, I promise you on my fidelity, and so tell him, that I haue brought him such newes that will please him well. The Cardinall was wakened, and told of the iourney taken by Sir John Russell that troublesome night: I pray God all be for the best quoth my Lord: Yes, quoth the Gentleman Vsher, hee told mee it was such newes, as yee would greatly reioyce to heare: well then, quoth he God be praised, and welcome be his Grace, goe yee and fetch him to me, and by that time I will bee ready to talke with him.

When Maister Russell was come to my Lord, he had cast on his night-gowne, vnto whom Maister Russell made most humble reverence vpon his knee, whom my Lord stoped vnto, and take him vp, and bade him welcome: Sir (quoth hee) the King commendeth him vnto you, and deliuered him a great ring of gold, with a Tuckes for a token, and willed me to bid you be of good cheere, for hee loueth you as well as euer he did, and is sorry for your trouble, whole minde runneth much vpon you: insomuch that before his Grace sate downe to supper, he called me vnto him, and desired me to take the paines secretly to visite you, and to comfort you the best of my power. And Sir, I haue had the fayrest iourney for so little a way, that euer I had to my remembrance: my Lord thanked him for his paines and good newes, and demanded of him if he had supped, and hee said nay: well then (quoth my Lord) cause the Cookes to prouide some meate for him, and cause a Chamber to be prouided for him, that he may take his rest a while vpon a bed: all which commaundement was fulfilled, and in the meane time my Lord and Maister Russell were in secret communication, and in the end Maister Russell went to his Chamber, and said he would tarie but a while, for he would be at the Court, at Greenewich againe before day, and would not for any thing that it were knowne that hee had beene with my Lord that night. And so being in his Chamber, hauing a small repast, rested him a while vpon a bed, while his seruants supped, and dyed them. And that done, incontinent hee rode away with speede againe to the Court. After this within a while my Lord was restored to Plate, Vessell and Houshold-stuffe of euery thing necessarie some part, so that hee was better furnished than before.

Tho. Cromwell.

Now to returne to Maister Cromwell, to see how hee had sped since his departure. The case stood so, that the Parliament should begin in crastino animarum, or there abouts: and hee being within London, deuised with himselfe to be one of the Burgesses of the Parliament, and chanced to mete with one Sir Thomas Rush Knight, a speciall friend of his, whose Sonne was appointed to bee a Burgesse, of whom hee obtained his roome, and so put his fate into the Parliament house; so that within two or three dayes after his departure from my Lord, he came againe to Asher, with a pleasant countenance: and said, that hee had once aduentured to put in his fate, where he would be better regarded or euer the Parliament was finished. Then talked hee with my Lord, and after his talke, he rode againe to London, because hee would not bee absent from the Parliament in the Morning. There was nothing done against him in the Parliament-house, but hee sent to my Lord to know what answere hee might make in his behalfe: Insomuch, that there was nothing alleadged against my Lord, but that he was ready to make answere thereto: Insomuch, that at the length his honest estimation and earnest behauiour in his Maisters cause, grew so in euery mans opinion, how that hee was the most faithfull seruant to his Maister of all other, wherein he was greatly of all men commended. Then was there brought in a Bill of Articles into the Parliament-house, to haue my Lord condemned of treasons, against which bill Maister Cromwell inueyed so discreetly and with such wittie perswasions, and deepe reasons, that the same could take no effect. Then were his enemies constreyned to indight him in a Premunire, all which was to intitle the King to his goods and possessions, the which hee had obtained and purchased for the maintenance of his Colledges in Oxford and Ipstwich, whereof he was then in building in the most sumptuous wise: wherein when my Lord was demanded by the Iudges which were sent vnto him to know his minde, and to take his answere therein, hee answered them in this wise: My Lords Iudges (quoth hee) the Kings Highnesse knoweth, whether I haue offended his Maiestie or no, in vsing of my prerogatiue legantine, for the which I am indighted. I haue the Kings Licence in my Coffers, vnder his hand and broad Seale, for the exercising and vsing thereof in the most largest wise, the which now are in the hands of mine enemies. Therefore because I will not stand in question with the King in his owne cause, I will heere presently confesse before you the indightment, and put me wholly to the mercie and grace of the King, trusting that he hath a Conscience and a discretion to consider the truth and my humble submission and obedience, wherein I might right well stand to the tryall thereof by Iustice: but thus much you may say to his Highnesse, that I am wholly vnder his obeysance and will, and doe submitte my selfe to all things that shall bee his Princely pleasure, whole will and commandement I neuer neuer disobeyed or repugned, but was alwayes contented, and glad to please him before God, whom I ought most chiefly to haue obeyed, the which now me repents: notwithstanding, I most heartily require you to haue me vnto his royall Maiestie commended, for whom I doe and will during my life, pray to God to send him much prosperous honour and victorie ouer his enemies, and therewith they take their leaue and departed. Shortly after the King sent the Duke of Norfolke vnto him in message, but what it was, was kept secret. My Lord being aduertised that my Lord of Norfolke was comming euen at hand, he caused all his gentlemen to wait vpon him down through the Hall into the base Court to receiue the Duke at the gates, and commanded all his yeomen to stand in order still in the Hall: and he himselfe with his gentlemen went to the gates, where he received my Lord of Norfolke bare-headed, who embraced each other, and so led him by the arme through his Hall into his Chamber. And when the Duke had passed through vnto the vpper end of the Hall, regarding the number of tall Yeomen that stood on each side thereof, he turned againe to the Yeomen and said: Sirs (quoth he) your diligent and faithfull service vnto your Maister in this his calamitie, hath purchased you of all men, noble and ignoble, much honestie, insomuch, that the King commanded mee to say to you in his name, that for your true and louing service that ye haue done to your Maister, his Highnesse will see you at all times furnished with seruices according to your demerites: with that my Lord put off his Cap, and said to my Lord of Norfolke, sir (quoth hee) these men be all approued men, wherefore it were pitty they should want any seruice, and being sorie that I am not able to doe for them as my heart willeth, I will therefore require you my good Lord, to be a good Lord vnto them, and extend your charitie amongst them, where or when ye shall see occasion at any time hereafter, and that ye will prefer their diligence and faithfull service vnto the King. Doubt you not my Lord (quoth he) but I will doe for them the best in my power, and whereas I shall see cause. I will be an earnest suiter for them to the King: and some of you I will haue my selfe in seruice for right honest men, and as you haue begunne, so continue, vntill ye heare more of the Kings pleasure, Gods blessing and mine bee with you, and so went vp into the greate Chamber to dinner, whom my Lord Cardinall thanked, and said vnto him: yet my Lord of all other noblemen I haue cause to thanke you for your noble and gentle heart, the which you haue shewed me behinde my backe, as my seruant Thomas Cromwell hath reported vnto mee: but euen as ye be a Noble-man indeede, so haue you shewed your selfe no lesse to all men in calamitie, and in especiall to me, whom ye haue brought downe from my high estate: but now againe being in this miserable state, ye haue extended your fauour most honourably, with great charitie, &c. The dinner ended, the Cardinall and Duke went into my Lords priuie Chamber, where they continued in consultation: and betwy there, it chanced Maister Shelley the Iudge to come thither, who was sent from the King, whereof relation was made to my Lord: which caused the Duke and him to breake off their communication. And as the Duke desired to goe to a Chamber, he met with Maister Shelley, to whom Maister Shelley reported. And after hee had made relation of the cause of his comming, hee desired my Lord of Norfolke to tarrie, and to assist him in doing of his message: whome he denyed, and said, I haue nothing to doe with your message, wherein I will not meddle, and so departed into a Chamber, where hee tooke his rest for an houre or two: and in the meane time my Lord illued out of his priuie Chamber, and came to M. Shelley to know his message, who after due salutations, did declare vnto him that the Kings pleasure was to haue my Lords house, called Yorke Place, neere Westminster, belonging to the Bishoprycke of Yorke, and to possesse the same, according to the Law of his Realme: his Highnes hath sent for all the Iudges, and for all his learned Councell to know their opinions for the assurance thereof, whole opinions he fully resolued that your Grace must make a recognizance, and before a Iudge to acknowledge and confesse the right thereof to belong to the King and his Successors, and so his Highnes shall be assured thereof: wherefore it hath pleased the King to appoint and send mee hither to take of you the same recognizance, hauing in your Grace such affiance, as that yee will not refuse so to doe. Therefore I shall desire your Grace to know your pleasure therein. Maister Shelley (quoth my Lord) I know that the King of his owne nature is of a Royall stomache, not willing more than Iustice shall lead him vnto by the Law: And therefore I counsell you and all other Iudges and learned men of his Councell, to put no more into his head than Law that may stand with Conscience: for when ye tell him this is the Law, it were well done yee should tell him also, that although this be the Law, yet this is Conscience: for Law without Conscience is not meete to bee euen to a King by his Councell, to be ministred by him, ne by any of his ministers: for euery Counsellour to a King, ought to haue a respect to conscience before the rigor of the Law. For Lawes est facere quod decet, non quod licet. The King ought for his royall dignitie and prerogatiue to mitigate the rigor of the Law, where conscience hath no more force. And therefore in his Princely place he hath constituted a chancellor to order for him the same. And heretofore the Court of Chancerie, hath beene commonly called the Court of Conscience, because it hath iurisdiction to command the Law in euery case to desist from the execution of the rigor of the same, whereas conscience hath most effect. Therefore I say to you, that in this case, although you and other of your profession perceiue by the orders of the law, that the king may lawfully do that thing which pee require of me: how say you M. Shelley, may I do it with conscience, to giue that away which is none of mine from me & my successors if this be the law and conscience, I pray you shew me your opinion. Forsooth my Lord (quoth hee) there is a great conscience: but hauing regarde to the kings high power, and to a better purpose, it may the better stand with conscience: who is sufficient to recompence the Church of York with double the value. That I know wel but here is no such condition (quoth my L.) but onely a bare and simple departure with anothers right. For if euery Bish. that may, should so doe, then might euery prelate giue away the patrimony of their dignities, which should be but smally to the kings honor. Well I will not stand with you long in this matter. Let me see your commission: to whom M. Shelly shewed the same. And that seene, Master Shelley, quoth he to shall shew the Kings Highnes, that I am his most faith full subiect, obedience and beadman, whose repall remmandement and request I will in no wise disobey, but fulfill his pleasure in all such things wherein yee fathers of the law say, that I may lawfully doe, therefore I charge your conscience to discharge me, howbeit the whits Highnes from me, that I most humbly desire his maiestie to call to his most gracious remembrance, that there is both a heauen and hell. And therwithall the clearke tooke wpate the recognisance, and after seene, secret talke they departed. Then rose the duke of Norfolke from his repast, and after some communication with my Lord, he likewise departed. Thus continued my Lord at Asher, who receiued daily messages from the Court, some good, and some as euill, but mee euill than good: for his enemies procured his disquietnesse what they could, as some day they would cause the King to send for some of his Gentlemen from him to serue the King, and another day they would take away some of his promotions, or some of their promotions whom he had preferred before. Then could they fetch from him some of his yeomen, insomuch as the King take fifteene of them at one time into his guard. This was in the for a long time, so that there was not one day, but or euer hee went to bed, hee had an occasion greatly to chafe, and fret the heart out of his bodie, but that he was a wise man, and bare all things in patience. At Chrismasse he fell very sore sicke most likely to die, wherof the the King being aduertised, was very sorie, and sent Doctor Butts his Physitian vnto him, to see in what estate he was: D. Butts came vnto him, finding him lying very sicke in his bedde: and perceiuing the daunger, returned to the King, of whom the King demanded, saying: Haue ye seene ponder mans Beast (qd. he.) How do you like him (quoth the King?) Sir (quoth he) if ye will haue him dead, I warrant him, hee will be dead within these foure dayes, if he receiue no comfort from you shortly: Marie (quoth the King) God forbid that he should die: I pray you master Butts goe againe vnto him, and doe your cure vnto him, for I would not lose him for twentie thousand pound. Then must your Grace (quoth master Butts) send him first some comfortable message as shortly as ye can: & men to I will (quoth the King) by you, and therefore make speede to him againe, and ye shall deliuer him this ring from me for a token, in the which ring was ingrauen the Kings Image, within a Rubie, as like the King as could be deuised. This ring hee knoweth right well, for he gaue me the same and tell him that I am not offended with him in my heart any thing at all, and that shall be know shortly: therefore bid him plucke vp his heart, and bee of good comfort, and I charge you, come not from him vntill ye haue brought him out of danger of death. And so Doctor Butts departed with speede to Asher, after whom the King sent Doctor Cromer the Scot, Doctor Clement, and Doctor Vorton, to consult with Master Butts for my Lords recouerie.

After Master Butts had beene with my Lord, and deliuered the Kings token vnto him, with the most comfortable wordes that hee could deuise in the Kings behalfe, hee recouered not a little, and aduanced him in his bedde, and receiued the tokens most ioyfully, thanking Master Butts for his paines and good comfort: Master Butts told him further more, that the Kings pleasure was that he should minister vnto him for his health, and to ioyne with him for the better and most assured waies, he hath sent hither Doctor Clement, Doctor Cromer and Doctor Worton: Therefore my Lord (quath he) it were well done they were called in to dispute you and to consult with them: to this motion my Lord was contented to heare their iudgement, and it was not long ere they had brought him out of danger, and within foure dayes set him on his feete, and got him a stomacke to meat, all which done, they take their leaue to depart, refusing vtterly all rewards proffered them, saying the King had giuen them expertall commandement that they should take of him nothing, for at their returne hee himselfe would reward them. Thus my Lord continued at Asher vntill Candlemas, against which feast the King caused to be sent to my L. three or foure carloads of stuffe, as bedding, plate, hangings, kitchin-stuffe, &c. Then commanded he master Cromwell to make earnest suite to the King, that he might remoue my L. from thence to some other house: which suite at the Kings hands Master Cromwell obtained, for the King was contented he should remoue to Richmond, which place my Lord had a little before repaired to his great coste: for the King had made an exchange thereof with him for Hampton Court. All this was done without knowledge of the Kings Counsell: for if they might haue had vnderstanding hereof before, then would they haue perswaded the King to the contrarie: but when they knew of the Kings grant and licence, although they dissimuled mulled their minde in the Kings presence (yet were they afraid of him, lest his nigh resort to the King, might moue the King at some braide to haue resorted vnto him, and to haue called him home againe, considering the great louing affection that the King daily shewed vnto him: wherefore they doubted his rising vp againe, if they found not a meane thereby to remoue him further from the King. Insomuch that they thought it conuenient for their purpose to moue the King vpon consideration which they inuented, that it were very necessary that my Lord should goe downe into the North vnto his benefice, where he should bee a good stay for the country, to the which the King condescended. Whereupon my Lord of Norfolke bade master Cromwell to say to him, that he must goe home to his benefice: who at his next repaire to my Lord (then lying at Richmond) declared to him how it was determined that he should goe home to his benefice. Well then Thomas (quoth my Lord) we will goe to Winchester. I will (quoth master Cromwell) shew my Lord of Norfolke what yee say: and so he did. What should he doe there (quoth the Duke?) nay, let him goe to his Archbishoprick of Yorke, where his honour and more charge lieth: and so shew him. The Lords who were not his friends, moued the King to giue my Lord a pension of 3000. markes out of Winchester, and the rest to distribute among his nobility and seruants, and so in likewise to deuide the reuenues of Saint Albons, whereof some had three hundred markes, and some an hundred pounds, and so some more, and some lesse. And all the reuenes of the lands belonging to his Colledges of Oxford and Ipswich, which the King take into his owne hands whereof after Cromwell had the receipt and gouernance afore by my Lords assignment. Wherefore it was thought very necessary, that he should so haue still, who executed all things thereof carefully and wittily, that he was had in great estimation for his behauiour herein, and also for the true and faithfull demeanor towards his Lord and master. Then it came to passe, that those to who mthe King had giuen any annuities or fees for terme of life by patient, would not be good, but onely during my Lords life, for asmuch as the King had no longer state therein, the which he had by reason of my Lords attainder in the premunire, and to make their estates good and sufficient for the terme of their liues, there was none other shift, but to obtaine my Lords confirmation of their patents. And this to bee brought about, there was no meane but to sue to master Cromwell to attaine the same at my Lords hands, who they thought the best instrument for the purpose. Then began euery man, both Noble men and Gentlemen, who had any patents of the King out of Winchester or Saint Albons, to make suite to master Cromwell, to solicite the cause to my Lord, to get therein his confirmation, and for his paines therein, both worthily rewarded him, and euery man to shew himselfe pleasure as should be at all times in their seuerall powers wherof they assured him: Wherein Master Cromwell perceiued an occasion giuen him to helpe himselfe, and to bring to passe that hee long sought for, intending to worke in this matter according to their desires, the sooner to bring his owne enterprise and purpose to passe. Then at his next returne to my Lord, he moued this matter to him, and so perswaded with him, that they both wrought together to bring master Cromwell in place where he might doe good to my Lord, and also to himselfe. And now hauing the ordering and disposition of the lands of those Colledges, hee had great occasions of suits, besides his continuall accesse to the King, by meanes whereof hee drew into the Kings fauour, who reputed him to be a very wise man, and a meet instrument to serue his turne.

Cromwell his rising.

Now the Lords thought long to haue the Cardinall remoued further out of the Kings way, wherfore among other of my Lords, the Duke of Norfolke said to Master Cromwell, Cromwell (quoth he) me thinke the the Duke of Cardinall thy master maketh no haste to goe Norfolke against the Cardinall. northward, tell him if he goe not away, but shall tarry, I will teare him with my teeth: therefore I wish thee aduise him to prepare himselfe away as shortly as he can, or else he shall be sent forward. These words Master Cromwell reported to my Lord at his next repaire to him, who then had an occasion to resort to him for the dispatch of the noble and gentlemens patents. And there I will leaue off this matter, and speake of other things that in this meane time happened.

The Lady Margaret Duchesse of Sauoy Iunt to the Empress, and the Lady Lewes Dutchesse of Angolesme, mother to the French King, met at Cambray in the beginning of the month of June last past, to treate of a peace, where here present Doctor Tonstall Bishop of London, and Sir Thomas Moore Chancelor of the Duchy of Lancaster, commissioners for the King of England. At length through diligence of the saide Ladies, a peace was concluded betweene the Emperor, the Pope, the Kings of England and of France. This peace was called the womans peace, and was proclaimed by heraults, with of the sound of trumpets in the City of London, to the great reioycing of the merchants, who in times of the warres had sustained much hinderance.

to be printed beyond the Seas, many of them were conueyed into England, and there made sale of, as good merchandise, for many men desired to haue them, but this translation was forbidden by the King to bee vsed of his subiects: for his Counsell, namely, the Bishops affirmed that the same was not truely translated, and that therein were Prologues, and Prefaces sounding to heresie, with vncharitable railing against Bishops & the Clergy. The King therefore commanded the Bishops, that they calling to them the best learned men, of the Vniuersities, should cause a new translation to bee made, that the people without danger might An. reg. 22. read the same for their better instruction in the lawes of God.

Ambassadors to the Emperor and Pope.

The King vnderstanding that the Emperor and the Pope, were appointed to meete at Bonnonie or Boloigne, where the Emperor should bee crowned, sent thither an Ambassade from him the Earle of Wiltshire, Doctor Stokesley elected Bishop of London, and his Almoner doctor E. Lee, to declare both vnto the Pope and Emperor the Law of God, the determinations of the Vniuersities in the cause of his marriage, and to require the Pope to doe iustice according to truth, and also to shew to the Emperor, that the King did mooue this matter, only for discharge of his conscience, and not for any other respect of pleasure or displeasure earthly: these ambassadors comming to Bonony, were honorably received, and first, doing their message to the Pope, had answere of him, that he would heare the matter disputed when hee came to Rome, and according to the right he would doe iustice. The Emperor answered, that he in no wise would do against the lawes of God, and if the court of Rome would iudge that the matrimony was not good, he would be contented to stand by the dispensation, which hee thought to be of force enough to proue the marriage lawfull. With these answers the ambassadors departed, and returned homewards, till they came on this side the mountaines, and then receiued letters from the King which appointed the Earle of Wiltshire to go Ambassador to the French K. which then lay at Burdeaux, making shift for mony for the redeeming of his sons. And the B. of London was appointed to go to Padua, and other Vniuersities in Italy, to know their full resolutions and determinate opinions in the kings case of matrimony: and the kings almoner was commanded to return into England.

Suite to Rome for Iudges.

Afterwards King Henry vpon occasion of delay made by the Pope in his controuersie of diuorcement, and through displeasure of such reports as he heard had bene made of him to the court of Rome, and thereby pricked forward by some counsellers, to follow the example of the Germans, caused proclamation to be made on the 19. of September, forbidding all his subiects to purchase any manner of thing from the Court of Rome, containing matter preiudiciall to the high authority, iurisdiction, and prerogatiue royall of this Realme, or to the hinderance and impeachment of the kings Maiesties noble and vertuous intended purposes.

Cardinall Wolsey hauing licence of the K. (as ye haue heard) to repaire vnto Richmond, was there lodged within the lodge of the great parke, which was a very pretty house, where my Lord lay vntill lent with a pretty number of his seruants, for the rest went to bord wages. Vpon haue heard tofore what words the Duke of Norfolke had to Master Cromwell, touching my Lords going into his benefice of Yorke. At such time as master Cromwell told these words to my Lord, Mary Thomas (quoth my Lord) then is it time to be going, if he take it so: therfore I pray you to go to the King, and say I would go to my benefice of Yorke, but for lacke of money, desiring his grace to helpe me with some: for ye may say that the last money that I receiued from his grace hath bene too little to pay mine old debts, and to compell me to the payment thereof, hath bene too much extremity, taking my goods from me, wherein I trust his grace will haue a charitable respect: ye may also shew my Lord of Norfolke and other of the Councell, that I would depart, if I had money. Cromwell went to London, and my Lord remoued out of the lodge into the charterhouse at Richmond, where he lay in a lodging with Doctor Coller, made for himselfe vntill hee remoued Northward, which was on the Passion weeke: and euery day resorted to the charterhouse there, and in the afternoones he would sit in contemplation with one of the most ancient fathers of that house in their cels who conuerted him, and caused him to despise the vaine glory of the world, and gaue him shirts of haire to weare, the which hee weare diuers times after. When master Cromwell came to the court, he shewed my Lord of Norfolke that my Lord would gladly go northward, but for lacke of money, wherein hee desired his helpe to the King. Then was the King moued therein as well by master Cromwell, as by the counsell: which matter the King referred to determine and assigne to the counsell, who were in diuers opinions, so that after long debating it was concluded that he should haue by way of presta thousand markes of his pension out of Winchester: when this determination was concluded, they declared the same to the King, who straightway commanded the same thousand markes to be deliuered out of the hand to master Cromwell, and so it was. The King commanded master Cromwell to resort to him again, when he had receiued the same summe of money: at whose returne to the King, the King said: Shew my Lord although our Counsell haue assigned no sum of money for to beare his charges, yet, yee shall shew him in my behalfe, that I haue sent a thousand pound of my beneuolence, and tell him that he shall not lacke, and bid him be of good cheere. Master Cromwell humbly in my Lords behalfe, thanked the King, and therewith departed, and came to Richmond to my Lord, to whom he deliuered the money and whereof it was leuied, that the Counsell sent him, and of the money which the King sent him, adding thereto the Kings comfortable sayings, wherein my Lord did not a little reioyce. Then my Lord prepared all things for his iourney, and sent to London for Liuery clothes for his seruants that should ride with him: so that all things being furnished towards his iourney, in the beginning of passion weeke before Easter he set forward, and rode from Richmond to a place of the Abbot of Westminster called Hendon: the next day he removed to a place where the Lady Parry lay, called the Rie: the next day to Roiston, where he lodged in the Priory, the next day to Huntington, and there lodged in the Abbey. And the next day he removed to Peterborow, and there lodged in the Abbey, making there his abode all the next weeke, where he kept his solemne feast of Easter, with all his traine, in number 160. persons, hauing with him twelue cartes to carrie his stuffe of his owne, which he sent for from his College of Oxford, that were there pounded, besides threescore other carts of his daily carriage of necessaries for his buildings. Vpon Palme-sunday he went in procession with the Monks. And vpon maundy thursday he made his maundie there in our Ladies Chappell, hauing 50. poore men, whose feet he washed, and kissed after he had wiped them, hee gaue euery of the said poore men twelue-pence in mony, three ells of good canuas to make them shirts, a paire of new shoes, a cast of red herrings, and three white herrings, and one of them had two shillings. Vpon Easter day he rose to the resurrection, &c. On thursday next he remoued to master Fitz-Williams Knight (sometime a merchant Tailer of London, and then of the Kings Councell, who dwelt within three or foure miles of Peterborow) where he was toptully receiued, and had honorable entertainment. On munday next he removed to Grantham, & to Stamford and the next day to Grantham, & was lodged in the house of Easter Hall. The next night he lodged in the castle of Newarke, where hee remained the next day, and from thence rode to Southwell. Where he continued the most part of that Sommer, not without great resort of the most worthiest of the countrey. And diuers Noble-men hauing occasion to repaire into the same country there thought it good to visite my Lord as they trauelled, of whom they were most gladly entertained, and had right good cheere: whose name and estate behauiour caused him to haue much loue in the countrey of all kind of people: he kept there a noble house, where was boorded plenty of meate and drinke for all comers, and also vnto the almes gate at his gate vnto the poore of the towne and countrey. Whereby well, charity, and clemencie among his Tenants and other: he made many agreements betwixt Gentlemen and Gentlemen, and betwixt some Gentlemen and their wiues, and other meane persons, the which had bene long before aduerse and in great trouble, making for euery of them (as occasion serued) great assemblies & feasts, not sparing his purse where he might make amitie. It chanced vpon Corpus Christi Euen, in the night, when my Lord and all his household were at rest in their beds, there knocked at the gate two Gentlemen, the one named Master Brierton one of the Gentlemen of the Kings priuie Chamber, and Master Witherley, who were come from the King in post to speake with my Lord. These were let in, my L. was raised, and came to them into the oiuing Chamber: they seeing him in his night apparell, did to him due reuerence, whom he tooke by the hands, demanding how the King his Soueraigne Lord did. Sir, (said they) right well and merry, wee must desire to talke with you apart: With a good will (quoth he.) After long talke, they tooke forth of a little maile a little coffer couered with greene veluet, & bound with bars of siluer and gilt, with a locke and a gilt key, with the which they opened the cheft, out of the which they take an instrument or writing containing more then a skin of great parchment, hauing many Seales hanging to the same, whereunto they put more ware for my Lords seale: the which my Lord sealed and subscribed his name with his owne hand, and deliuered the same againe vnto them, desiring them to take a bed: for it was fourthwhat past midnight. But they said they would straight way ride to the Earle of Shrewsbury, to bee with him ere he were stirring: so my Lord caused them to eate such cold meate as was ready and to drinke a bowle or two of wine: that done, he gaue each of them foure olde Soueraignes of fine gold, and so they departed. In this feat and manner my Lord lay at Southwell vntill about the latter end of Iulie time, then he remoued to Newike, an Abbey, to Rufford and Wirth Abbey, and so to Scroby, where he continued till after Michaelmas, exercising many deeds of charitie, and commonly euery Sunday he would trauell vnto some poore parish church. & there would say his diuine seruice, and cause one of his Chaplaines to preach vnto the people: that done, he would dine in some honest house of the towne, where should be distributed to the poore a great almes in meate and drinke, as of money. About the feast of S. Michael, he remoued to Calwod Castle within 7. miles of Yorke, where he lay long after with much honor and loue of the country, doing deeds of charity, and beld there an honourable houshold for all commers, and also built and repaired the Castle, hauing artificers & labourers aboue the number of 300. persons daily in wages, &c. At length being thereunto perswaded by the doctors of the Church of Yorke, he determined to be stalled there at Yorke Minster the next Munday after Allhallowne day, against which time due preparation was made for the same, but not in so sumptuous wise as were his predecessors. My Lord sent his Gentleman Vsher to Yorke, to forecast things there that should bee ordered for and prouided for the solemnity, which should the Cardinall Wolley & Calwood. Prepare for install. day and houre as could be. Vpon All-hallowne day one of the head Officers of the Church of Yorke, which should haue the most doings in all this stallation, was with my L. at dinner at his house of Calwod, and sitting at dinner they fell in communication of this matter, and of the order thereof, saying that my my Lord should goe on foote from a Chappell of Saint Iames, without the Gates of the Citie vnto the Minster vp on cloth, the which should be distributed among the poore after his passage. My Lord hearing this, made answere in this wise: Although our Predecessors did goe vpon cloth so, we intend to goe on foot from thence without any such glory, for I take God to witnesse, I doe not intend to go thither for any triumph or glory, but only to performe the rites of the Church, to the which I am bound. And therefore I desire you all, and will commaund other my seruants to goe as humble thither without any superfluous or gorgeous apparrell, otherwise then in decent manner: for I doe purpose to come to Yorke vpon Sunday at night next and to lodge in the Deanes house, and vpon munday to be shaued, and there to make but a dinner for you of the close, and for other worshipfull Gentlemen that shall chance to come thither to the same, and to supper with some of the residencers, and the next day to dine with the Maior, and then to prepare home hither againe. The day being once knowne vnto all the Country which could not be hid, the worshipfull Gentlemen & other, as Abbots and Priors sent in such prouision of victuals, that it is almost incredible, as of fat beasts and muttons, Wilde-fowle, and Venison both red and fallow, and other dainty things such as would haue plentifully furnished the Feast. All which things we e vnknowne to my Lo, for as much as he being preuented and disappointed of his purpose, by reason that he was arrested of high treason, as ye shall heare hereafter, so that most part of this Sommer prouision was sent vnto Yorke that same day of his arrest, and the next day following: for his arrest was kept as close and secret from the country, because they doubted the common people, which had him in great estimation and loue, for his great charity and liberality which he vsed daily amongst them. It is appointed by the King and Councell, that Sir Walter Walsh Knight, one of the Kings priuy chamber, should be sent downe with a commission into the North, vnto the Earle of Northumberland, who was sometime brought vp in house with the Cardinall, and they twaine being ioynly in commission, to arrest the Cardinall of high treason: Master Walsh tooke his horse at the Court gate, about none, on Allhallowne day, toward the Earle of Northumberland. And now haue I occasion to declare what happened about the same time, which, peraduenture, stanched the troubles following to the Cardinall. The Cardinall sitting at dinner vpon Allhallowne day, hauing at his boords end diuers Chaplaines sitting at dinner, ye shall vnderstand that the Cardinals great crosse stood in a corner, at the tables end, leaning against the hanging, and when the boords end was taken vp, and a conuenient time for the chaplains to arise, one Doctor Augustine a Frenchman, and physitian to the Cardinal, rising from the table with the other, hauing vpon him a great gowne of boysterous bolmet, snatched vp the Crosse which trayling downe along the tappet, with the point of one of the Crosses, brake Doctor Boners head, that the blood ranne downe, the company there standing greatly astonished with the chance. The Cardinall perceiuing the same, demaunded what the matter meant, of such a sudden amaze, and they shewed him of the fall of the Crosse vpon Doctor Boners head: and hath it, quoth he, drawne any blood? Yea, forsooth, my Lord, quoth they: with that call he his head aside, and saide shaking his head Malum Omen, and therewith said Grace, and rose from the table, and went to his Chamber. Now marke the signification, how the Cardinall expounded this matter of Pomfret, after his fall. First, yee shall vnderstand, that the Crosse which bee bare, as Archbishop of Yorke, signified himselfe, and Augustine the Physician who ouerthrew the Crosse, was onely hee that accused the Cardinall, whereby his enemies caught an occasion to ouerthrow him: it fell vpon Doctor Boners head, who was Parker of the Cardinalls faculties and spirituall iurisdictions, and was then damnified by the ouerthrow of the Crosse: yea, and moreouer drawing blood of him, betokened death, which shortly after did ensue. About which time of this mischance, the same very day and season Master Walsh tooke his Horse at the Court, as nigh as could be iudged, and so much néeds be taken for a signe or token of that which followed. Now the appointed time drew neere of his exaltation, and sitting at dinner vpon the Friday next before the Monday, on the which day hee intended to be shaued at Yorke, the Earle of Northumberland and Master Walsh, with a great companie of Gentlemen of the Earles house, and of the Country, whom he had gathered together in the Kings name, came into the Hall at Catwod, the officers being at dinner, & the Cardinall not fully dined, being then in his fruites. The first thing that the Earle did after that hee had set order in the Hall, hee commanded the porter at the gate to deliuer him the keyes thereof, who would in no wise obey his commandement although he were roughly threatned, and straitly commanded in the K. name to make delinery of them to one of the Earles seruants; Sir (qd. he) seeing that ye doe but intend to set one of your seruants in my place to keepe the gates, I know no seruant that ye haue, but I am as able as he to doe it, and keep the gates to your purpose, whatsoeuer it be; and also the keies were deliuered me by my Lord & maister, wherefore I pray you to pardon me, for whatsoeuer ye shall command me to doe in the ministration of mine office, I shall doe it with good will: with that (qd. the Earle) hold him a booke, and commanded him to lay his hand thereon, thou shalt sweare (qd. he) that thou shalt well and truely keepe the gates to the Kings vse, and to doe all such things as we shall command, and that ye shall let passe neither in nor out at these gates, but such as ye be commanded by vs, and with this oath, he receiued the keyes at the Earles hands. Of all these doings knew the Cardinall nothing, for they stopped the Gaires, so that none went vp to the Cardinals Chamber, and they that came downe, could more go vp againe: at the last one escaped, who shewed the Cardinall that the Earle was in the hall: whereat the cardinall marueiled, & would not believe him, but commanded a Gentleman to bring him the truth, who going downe the Gaires, saw the Earle of Northumberland, and returned, and sayde it was very hee: then (quoth the Card.) I am sorie that we haue dined, for I feare our officers be not prouided of any more of good fish, to make him some honourable cheere, let the table stand (qd. he) with that he rose vp, and going downe the Gaires, he encountred the Earle comming vp with all his traine, and assoone as the Cardinall espied the Earle, he put off his Cap, and said, My Lord, ye be most heartily welcome, & so embraced each other: then the Cardinall take the Earle by the hand, & had him vp into his chamber, whom followed all the number of the Earls seruants. From thence, he led him into his Bed-chamber, and they being there all alone, the Earle said vnto the Cardinall with a soft voyce, laying his hand vpon his arme, my L. I arrest you of high treason: with which words the Cardinall being marueilously astonied, standing both still a good space, at the last, quoth the cardinall, what authoritie haue you to arrest me? Forsooth my Lord, qd. the Earle, I haue a commission so to do: where is your commission, quoth he, that I may see it? Nay Sir that you may not, said the Earle: well then quoth the cardinall, I will not obey your arrest. But as they were debating this matter betweene them in the chamber: to hustle was M. Walsh in arresting D. Augustine at the Dore in the Pallace, saying vnto him, goe in Traitor or I shall make thee. At the last Master Walsh being entred the Cardinals chamber, began to plucke off his hood, and after kneeled downe to the cardinall, vnto whom the cardinall sayde, come hither Gentleman and let me speake with you: sir, here my Lord of Northumberland hath arrested me, but by whose authority he sheweth not: if ye be toyned with him, I pray you shew me. Indeede my Lord, quoth M. Walsh, hee sheweth you the truth: well then, quoth the cardinall, I pray you let me see it. Sir, I beseech you, quoth Master Walsh, hold vs excused, there is annexed to our commission certain instructions which you may not see: well quoth the cardinall, I trowe ye are one of the Kings Priuie chamber, your name is Walsh, I am content to yeeld to you, but not to my Lord of Northumberland, without I see his Commission: the worst in the Kings priuie Chamber is sufficient to arrest the greatest Peere of the Realme by the K. commandement, without any commission, therefore put your commission and authority in execution, spare not, I will obey the Kings will: I take God to iudge, I neuer offended the King in word nor deede. Then the Earle called into the chamber diuers Gentlemen of his owne seruants, and after they had taken the Cardinalles Keyes from him, they put him in custodie of the Earles Gentlemen, and then they went about the house to set all things in an order: then sent they Doctor Augustine away to London with as much speede as they could, who was bound vnto the horse like a traytor, but it was Sunday toward night ere the Cardinall was conueyed from Catwood, and lodged that night in the Abbey of Pomfret. The next day hee remoued toward Doncaster, and was there lodged at the Black-Friers, the next day he was remooued to Sheffield parke, where the Earle of Shrewsbury with his Lady, and a great traine of Gentlemen and Gentlewomen receiued him with much honor. And the Cardinall being thus with the E. of Shrewsbury continued there 18. dayes after, vpon whom the E. appointed diuers Gentlemen to attend continually, to see that hee should lacke nothing, being serued in his owne Chamber, as honorably as he had ben in his owne house, and once euery day the Earle would repaire vnto him and commune with him. After the Cardinall had thus remained with the Earle of Shrewsburie about a fortnight, it came to passe at a certain time as he sate at his dinner in his own Chamber, hauing at his boordes end a messe of Gentlemen and Chaplaines to keepe him companie, toward the end of his dinner, when he was come to eating his fruites, his colour was perceiued often to chaunge, whereby he was iudged not to be good in health: where vpon, one of his Gentlemen said: Sir, me seemes you are not well at ease: to whom hee answered with a loude voyce, forsooth no more I am, for I am quoth he, taken sodainly with a thing about my stomacke, that lieth there along, as colde as a whetstone, which is no more but wind, I pray you go to the Poticarie & inquire of him if hee haue any thing that will breake wind vpward. Then went he to the E. & shewed him what estate the cardinall was in and what he desired: with that the Earle caused the poticarie to be called before him, and demanded of him if he had any thing that would breake wind vpward in a mans body, and hee answered, he had such geare. Then quoth the Earle, fetch me some: then the Poticarie fetched a white confection in a faire paper, and shewed it to the Earle, who commanded one to giue the assay thereof before him, and then the same to be brought to the Cardinall, who receiued it vp all at once into his mouth: But immediately after, surely hee auoyded much winde vpwarde. Loe, (quoth hee) ye may see that it was but wind, and now I am well eased, I thanke God, and so he rose from the Table, and went to his prayers. And that done, there came on him such a loosenesse that caused him to goe to his Stoole. And not long after the Earle of Shrewsburie came into the Gallery to him, with whom the Cardinall met, and then sitting downe vpon a Benche, the Earle asked him how hee did, and hee most lamentably answered him, and thanked him for his gentle entertainement: Sir, (quoth the Earle) if ye remember, yee haue often wished to come before the King, to make your answere, and I haue written to the King in that behalfe, making him parte of your Lamentation that ye inwardly haue received for his displeasure, who accepteth all your doings therein, as friends be accustomed to doe in such cases: wherefore I would aduise you to pluck vp your heart, and be not agast of your enemies, I doubt not but this your iourney to his Highnesse, shall bee much to your aduancement. The King hath sent for you that worshipfull Knight Master Kingstone and with him 24. of your old seruants, now of the guard, to the intent you may safely come to his Maiestie: Sir (quoth the Cardinall) I know M. Kingstone is Constable of the tower, yea, what of that, quoth the Earle? I assure you he is elected by the King for one of your friends: Mel quoth the Cardinall, as God wil, to be it, I am subiect to fortune, being a true man ready to accept such chances as shal follow and there an end. I pray you where is M. Kingstone? quoth the Earle I will send for him: I pray you so doe quoth the Cardinall: at whose message he came, as soone as the Cardinall espied him, he made haste to encounter him, and at his comming he kneeled to him, and saluted him in the Kings behalfe, whom the Cardinall bareheaded offered to take vp, and said: I pray you stand vp, kneele not to mee, I am but a wretch repleate with misery, not esteeming my selfe but as a vile abiect, vtterly cast away without desert, as God knoweth. Then said M. Kingstone with humble reuerence, Sir the K. hath him commended vnto you: I thanke his highnes, quoth the Cardinall, I trust he be in health: yea, quoth M. Kingstone, and hee commanded me to say to you, that you should assure your selfe that he beareth you as much good wil as euer he did, and willeth you to be of good chere, and where report hath beene made that ye should commit against him certain heynous crimes, which he thinketh to be vntrue, yet hee can doe no lesse than to send for you to your tryall, & take your tourney to him at your owne pleasure, commanding me to be attendant vpon you. Therefore sir I pray you when it shall be your own pleasure to take your tourney, I shall be ready to giue attendance: Master Kingstone quoth he, I thank you for your newes, and Sir, if I were as lusty as I haue bin of late, I would ride with you in post, but I am diseased with a fluxe that maketh mee very weake: but I shall with all speede make me ready to ride with you to morrowe. When night came, the Cardinall waxed very sicke with the laske, the which caused him continually to goe to the close all that night, insomuch, that he had that night .xxv. stooles: therefore in consideration of his infirmitie, they caused him to tarrie all that day and the next day he tooke his iourney with Master Kingstone, and them of the guard, till he came to an house of the E. of Shrewsburies called Hardwike Hall, where he lay all night, very euill at ease. The next day he rode to Nottingham, and there lodged that night more sicke: and the next day he rode to Leicester Abbey, and by the way waxed so sicke, that he was almost from his mule, so that it was night before hee came to the Abbey of Leicester: where at his comming in at the gates, the Abbot with all his Conuent met him with diuers torches light, whom they honourably receiued and welcommed: to whom the Cardinall sayde: Father Abbot, I am come hither to lay my bones among you, riding to it vntill he came to the staires of the chamber, where he alighted from his Mule, and M. Kingstone led him vp the stayres, and as soone as he was in his chamber he went to bed. This was on the saterday at night, & then encreased sicker and sicker vntill Monday, that all men thought hee would haue died. So on Tuesday S. Andrewes Euen, Master Kingstone came to him and bade him good morrow, for it was about five of the clocke, and asked him how he did: Sir, quoth hee, I tarry but the pleasure of God, to render my poore soule into his hands: not so Sir, qd. Master Kingstone with the grace of God, ye shall liue, and doe very well, if ye will be of good chere: nay in good sooth master Kingstone, my disease is such, that I cannot liue: for I haue had some experience in Physicke, Thus it is, I haue a flure with a continuall feauer, the nature whereof is, that if there be no alteration of the same within 8. daies, either must ensue excoriation of the entrailes, or frantse, or else present death, & the best of them is death, and as I suppose this is the eight day and if ye see no alteration in mee, there is no remedy, saue though I may liue a day or twaine after, but death must ensue. Sir quoth master Kingstone, you begin such pensiuenes, doubting that thing, that in good faith ye needs not. Well, well, Master Kingstone, quoth the Cardinall, I see the matter how it is framed: but if I had serued God as diligently, as I haue done the King, he would not haue giuen me ouer in my gray hayres: but this is the iust reward that I must receiue for the diligent paines and study that I haue had to doe him seruice, not regarding my seruice to God, but only to satisfie his pleasure: I pray you haue me most humbly commended vnto his royall maiestie, and beseech him in my behalfe to call to his princely remembrance, all matters proceeding betweene him and me from the beginning of the world, and the progresse of the same, and most especially in his weightie matter, and then shall his graces conscience know whether I haue offended him or no, &c. Master Kingstone farewell: I can no more say, but I with all things to haue good successe, my time draweth on fast, and euen with that hee began to draw his speech at length, and his tongue to faile, his eyes being set, whose sight failed him, then did they put him in remembrance of Christ his passion, and caused the yeomen of the guard to stand by to see him die, and to witnes of his words at his departure, and incontinently the clocke strooke eight, and then he gaue vp the ghost, and departed this present life, which caused some to call to remembrance how hee sayde the day before, that at eight of the clocke they should lose their Master: One of them lasted lasted on the other, supposing that either hee knew or prophesied of his departure.

The King as yee haue heard, notwithstanding his hastie diuorce, yet hee doubted not to keepe amitie with the Pope, for which cause he sent Stephen Gardiner, and Francis Brion to Rome.

Cardinall Campeius and Wolsey, were selected to decide the matter, whereat the Peeres and People murmured, and Queene Katherine her selfe toke exception against the iudges.

The King had formerly appointed Wolsey, to solicite the diuorce at Rome, and had caused many Bookes to be written both at home and abroad: for Cardinall Wolsey both then, and a good while before was verie prompt to set discorde betweene the King and Queene Katherine, because the Emperour failed to make him Pope, and had practised with Iohn Long-lande Bishoppe of Lincolne the Kings Confessor, to call his Marriage in question, who after a while gaue thereunto his furtherance, the Cardinall would faine haue drawne the Kinges liking vnto Margaret the French Kinges Sister, but the Kings heart was else where engaged.

Campeius seeing the matter plaine and honest on the Queenes side, refused to giue definitiue sentence, and craued longer time, the Pope hauing knowledge thereof, commanded the Cardinals not to proceede any further, and recalls Campeius to Rome. The King perceiuing all his purposes to bee plainely vnderstood, and in diuers things to bee frustrate, did then lay the whole blame vpon Wolsey, whose Fortunes then began to decline.

Example of pride and arrogancie.

Here is the end and fall of pride and arrogancie of men exalted by fortune to dignities: for I assure you in his time he was the haughtiest man in all his proceedings aliue, hauing more respect to the honor of his person, than he had to his spirituall Profession, wherein should be shewed, all meekenes, humility and charity, he discussing whereof any further, I leaue to Diuines.

After that hee was thus departed, Master Kingstone sent a Post to the King, aduertised him of the departure of the Cardinall by one of the gard, that saw and heard him die. And when Master Kingstone and the Abbot had consulted for the order of his burial, it was thought good that he should be buried the next day following, for Master Kingstone would not tarrie the returne of the Post: and it was thought good that the Maior of Leicester and his Brethren should be sent for, to see him personally dead, to auoyd false rumors that mought happen. In the meane time the body was taken out of the bed, who had vpon him next his body a shirt of haire, besides his other shirt of holland: now hauing put vpon his dead Corps, all such ornaments, as hee was professed in, when hee was made Bishop and Archbishop: as Miter, Crosse, Ring, and Pall, with all other things due to his order and dignitie: and lying thus all day in his Coffin open-faced, euery man that would might see him there dead, as the Mayor, his Brethren and other did. About foure or fiue of the Clocke at night he was carried downe into the Church, by the Abbot and Chanons, and Seruice was sung for the Funerals. And about foure of the clocke in the Morning Master Kingstone and his seruants came into the Church, and there tarried the executing of diuers Ceremonies, and then was he buried in the midst of our Ladies Chappell, and by that time it was fiue of the clocke in the morning. Then prepared euery man to horseback, being S. Andrewes day the Apostle, and so take their iourney to the Court. And thus ended the life of this rich Cardinall of England, whose Historye who list to read with a cleare eye, may behold the mutabilitie of vaine honors, and brittle assurance in aboundance, the vncertainty of dignities, the flattering of fained friends, and fickle fauor of worldly princes: whereof this L. Cardinall had felt and tasted both of the sweet & sowre in each degree: as fleeting frō honors, losing of riches, deposed from dignities, forsaken of friends, and the mutability of Princes fauor: of all which things hee had in this world the full felicitie, as long as fortune smiled vpon him: but when the began to frowne, how soone was he deprived of all these mundane hopes, and vaine pleasures, which in twenty yeares with great trauell and studie he obtained, was in one yeare and lesse, with great care and sorrow lost and consumed. O madnesse: O fonde desire: O foolish hope: O greedie desire of vaine honor, dignities, and riches: of what vnconstant hope and trust is it in the false fained countenance and promise of fortune! whereto se the Prophet said full well: Thesaurizat, & ignorat cui congregabit ea. Who is certaine that hee shall leaue his riches that he hath gathered in the world, vnto them whom hee hath purposed? The Wiseman saith: That another whom peraduenture hee hated in his life, shall spende it out, and consume it.

The Clergie of England, being iudged by the Kings learned Councell to bein the præmunire, for maintaining the power legantine of the Cardinall, were called by præcelle into the K. Bench to answere, whereforе in their conuocation they concluded a submission, wherein they called the K. supreame head of the Church of England, according to the Law of God, and not otherwise, and were contented to giue the King 100000. pounds to pardon their offences touching the præmunire.

The clergye condemned in the præmunire.

K. Hen. 8. præame head of the church.

When the Parliament was begun, the 6. of January, the pardon of the spirituall persons was signed with the Kings hand, and sent to the Lords, which they consented to, and signed the bill. But when the same came downe to the Commons it could not so easily passe, because diuers froward persons would also that the K. should pardon the laity as well as the spirituality, saying that all men which had dealt with the Cardinall were in like danger; This their stay and bold demand was thought more than reason, for that they would seeme to enuie other mens wealth, and also to restraine the King of his liberte: but at length they seemed to be sorrowfull for that they had dealt so vnaduisedly, and then the King sent them their part on, for the which they humbly thanked him.

Parliaments against the Kings mariage.

The 30. day of March the Lord Chancellor, and diuers other Lords, both Spirituall and Temporall, came into the Common house and there the Lord Chancellor declared what the King had done, touching the doubt of his Mariage, to know the opinions of learned men of diuers Vniuersities in Christendome, and there were read the determinations of the same Vniuersities, which they had written and sealed, concluding, that the Kings Mariage could not be lawfull: there were shewed also diuers bookes diuine, by doctors of forraine nations, which were to the same effect, but were not read, for that the day was spent.

K. Cooke buried in Smithfield.

The 5. of April one Richard Rose a Cooke was boyled in Smithfield, for poisoning of diuers persons, to the number of 16. or more at the B. of Rochesters place, amongst the which Benet Curwine Gentleman was one, and he intended to haue poysoned the Bishop himselfe, but he eate no pottage that day, whereby he escaped: marie the poore people that eat of them many of them dyed.

An. Reg. 23. King Henry sent vnto the Queene diuers Lords of the Counsell, about the last of May, the which Lords in her chamber at Greenwich declared vnto her the determinations of the Vniuersities concerning the Mariage betwixt them two, and demanded of her, whether she would for the quietnes of the Kings conscience, put the matter to foure Prelates, and foure temporall Lords of the Realme: but she still affirmed her selfe to be his lawfull wife, and therefore would abide in that point, till the court of Rome had made a finall end therein.

Chanterie Priests of London as gainst their Bishop.

The chanterie Priests of London being called afore the Bishop who would haue had them contributaries towards the payment of the 100000. l. granted to the K. for his pardon of the pyemunire, kept such a stir, in breaking into the Chapiter where the Bishop sate, that the B. was faine with faire words to dismisse them for a time: but after vpon complaint made to the Lord Chancellor, diuers of them, and of their partakers were arrested and committed to prison, to the number of fifteene Priests, and fiue Lay-men, some to the Tower, and some to the Fleete, and to other prisons, where they lay long after.

The Kings house at S. Iames built.

This yere King Henry tooke into his hands the Hospitall of Saint Iames nere vnto Charing Crosse, and all the meadowes to the same belonging, compounding with the Sisters of that house, they to haue pensions during their liues. And then builded in place of the said Hospitall, a goodly mansion, reteining still the name of S. Iames: he also inclosed a parke with a wall of bricke, now indifferently seruing to the said mansion, as also to his place of Whitehall at Westminster.

King by the Speaker, who humbly beseeched him in the name of the Commons to take such direction therein, as to his Highnesse might seeme expedient: whereunto the King answered he would take aduice, and beare the party accused nay, that Bishops should pay no more annuities, or otherwise money for their Pals to the Pope, for it was affirmed that there had beene paid for Pals, of Bishops and other, fifty the fourth of Henry the seuenth, 60000. pounds sterling.

The Parliament began againe after Easter, An. reg. 24.
there was a motion made to helpe the King

Possession in the towne of Calais.

The towne of Calais had at this season, 24. C. beds, and stabling for 2000. horses, besides the villages about.

The 21. of October, King Henry rode towards Boloigne, and was by the way at Sandingfield met by the French King, and many Nobles of France, who rode all to Boloigne, and were there lodged.

King Hen. rode to Boloigne.

The twenty fine of October, whilest the King lay thus in Boloigne, the French king called a chapter of the companies of his order called S. Michaell, of whom the King of England was one, and so hee there elected the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke, to bee companions of the same order, who being brought to the Chapter had their collars deliuered to them, and were sworne to the statutes of the order. The same day, they departed out of Boloigne toward Calais: without the Towne of Calais, about the distance of two miles, the Duke of Richmond the Kings base Son, with a great compante of Noble-men, which had not beene at Boloigne, met them, and saluting the French King, embraced him in most honourable and courteous manner. Then they pulled forward to Newenham bridge, and so to Calais, where was such prouision made for the receiuing of them, as well for lodging, plate, and all such other furniture of houshold, as also of all sorts of beasts, wines, and other necessaries, that it seemed wonderfull. The French Kings traine was 1200. Horse or more, among the which was the King of Nauarre, the Cardinall of Loraine, and many Dukes, Bishops and great Estates of France, Gascoigne, Britaine, and Normandie: but there was lodging enough in Calais, not onely for them, but also for many other, so that there were about 8000. persons lodged within the Towne at that time. Whilest these two Kings lay at Calais, K. Henry made the King of Nauarre Knight of the Garter. The next day, the French King, with the King of Nauarre, and all the great Lordes of France, rode againe to Boloigne: and King Hen. of England rode with them to Sandingfield, where he made the French King a costly banquet. At this enterview, there was a communication of a ioynt armie to bee made by them both, against the Turke, who had at that time a great armie in Hungary. The two Kings should bring into the field against him fourescore thousand men, whereof 10000. to be Horsemen with artillery and furniture, but the enemie of peace (the Diuell) stirred all Christian Princes against the Emperor, for that they feared he sought to be Monarch of all Italy. Whereupon King Henry of England sent presently to the French King, by the Lord of Pomerie the French Ambassadour 50000. crownes. The King of England feared that the Emperor, for Queene Katherine his Aunts sake (whom the said King had refused to be his lawfull wife) would ioyne with the Pope against him, whereforee hee made great complaints to the French King against the said Pope, for the wrong he did him in the matter of diuorce, and namely in that he would constraine him to goe in proper person to Rome, or else to send thither a Deputy with sufficient proric to answere the law, which the said King held for rigorous: furthermore hee requested the French King that they two might send ambassadors together against the Pope to some mon him to a councell: to see what abuse and great wrongs hee had done against Christian Princes, and their subiects, and exacting of the Clergie of England, and that the same, by the said Councell, might be reformed. To this the French King agreed, and forthwith willed the King of England to make all sure at home, and let him alone to deale abroade, but not to call the Pope to any Councell, for that by their 2. powers, he was otherwise to be dealt withall. Thus was the King of England now bent against the Pope, where of late he had giuen monethly three score thousand Angells, towardes the pay of an Army vnder Mounsier de Foys, for the Popes delinery, when he was holden prisoner in Castle Angell, by the late Duke of Burbons souldiers, and the Prince of Orange.

The Pope to bee summoned to a Councell.

The banquet being ended at Sandingfield, as is aforesaide, the two Kings departed like louing brethren in great amity. Whilest the King of England was in the French Kings dominions, he had the vpper hand, and likewise had the French King in the dominions of the King of England. And as the French King paid all the Englishmens charges at Boloign, so did the King of England pay the Frenchmens charges at Calais.

The 14. of November the King returning into England, landed at Douer.

King Henry kept his Christmas at Greenewich, and after Christmas Sir Thomas Audley Keeper of the great Seale, was made L. Chancellor of England.

1533. He marrieth the Lady Anne Bo-

King Henry priuily married the Lady Anne Boloigne on the fine and twentieth of January being S. Paules day: Mistresse Anne Sauage boze vp Queene Annes traine, and was her selfe shortly after married to the Lord Barkley, Doctor Rowland Lee, that married the King to Queene Anne, was made Bishop of Chester, then Bishop of Couentry and Litchfield, and President of Wales.

Parliament at Westminst.

And then began the Parliament, in the which was chosen Speaker Humphry Wingfield gentleman of Greses Inne. In this Parliament was enacted, that no person should appeale for any cause out of this Realme to the Court of Rome, but frō the Commissary to the Bishop, and from the Bish. to the Arch-bishop, and from the Arch-bishop to the King, and all causes of the Kings to be tryed in the vpper house of the Conuocation. It was also enacted the same time, that Q. Katherine should no more be called Queene, but Princesse Dowager, and the widdow of Prince Arthur.

Shelt two false Fryers ouer the first Shake ouer against the Kings ghostly Marriage.

The first that openly resisted or reprehended the King touching his marriage with Anne Boloigne, was one Fryer Peto, a simple man, yet very deuout, of the order of the Obseruants: this man preaching at Greenewich, vpon the two and twentieth Chapter of the third booke of the Kings, viz. the last part of the Story of Achab, saying, euen where the dogges licked the blood of Naboth, euen there shall the dogges licke thy blood also, O King, and therewithall spake of the lying Prophets, which abused the King, &c. I am quoth he, that Micheas whom thou wilt hate, because I must tell thee truely that this Marriage is vnlawfull, and I know I shall eate the bread of affliction, and drinke the water of sorrow, yet because our Lord hath put it into my mouth I must speak it, and when he had strongly inueighed against the Kings second Marriage to diswade him from it, he also said, there are many other Preachers, yea too many, which preach and perswade thee otherwise, feeding thy folly and fraile affections vpon hope of their owne worldly promotion, and by that meanes they betray thy soule, thy honor and posterity, to obtaine fat benefices, to become rich Abbots, and get Episcopall iurisdiction, and other Ecclesiasticall dignities, these I say are the foure hundreth Prophets, who in the spirit of lying, seeke to deceiue thee, but take good heed lest you being seduced, you find Achabs punishment, which was to haue his blood licked vpon the dogs, saying, it was one of the greatest miseries in Princes, to be daply abused by flatterers, &c. The King being thus reprooued, endured it patiently, and did no violence to Peto, but the next Sun-day being the eighth of May, Doctor Curwin preached in the same place, who most sharpely reprehended Peto, and his preaching, and called him dogge, slanderer, base beggerly Fryer, Close man, Rebell, and traytor, saying that no subiect should speak so audaciously to Princes, and hauing spoke much to that effect, and in commendation of the Kings Marriage, thereby to establish his seed in his seate for euer, &c. He then supposing to haue vtterly suppressed Peto, and his partakers, he lift vp his voyce and said, I speake to thee Peto which makest thy selfe Micheas, that thou mayest speak euill of Kings, but now thou art not to be found, being fledde for feare of shame, as being vnable to answere my arguments: and whilest hee thus spake, there was one Elstow, a fellow Fryer to Peto, standing in the Rood-loft, who with a bolde voyce sayd to Doct. Curwin, good sir, you know that Father Peto, as he was commanded, is now gone to a Prouincial Councell holden at Canterbury, and not fled for feare of you, for to morrow he will returne againe, in the meane time I am here as mother Micheas, and will lay downe my life to proue all those things true which he hath taught out of the holy scripture: and to this Combat I challenge thee before God and all equall Iudges, euen vnto the Curwin I say, which art one of the foure hundreth Prophets into whom the Spirit of lying is entred, and sacketh by adultery to establish Succession, betraying the King vnto endlesse perdition, more for thy owne vaine-glory and hope of promotion, then for discharge of thy clogged conscience, and the Kings Saluation, this Elstow waxed hot, and spake very earnestly, so as they cold not make him ceale his speech vntill the K. himselfe bad him hold his peace, and gaue order that he and Peto should bee conuented before the Councel, which was done the next day, and when the Lords had rebuked them, then the Earle of Essex tolde them, that they had deserued to be put into a Sack and cast into the Thames, whereunto Elstow smiling sayd, threaten these things to rich and daintie folke, which are clothed in Purple, fare delicatously, and haue their chiefest hope in this world, for we esteeme them not, but are toyfull that for the discharge of our duties wee are driuen hence, and with thankes to God we know the way to heauen, to bee as ready by water as by land, and therefore we care not which way we goe. These Fryers & all the rest of their order were banished shortly after, and after that none durst openly oppose themselues against the K. affections, Doctor Curwin was made Deane of Hereford, and after that Arch-bishop of Dublin in Ireland, and after that B. of Oxford in S. Maries time.

After that the King perceiued his new wife to be with childe, he called all officers necessary to be appointed to her, and so on Easter-euen being the twelfth day of April, she went to her Closet

Closet openly as Queene, and was proclaimed Queene of England: and then the King appointed the day of her Coronation to be kept on Whit-sunday next following, and writings were sent to all Sheriffes, to certifie the names of men of fortie pound lands, to receiue the order of Knight-hod, or else to make fine for the same. The assessement of which fine was appointed to Thomas Cromwell Maker of the Kings iewell-house, who so vsed the matter that a great sum of money was leuied to the Kings vse by these fines.

Men of 40. l. land, knighted. T. Cromwell maker of the Kings iewell-house.

The matter of appeale made by Q. Katherine, whereunto she still sticked, and by no meanes could be removed from it, was communed of both in the Parliament house, and also in the Conuocation, where it was so handled, that manie were of opinion, that not onely her appeale, but also all other appeales made to Rome were voyd, and of none effect, for that in ancient Councels it had bene determined, that a cause rising in one Province, should not be determined in another. This matter was opened with all the circumstances to the Lady Katherine Dowager, the which persisted still in her former opinion, and would by no meanes reuoke her appeale to the court of Rome. Whereupon the Arch-bishop of Canterbury doct. Thomas Cranmer accompanied with Doctor Iohn Stokesley Bishop of London, Stephen Gardener, Bishop of Winchell. the Bishops of Bath and Lincolne, and diuers other learned men in great number rode to Dunstable, which is fiue myles from Ampthill, where the Princesse Dowager lay, and there by one Doctor Lee shee was aduised to appeare before the said Archbishop in case of Matrimony in the sayd Towne of Dunstable: but shee made default and appeared not, wherefore she was called peremptorily euery day, fifteene dayes together, and at the last for lacke of appearance by the assent of the learned men there present, the was diuorced from the King, and the Marriage declared to be voyd and of none effect.

Katherine Dowager appeared.

Katherine Dowager diuorced.

K. Henry requested to appeare in a generall Councell.

In the moneth of May Pope Clement sent an Orator to the King, requiring him to appeare personally at the generall Councell, which was appointed to be kept in the yeare following: but when his commission was shewed at the Kings Court, there was neither place nor time certaine specified for the keeping of that Councell, and so with an vncertaine answere to an vncertaine demand, he departed, but not vnrewarded. Notwithstanding the King vnderstanding that the Pope, the Emperor, and the French King should meete at Nice in June following, he appointed the Duke of Norfolk, the Lord Rocheford, brother to Queene Anne, Sir William Pawlet, Controller of the Kings house, Sir Anthony Browne, and Sir Francis Brian Knights, to goe in Ambassage to the French K. and both to accompany him to Nice, and also to commune with the Pope there, concerning his stay in the Kings diuorce. These made their prouision ready, and so with the number of 8. score horses they went to Douer, and passing ouer to Calois, take their way through France, to accomplish their Ambassage as they had charge.

Preparation for coronation of Queen Anne.

The Kings Highnes addressed his Letters to the Maior and communaltie of London, signifying vnto them, that his pleasure was to solemnize the Coronation of his most deare and welbeloued wife Dn. Anne, at Westminster, on Whit-sunday next ensuing, willing them to make preparation, as well to fetch her Grace from Greene-wich to the Tower by water, as to see the Citie garnished with Pageants in places accustomed, for the honour of her grace, when she should be conueyed from the Tower to Westminster. Whereupon a common councell was called, and commaundement giuen to the Haberdashers, of which craft the Maior was, that they should prepare a Barge for the Bachelors, with a Master, and a Foyste, garnished with Banners, like as they vse when the Maior is presented at Westminster, on the morrow after the Feast of Saint Simon and Iude. Also all other crafts were commanded to prepare Barges, and to garnish them, not onely with their Banners accustomed, but also to decke them with Targets by the sides of the Barges, and to set by all such semely Banners, and Bannerets, as they had in their Halles, or could get to furnish their said Barges, and euery Barge to haue Minstrels, according to which commandement great preparation was made for all things necessary for such a noble triumph.

The 29. day of May being Thursday, the Maior and his Brethren all in Scarlet, and such as were Knights, had Collars of Esses, and the residue hauing great chaines, and the councell of the Citie assembled with them at S. Mary Hill. And at one of the clocke descended to the new staire to their Barge, which was garnished with many goodly Banners, and streamers, and richly couered, in which Barge was Shaulmes, Shagbushes, and diuers other Instruments of Musicke, which played continually.

After that the Maior and his Brethren were in their Barge, seeing that the Companies to the number of fifty Barges were ready to waite vpon them, they gaue commandement to the Companies, that no Barge should row nearer to another, than twice the length of the Barge, and to see the order kept, there were three Whirries prepared, and in euery part one of them two officers to call on them to keep their order.

The coming by water from Green-wich.

After which commandement giuen, they set forth in order, as hereafter is described. First, before the Maiors Barge was a foyste, for a waiter full of ordinance, in which foyste was a great red Dragon continually mouing and casting wild-fire, and round about the said Foyste stood terrible monstrous and wilde men casting fire, and making hideous noyse: next after the Foyste a good distance came the Maiors Barge: on whose right hand was the Bachelers Barge, in the which were trumpets, and diuers other melodious instruments: the decker of the said Barge and saile-yards and the top castles raftles were hanged with rich cloth of gold and like: at the fore-ship and the sterne were two great Banners rich beaten with the armes of the King and the Quéene: and on the top-raftle also was a long streamer newly beaten with the said armes: the sides of the barge was set full of flags and Banners of the deuices of the company of Haberdathers and Merchant-Aduenturers, and the raffeters or oares were hanged with innumerable Pensels, hauing little Bells at the endes, which made a gmole noyse, and was a goodly sight, wauering with the wind: on the outside of the Barge were three dozen Scutcheons in mettall, of the armes of the King and Quéene, which were beaten vpon square Buckeram diuided, so that the right side had the R. colours, and the left side the Quéenes, which Scutcheons were faskned on the clothes of gold and siluer, hanging on the deckes: on the left hand of the Mayor was another Foist, in the which was a mount, and on the mount stoode a white Faulcon crowned vpon a roote of golde enuironed with white Roses and red, which was the Quéenes deuice: about which mount sate Virgins singing and playing melodiously: Next after the Maior followed his fellowship the Haberdathers: next after them the Mercers: then the Grocers and so every Company in his order, and last of all the Maiors and Sheriffes officers, euery company hauing melodie in their barge by themselues, and goodly garnished with banners, and some couered with silke, and some with Arras or such like, which was a goodly sight to behold: and in his order they rowed by Grénewich to the point beyond Grénewich, and there they turned backward in another order, that is to wit, the Maiors and Sheriffes Officers first, and the meanest craft next, and so ascending to the vppermost craft in order, and the Maior last, as they go to Pauls at Christmasse, and in that order they rowed downe-ward to Grene-wich towne, and there cast anchor, making great melodie. At three of the clocke, the Quéene apparelled in rich cloth of gold, entred into her Barge, accompanied with diuers Ladies and Gentlewomen, and incontinent the Citizens set forward in their order, their minstrels continually playing: and the Batchelers Barge going on the Quéenes right hand, which thee twise great pleasure to behold. About the Quéenes Barge were manie Noblemen, as the D. of Suffolke, the Marquesse Dorset, the Earle of Wiltshire her Father, the Earle of Arundell, Darbie, Rutland, Worcester, Huntington Sussex, Oxford, and many Bishops and Noble-men, euery one in his barge, which was a goodly sight to beholde: the thus being accompanied, rowed towards the Tower: and in the meane way the ships which were commanded to lie on the more for letting of the Barges, shotte diuers peales of guns, and ere the lauded, there was a marueilous shot out of the Tower, I neuer heard the like: and at her lauing, there met with her the Lord Chamberlaine with the Officers of Armes, and brought her to the King, which received her with louing countenance at the Posterne by the water side, and kissed her, and then thee turned backe againe, and thanked the Maior and the Cittizens with many goodly wordes, and so entred into the Tower.

Postume of the Tower by the waters side.

After which entry the Cittizens all this while houered before the Tower, making great melodie, and went not a land, for none were affigned to land but the Mayor, the Recorder, and two Aldermen: but to speake of the people that stoode on every shoare to behold this sight, he that saw it not will not beléeue it.

On Fryday at dinner serued the King all such as were appointed by his Highnesse to bee Knights of the Bathe, which after dinner were brought to their Chambers, and that night were bathed and thriuen according to the old vsage of England, and the next day in the morning the King dubbed them according to the Ceremonies thereto belonging, whose names hereafter ensue, nineteene in number.

On Saturday the one and thirtieth day of May, the Quéene was conueyed through London in order as followeth: To the intent that the Dames should not ride on the Pauement, nor that the people should bee hurt by Horses, the high streets, where through the Quéene should passe, were all grauelled from the Tower vnto Temple-barre, and rayled on each side, within which rayles stood the crafts along in their order from Grace-Church, where the Marchants of the Stil-yard stoode vntill the little Conduit in Cheape, where the Aldermen stood, and on the other side of the Street stood the Constables of the City, apparelled in veluet and silke with great staues in their hands, to cause the people to giue rome, and keepe good order: and when the streets were somewhat ordered, the Maior in a gowne of crimosin veluet, and a rich coller of esses, with two footemen clothed in white and redde damaske, rode to the Tower, to giue his attendance on the Quéene, on whom the Sheriffes with their officers did awaite vntill they came to the Tower hill, where they taking their leaue, rode downe the high Streets, commanding the constables to kéepe roome and good order kept, and so went and stood by the Aldermen in Cheape, and before the Quéene with her traine should come, Grace-streate and Cornehill were hanged with fine Scarlet, Crimosin, and other grained clothes, and in some places with rich Arras, and the most part of Cheape was hanged with cloth of tissue, gold, veluet, and many rich hangings, which did make a goodly shew, and all the windowes were replenished with Ladies and Gentle-women to behold the Quéene and her traine, as they should passe by.

The Coneueying of Qu. Anne through the City to Westminst.

The first of the Quéenes company that set forward, were twelue French men belonging vnto the French Ambassador, cloathed in coates of blew veluet, with sleeues of yellow and blew veluet, their Horses trapped with cloth trapers of blew sarsenet powdred with white crosses: after them marched Gentlemen, Esquires, Knights two and two: after them the Iudges: after them the Knights of the Bathe in violet gownes with hoods purfled with miniuer, like Doctors: after them Abbots: then Barons: after them Bishops: the Earles and the Marquesses: then the Lord Chancellor of England: after him the Archbishop of Yorke, and the Ambassador of Uenice: after them the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Ambassador of France: after rode 2. Esquires of honor with robes of estate rolled and worne bandrickewise about their neckes, with caps of estate, representing the Dukes of Normandy and Aquitaine: after them rode the Maior of London with his mace, and Garter in his coat of armes, which bare also his mace of Wel-minst. Hall: after them rode the L. William Howard with the Marshals rod, deputy to his brother the D. of Norfolke Marshall of England, which was Ambassador then in France, and on his right hand rode Charles Duke of Suffolke for that day high Constable of England, bearing the warder of siluer appertaining to the office of Constablership, and all the Lords for the most part were clothed in crimosin veluet, and all the Quéenes seruants or Officers of Armes in scarlet: next before the Quéene rode her Chancellor bare-headed: the seriants and officers at armes rode on both sides of the Lords: then came the Quéen in a white litter of white cloth of gold, not couered or bailed, which was led by two Palfreis clad in white damaske downe to the ground, head and all, led by her footmen: she had on a kirtle of white cloth of tissue, and a mantle of the same furred with Ermine, her haire hanging downe: but on her head she had a coife with a circlet about it full of rich stones: ouer her was borne a canopy of cloth of gold with foure gilt staues, and foure siluer Belles: for bearing of the which canopye were appointed fifteene Knights: foure to beare it one space on foote, and foure another space, according to their owne appointment: next after the Quéen rode the L. Brough her Chamberlaine: next after him William Coffin Master of her horses, leading a spare horse with a fine sadle, trapped downe with cloth of tissue: after him rode 7. Ladies in crimosin veluet, turned vp with cloth of Gold and of tissue, and their Horses trapped with golde: after them two Chariots couered with red cloth of gold, in the first chariot were two Ladies, which were the olde Dutchesse of Norfolke, and the old Marchionesse of Dorset: in the second chariot were 4. Ladies all in crimosin veluet: after them rode seuen Ladies in the same sute, their Horses trapped and all: after them came the third chariot all in white, with fiue Ladies in crimosin veluet: next to them came the fourth Chariot all red, with eight Ladies also in crimosin: after them followed thirty gentlewomen all in velucet and silke, in the liuery of their Ladies, on whom they gaue their attendance: after them followed the Guarde in coates of Goldsmiths worke, in which order they rode forth til they came to Fan-church, where was made a pageant all of children apparelled like Marchants, which well-commed her in the Cittie, with two proper propositions both in French and in English: and from thence they rode vnto Grace Church corner, where was a costly & marueilous cunning pageant made by the marchants of the Stil-yard, therein was the mount Parnassus with the fountain of Helicon which was of white marble, and 4. streame: without pipe did rise an exceeding high and mixt together in a little cup aboue the fountaine, which fountaine ranne abundantly with right Rennesh Wine till night, on the mountaine sate Apollo, and at his féete sate Calliope: and on euery side of the mountaine sate fowre Muses playing on seuerall swéete instruments, and at their feete Epigrams and poesies were written in golden letters, in the which euery muse according to her property praised the Quéene.

Pageants.

From thence the Queen with her traine passed to Leaden-hall, where was a goodly pageant with a tippe and heauenly rose, and vnder the tippe was a goodly roote of Gold, set on a little mountaine enuironed with red roses and white, out of the tippe sate downe a faulcon all white, and set vpon the roote, and incontinent came downe an Angell with great melodie, and set a close crowne of golde on the faulcons head: and in the same pageant sate Saint Anne, with all her issue beneath her: and vnder Mary Cleophe sate her fowre children, of the which children, one made a goodly Oration to the Quéene of the fruitfulnesse of Saint Anne, and of her generation, trusting, that like fruit should come of her. Then she passed to the Conduit in Cornehill, where were the three Graces set in a Throne, afore whom was the spring of Grace, continually running Wine: afore the fountaine sate a Poet, declaring the properties of euery Grace: that done, euery Ladie by her selfe according to her propertie, gaue to the Quéene a seuerall gift of Grace.

That done, they passed by the great Conduit, in Cheape, which was newly painted with Armes and deuises, out of the which Conduit, (by a goodly Fountaine set at the end) ranne continually wine, both white and Claret all that afternoone: and so she rode to the Standard, which was richly painted with Images of Kings and Quenes, and hanged with Banners of Armes, and in the top was marueilous sweete Harmonie both of Songs and Instruments.

Then she went forward by the Crosse, which was newly gilt, till she came where the Aldermen stood, and then Master Baker the Recorder came to her with low reuerence, making a proper and briefe proposition, and gaue to her, in the name of the Citie, a thousand marks in golde, in a purse of gold, which she thankefully accepted with many good words, and so rode to the little Conduite, where was a rich pageant full of melody & songs, in which pageant were Pallas, Iuno, and Venus, and at last them Lord Mercurie, which in the name of the three Goddesses, gaue vnto her a ball of gold, diuided in three, signifying 3. gift which these three Goddesses gaue to her, that is to say, wisedome, riches, and felicitie.

Crosse in Cheap newes to gilt.

As she entred into Pauls gate, there was a goodly pageant, in which sate three Ladies richly cloathed, and in a circle on their head was written Regina Anna, prosper, proceed, and raigne. The Lady in the middest had a tablet, in the which was written, Veni, amica, coronaberis, and vnder the tablet sate an Angell with a close Crowne. And the Lady sitting on the right hand had a tablet of Siluer, in which was written, Domine dirige gressus meos. And the third Lady had a tablet of golde, with letters of azure written, Confide in Domino, and vnder their feete was written.

Regina Anna paris regi de sanguine nata,
Et paries populis sancta foelicitas.

And these Ladies cast downe Wafers, on the which the said two verses were written.

From thence she passed to the East ende of Pauls Church against the Schole, where stood a Scaffold, and children well apparelled, which said to her diuers goodly verses of Poets translated into English, to the honor of the King and her, which she highly commended. And then she came to Ludgate, which gate was new garnished with golde and bise, and on the leads of S. Martins Church stood a goodly Quere of singing men and children, which sang new Ballets made in praise of her Grace.

After that she was past Ludgate, she proceeded toward Fleet-street where the Conduit was newly painted, and all the Armes and Angels refreshed, and the Shalmes melodiously sounding. Vpon the Conduit was made a Tower with foure turrets, and in euery turret stood one of the cardenall vertues with their stations and properties, which had seuerall speeches, promising the Queene neuer to leaue her, but to be aiding and comforting her: and in the middest of the tower closely was such seuerall solemne instruments, that it seemed to be an heauenly noyse, and was much regarded and praysed: and besides this, the Conduit ran Wine, claret and red all the afternoone, so that with all her company, and the Maior, rode forth to Temple-bar, which was newly painted and repayred, where stood also diuers singing-men and children, till she came to Westminst. Hall, which was richly hanged with cloth of Arras, and newly glased, and in the middest of the Hall she was taken out of her litter, and so led vp to the high deske vnder the cloth of estate, on whose left hand was a cupbord of ten stages high, marueilous rich and beautifull to behold, and within a little season, was brought to the Queene with a solemne seruice in great standing Spice plates, a voide of Spice, and subtelties, with Ipocrase, and other wines, which she sent downe to her Ladies, and when the Ladies had dranke she gaue hearty thankes to the Lords and Ladies, and to the Maior, and other that had giuen their attendance on her; and so withdrew her selfe with a few Ladies to the wardrobe hall, and so to her chamber, and there shifted her and after went in her Barge secretly to the King to his Mannor of Westminster, where she rested that night.

On Whitsonday the 1. of June, the Maior clad in crimosin veluet, with his coller, and all the Aldermen and Sheriffes in scarlet, and the Counsell of the City, take their Barge at the Crane by 7. of the clocke, and came to Westminster, where they were welcommed, and brought into the Hall by M. Treasurer, and other of the Kings house, and so gaue their attendance till the D. should come forth betweene 8. and 9. of the clock that came into the Hall, and stood vnder the cloth of estate, and then came in the Kings Chappell, and the Monks of Westminster, all in rich Copes, and many Bishops and Abbots in Copes and Miters, which went into the midst of the Hall, and there stood a season, then was there a ray cloth spread from the Quenes standing in the Hall, through the Palace and Sanctuary, which was raysed on both sides to the high Altar of Westminster, after that the ray cloth was cast, the officers of armes appointed the order accordingly. First went Gentlemen, then Esquires, then Knights, then Aldermen of London in their clokes of scarlet, cast ouer their gownes of scarlet.

Coronation of K. Anne.

After them, the Iudges in their mantles of scarlet and coifes: then followed the Knights of the Bath, being no Lords, euery man hauing a white lace on his left sleeue: the followed Barons and Vicounts in their Parliament robes of scarlet: after them came Earles, Marquesses, and Dukes in their Robes of Estate, of crimosin veluet, furred with Ermin, poudred according to their degrees. After them came the L. Chancellor in a robe of scarlet, open before, bordered with lettice. After him came the K. Chappell, and the Monkes solemnly singing, with procession. Then came Abbots and Bishops mitered, then Sergeants and officers at armes: Then the Maior of London with his mace, and Gartar in his coate of armes: then the the marques Dorset in his robe of estate, which bare the Scepter of gold, and the Earle of Arundell, which bare the rod of Iuorie with the Doue both together: then alone the Earle of Oxford high Chamberlaine of England, which bare the Crowne. After him the Duke of Suffolke in his Robe of Estate, for that day being high Stewarde of England, hauing a long white rod in his hand, and the Lord William Howard with the rod of the Marshal-ship, and euery Knight of the Gartar had on his Collar of the Order. Then proceeded forth the Quene in a curcote and robe of purple veluet, furred with Ermine in her hayre, coife, and circlet, as she had the Saturday, and ouer her was borne the Canoppe, by foure of the Cinque portes, all in Crimosin, with points of blew and red hanging ouer their sleeues, and the Bishops of London and Winchester bare by the lappes of the Quenes robe, and her traine which was very long, was borne by the olde Dutchesse of Norfolke. After her followed Ladies, being Lords wiues, which had circates of scarlet, with narrow sleeues, the breast all lettice, with barres of powders according to their degrees, and ouer that they had mantles of scarlet furred, and euery mantle had lettice about the necke like a neckerchiefe, likewise poudered, so that by the poudrings their degrees might be knowne. Then followed Ladies being Knights wiues, in gownes of scarlet, with narrow sleeues without trames, onely edged with lettice, likewise had all the Quenes Gentlewomen.

When she was thus brought to the high place made in the middest of the Church betweene the Quere and the high Altar, she was set in a rich chaire, & after that she had refted a while, she deliuered downe vnto the high Altar, and there prostrated her selfe while the Bishop of Canterbury said certain Collects ouer her. Then she rose, and the Bishop annointed her on the head and on the breast: and then she was led vp againe to her chaire, where after diuers orisons said, the Archbi. set the Crowne of S. Edward on her head, and then deliuered her the Scepter of golde in her right hand, and the rod of Iuory with the doue in the left hand, & then all the quere sung Te Deum, &c. Which done, the Bishop take off the crowne of S. Edward being heauie, and set on her heade the Crowne made for her, and so went to masse, and when the offering was begunne, she descended downe and offered being Crowned, and so ascended vp againe & sate in her chaire till Agnus was said, and then she went downe and kneled before the high Altar, where she receiued of the Arch-bishop the holy sacrament, and then went vp to the place againe. After that Masse was done, she went to S. Edwards shrine, and there offered. After which offring done, she withdrew her into a little place made for that purpose on the one side of the quere. Mowin the meane season euery Dutches put on her bonet a coronell of gold wrought with flowers, & euery Marchionesse put on a demi-coronell of Golde, & euery Countesse a plaine circle of gold without flowers, and euery Lady at armes put on a Crowne of copper and gilt, all which were worne till night.

When the Quene had a little reposed her, the company returned in the same order that they set forth, and the Quene went crowned, and so did the Ladies aforesaid: her right hand was sustained be the Earle of Wiltshire her father, and her left hand by the L. Talbot, Legate for the Earle of Shrewsbury and L. Furniual his father. And when she was out of the sanctuary within the Pallace, the trumpets played marueylous freshly, and so she was brought to Westminster Hall, and so to her withdrawing chamber: during which time, the Lord, Iudges, Maior, and Aldermen, put off their ches, mantles, and cloaks, and tooke their hods from their necks, and cast them about their shoulders, and the Lords sate onley in their circates, and the Iudges and Aldermen in their gownes, and all the Lords that serued that day serued in their circates, & their hods about their shoulders. Also diuers officers of the Kings house being no Lords, had circates and hods of scarlet, edged with miniuer, as treasurer, controller, and Master of the Iewell house, but their Circates were not gilt.

The sitting at dinner of K. Anne.

While the Quene was in her Chamber, euery Lord and other that ought to doe seruice at the Cozonation, did prepare them according to their dutie as the D. of Suffolke high Steward of England, which was richly apparelled, his dublet and iacket set with orient pearle, his gowne crimosin veluet embroidered, his courser trapped with a close trapper head and all to the ground of crimosin veluet, set full of letters of gold of Gold smiths worke hauing a long white rod in his hand. On his left hand rode the Lord William, deputy for his brother as Earle marshall with the marshals rod, whose gown was crimosin veluet, and his hoyse trapper purple veluet cut on white sattine embroidered with white Lions. The Earle of Oxford was high Chamberlaine, the Earle of Essex caruer, the Earle of Sussex, sewer, the Earle of Arundell, chiefe Butler, on whom 12. Citizens of London did giue their attendance at the cupboord: the E. of Darby, cup-bearer the vicount Lisle, panter, the Lord Burgeiny, chiefe larder, the Lord Bray, Almoner for him and his copartners, and the Maior of Oxford kept the buttery bar, and Tho. Wyat was chosen Sweerer for Sir Henry Wiat his Father.

When all things were ready and ordered, the Quene vnder her Canoppe came into the Hall, and washed, and sate downe in the middest of the Table vnder her cloth of estate. On the right side of her chaire stood the Countesse of Oxford widdow, and on her left hand stood the Countesse of Worcester all the dinner season, which diuers times in the dinner time did hold a fine cloth before the Quenes face when she list to spit, or doe otherwise at her pleasure: and at the Tables end sate the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the right hand of the Quene, and in the middest betweene the Archbishoppe and the Countesse of Oxford stood the Earle of Orlo̊ with white staffe all dinner time, and at the Quenes borde vnder the Table sate two Gentlewomen all dinner time. When all these things were thus ordered, came in D. of Suffolke, and the Lord William Howard on horsebacke, and the Sergeants of armes before them, and after them the Sewer, and then the Knights of the Bathe, bringing in the first course, which was eight and twenty dishes, besides subtilties, and Shippes made of ware, marueylous gorgeous to beholde, all which time of seruice the trumpets standing in the Window at the neather end of the Hall, played.

When she was serued of two dishes, then the Archbishops service was set downe, whose sewer came equall with the third dish of the Quenes seruice on his left hand. After that the Quene and the Archbishop were serued, the Barons of the Ports began the Table on the right hand nert the wall, then at the Table sate the Maisters and Clearkes of the Chancerie, and beneathe them other Doctors and Gentle-men. The Table nert the wall on the left hand by the cupboorde was begunne by the Maior and Aldermen, the Chamberlaine, and Councell of the City of London, and beneath them sate substantiall Marchants, and so downe-warde other worshipfull persons. At the Table on the right hand in the midst of the Hall sate the L. Chancellor, and other temporall Lordes, on the right side of the Table in their circuite: and on the left side of the same Table sate Bishops and Abbots in their Parliament Robes: beneath them, sate the Iudges, Sergeants, and the Kings Councell: beneath them, the Knights of the Bathe. At the Table on the left hand in the middle part sate Dutchesses, Marquesses, Countesses, Baronesses in their Robes, and other Ladies in circotes, and Gentlewomen in gownes, all which Gentlewomen and Ladies sate on the left side of the table along, and none on the right side, and when all were thus set, they were incontinent serued so quickly, that it was marueilous; for the Seruitors gaue so good attendance, that meat, nor drinke, nor any thing else needed to be called for, which in so great a multitude was marueil. As touching the fare, there could be deuised no more costly dishes, nor subtilties. The Maio̊ of London was serued with foure and twenty dishes, at 2. courses, and so were all his brethren, and such as sate at his table. The Quene had at her second course foure and twenty dishes, and thirtie at the third course, and betweene the last courses, the Kings of Armes crowned, and other officers of Armes cryed larges in three partes of the hall, and after stood in their place, which was in the bekens of the Kings Bench: and on the right hand out of the cloyster of S. Stephens Chappell was made a little Closet, in which the King with diuers Ambassadours lined to behold the service, the Duke of Suffolke, and the Lord William rode oftentimes about the hall, cheering the Lords, Ladies, and Maio̊, and his brethren.

After they in the Hall had dined, they had wafers and Ipocrase, and then they washed, and were commanded to rise and stand still in their places before the tables o̊ on the formes till the Quene had washed. When she had taken Wafers and Ipocrase, the Table was taken vp, and the Carle of Rutland brought vp the surnape, and laid it at the Bords end, which immediately was drawne and cast by Maister Reade Marshall of the Hall, and the Quene washed, and after the Arch-bishop, and after the Surnape was with drawne: then she rose, and stod in the middest of the Hall place, to whom the Carle of Sussex in a goodly spice plate, brought a void of spice and confections. After him the Maio̊ of London brought a standing cup of gold, set in a cup of assay of gold, after that shee had dronke, she gaue the Maio̊ the cup, with the cup of assay, because there was no couer, according to the claime of the City, thanking him and all his Brethren of their paine.

Then she vnder her canopy departed to her chamber, and at the entry of her chamber, shee gaue the canopie with bels and all to the Barons of the Ports according to their claime, with great thanks: then the Maio̊ of London bearing his cup in his hand with his Brethren, went through the Hall to their Barge, and so did all other Noble-men and Gentlemen, for it was fire of the clocke.

On Sunday were the Iustes at the tilt before the Kings gate, where the Maio̊ and his Brethren had a godly standing, but there were few speares broken, by reason the Horses would not cope.

On Wednesday the king sent for the Maio̊ and his brethren to Westminster, and there he himselfe gaue vnto them heartie thankes, with many goodly words.

On Midsommer Euen deceased Mary the Frenche Quene, Sister to King Henry the 8. and wife to Charles D. of Suffolke, and shee was buried at S. Edmundsbury. Mary King Henries sister deceased.

The fifth of July Q. Katherine was proclaimed Prince Arthurs widdow.

The 7. of July, two Marchants were murthered on the Thames by one Wolfe and his wife.

It was this yeare enacted, that Butchers should sell their Beefe and Mutton by weight, Beefe for a halfepenny the pound, and Mutton for three farthings: which being deuised for the great commodity of the Realme (as it was thought) hath proued far otherwise, for at that time fat Oxen were sold for fiue and twenty shillings and eight pence the piece, fat Weathers for 3 shillings and 4. pence the piece, fat calues of the like price, a fat Lamb for twelue-pence. The Butchers of London sold penny pieces of Beefe for the reliefe of the poore, euery piece two pound and a halfe, sometime three pound for a penny: and 12. sometime 14. of these pieces for twelue-pence: mutton 8. pence the quarter, and an hundred weight of beefe for 4. shillings and eight-pence: what price it hath growne to since it neeedeth not be set downe. At this time also, and not before, were foraine Butchers Beefe and mutton sold by weight.

permitted to sell their flesh in Leaden-hall market of London.

Birth of Lady Elizabeth, and her christening.

The 7. of Septemb. being Sunday, betweene three and foure of the clocke at afternoone, the Qu. was deliuered of a faire Ladie, for whose good deliuerance Te Deum was sung incontinently, and great preparation was made for the Christning. The Maio̊ and his Brethren, and forty of the chiefe cittizens were commanded to bee at the Christning the Wednesday following. Upon which day the Maio̊, Sir Stephen Peacocke, in a gowne of crimosin velvet, with his collar of Esses, and all the Aldermen in scarlet, with collars and chaines, and all the Councell of the Citie with them, take their barge at one of the clocke, and the cittizens had another Barge, and so rowed to Grenewich, where were many Lords, Knights, and gentlemen assembled: all the Walles betweene the Kings Pallace, & the fryers were hanged with arras, and all the way strewed with greene rushes. The fryers Church was also hanged with rich Arras: the Font was of silver, and stode in the midst of the Church 3. steps high, which was couered with a fine cloth: and diuers gentlemen with Aprons and Towels about their neckes, gaue attendance about it, that no filth should come to the Fonte: Ouer it hong a square Canopie of Crimosin Sattin, fringed with Gold, about it was a raile, couered with red Sape, betweene the quere and body of the Church was a close place with a pan of fire to make the Childe ready in. When all these things were ordered, the Childe was brought to the Hall, and then euery maister of worship went forward: first, the cittizens two and two, then gentlemen, Esquires, and Chaplaines, next after them the Aldermen, and the Maio̊ alone, and next the Kings Counsell, then the Kinges Chappel in copes, then barons, bishops, earles, the C. of Esser bearing the couered basons gilt, after him the Marques of Dorset with a Taper of virgin wax, next him the Marques Dorset bearing the salt, behind him the Lady Mary of Norfolke bearing the crisome, which was very rich of pearle & stone. The old dutches of Norfolke bare the childe in a Mantle of purple velvet, with a long traine furred with Ermine. The Duke of Norfolke with his marshals rod went on the right hand of the said Dutchesse, and the Duke of Suffolke on the left hand, and before them went officers of armes, the Countesse of Kent bare the long traine of the childes mantle, and meane betweene the childe and the Countesse of Kent went the C. of Wiltshire and the C. of Darby on either side, supporting the said traine in the middest: ouer the Childe was borne a rich Canopie by the L. Rochford, the Lord Hussey, the Lord William Howard, and the Lord Thomas Howard the elder. After the childe followed many Ladies and Gentlewomen. When the child was come to ꝑ church doze, the Bishop of London met it with diuers Bishops and Abbots mitered, and begunne the ceremonies of the Sacrament. The Godfather was Lord Thomas Archbishoppe of Canterbury: the God-mothers were the olde Dutchesse of Norfolke, and the old Marchionesse of Dorset, widdowes, and the childe was named Elizabeth, and after that all things were done at the church doze, the child was brought to the Font and christened: and that done, Garter chiefe King of Armes cryed aloud: God of his infinite goodnes send prosperous life and long to the high and mighty Princesse of England Elizabeth, and then the trumpets blewe, then the child was brought vp to the Altar, and the Gospell said ouer it. After that immediately the Arch-bishop of Canterbury confirmed it, the Marchionesse of Exeter being God-mother, then the Bishop of Canterbury gaue vnto the Princesse a standing cup of gold, the Dutchesse of Norfolke gaue to her a standing cup of gold fretted with pearle, the Marchionesse of Dorset gaue 3. gilt bowles pounced with a couer, and the Marchionesse of Exceter gaue 3. standing bowls grauen, all gilt, with a couer. Then was brought in wafers, confects, and Ipocras, in such plentie, that euery man had as much as hee would desire: then they set forward, the trumpets alone going in the same o̊der toward the Kings pallace as they did when they came thitherward, sauing that the gifts that the Godfather and Godmothers gaue, were borne before the childe by 4. persons, that is to say, first Earle John Dudley bare the gift of the Lady of Exeter, the L. Thomas Howard the younger bare the gift of the Lady Dorset, the Lord Fitz-Walter bare the gift of the Lady of Norfolke, and the Lord of Worcester bare the gift of the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and all the one side as they went was full of staffe torches, to the number of fiue hundred, born by the gard and other of the Kings seruants: and about the child were many other proper torches borne by gentlemen. And in this o̊der they brought the princesse to the Quenes chamber doze, and then departed.

The Maio̊ went to the Kings chamber, and tarried there a while with his Brethren the Aldermen, and at the last, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolk came out from the King, and reported to the Maio̊ and his Brethren, that the King thanked them heartily, and commanded them to giue them thankes in his name, and from thence they were had to the cellar and drauke, and so went to their barge.

Eliz. Barton, holy maid of Kent.

About this time the crafty practises of one Elizabeth Barton, named the holy Maide of Kent, came to light and were discouered, so that she and her adherents in Nouember following, were brought to the Starre-chamber, and there before the Kings counsell confessed their fained hypocrisie and dissimuled holines, traiterous purposes and intents. The names of those her adherents, which were presented with her before the Lords in the Starre-chamber, were as followeth: Richard Master Parson of Aldington in Kent, Edward Bocking, Doctor of Diuinitie, a Monke of Canterbury, Richard Dering, monke also of Canterbury, Edw. Twaits gentleman, Thomas Laurence Register to th Archdeacon of Canterbury, Henry Colde Parson of Aldersmary in London, Hug

Rich, fryer obſervant, Richard Risby, and Tho. Golde Gentleman. Theſe were adiudged vpon their confeſſion, to ſtand at Paules Croſſe in the Sermon time, where they with their own hands ſhould ſeuerally deliuer each of them to the preacher, a bill declaring their ſubtill and ſuperſtitious doings, which thing they did the Sunday next following, ſtanding vpon a Stage or ſcaffold before the Croſſe, the L. of Bangor late Abbot of Bide there preaching, ſhewed their offences, from whence they were committed to the Tower of London.

The Scots ioyned with Irish.

In this meane time the Scots were not quiet, but robbed the Kings ſubiects both by Sea and Lnd, whereupon the King cauſed them to be requited, not onely by the Wardeners and other to them aſſociate, which entering the Parches, burnt many of their Piles and ſtrong holds: but alſo he ſet forth certaine Shippes, which entered into their Breames, and fetched out many of thoſe prizes, which they had taken, out of their hauens, yet was there no war proclaimed.

A curſe pronounced from Rome.

At the ſuite of Ladie Katherine Dowager, a cauſe was ſent from Rome, which accurſed both the King and the Realme. This curſe was ſet vp in the towne of Dunkerke in Flanders (for the bringer thereof durſt approch no nerer) where it was taken downe by one William Locke a Mercer of London: becauſe (as it was ſaid) that the Lady Katherine Dowager had procured this curſe of the Pope, the D. of Suffolk was ſent to her, as then lying at Bugden beſide Huntington, where according to that he had in commandement, he diſcharged a great ſort of her houſhold ſeruants, and yet left a conuenient number to ſerue her like a Princeſſe, which were ſworne to ſerue her, not as a queen, but as princeſſe Dowager: but ſuch as tooke that oath they vtterly refuſed, and would none of their ſeruice, ſo that ſhe remained with a ſmall number of ſeruants about her.

1533. Holy Maid of Kent examined.

After Chriſtmas the Parliament began, wherein the foreſaid Elizabeth Barton, and other her complices were attainted of treaſon, for ſundry practiſes by them put in vre, ſounding to the bitter reproch, perill, and obſtruction of the Kings perſon, his honour, faue, and dignitie, for they had put into the heads of many of the Kings ſubiects, that to the ſaid Elizabeth Barton was giuen knowledge by reuelation from God and his Saints, that if the K. proceeded to the diuorce, and marryed another, he ſhould not be K. of this Realme one moneth after, and in reputation of God, not one day nor houre.

This Elizabeth firſt through ſickneſſe, being oftentimes brought as it were into a traunce, whereby her viſage and countenance became marueilouſly altered at thoſe times when ſhe was ſo vexed: at length by the incouraging procurement, and information of the foreſaid Richard Maſter perſon of Aldington, the learned to counterfeit ſuch manner of traunces, as other ſeemes by force of her diſeaſe ſhe had bin acquainted with, ſo that ſhe ſhewed vnto the people diuers marueils, and ſundry alterations of the ſemblable parts of her body, craftily vttering in her ſaid fained traunces diuers counterfeite vertues and holy wordes, tending to the rebuke of ſinne, and reproouing of ſuch new opinions as then begaunne to bee ſpred. And to bring the people more in beliefe with her hypocriticall doings, ſhe was counſelled to ſay, that ſhe ſhould neuer be perfectly whole, till ſhe had viſited an Image of our Ladie at a place called Court at ſtreete, within the Parith of Aldington aforeſaid. Thither was ſhe brought, and by the meanes of the ſayd Richard Maſter, and Edward Bocking there was aſſembled a two thouſand perſons at the day appointed of her thither comming, to ſee the myracle. At which time ſhe being thither brought afore all that aſſembly, and multitude of people, ſhe falſly faigned & ſhewed in the Chappell of our Lady of Court at ſtreet many alterations of her face, & other outward ſenſible parts of her body: and in thoſe traunces ſhe vttered wonderous wordes, as ſhe was before ſubtilly induced by the ſayd Edw. Bocking and Richard Maſter. And amongſt other things ſhe vttered, that it was the pleaſure of God, that the ſaid Bocking ſhould bee her ghoſtly father, and that ſhe ſhould be a religious woman. And within a while after ſuch fayned traunces, ſhe appeared to the people to be ſodainly releaſed from her ſickneſſe by the interceſſion of the Image of our Ladie being in the ſayd Chappell, by reaſon of which hypocriticall diſſimulation, the ſaid Elizabeth was brought into a marueylous fauor, credite, and good opinion of a great multitude of people of this realme, and to increaſe the fame by the counſell of the ſayd Edward Bocking, ſhe became a Nunne in the priorie of S. Sepulchres at Canterbury, to whom the ſaid Edward Bocking had commonly his reſort: and by conſpiracie betweene her and him, ſhe ſtill continued her diſſembled traunces, alleadging that in the ſame ſhe had reuelations from almighty God and his Saints: and among other, that which as before we haue mentioned, touching the K. Marriage, as yee haue heard. This matter proceeded ſo far, that there was a Booke written by her complices, namely, by Thomas Laurence Regiſter to the Arch-deacon of Canterburie, of her fained myracles, reuelations, and hypocriticall holineſſe. All things were handled ſo craftily, that not onely the ſimple people, but alſo the wiſe and learned were deceiued by the ſame: inſomuch, that William Warham late Arch-biſhoppe of Canterbury, and John Fiſher Biſh. of Rocheſt. and diuers other being informed thereof, gaue credite thereunto. All which matters and many other haue bene traiterouſly practiſed amongſt the parties many yeres, chiefly to interrupt the diuorce, and to deſtroy the King, and depriue him of the Crowne and dignitie royall of the Realme, as in the act of their attaindor made more at large doth appeare.

In this Parliament alſo was made the act of ſucceſſion, for the eſtabliſhing of the crowne, to the which euery man was ſworne, being of lawfull

Biſhops preach againſt the Pope.

During this Parliament, euery Sunday at Paules Croſſe preached a Biſhop, declaring the Pope not to bee ſupreame Head to the Church. Alſo in other places of this Realme great troubles were raiſed about Preaching, namely, at Wiſſeow where M. Latimer preached, and there preached againſt him one M. Hobberton, and Doctor Powell, ſo that there was great part-takings on both ſides: inſomuch that diuers Prieſts and others ſet vp bils againſt the Maior, and againſt M. Latimer, but the Maior (permitting Lay-men to preach) cauſed diuers Prieſts to bee apprehended and caſt into Newgate with bolts vpon them, and diuers other ran away and loſt their liuings rather than come in the Maiors handling.

Latimer preached at Wiſſeow. Chron. Britt.

A Parliament.

In a Parliament begun in the moneth of Febuary, was granted to the King and his heires all religious houses in the Realme of England, of the value of 2. hundred pound and vnder, with all lands and goods to them belonging: The number of these houses they suppresed, were 376. the value of their lands then 32000. pound, and more by yare, the moueable goods as they were solde, Robin Hoodes penny-worthes, amounted to more than one hundred thousand pounds, and the religious persons that were in the saide houses, were clerely put out, some went to other greater houses, some went abroad to the world. It was (saith mine Author) a pittifull thing to heare the lamentation that the people in the Country made for them: for there was great hospitality kept among them, and as it was thought, more then ten thousand persons, maisters and seruants had lost their liuings by the putting downe of those houses at that time.

Iustes at Greenwich.

On May day was a great iusting at Greenwich, where were Challengers the Lo. Rochford and other: and Defenders Hen. Norrice and other. From these Iustes King Henry sodainely departed to Westminster, hauing onely with him 6. persons: of which sodaine departure many men marueiled.

On the next morrow, George Bolоigne L. Rochford Brother to the Quéene, and Henry Norrice, were brought to the Tower of London prisoners. Also the same day, about fiue of the cloche in the afternone, Quéene Anne Boleign was brought to the Tower of London by Sir Thomas Audley Lord Chancellor, the D. of Norfolke, Thomas Cromwell Secretarie, and Sir William Kingstone Constable of the Tower. And when shee came to the Tower gate entring in, she fell on her knees before the said Lords, beseeching God to helpe her, as she was not guilty of that whereof shee was accused, and then desired the Lords to beseech the Kings grace to be good vnto her, and so they left her there prisoner.

Q. Anne beheaded.

On the 15. of May Quéene Anne was arraigned in the Tower of London on a scaffold for the purpose made in the Kings hall, before the Du. of Norfolke, who sate vnder the cloth of estate as high Steward of England, with the Lord Chancellor on the right hand, the Duke of Suffolke on his right hand, with Marquesses and Lords, &c. and the Earle of Surrey sate before the D. of Norfolke, his father, as Earle Marshall of England: The K. Commission being read, the Constable of the Tower, and the Lieutenant brought the Quéene to the Barre, where was made a Chaire for her to sit downe in, & there her inditement was read, whereunto shee made so wise and discrete answers, that she seemed fully to cleere her selfe of all matters laid to her charge; but being tried by her Peres twenty fiue in number, whereof the D of Suffolke was chiefe, shee was by them found guilty, and had iudgement pronounced by the Duke of Norfolke, to be burnt on the greene in the Tower, or else to haue her head smitten off, as the Kings pleasure should be further known, and so shee was conueyed to ward againe: the Lady Kingstone, & the Lady Bolоigne her Ant attending on her. And then immediatly, the Lord Rochford the Quénes brother was likewise arraigned & condemned: the Mayor of London, his brethren the Aldermen, the Wardens, and foure persons moe of euery the twelue principall companies being present.

The seuenténe day of May, the Lord Rochford Brother to the Quéne, Henry Norrice, Marke Smeton, William Brierton, and Francis Weston, all of the Kings priuy Chamber, about matters touching the Quéne, were beheaded on the Tower-hill, the Lord Rochfords bodie with the head was buried in the Chappell of the Tower, the other foure in the church-yard there.

Rob. Greene.

On the nineteenth day of May, about eight of the clocke in the morning, Quéene Anne Bolоigne was brought to the greene within the Tower of London, by the white Tower, the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Richmond, the Duke of Suffolke, with the most of the Kings councell, as Earles, Lords, and Nobles of the Realme being present, also the Maior of London, with his Brethren the Aldermen, and Sheriffes, and certain of the principall companies of the citie, &c. All these being on a scaffold made there for the execution, the said Quéene Anne said as followeth: Maisters, I here humbly submit me to the Law, as the Law hath iudged me, and as for mine offences, (I here accuse no man) God knoweth them, I remit them to God, beseeching him to haue mercy on my soule, and I beseech Iesu saue my Soueraigne and maister the King, the most godliest, noblest, and gentlest Prince that is, and long to reigne ouer you, which words shee spake with a smiling countenance: which done, she kneeled downe on both her knées, and said, To Iesu Christ I commend my soule, no with that word suddenly the Hangman of Calais smote off her head at one stroke with a sword: her body with the head was buried in the Quéne of the Chappell in the Tower.

King Henry marrieth L. Iane.

Hen. Duke of Richmond.

This moneth of Iuly, Lord Thomas Howard, youngest brother to the Duke of Norfolke, was sent to the Tower of London, for making a priuie contract of Matrimony with the Lady Margaret Dowglas, Daughter to the Quéene of Scots, by the Earle of Angus, and neece to King Henry of England: the said Lord Thomas was attaint by Parliament, and also the said Lady Margaret Dowglas, was after committed to the Tower for the same.

L. Thomas Howard sent to the Tow wer.

In September, Thomas Cromwel Lord priuie seale, and vicegerent, sent out vnder the Kings spirituall seale, certaine iniunctions to the Prelates and Clergie of the Realme, charging curates to preach and to teach their Parishioners the Pater noster, Aue and Creede, the commandements, and articles of the faith in English, with other Articles.

Pater noster Creed, and Commandements.

In the beginning of October, at an Assise for the Kings whistle kept in Lincolnshire, the people made an insurrection, and gathered nigh twenty thousand persons, who take certaine Lordes and gentlemen of the Country, causing them to be sworne to them vpon certaine Articles which they had deuised, and such as refused to sweare, they kept prisoners, and beheaded a Priest, who was the Bishop of Lincolnes Chancellor: Against those the King did send the D. of Suffolk, the E. of Shrewsbury, and the L. of Rutland with a strong power, whereof when the Rebells heard, they desired pardon, take by their Armie, and departed home, but their Captaines were apprehended and executed.

Commotion in Lincolneshire.

Commotion appeased.

The ninth of Octob. a Priest and a Butcher were hanged at Windsore, by Martiall Law, for words spoken in the behalfe of the Lincolneshire men, the butcher wished the good fellowes (as he termed them) in Lincolnshire, to haue the flesh on his stall, rather than to sell it at such price as he was offered: the Priest standing by likewise wished them to haue it, for hee said they had neede of it. Also Iames Diuers of the rebels in Yorkſhire.

Ye ſhall not enter into this your Pilgrimage of grace for the Common-wealth onely, but for the loue that you doe beare to Gods faith and the Church militant, and the maintenance therof, and the preſeruation of the Kings perſon and his iſſue, and the purifying of Nobility, and to the intent to expelle all villaines blood, and euill Counſellours againſt the common wealth, from his Grace, and the priuie Counſell of the ſame. And that ye ſhall not enter into our ſaid pilgrimage for no particular profit to your ſelues, nor doe any diſpleaſure to any priuate perſon, but by the Counſell of the common wealth, ne to murder or ſlay for any enuy, but in your heart to put away all feare fro the common wealth, and to take beſide you the croſſe of Chriſt, and in your hearts his Faith, to the reſtitution of Gods Church, and to the ſuppreſſion of erroneous opinions.

God ſaue the King.

Againſt theſe rebellies, the King ſent the Duke of Norfolke, the Duke of Suffolke, the Earle of Shrewſburie, and the Marqueſſe of Exceſter, with a great Army, with whom a battell was appointed to haue beene fought on the eeue of Saint Simon and Iude: but as God would, there fell ſuch raine the night before, that the two Armies could not meet, whereupon they deſired the Duke of Norfolke, to ſue vnto the Kings Maieſty for their pardon, and that they might haue their liberties, &c. which the Duke promiſed, and rode poſte to the King, then lying at Windſor, to know his pleaſure, and ſo appealed them. Sir Robert Aske, that was chiefe of his rebellion, came to London, was not onely pardoned, but rewarded with great gifts.

Commotion appeaſed.

Sir Ralph Eure kept Sharborow Caſtle in the North, being fiue weeks beſieged by the rebells, twenty dayes whereof hee and all his company, (which were his onely friends, ſeruants, and tenants, and ſerued for good will to him) were forced to ſuſtaine themſelues, with bread and water, and yet kept the ſame ſafe to the end of the ſaid rebellion, and ſo deliuered it to King Henry, who ſent him ſome after to ſerue in the borders againſt Scotland, where, in great credit hee continued his ſeruice, keeping the Scots without doing hurt to England, and with ſuch obedience of them, as within twenty miles of the borders of Scotland foe againſt him, there was not a Scot, but at his commaundement, and ſo continued till hee was killed, in Anno 1545.

Sir Ralph Eures kept his good ſeruice in the north.

Robert Pagiton murthered.

In the moneth of December, were appointed to waite on the K. person 50. Gentlemen, called Pentioners or Speares, like as they were in the first yeere of the King, vnto whom was assigned the summe of 50 pounds the peece yerely, for the maintenance of themselues, and euery man two Horses, or one Horse, and a Gelding of seruice.

The arriuall of the Lady Anne of Cleaue and her marriage with the K. and diuers things of note.

The King vpon deliberation, and aduice of some of his priuie Councell, and certaine other fauourites, and neere attendants to his person, but chiefly by the Instigation of the Lord Cromwell, who at that time was mighty in fauour with the King, a great Counsellour of estate, and of great command both in Church, and Common-wealth: he to contriue and effect this match betwixt the King and the Daughter of the Duke of Cleue, was wonderous forward (inconcluding wherof, he died not one-ly for his owne diligence, but also caused all other that respected his high fauour, and their owne hope of rising, to assist him therein, of which sort and others, some were sent ouer by the King, some by the Lord Cromwell, and some went voluntary to view the Lady Anne of Cleaue, and to negotiate her marriage with the King. All which, either by Letters, speech, or both made very large and liberall Reports, in praise of her singular feature, matchlesse beautie, and princely perfections: and for proofe thereof, presented the King with sundry of her Pictures, which the bringers euer affirmed to haue beene truely made without flatterie, but be it for that time howsoeuer, the King of himselfe, for certaine reasons following, was very desirous to match that way, which being concluded, and all things prepared as was fitting, The Lady Anne of Cleaue in the Moneth of December set forward for England, shee was very honourably receiued at Calets by the L. Admirall, who accompanied her into England.

The King being aduertained of her Arriuall and approch, was wonderfull desirous to see her, of whom hee had heard so great commendations, and thereuppon her came very priuately to Rochester, where he tooke the first view of her, and when he had well beheld her, hee was so marueilloſly aſtonished that he knew not well what to doe, or ſay, he brought with him diuers things, which he meant to preſent her, with his owne hands, that is to ſay, a partlet, a muffler, a cup, and other things, but being ſodainly quite diſcouraged, and amazed with her preſence, his mind changed, and he deliuered them vnto Sir Anthony Browne, to giue them vnto her, but with as ſmall ſhew of kingly kindnes as might be. The King being ſore vexed with the ſight of her, began to vtter his hearts griefe vnto diuers: Amongſt whom hee ſaid vnto the Lord Admirall, how like you this woman, doe you think her ſo perſonable, faire and beautifull as report hath beene made vnto me of her, I pray you tell me true: the Admirall anſwered, I take her not for faire, but to be of a browne complexion. Alas ſaid the K. whom ſhall men truſt, it promiſe you I ſee no ſuch thing in her: as hath him ſhewed me of her, either by pictures, or report, and am aſhamed that men haue praiſed her, as they haue done, & I like her not. Theſe words, and many ſuch other touching his perplexitie & abſolute vnwillingnes to marry with her he expreſſed to many, the names of the chief whereof, being very reuerend and honorable perſonages follow as I found them in the Record.

The K. from this time vnto the day of her diuorſe, was in a manner weary of his life, though his ſetled mildneſſe he tooke of her, and his fierce wrath was kindled againſt all thoſe that were preferrers of this match, whereof the L. Cromwel was the chiefe, for the which and for dealing ſomwhat too far in ſome matters beyond the K. good liking, were the occaſions of the Lord Cromwels haſtie death, whilſt the Lord Cromwel was priſoner in the Tower he wrote a very humble Letter vnto the King, the copie whereof I read in the Record, wherein he expreſt his hearts griefe, to ſee his Maieſty ſo vexed, as well formerly, whereof he oft complained in priuate vnto his eſpeciall friends, as at this preſent, being now conſtrained to make his griefe knowne vnto the whole world concerning his Marriage with the Lady Anne of Cleaue, and therewithall earneſtly beſought the K. for mercy, but it preuailed not.

The Lady Anne of Cleue was met at Blackheath, and with great ſtate brought to Greenewich the third of January and was married vnto the King the firſt day of the ſaid moneth. From which time the K. not onely continued his firſt miſliking of her, but his hatred encreaſed more and more againſt her, not only for her want of beauty and feature, whereof at firſt he took exceptions, but alſo for ſundry ill qualities, whereof he ſecretly accuſed her, as alſo he ſaid that her body was vnpleaſant, making great doubt that ſhee was no Virgin when ſhee came into England, with diuers other defects which hee ſayd hee knewe by her outwarde appearance to bee in her. And being now thus ſo ſore perplexed, and deſperate of redreſſe, hee grew wondrous apt and willing to call in queſtion any thing, that might tend to the diſſoluing of this marriage, namely hee oft and earneſtly bayed a pre-contract betweene her and the Duke of Lorraines Sonne, made in their infancie and was ſince cleared: yet therewith hee would no way be ſatisfied though his daily encreaſe of hatred againſt her. And as I ſhould haue told you before, the King when he had firſt beheld her, euen then vpon hope to haue found ſome eſſentiall matter that might with faire ſemblance of honor haue ouerthrowne the match: he deferred his appointed and prepared day of marriage, which ſhould haue beene vpon the Sunday vnto tueſday, and then with hearts griefe & great vnwillingnes the marriage was ſolemnized.

Within 8. dayes after, the King of his owne motion in plaine termes, told his Phyſitians his further cauſe of griefe, that he was lothſome to him in bed, and that her body was foule and out of order, ſo as he had no manner of diſpoſition towards her, & although he lay in bed with her euery other night, yet he could not be prouoked to haue carnall knowledge of her, no albeit he take Phyſicke the more to enable him, and thereupon ſaid, I ſee and know my ſelfe to be as ſufficient as any man, yet her very preſence depriues me of all manner of motion that way, and that for his part ſhee was as god a Maide as when ſhee came firſt into England. The K. being thus tormented in body and mind, knew not how to eaſe himſelfe, vntill hee had procured a ſpeedy diuorce, in which ſpace and euer hee extreamly hated all thoſe that had any hand in making this match.

And amongſt other things which I found in the Record pertinent to this matter of the La. Anne of Cleaue, you ſhall vnderſtand that the 23. 03 24. of June the L. Elinor Rutland, ſhe Lady Iane Rochford, the Lady Katherine Egecombe, being all together with the Q. at Weſtminſter, they wiſhed that her Grace were with childe, ſhe anſwered ſaying, I know well that I am not with child: the L. Egecombe ſaid how is it poſſible for your Grace to know that, and lie euery night with the K. I know well quoth the Q. that I am not with child, wherupon thoſe Ladies plainly ſaid, now by our Lady we think your Grace is a maid ſtill, at which words the Q. laughed, and ſaid, how can I be yet a maid & ſleepe euery night with a K. there muſt be more then that quoth the Lady Rochford, 03 elſe I had as leeue he lay further, why ſaid the Q. when the K. comes to bed, he kiſſes me, takes me by the hand and bids me God night ſweete heart, and in the morning kiſſes me, and bids me farewell Darling, is not this enough, no Madame quoth ſhe, Lady Rutland, there muſt be more then this, 03 it will be long before we haue a Duke of Yorke, which all this realme much deſireth, nay ſaid the Queene is not this enough, I am contented with this, for I know no more. Theſe & many other ſuch like ſpeeches ſhe vttered vnto them and others diuers times, but with as great ſhew of womanly mildneſſe and patience as was poſſible.

It alſo appeareth plainly in the record, what ſhe cauſe was that moued the K. to marry with Anne of Cleaue, for theſe are the very words of his aſſertions, viz. firſt I depoſe and declare that that this hereafter written is merely the verities, entended vpon no ſiniſter affection, nor yet vpon none hatred nor diſpleaſure, and herein I take God to witnes, I ſay and affirme, that when the firſt communication was had with me for the marriage of the Lady Anne of Cleaue, I was glad to hearken to it, truſting to haue ſome aſſured friend by it, I much doubting at that time, both the Emperor, France, and the biſh. of Rome, and alſo becauſe, I heard ſo much, both of her excellent beauty, and vertuous conditions. But when I ſaw her at Rochell. which was the firſt time that euer I ſaw her, it reioyced my heart, that I had kept me free from making of any part of bond, before with her, till I ſaw her my ſelfe, for then I aſſure you I liked her ſo ill, and ſo far contrary, to that ſhe was praiſed, that I was woe, that euer ſhe came into England. And deliberated with my ſelfe, that if it were poſſible to find the meanes to breake off, I would neuer enter into poke with her. Of which miſliking, both the great P. and Admirall that now is, and the P. of the houſe, can and will beare me record. Then after my repaire to Greenwich, the next day after, I ſtinke, doubt not but that the L. Cromwel, well examined, can & will, 03 hath declared what I then ſaid to him in that caſe, not doubting, but ſince her is a perſon, which knowes himſelfe condemned to die, by act of parliament, will not damne his ſoule: but truly declare the truth: not onely at that time ſpoken by me: but alſo continually, vntill the day of marriage: and alſo many times after, wherin my lack of conſent (I doubt not) doth 03 ſhall well appeare: and alſo lack enough of the will, and power, to conſummate the ſame, wherein both he and my Phyſitians: the L. pray ſeale that now is, Henage, and Denny can (& I doubt not will) teſtifie according to truth. Which is that I neuer, 03 leaſt leye to the woman conſented to marry, nor yet (if ſhe beynght maiden head with her) twixt any ſo her, by true carnall copulation. This is my bo'e, true and perfect declaration. The cheefe of thoſe, whoſe names are moſt mentioned in the record Luce T. Audley, L. Chancellor T. Archbi. of Cant. T. D. of Norf. Charles D. of Suff. W. C. of South, & Cuthert B. of Durham, all iointly together examined touching this marriage.

S. Mary Ouries made a Pariſh Church.

After Chriſtmaſſe the Priorie Church of S. Maries Ouery in South-warke, was purchaſed of the King by the inhabitants of the Borough. Doct. Gardiner Biſh. of Wincheſt. putting to his helping hand: they made there of a Parith Church, in place of two ſmall parish Churches, the one of Mary Magdalene, in the ſayd Priory Church, the other of S. Margret on the Hil.

Iuſting of challengers.

On May day, was a great triumph of Iuſtinry at Weſtminſter, which Iuſts had been proclaimed in France, Flanders, Scotland, and Spaine, for all commers that would, againſt the challengers of England, which were Sir Iohn Dudley, Sir T. Seymour, Sir T. Poinings Sir George Carew Knights: Anthony Kingſton, & Richard Cromwell eſquires, which ſaid challengers came into the liſtes that day richly apparelled, & their horſes trapped all in white veluet, with certaine knights and gentlemen riding afore them, apparelled all with velvet, & white farſenet, and all their ſeruants in white doublets, and hoſen cut after the Burgonian faſhion: and there came to iuſt againſt them the ſaid day of defendants, the Earle of Surrey being the formoſt, L. William Howard, Lord Clinton, and L. Cromwell ſon and heire to T.

Eſſex

Cromwell Carle of Effex, and chamberlaine of England, with other, which were all richly apparelled. And that day Sir Iohn Dudley was ouerthrowne in the field by mischance of his horse, by one Walter Breme defendant, neuertheleſſe he brake diuers ſpeares valiantly after that: and after the ſaid Iuſts were done, the ſaid challengers rode to Durham place, where they kept open hertheld and feaſted the King, and Qu. with her Ladies and all the Court.

The 2. of May Anthony Kingſtone and Richard Cromwell were made Knights of the ſaid place.

Courney ryde.

The 2. of May the ſaid Challengers did Courney on horſeback with ſwords and againſt them came 29. defendants: Sir Iohn Dudley, and the C. of Surrey running firſt, which the firſt courſe loſt both their gauntlets, and that day Sir Rich. Cromwell ouerthrew M. Palmer in the Fielde off his horſe, to the great honour of the challengers.

Barriers.

The 5. of May the ſaid Challengers fought on foot at the Barriers and againſt them came 30 defendants which fought valiantly, but Sir Richard Cromwell ouerthrew that day at the Barriers, M. Culpepper in the field, and the firſt of May the ſaid Challengers brake vp their houſhold.

In the which time of their houſe-keeping, they had not only feaſted the K. Qu. Ladies, and the whole Court as is aforeſaide, but alſo on the Tueſday in the Rogation Wake, they feaſted all the Knights and Burgeſſes of the common-houſe in the Parliament: and on the morrow after they had the Maior of London, the Aldermen, and all their wiues to dinner, and on the Friday they brake it vp as is aforeſaid.

Richard Farmer in the præmunire.

The 29. of May was ſent to the Tower M. Wilſon, and Doctor Sampſon Biſhop of Chicheſter, for refuſing certaine priſoners which had denied to ſubſcribe to the Kings ſupremacy for the ſame offence Richard Farmer Grocer of London, a rich and wealthy Citizen, was committed to the marſhalſea, and after arraigned, and attainted in the præmunire, and loſt all his goods, his wife and children thruſt out of doores. Alſo the Bæker of Newgate was ſent to the Marſhalſea, for giuing liberty to Doctor Powell and Doctor Abell his priſoners, to goe vnder baile.

The 9. of July Thomas Lord Cromwell E. of Eſſex being in the counſell Chamber, was ſodainly apprehended and committed to the Tower of London. The 19. he was attainted of hereſie and high treaſon, as appeareth by the ſame attaindor which I haue ſeene and read, but ſo, beare to ſet downe the ſame being long.

On the 28. of July the ſaid Tho. Cromwell was brought to the Scaffold on the Towerhill where he ſpake theſe words (as was then noted) I am come hither to die, and not to purge my ſelfe, as may happen ſome thinke I will, for if I ſhould ſo do, I were a very wretch and miſer. I am by the law condemned to die, and I thanke my Lord God that hath appointed me this death for mine offences: for ſithence the time that I came to yeers of diſcretion, I haue liued a ſinner and offended my L. God, for the which I aſke him heartily forgiuenes. And it is not vnknowne to many of you, that I haue bin a great traueller in the world, and being but of a baſe degree was called to high eſtate, and ſithence the time I came thereunto, I haue offended my Prince, for the which I aſke him heartily forgiuenes, and beſeech you all to pray to God with me, that he will forgiue me. O father forgiue me. O ſonne forgiue me, O holy Ghoſt forgiue me, O three Perſons in one God forgiue me. And now I pray you that be here to beare me record, I die in the Catholike faith, not doubting in any article of my faith, no nor doubting in any ſacrament of the Church. Many haue ſlandred me and reported that I haue beene a bearer of ſuch as haue maintained euill opinions, which is vntrue: but I confeſſe, that like as God by his holy ſpirit doth inſtruct vs in the truth, ſo the Diuell is ready to ſeduce vs, and I haue been ſeduced: but beare me witneſſe that I die in the Catholike faith of the holy church, and I heartily deſire you to pray for the K. grace, that he may long liue with you in health and proſperity, and after him that his ſonne P. Edward that goodly impe may long reigne ouer you, and once againe I deſire you to pray for me, that ſo long as life remaineth in this fleſh, I waner nothing in my faith. And then made hee his prayer which was long, and after committed his ſoule to the hands of God, and ſo laid him downe, and patiently ſuffered the ſtrokes of the axe, by the hands of him who likewiſe ſoone after did the office. At the ſame time alſo with the ſaid Carle was beheaded the Lord Hungerford of Heitelbury, who at the houre of his death ſeemed ſo vnquiet, that many iudged him rather frenzy then otherwiſe: he ſuffered (as it was ſaid) for Buggery.

Thomas Lord Cromwell beheaded.

Tho. Cromwell (as before is ſhewed) was attainted by Parliament, but neuer came to anſwere. He was borne in Putney a village in Surrey by the Thames ſide, about 4. miles Weſt from London, and was ſonne to a blackeſmith (in his latter dayes a brier) after whoſe deceaſe, his mother was married to a Gherman in London. This Thomas notwithſtanding the baſeneſs of his birth, through a ſingular excellencie of wit, ioyned with induſtrious diligence of mynde, grew to ſuch a ſufficient ripeneſſe of vnderſtanding and ſkill in ordering of waighty affaires, that he was thought apt and fit to any roomth or office whereunto he ſhould be admitted, which being perceiued of the Cardinall Wolſey, he took him into ſeruice, and making him his ſolicitor, imployed him about buſineſſe oftentimes of great importance, wherin he he acquit himſelfe with ſuch dexteritie, as anſwered alwayes the credite to him committed.

At the fall of the Cardinall he got him to the court, ſaying, he would make or marre, as before you haue heard: where, being once aduanced into the Kings ſeruice, he behaued himſelfe ſo aduiſedly in matters which he tooke in hand, that in ſhort time he roſe to the greateſt authority that might be in this Realme, vnder the maieſty of the King wherein paraduenture forgetting the fall of his late maſter Cardinall Wolſey (a notable ſpectacle) he fell himſelfe, as ye haue heard.

In this meane time, to wit, on the 25. day of June, the King cauſed the Queene to remoue to Richmond, perſwading it ſhould be more for her health and pleaſure, by reaſon of the cleare open ayre there. But on the 6. of July, certaine Lords came downe into the nether houſe of the Parliament, expreſſedly declared cauſes, for the which, the marriage was not to be taken lawfull: and in concluſion, the matter was by the conuocation cleerely determined, that the King might lawfully marry where hee would, and ſo might the: and thus were they clearely diuorced. And by the Parliament it was enacted that ſhe ſhould be taken no more for Quéen, but called the Lady Anne of Cleue.

K. Henry diuorced frō La. Anne of Cleue.

This yeare the L. Leonard Gray brother to Tho. marques Dorſet, being the K. Lieutenant in Ireland, was reuoked home, and vpon his comming to London, was ſent to the Tower.

Lord Leonard Gray ſent to the Tower.

The 30. of July were drawne from the Tower of London to weſt Smith field Robert Barnes doctor of diuinity. T. Gerard perſon of Hunyſlane, and W. Ierom Vicar of Stepenheth, bachelors in Diuinity: alſo Edw. Powell, Thomas Able, and Richard Fetherſtone, all three doctors. The firſt three were drawne to a hake and there burned. The other three were drawne to a gallowes, & there hanged, headed & quartered. The three firſt as appeareth in their attaindors, were executed for diuers hereſies. The laſt three for treaſon, as in their attaindor was menttoned, to wit, for denying the Kings Supremacy, and affirming his marriage with Queene Katharine to bee good: of the which argument Doctor Powell wrote a booke which was printed in quarto, and I haue ſeene it.

Three priſoners drawne hanged & three hanged.

Seuen priſoners executed.

The 4. of Auguſt, Thomas Empſon ſometime a monke of Weſtminſter, which had bin priſoner in Newgate more than three yeeres, was brought before the Iuſtices of goale deliuery at Newgate, and for that he would not aſke the King pardon for denying his ſupremacy, nor beſworne thereto, his monks cole was plucked from his backe, and his body reuiled till the King were informed of his obſtinacie. The ſame 4. of Auguſt were drawen to Tyborne 6. perſons and one led betwixt twaine, to wit, Laurence Cooke priour of Dancaſter, William Horne a lay brother of the Charterhouſe of London, Giles Horne Gentleman, Clement Philip Gentleman of Calcis, and ſeruant to the L. Liſle, Edmond Bröholme Prieſt, chaplaine to the ſaid L. Liſle, Darby Gening, Robert Bird, all hanged and quartered, and had beene attainted by parliament, for deniall of the kings ſupremacy.

The 8. of Auguſt, Lady Katherine Howard daughter to Edmond lord Howard, neere to the Duke of Norffolke, was thewed openly as Quéene at Hampton-court.

King Henry married.

Dry ſommer

The latter end of this Sommer, was vniuerſally throughout this Realme great death by a ſtrange kinde of Ague and flure, with ſome peſtilence: in which ſeaſon was ſuch a drought, that wels and ſmall riuers were dried vp, ſo that much cattell noted for lacke of water.

The twenty two of December, Ralph Egerton ſeruant to the Lord Audley Lord chancellor, and Thomas Harman, ſeruant to maſter Flightwood, were executed the one for counterfeiting the kings ſeale in lead, wherewith they had ſealed diuers Pattents counterfeiting and antidated, making ſtrangers denizons, vnder the names of diuers clearks of the chancery: the other for writing them. One Tuckfield being of their faction, robbed the L. Audleys chappell of the chalice, pixe, baſons and candleſticks of ſiluer, and fled, who being afterward apprehended at Caleis, which towne he would haue betrayed, he ſlew himſelfe with a dag.

1541. An. reg. 33.

In Aprill, certaine perſons began a newe rebellion in Yorkeſhire which were ſhortly after taken, and put to execution in diuers places: of which, Leigh a gentleman, Tatarſall a clothier, and Thornton a peoman, were put to death at London: Sir Iohn Neuill knight, and ten perſons or more were put to death at Pomfret.

A new commotion in Yorkeſhire.

The 27. of May, Margaret counteſſe of Salisbury, ſometime daughter and heire to George Duke of Clarence, wife to ſir Richard Poole knight, and mother to Cardinall Poole, was beheaded in the Tower of London, being neuer arraigned nor tried before, but condemned by act of Parliament.

Counteſſe of Salsbury beheaded.

The ninth of June, Damport and Chapman two of the kings gard, were hanged at Greenewich for robbery.

Damport & Chapman hanged.

The tenth of June, Sir, Edmond Kneuet knight of Norffolke, was arraigned before the Kings Iuſtices (ſitting in the great Hall at Greenewich maſter Gage comptroller of the kings houſhold, maſter Suthwell, ſir Anthony Browne, ſir Anthony Winkfield, maſter Wriſley, and Edmond Pecham cofferer of the Kings houſholde, for ſtriking of one Maſter Clere of Norffolke, ſeruant with the Carle of Surrey, within the kinas houſe in the Tenice Court. There was firſt choſen to goe vpon the ſaid Edmond a queſt of gentlemen, and a queſt of yeomen, to enquire of the ſaid ſtripe, by the which inqueſts he was found guilty, and had Iudgement, to loſe his right hand, wherupon was called to do the execution, firſt the Sergeant chirurgion with his inſtrument appertaining to his office: the ſergeant of the Woodyard with the mallet and a Blocke, whereupon the hand ſhould lie: the maſter cooke for the King with the knife: the Sergeant of the larder to ſet the knife right on the ioynt: the Sergeant farrier with his ſearing irons to ſeare the ſeines: the Sergeant of the poultry with a Cocke, which Cocke should haue his head smitten off vpon the same blocke, and with the same knife: the yeoman of the chaudry with feare thereof, the yeomen of the scullery with a pan of fire to heate the yrons: a chafer of water to coole the ends of the yrons: and two fourmes for all officers to set them vpon: the Sergeant of the seller with wine, ale, and beere: the yeomen of the ewry in the Sergeants stead, who was absent, with basen, ewre, and towels. Thus euery man in his office ready to doe the execution, there was called forth Sir William Pickering knight marshall to bring in the said Edmond Kneuet, and when hee was brought to the barre, the cheife Justice declared to him his trespasse, and the said Kneuet confessing himselfe to be guilty, humbly submitted him to the Kings mercy: for this offence he was not onely iudged to lose his hand, but also his body to remaine in prison, & his lands and goods at the Kings pleasure. Then the said Sir Edmond Kneuet desired that the King of his benigne grace, would pardon him of his right hand, and take the left: for (quoth he) if my right hand be spared, I may hereafter doe such good seruice to his grace, as shall please him to appoint. Of this submission and request the Justices forthwith informed the king, who of his gentlenes, considering the gentle heart of the said Edmond, and the good report of Lords and Ladies, granted him pardon, that he should lose neither hand, land, nor goods, but should go free at liberty.

The Lord Leonard Gray being indited of certaine points of treason by him committed, as was alleaged against him, during the season that he was the Kings Lieutenant in Ireland, to wit, for betraying his nephew Girlde Fitz Gerarde, Brother to Thomas Fitz Gerarde, before executed, and also for that he caused certaine Irishmen to inuade the lands of the kings friends, whom he fauoured not: The 25. of June hee was arraigned at Westminster in the Kings Bench, and appointed to be tried by knights, because he was a Lord by name, and not a Lord of the Parliament, but he discharged the Iury, and confessed the inditement, whereupon he had iudgement, and on the 28. of June being S. Peters euen, he was beheaded at Tower-hill, where he ended his life very quietly and godly.

The L. Leonard Gray beheaded.

This noble man, as hee was come of high linage, so was he a right valiant and hardy personage, hauing in his time done his Prince and countrey good seruice, both in Ireland, France, and other places, greatly to his commendation, although now his hap was thus to lose his head.

The same day that he suffered, there were executed at Saint Thomas Waterins three Gentlemen, John Mantel, John Frouds, and George Roidon. They died for a murther committed in Sussex (as their inditement imported) in company of Thom. Fines Lord Dacres of the South. The truth whereof was this. The said Lord Dacres through the lewd perswasion of some of them, as hath beene reported, meaning to hunt in the park of Nicholas Pelham esquier at Laughton in the same Countie of Sussex, being accompanied with the saide Mantell, Frouds and Roidon, John Cheiney, and Tho. Iley gentlemen, and Richard Middelton & John Goldwel yeomen, passed from his house of Hurstmonseux, the last of Aprill in the night season, toward the same parke where they intended so to hunt, and comming into a place called Pikehay in the parish of Hillingley, they found one Iohn Busbrig, James Busbrig, and Richard Somener, standing there together: & as it fell out through quarrelling, there ensued a fray betwixt the said Lord Dacres, and his company on the one part, and the said Iohn and James Busbrig, and Richard Somener on the other, insomuch that the said Iohn Busbrig received such hurt, that he died thereof the second of May next ensuing; whereupon as well the said Lord Dacres, as those that were with him, and diuers other likewise that were appointed to goe another way to meete them at the said parke, were endited of murther, and the fourth and twentieth of June the Lord Dacres himselfe was arraigned before the L. Audley of Walden, then lord Chancelor, sitting that day as high Steward of England, with other peeres of the Realm about him, who then and there condemned the said L. Dacres to die for the transgression: and afterwards the nine and twentieth of June being Saint Peters day, at eleuen of the clocke in the fore-noone, the Sheriffes of London accordingly as they were appointed, were ready at the tower to haue received the said prisoner, and him to haue led to execution on the tower-hill. But as the prisoner thereto come forth of the tower, one Heire a gentleman of the L. Chancellors house, came, & in the Kings name commanded them to stay the Execution till two of the clock in the afternoone, which caused many to thinke that the King would haue granted his pardon. But nevertheless at 3. of the clocke in same afternoone he was brought forth of the Tower, and deliuered to the Sheriffes, who led him on foote betwixt them vnto Tiburne, where he died. His body was buried in the church of S. Sepulchers: he was not past foure and twenty yeres of age when he came thus through great mishap to his end: for whom many sore lamented, and likewise for the other three gentlemen, Mantell, Frouds, and Royston, but chiefely for the said young Lord, being a right towardly gentleman.

L. Dacres of the South arraigned.

The 1. of July, a Welchman a minstrel, was hanged & quartered for singing of songs, which were interpreted to be prophesying against the K. Sir David Genson knight of the Rhodes was drawne through Southwarke to S. Thomas of Watrings, and there executed for the supremacie.

In the month of August, the King take his progresse toward Pozke, and passed through Lincolneshire, where was made vnto him submission, &c. About this time Mr. F. was made vicar and Dr. Row were made Prebendaries.

Progresse to York.

The Lady Katherine Howard whom the King had married, for her vnchaste liuing committed with Thomas Culpepper and Francis Derham, was by Parliament attainted; Culpepper and Derham, were put to death at Tyborne the tenth day of December. Culpepper was headed, his body buried at Saint Sepulchers Church by Newgate; Derham was quartered, &c.

King Henry the 8. of Ireland.

The 23. of January the King was proclaimed King of Ireland.

Lady Katherine beheaded.

The 12. of February, the Lady Howard, otherwise called D. Katherine, and the L. Iane Rochford for being of her counsell with Tho. Culpepper, were both beheaded within the Tower of London.

In the beginning of the moneth of March died Arthur Plantaginet Viscount Lisle, Ballard sonne to Edward the fourth, in the tower of London vnattainted, when hee should haue bin deliuered vnslet at libertie (as it was said) the occasion of his trouble in the tower, rose vpon suspition that he should be practice which some of his men (as Philpot and Brindholme executed the last yere) had consented vnto, for the betraying of Calais to the French, whilst he was the K. Lieutenant there. But after that by due tryall it was knowne that he was nothing guilty to the matter the King appointed Sir Thomas Wriothesley his Secretary to go vnto him, and to deliuer vnto him a ring with a rich diamond for a token from him, and to will him to be of good chere, sith it was manifestly proued that hee was voide of all offence, for he (the said) had that he would make account of him, as of his most true and faithfull Seruant, and not onely to restore him, to his former libertie, but otherwise be ready to pleasure him in what he could. Master Secretary set forth his message with such effectuall words, as he was an eloquent man, that Lord Lisle take such an immoderate ioy thereof, that his heart being oppressed therewith, hee died the night following through too much reioycing (as was said.) After whose decease, to wit, 12. of March, Sir Iohn Dudley was at Westminster created Vicount Lisle, by the right of his mother Lady Elizabeth sister and heire to Sir John Gray Vicount Lisle, who was late wife to Arthur Plantagenet Viscount Lisle late deceased, as ye haue heard.

L. Lisle dead in the tower.

A maid boyled in Smithfield.

The 17. of March, Margret Dauy a Maid, was boiled in Smithfield, for poisoning of three housholds that shee had had dwelled in.

The 28. of March, the Parliament sitting, George Feres Burgesse for the towne of Plimmouth, was arrested in London vpon a condemnation, whereupon the Sergeant at armes of the common house was sent to the Counter in Bredstreet to fetch him, but the Clearks would not deliuer him, till the Sheriffs came themselues, who in the end deliuered him: howbeit, this matter was so taken in the Common house, that the Sheriffes, the Clearks, and fiue officers, with the party plaintiffe, were sent to the Tower, and there lay two dayes, and were then deliuered by the speaker & common house: the Sheriffes were deliuered from all charges, except twenty pound for their fees.

The Sheriffs of London sent to the tower.

In May the King take a loane of money, of all such as were valued worth fifty pound or vpward in the booke of subsidie. Anno reg. 34.

The E. of Desmond.

In the moneth of August, Iames E. of Desmond in Ireland, came and submitted himselfe to the King, and so returned.

The great Oneale.

The first of October, the great Oneale of Ireland, was created Earle of Tiron, and his base son Mathew Oneale, baron of Donganow for Shane Oneale the onelyon of his body lawfully begotten, was then little esteemed.

D. of Norfolke entered Scotland.

The Duke of Norfolke entred Scotland the 21. of October, burning and wasting all the marches, and there taried without any battell profered by the King of Scots, vntill the midst of November.

Scots ouerthrowne.

After the departure of our army from Scotland, the King of Scots made a roade into England, and did much harme, but at the last Sir Tho. Wharton, and Sir Willi. Mulgraue with a few of the borderers, met the Scottes, where they being in number 15000. were ouerthrowne: in which conflict was taken the E. of Cassels and Glencarne, the L. Maxwell admirall of Scotland and Warden of the West marches, the L. Flemming, the L. Somerwell, the Lo. Oliphant, the Lord Gray, the Lord Oliuar Sinclere, &c. more then two hundred of the better sort, and more then 8. hundred of meaner persons. Then take also foure and twenty pieces of ordinance, foure carts laden with speares, and ten pauilions. The King of Scots take such griefe and inward thought for this ouerthrow, and also for the murther of an English herault that was slain at Dunbar by one Leech an English man (the which for the rebellion in Lincolnshire was fled into Scotland) that he fell into a feuer, and died. Of the prisoners before named, 21. of them were brought by to London, and on the 19. of December entred the Citie at Bishops gate, and so were conueyed to the tower, where they remained the space of 2. dayes, and vpon S. Thomas day the Apostle, they were conueyed to Westminster, Sir Iohn Gage constable of the tower riding before them and the lieutenant of the tower riding behinde them, they rode two and two together, and 8. of them being Earles and Lordes had new gownes of blacke damaske furred with blacke conies, coates of blacke velues, and doublets, of sattine, &c. all new of the Kings charge. Comming thus before the Kings Councell in the Star-chamber, the L. Chancelor declared to them their vntruth and vnkindnesse, for the which the King had cause of warre against them, as well as for the denial of their homages, and also for their trayterous invasions made into his Realme without defiance, and also for keeping his subiects prisoners without redemption, contrary to the lawes of the marches, for the which doings, as God they might well perreuie had scourged them. Holbeck the King more regarding his honor, than his Princely power, was content to shew them kindnes for unkindnes, right for wrong. And although he might keepe them straight in prison, yet he was content that they should have libertie to bee with the Nobles of the Realme in their houses, and so according to their estates, they were appointed to Dukes, Earles, Bishoppes, knights and gentlemen.

The 22. of December came tidings of the King of Scots death. And upon Saint Johns day in Christmas weeke, the foresaid Lords of Scotland were brought to the Court then at Greenewich, where they had great chere, and were lodged within the Court. And heere it is to be considered, that when the King of Scots had left no issue but only one daughter: the Realme being counsell perceiuing a meane now offered, whereby without warre the two Realmes might be united: the Scottish Lords having first made the motion themselues, for a marriage tobe had betwixt Prince Edward and their young Queene, the King required them to helpe to the furtherance of that matter, which might be such benefite to themselues and their countrey. This they promised faithfully to doe, and as well by themselues, as their friends, to bring the same to effect, so much as the King could require, whereupon the King was not onely contented to release them home, but also highly rewarded them with rich gifts.

Motion of a march between prince Edward and the cuene of Scots.

1543. The 30. of December, they departed from the Court, and the morrow after eight of them dined with Sir Io. Coats then L. Maior of London, and the rest with the Sheriffs, and had very great chere. On New yeres day they departed from London home-wards towards Scotland, and by the way dined at Suffield there to behold the Prince, whom they highly commended, for the great liking they had of his person, from thence they kept on their iourney till they came to the North parts, where they found the Duke of Suffolke the Kings lieutenant there, and with him they remained till such pledges were come forth of Scotland, as it was couenanted they should leaue behind them. The Duke after he had received the hostages, permitted them to depart, and so they returned into Scotland, where they were ioyfully welcomed home, to their friends. With them went the Earle of Angus, who had beene banished Scotland, and hauing remained heere in England a long time, received of the Kings for a thousand marks by yere: and likewise his brother Sir George Douglas, who had 500. marke by yere, likewise of the Kings gift. They were now both restored home into their Countrey, and that was (as was said) by the last Kings will. The said Earle of Angus and diuers of the Lords that had beene prisoners here in England, were made of the priuie counsell of the Realme, by the C. of Arraine, that was chosen governor to the young Queene of the Realme, as next heire apparant. Notwithstanding that, the Arch-bishop of S. Andrews cardinall, enemy to the K. of England, had a will (forgedde some haue said) perpetually how the K. had made him governour, as well of the Queene, as Realme, wherevpon the said K. according to his right, as he pretended, with the helpe of his friends tooke vpon him the authoritie of governour, and put the said Cardinall in prison, and deliuered Sir Robert Bowes, and the other English prisoners, by their bandes, according to the custome of marches.

The ninth of February, a Proclamation was made, whereby the people were licensed to eate white meates in Lent, but streightly forbidden the eating of flesh. Wherupon shortly after the C. of Surrey with diuers Lords, Knights and Gentlemen, were imprisoned for eating of flesh in the same Lent, contrary to the said proclamation. White meats licenced to be eaten in lent

The 8. of May one Leech sometime Deputy of Lowth, who had killed Somerset one of our heraults of armes at Dunbar in Scotland, was drawne to Tyborne and there hanged and quartered. And the 12. of June, Edward Lech his brother and with him a priest for the same fact, were likewise executed at Tyborne. An. reg. 35. Somerset an heraults bitten.

King Henry minding wars with Fraunce, made great preparation and prouision aswell of munitions and artillery, as also of braue ordinances, amongst which, at that time, by one Peter Bawd a French-man borne, a gunfounder, or maker of great ordinance, and one other Alien, called Peter van Collen, a gunsmith, both the Kings seruants, by conferring together, deuised & caused to be made, certaine mortar pieces, being at the mouth, from 11. inches vnto 19. inches wide, for the vse whereof the said Peter, and Peter caused to be made certaine hollow shot of cast yron, to be stuffed with fire-worke, or wild fire, whereof the bigger sort for the same, had screwes of yron to receiue a match to carry fire kindled, that the fire-worke might be set on fire, for to breake in small pieces the same hollow shot, whereof the smallest piece hitting any man would kill or spoile him. And after the Kings returne from Bullen, the said Peter Baud by himselfe, in the first of Edward the first, did also make certaine ordinance of cast yron, of diuers sorts, & forms, as Fawconet, Fawcons, Pinions, Saikers, and other pieces: vnto this Bawd, Iohn Iohnson his seruant seruant, forniuting his M. did likewise make and cast yron ordinance, cleaner and to better perfection, to the great vse of this land: his sonne Tho. Iohnson is yet liuing, a speciall workman, in the yere 1595. he made 42. cast pieces of great ordinance of yron for the Earle of Cumberland, Demy Canons weying 6000. or 3. tunne the piece. Mortar peeces cast for shooting of wild fire R. Crokley. Peeces cast in the first of Edward the 6.

The 3. of June, the Obrine a Lord in Ireland, and diuers of the wilde Irish, submitted them to King Henry.

In July the said Obrine was created Earle of Clawlicarde.

The 12. July, King Henry married Lady Katherine Par, late wife to the Lord Latimer and Sister to the Marquesse of Northampton at Hampton court, and then was the proclaimed Queene. King Henry married Lad. by Katherine Par.

Great Subsidie.

This yere in a Parliament holden at Westminster a subsidie was granted to the King to be paid in three yeres, every English man being worth in goods 20. s. and vpward to fiue l. paid 4. d. of euery pound, from 5. l. to 10. l. 8. d. from 10. l. to 20. l. 16. d. from 20. l. and vpward as of euery pound 2. s. Strangers, aswell denisons as other, being inhabitants, doubled this sum: & euery Stranger not being an inhabitant that was 16. yeres of age and vpwards paid foure d. of euery pole. And for lands, fees, and annuities euery one borne within the Kings Dominions, paid 8. d. of the l. from 10. s. to 5. l. and from 5. l. to 10. l. 16. d. from 10. l. to 20. l. 2. s. and from 20. l. vpwards 3. s. Strangers full doubled the sum. The Clergie granted a subsidie of 6. s. the pound, to be paid of their benefices, and perpetuities in three yeres, and euery priest hauing but an annuall stipend, 6. s. 8. d. &c. as in the Statute. 03

Going to Landersey.

About the same time the King of England, and the Emperor, sent Garter, and Toyson-dor K. at armes, to demand the performance of certaine articles of the French King, which if he denyed, they were commanded then to defie him, but he would not suffer them to come within his land, and so they returned. Wherefore the King of England caused the demands to be declared vnto the French Ambassador at Westminster. And in the moneth of July the King sent ouer fiue thousand men, vnder the leading of Sir Iohn Wallop, accompanyed with Sir Thomas Seimer marshall, Sir Robert Bowes Treasurer, Sir Richard Cromwell Captaine of the Horsemen, and Sir George Carew his Lieutenant. There was likewise Sir Tho. Palmer, Sir Iohn Rainsforth, Sir Iohn Seint-Iohn, and Sir Iohn Gascoigne, knights, that were Captaines of the footmen: they were appointed to ioyne with the Emperors power, and so to make war into France: they departed from Caleis the 22. of Iulie. The 3. of August open warre was proclaimed betwixt the Emperor and the K. of England on the one partie, and the French King on the other partie, as enemy mortall to them both, and to all other Christian Kings as he that had conspired himselfe with the Turke. Open warre proclaimed.

The armie that was sent ouer vnder the leading of Sir Iohn Wallope, passed forth from the marches of Caleis, and keping alongst betwixt the borders of the French & Burgonians pales, and confines, and ioyning with the Emperors forces, Spaniards, Wallons, & Dutch, came at length before Landersey, a towne lately fortified by the French, within the borders of the Emperors dominions, to the which they laid long siege. At length the Emperour hauing dispatched his warres against the Duke of Cleue, who had submitted himselfe vnto him, came now to the siege of Landersey, with a mighty power of sundry nations, so that the Towne was sore constrained, and in danger to haue beene lost, if at that present the French King had not likewise with him an huge army of French men, Switchars, Lantquits, Italians, and other, came to the rescue, pitching downe his campe, making countenance as if he meant presently to haue giuen battaile: and verily it was thought that two such powers as were there at that time so neere together, should neuer haue departed without battaile. The Emperor thinking surely to fight, raysed his siege, and drewe his people into the field. The French men therebye eyping their aduantage, put as well fresh men as bitrails, and all kinde of munition necessary into the Towne, and in the meane while kept the Emperors men occupied with hotte skirmishes: but now after the Towne was thus relieued, which thing the French King onely wished to accomplish, the next day when the Emperour was ready with his army enranged in battailes, to haue fought with his aduersaries, the French King put his army also in order, but hauing no minde to come forward, he trifled forth the day, and in the night following secretly departed with as much hast as possible. When the next morning had discouered the French mens flight, it was no need to bid diuers troupes of the Emperors army to hie after them: but some made too much hast, for the French king suspecting what would ensue, appointed his eldest son Henry the Dolphin, to remaine behind with the rereward, accompanied with diuers Noble Captaines, which ordered their people in their retire with such warinesse, that such of the Emperors campe as aduentured ouer rashly, fell within danger of such ambushes as were by the way laid in places of aduantage: and so diuers were taken, as Sir George Carew, Sir Tho. Palmer Knight, porter of Caleis, Edward Belingham and others. Neuerthelesse a great number of the French men were snapped by, slaine, and taken in no small numbers by their enemies that followed them. This was after Hallowmas tide, so that now by reason the winter was farre entered, the Emperour bade by his campe, and licenced the most part of the people to depart home.

In the meane space, to wit on the 28. of July, Anthony Parson, Robert Testwood, and Henry Filmer, were brent at Winsore. And a great death of pestilence was at London, and therefore Michaelmas terme was adiourned to S. Albans. Terme kept at S. Albons.

About Hallowmas tide, a road was made into Scotland, by the garison there, sir Ralph Euers with the men of Tindall and Ridsdale brent in the middle marches of Scotland, Thesold with 15. other Townes, killed 18. Scots, and take 300. prisoners, 1500. cattell, 4000. sheepe: Brian Lechener brent 18. Townes, killed 12. Scots, tooke 200. prisoners, 600. cattell, 2000. sheepe, and 300. geldings. The west bordereres with the helpe of the Scots of Liddesdale, brent 21. Townes, killed eight Scots, tooke 160. prisoners, 500. Cattell, 1000. sheepe, and 100. geldings, sum of the Townes brent 55. Scots killed 38. prisoners taken 560. Cattell taken 3500. geldings, 800. sheepe 7000. and much horsehold stuffe. Road made into Scotland.

The 18 of December, the Archbishoppe of Canterburies Pallace at Canterburie was brent, and therein was brent his Brother in law, and other men.

Lord Parre made E. of Essex.

The 24. of December, William Lord Parre brother to the Queene, who had marryed the daughter and heire of Henry Boucher Earle of Essex, at Hampton Court was created E. of Essex, and Sir William Parre knight, vnkle to them both, was made Lord Parre of Horton, and Chamberlaine to the Queen. And on Newyeres day Sir Thomas Wriothesly, the Kings Secretarie, was made Lord Wriothesley of Tichfield.

1544. Foure Eclipses.

This yere chanced 4. Eclipses, one of the Sun the 14. of January, and three of the Mone at sundry times.

In the beginning of Lent, Lord Edward Seymor Earle of Hertford, was made Lieutenant of the North, and sent thither with an Armie.

Germaine Gardiner and other executed.

The 7. of March, Garmaine Gardiner, and Larke parson of Chelsey were executed at Tyborne for denying the Kings supremacie, with them was executed for other offences, one Singleton, and shortly after, Ashbey was likewise executed for the supremacie.

The 12. of March, Sir John Dudley Lord Lisle, Lord Admirall, with a great Nauie, departed toward Scotland.

An. reg. 36.

The 4. of Aprill a Gun powder house, called the black Swan in East-Smithfield, was blowne vp, and therein burned fiue men, a boy, and a woman.

The same fore-noon

Lord Admirall commeth into Scotland.

Of May diuen, died Lord Thomas Audley Lord Chancellor of England. After whom succeeded Lord Thomas Wriothesley.

The third of May, Sir John Dudley vicount Lisle, high Admirall of England, arrived with his fleete of 200. saile in the Frith of Scotland, where he lanced diuers of his men, and tooke there diuers vessels. The 4. of May he landed the residue of his men at Lieth, and from thence marched forward in 3. great battailes, whereof the said Lord Admirall led the Vaward, the Earle of Shrewsbury the Rereward, and Edward Seymor Earle of Hertford Lieutenant Generall of the Battailes. Here they found the Scots to the number of fiue thousand horsemen, besides many footemen ready to stoppe their passage, who at the first, made as they would haue set on the Vaward, but after certaine shot on both sides, they sodainely, leauing their Artillerie behinde them, fled toward Edenborow, the foremost in flieing was the Cardinall of Saint Andrewes, the Earle of Huntley gouernor, Murrey and Bothwell, and then the Englishmen entered the towne of Lieth, where they found such riches, as they thought had not bene in any Towne of Scotland. The next day our army went towards Edenborough, and when they approched neere, the Prouost of the Towne with other prefered to haue deliuered the same, vpon condition, that the people might depart with bagge and baggage, and the Towne to be safe from fire. Wherunto our Lieutenant answered, that he was sent thither to take vengeance vpon them for their detestable falshod, and that vnlesse they would yeeld vp the Towne simply without condition, and cause man, woman, and childe to depart into the fields, submitting them to his pleasure, he would put them to the sword, and their Towne to the fire. The Prouost answered, that it were better for them to stand to their defence, and so departed, and forthwith the Lord Lieutenant caused the Vaward to march towards the Towne, which they did so courageously with helpe of the English Gunners, that they kept the Scots from their ordinance, and so entred Cante-gate, and there slew a great number of the Scots, and set fire on the Towne, which continued three dayes after burning. Shortly after came the Lord Lieutenant by lande, William Lord Euars Warden of the East march of England, and gouernour of Barwike, with his son Sir Ralph Euars, and ioyned themselues with the army thus lying in Lieth, where after their comming they did such exploytes, in riding and walking the countrey, that within seuen miles euery way of Edenborough, they left few places, either pile, village, or house vnburnt. And beside this, they brought great numbers of cattaile dayly into the armie, and not without much good sturre which the inhabitants of Edenborough had for safety of the same conueyed out of the Towne.

Lieth taken and fortified.

Venobles, Sir Iohn Constable, Sir Edmond Trafford, Sir Iohn Atharton, Sir Richard Cholmeley, Sir Philip Egerton, Sir Hugh Willoughby, Sir Robert Constable, Sir William Woodhouse, Sir Edmond Sauage, Sir Thomas Gerard.

E. of Hertford made Knights at Lieth.

The 13. of May the Englishmen brake down the pire of the hauen at Lieth, and brent euery sticke of it. This done, & hauing shipped their great artillery, and picked forth all such, Scottish shippes, as were meete to serue, they tooke vpon them to returne home by land. Among other shippes, they tooke out of Lieth Hauen, there were two of notable faireneslle, the one called the Salamander, the other the Vnicorne; the rest of the Scottish Ships being taken away together with their owne Ships, were for the most part pestered with the spoyle and bodies of the souldiers and mariners.

Lieth burned.

The fifteenth of May the armie and fleete departed from Lieth, both in one houre, the Towne being set on fire, and burned to the ground. The English Army encamped that night at a place called Soten, seauen myles from Lieth, where they brent the Castle, and spoyled the grounds about it. The same day was Haddington brent, with an house of nuns, and an house of Fryers. The next night they encamped beside Dunbar, and in the morning brent the Towne, and marched forward, and on the 18. day of May they entered into Berwick, so ending their voyage.

Haddington brent.

Dunbar brent.

About the same time the Earle of Lenox fled out of Scotland into the Realme of England, where hee was right gladly received by King Henry, and shortly after hee obtained in marriage the La. Margaret Douglas, Neece to King Henry, and returned with a competent crew of English-men, but finding no such friendship amongst his countrey-men as he looked for, he returned without atchieuing the Enterprise which he had taken in hand.

Base money coyned.

In this meane space, to wit, on the sixteenth of May, Proclamation was made for the enhansing of gold to 48. s. and siluer to foure shillings the ounce. Also the King caused to be coined base monies in great abundance, which was since that time, to wit, in the fift yere of King Edward the Sixt, called downe from 12. pence to nine pence, from nine pence to fiue pence: and in the second yere of Q. Elizabeth, called into her Maiesties mints, and there refined.

Procession in English.

In the moneth of June, the Letanie or Procession was set forth in English, with commandement by the King to be generally vsed in euery parish Church.

In armie into France.

The King tooke order for the leuying of a mighty armie to passe ouer into France, according to the appointment made with his confederate friend the Emperour, against the French King. There were therefore appointed three Battailes: The Vaward vnder the leading of the Duke of Norffolke: The Battaile vnder the Duke of Suffolke, which also was counted the Kings Battaile, because hee minded to be present with the same in person, and the Rereward was led by the Lord Russell, Lord priuie Seale. Those of the Fore-ward vnder the Duke of Norffolke, were apparrelled in blew coates garded with red, and had caps and hosen after the same sute, party blew, and partie red. The Battaile vnder the D. of Suffolke in Coates, Cappes, and hosen in like manner, but the colours blew and yellow. The Duke of Norffolke, and the Lord priuie Seale, accompanied with diuers other noble men, as the Earle of Surrey Marshall of the Field, the Earle of Oxford, the Lord Grey of Wilton Lieutenant of Hams, the Lo. Ferrers of Chartley, and Sir Richard Deuereux his son and heyre, they brought with them a great number of Welshmen, Sir Thomas Cheiney Lord Warden of the Portes, the Lord Mountioy, Sir Francis Brian knight, Sir Tho. Poynings, Captaine of Guisnes, and diuers other, passed ouer to Caleis about Whitsontide, and from thence forward to France, left Bologne on their right hand, and keeping forwards towards Muterell, ioyned with an army which the Emperour had raised for that purpose, vnder the leading of the Countie of Buren, admirall of the low Countreyes, and so those Armies being ioyned in one, came before Muterell, and there laid siege to the Towne, being well manned, and furnished with all things necessarie for defence, as well in munition as in victuall, the chiefe Captaine of which towne was Monsieur de Bitz, one of the Marshals of France.

The Duke of Suffolke with the Kings armie passed ouer, accompanied with the Earle of Arundell, marshall of the Field, the Lord Saint John, and the Bishop of Winchester, Sir John Gage, Comptroller of the Kings house, Sir Anthony Browne, Master of the Kings horse, with diuers other Captaines, the which on the nineteenth of July came before Bologne, and encamped on the East side of the same towne, aloft vpon the hill, and after removed into a valley where after many sharpe skirmishes, they first entered the base towne, being left and forsaken by the inhabitants, which hauing set fire on their filthy nestes, and other such baggage, vnder couert of the smoake, gotte them vp into the high Towne, before the English-men could espie them.

Duke of Suffolke with a power ouer sea before Bologne.

After this the Olde man, a Tower standing without the towne for a direction to them that were to enter the Hauen, and now being kept by fifteene souldiers, was peeled vppe by them.

The Frenchmen within the Towne, being dispeopled of these two places, yet spared not to shoote off their walls and bulwarkes, doing what they could, and namely from the Castle, and greene bulwarke, they did much hurt to the Englishmen with their shot.

The 14. of July King Henry in person, accompanied with diuers Noble men, passed the seas from Douer to Caleis, and on the 26. of July encamped before Bologne on the northside, within lesse then three quarters of a mile of the Towne, where he remained till the town was surrendred into his hands: the Kings liuery was red garded with yelow. Beside the trenches which were cast and brought in manner round about the towne, there was a mount raysed vpon the East side, and diuers pieces of artillery planted aloft the same, the which together with the mortes-pieces, sore annoyed them within, battered downe the steple of our La. Church. To conclude, the battery was made in most forceable wise in three seuerall places, and the walls, towers, and Castle were vndermined, and the Towne within so beaten with shot out of the campe, and from the mount and treach, by the moster pieces, that there were here few houses left whole therein. The Frenchmen thus daring in great distresse, there were 200. Frenchmen and Italians, which entered vnder the conduct of Iohannino to enter the towne in couert of the night, which entrie they so warily atchieued, that by meanes of a priest that could speak the English tongue they passed by the scowrers, & though the most part of them were got 01 before the gates, yet it was knowne what they were: so the number of an hundred and twenty of them got into the towne, but the residue being intercepted, were either taken or Boloign assaulted. slaine. At length when a piece of the Castle was blowne vp, and the breaches made as was thought reasonable, the assault was giuen by the Admirall Lord Dudley that was come thither by the sea, which he had scowred, after his returne out of Scotland. This assault was 20 straightly giuen, and also manfully defended, so that when the assaylants had perceiued in what estate the breach stood, and what prouision they within had made for defence of their Towne, which was great, they were called back, and retired, but not without losse on both sides, especially of them within: for during the assault, the great artillerie did beate still vpon them that presented themselues at the breaches to repulse the assaylants, and so diuers of their

30 valiant Captaines and braue souldiours were slaine at this assault: shortly after, the Captaines within the towne, doubting to be eftsoones assaulted, and perceiuing themselues in extreame danger to lose the Towne by force, if they prounded not the soner, by rendring it, to saue themselues: they sent forth two of their chiefe Captaines Mounsier Semblemount, and Monsieur de Veruine, gouernor of the towne, his retinue was contented to deliuer the towne
40 to his grace, with condition, that they might passe with bagge and baggage, which request the king granted, and so the next day the Duke of Suffolke rode into Boloigne, vnto whom,
Boloigne rendred to K. Henry. as vnto the K. the keyes of the towne were deliuered, and in the after-noone departed all the French-men. The number of all the men of warre that were strong, and able to serue were of horsemen 67. of footmen 1563. of hurt men 87. of women and children 1927 beside a great 50 number of aged and sick persons, not able to depart with the rest.

K. Henry entreth Boloigne. The 25. of September, the K. hauing the sword borne before him by the Lord Marquesse Dorset, like a conqueror rode into Boloigne, and the trumpetters on the wals sounding. In the entring there met him the D. of Suffolke, and deliuered vnto him the keyes of the towne, and so he rode forth to his lodging that was prepared on the South side of the towne; two dayes after the King rode about the Towne, 60 within the wals, and appointed that our Lady church of Boloigne should be taken downe, and in place therof a mount to be made, for strength ning of the towne: finally, after that he had set things in order for the safe keeping of the towne, he appointed Sir Iohn Dudley, Lord Lisle, high Admirall of the Seas, to be his deputy of the same towne, and then taking the seas, he returned into England, landing at Douer on the first of October.

The 9. of October in the night, the French men came vnawares vpon the Englishmen in base Boloigne, and slew of them a great number: howbeit they were shortly after chased from thence, and the base Towne holden after in good quiet.

This yere was taken by the Kings ships of the West Countrey, and of the English coast the number of 300. French shippes and more, so that the grey Fryers Church in London was laid full of Wine, the Austen Fryers and Blacke Fryers, were laid full of herring, and other fish that was taken going into France. Prises taken.

The King demanded a benevolence of all his subiects, spirituall and temporall, towardes his wars in France and Scotland. A benevolence demanded.

The twelfth of January the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Suffolke and other of the K. Councell began to sit at Baynards Castle, where they first called before them the Maior and Aldermen, &c. And because Richard Read Alderman would not agree to pay as they sette him, he was commanded vpon a great paine to serue the King in his wars of Scotland, who departed from London the three and twentieth of January, where he was taken prisoner, &c. 1545.

Also Sir William Roch Alderman, for words of displeasure taken by the Kings Councell, was by them sent to the Fleete, where he remained till Shrouetide Sunday. Sir William Roche sent to the Fleet.

The fire and twentieth of January, there camped on the West side of Boloigne beyond the Hauen, an armie of French to the number of fourteene thousand, where they lay ten dates, and the first of February, were put to flight, by the Earle of Hertford, and Sir Iohn Dudley Lord Admirall, then being Deputy of Boloigne.

The 13. of February, a priest was set on the pillorie in Cheape, and burnt in both cheekes with the letters F. & A. and a paper on his head, wherein was written For false accusing, which iudgement was giuen by the Lord Chancellor in the Star chamber, a notable example of iustice: great cause haue I to wish the like iustice had beene ministred vnto him, that after hee had defrauded me of my worldly goods, sought to haue depriued me of my life, by likewise accusing me of many Articles (seauen-score and odde) suborned witnesses (detected of periury, burnt in the hand for felony, & such like) which all could proue neuer one article against me, before the Arch-bishop of Canterbury, & other her Maiesties high Commissioners (as appeareth in their Register) by whom I was answered, there was no remedy against the accuser, by meane of a Statute late made, &c. Whereupon the false accuser of his master and eldest brother, sweareth to some, he neuer did any such act: to other, that all those Articles were true, and also largely (to the like effect) libelleth against me. False accuser set on the pillorie, and marked in the face, as he and other the like haue well deserued.

In the begining of March, a roade was made into Scotland toward Godworth, by the English men, who at the first got great praise, but they were so greedie, and went so farre, that a great army of Scottes beset them with three battels, where the Englishmen for the most part were slaine and taken at Pawperhowghe, among whom Sir Ralph Eure Lord Eure, and Warden of the East-marches was slaine, and Alderman of London ransome prisoner. Richard Read Alderman of London, with other taken prisoners by the Scottes. Thomas Wriothesly Lord Chancellor made Knight of the garter.

Trinitie terme was adiourned because of the wars.

Anno reg. 37. About the twenty-fiue of June was a great tempest of wind in Darbithire, where through trees were ouer-turned, and diuers Churches, Chappels, and houses, were vncouered. Also in Lancashire, there fell haile-stones as bigge as Stallions figured like mens heads. mens fists, which had diuers points in them, some like mens faces, some like Gunne-holes &c.

French-men arriued in Sussex. The nineteenth of July, the French Kings Nauie comming out of New-hauen, and Dep, arriued on the coast of England in Sussex, at foe bright Hamstead, where they set certaine of their souldiers a land to burne: but the Beacons were fired, and the men came downe so thicke, that the French-men fled and did little hurt.

Men burnt in the Hedge hogge. The 19. of July, by mis-fortune of shooting a Gonne in one of the Hedgehogs a ship, of foe Wellkinstall, a sicken of gun-powder fired, and slew seauen men, and the eyghth leaped into the Thames, and was drowned.

Mary Rose was drowned. The 20. of July, the King being at Portsmouth, a goodly ship of England, called the Mary Rose, with sir George Carrow the Captaine, and manie other gentlemen were drowned in the midst of the hauen, by great negligence.

French-men landed in the Ile of Wight The 21. of July, the French galleyes and nauie came afore Portsmouth Hauen, and landed certaine of their army in the Ile of Wight, at saint Helens Poynt, and there burned and encamped about 2000. men: but they were soone driuen away with losse of their Captaine, and many souldiers. Within few dayes after, the whole Fleete removed from the Wight to a

E. of Hertford sent into Scotland. In the moneth of August, deceased at Guilford Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolke, and Lord great master of the Kings houshold, who was honourably buried at Windsore.

In August the Earle of Hereford was sent into Scotland, with an army of 12000. men, where he destroyed diuers Townes, and greatly endomaged the Scots.

L. Admirall sent to Troyport. The 9. of September, Sir Iohn Dudley, Lo. Lisle, Lord Admirall of England, landed with 6000. men at Treyport in Normandie, and there brent the towne and Abbey with other houses about it, and 30. ships with a barke that lay in the hauen, with losse of 14. Englishmen, and so returned.

The 24. of November began a Parliament, wherein was granted to the King, a Subsidie of 2.s.8.d. of the pound in goods, and 4.s. of the pound in lands. Also all colledges, chauntries, and hospitals, were committed to the K. order, to alter and transpose, which he promised to vse to the glory of God and the common profite of the realme. Chauntries, Colledges, and Hospitals, giuen vnto the K.

The 24. December the Parliament was prorogued on the which day the King comming into the house to giue his royal assent vnto such acts as were passed, the Speaker made vnto him an eloquent Oration: to the which, although the custome hath alwayes beene that the Lord Chancellor should make the answere, it pleased the K. at the present to make the answere himselfe, which he vttered as here followeth, set downe by Edward Hall.

Although my Chancellor for the time being, E. H. hath before this time vsed very eloquently and substantially to make answere to such Orations, as hath beene set forth in this high Court of parliament, yet is he not so able to open and set forth my minde and meaning, and the secrets of my heart in so plaine and ample manner, as I my selfe am, and can doe: wherefore I taking vpon me to answere your eloquent Oration, M. Speaker, say that where you in the name of our well-beloued commons, haue both prayed and extolled me, for the notable qualities that you haue conceiued to be in me, I most heartily thanke you all, that you haue put me in remembrance of my dutie, which is to indeuor my selfe to obtaine and get such excellent qualities, and necessary vertues as a Prince or gouernour ought to haue, of which gifts I recognize my selfe both barren & bare: but of such small qualities as God hath indued me withall, I render to his goodnes my most humble thankes, intending with all my wit and diligence to get and acquire to me such notable vertues, and princely qualities as you haue alleaged to be corporated in my person: these thankes for your louing admonition and good counsell first remembred, I effsoones thanke you: againe, because that you considering our great charge, not for our pleasure, but for your defence, not for our gaine, but to our great cost, which we haue lately sustained, as well in defence of our and your enemies, as for the conquest of that fortresse, which was to this realme most displeasant, and shall hereafter by Gods grace be to our nation both profitable and pleasant, haue freely of your owne mindes granted to vs a certaine subsidie, here in an act specified, which verily we take in good part, regarding more your kindnesse, than the profit thereof, as he that sets more by your louing hearts, than by your substance. Besides this heartie kindnes, I cannot a little reioyce when I consider the perfect trust and confidence, which you haue put in me, as men hauing vndoubted hope, hope, and vnfained belefe in my good doings and iuft proceedings for you, without my defire or request haue committed to mine order & disposition, all chauntries, colledges, hospitals, and other places specified in a certaine act, firmly trusting that I will order them to the glory of God, and the profite of the common-wealth: sure I am, if I contrary to your expectation should suffer the ministers of the Church to decay, or learning which is so great a iewell to be minished, or poore and miserable, to be vnrelieued, you might say, that I, being put in so speciall a truft, as I am in this cafe, were no truftie friend to you, nor charitable to mine owne children, neither a louer of the publike wealth, nor yet one that feared God, to whom account muft be rendred of all our doings. Doubt not I pray you, but your expectation fhall be ferued more godly than yee will wish or hereafter yee fhall plainely perceiue. Now fithence I finde fuch kindneffe on your part towards me, I cannot chooſe but loue and fauor you, affirming, that no Prince in the world more fauoureth his subiects, than I doe you, nor no subiects or commons more loued and obeyed their foueraigne Lord, than I perceiue you doe me, for whose defence my treasure fhall not be hidden, nor if neceffitie require, my person fhall not be vnaduentured: yet although I wish you, and you with me to be in this perfit loue and concord, this friendly amitie cannot continue except both you my Lords temporall, and my Lords spirituall, and you my loving subiects ftudie and take paine to amend one thing which furely is amiffe, and farre out of order, to the which I muft heartily require you, which is: That charitie and concord is not among you, but difcord and diffention beareth rule in euery place: S. Paul feith to the Corinthians, the thirteene Chapter, Charitie is gentle, charitie is not enuious, charitie is not proud, and so forth in the same Chapter. Behold then what loue and charitie is amongst you, when the one calleth another heretike, and Anabaptift, and he calleth him againe Papift, Hypocrite, and Phariſey: bee these tokens of charitie amongst your selues? No, no, I affure you that this lacke of charity among your selues will be the hinderance and affwaging of the feruent loue betweene vs, as I faid before, except this wound be salued and clerely made whole, I muft needes iudge the fault and occafion of this discorde to be partly by negligence of you the fathers and preachers of the spiritualitie: for if I knowe a man which liueth in adultery, I muft iudge him letherous and a carnall person: if I see a man boaft and brag himselfe, I cannot but deeme him a proud man. I heare daily that you of the Clergie preach one against another, teach one contrary to another, enuying one against another, without charitie or discretion: some be too ſtiffe in their old Mumpſimus, other to be too bufie and curious in their new Sumpſimus: thus all men almoſt be in variety and discord, and selue or none Preach truely and sincerely the word of God, according as they ought to doe. Shall I iudge you charitable persons doing thus? No, no, I cannot so deeme: alas how can the poore soules liue in concord, when you Preachers sow amongſt them in your sermons debate and discorde? of you they looke for light, and you bring them into darkenes. Amend these crimes, I exhort you, and set forth Gods word both by true preaching and good example giuing, or else I, whom God hath appointed his Vicar and high minifter here, will see these diffensions extinct and these enormities corrected, according to my very dutie, or else I am an vnprofitable seruant, and vntrue officer. Although I say, the spirituall men be in some fault that charity is not kept amongſt you, yet you of the temporality be not clere and vnspotted of malice and enuie, for you raile on Bishops, speake slanderously of Priests, and rebuke and taunt preachers, both contrarie to good order, and Chriſtian fraternitie: if you know surely that a Bish. or Preacher, preacheth or teacheth peruerſe doctrine, come and declare to some of our Counsell or to me, to whom is committed by God the high authority to reforme and order such causes and behauiours, and be not iudges your selues of your owne fantaſticall opinions and vaine expoſitions, for in such high causes you may lightly erre: and although you be permitted to read holy scriptures, and to haue the word of God in your mother tongue, you muſt vnderſtand it is licensed you so to do, only to informe your conscience, and to instruct your children & familie, and not to diſpute, and make scripture a raping and a taunting ſtocke, against priests and preachers, as many light persons do. I am very sorie to know and heare how vnreuerently that moſt precious iewell the word of God is diſputed, rimed, ſung, and iangled in euery Alehouſe & Tauerne, contrary to the true meaning and doctrine of the same: and yet I am euen as much sory that the readers of the same, follow it in doing so faintly and coldly: for of this I am sure, that charitie was neuer so faint amongſt you, and vertuous and godly liuing was never leſſe vſed, nor God himſelf amongſt Chriſtians was neuer leſſe reuerenced, honored, or serued: therfore, as I faid before, be in charity one with another, like brother and brother: loue, dread, and serue God, to the which I, as your ſupreame head and soueraigne Lord erbort and requite you: & then I doubt not, but that loue and league, that I ſpake of in the beginning, ſhall neuer be diſſolued or broke between vs. And to the making of lawes which we haue now made and concluded, I exhort you the makers, to be as diligent in putting them in execution, as you were in making and furthering of the same, or else your labour ſhall be vaine, and your comon wealth nothing relieued. Now to your petition concerning our royall eſtate, to be giuen to such acts as haue paſſed both the houſes they ſhall be read openly, that ye may heare them. And so being read his grace aſſented vnto them as is required.

Many proper feats of armes were exployted and done in this meane while betwixt the Engliſh and the French about Boloigne.

On the morow after the feaſt of the Cirkumciſion, 1546.

English men put to flight by the Frenchmen.

nie, there came a conuoy of victuals towards the French Fort builded beſides Boloigne, garded with three or foure thouſand Launcequents, vnder their Coronell, the Reingraue, and certaine French men. The Earle of Surrey then Lieutenant of Boloigne aduertiſed thereof made out with ſuch power as he might conueniently ſpare out of Boloigne, and the old man, to cut off those victuals: but comming to encounter with the enemies at Saint Etiennes, he was put to flight, Sir Edward Poynings Captain of a band called the Kings gard of Boloigne, was ſlaine in that conflict, with 15. or 16. other Captains, beſides Officers and common ſouldiers.

The Frenchmen put downe.

In the latter end of March, the Frenchmen on the banke ſide of the Thames, in Southwarke was put downe, by the Kings commandement, which was proclaimed by ſound of Trumpets, no more to be priuiledged or vſed as a common Bayneil, but the Inhabitants of those houſes, to keepe good and honeſt rule, as in all other places of the Realme.

An. Reg. 38. W. Foxley kept more than ordinary Lent.

The 27. of Aprill, being Tueſday in Eaſter weeke, W. Foxley Potmaker for the ſpace in the Tower of London, fell a dape, and so continued dapping, and could not be waked with pricking, cramping, or otherwiſe burning whatſoeuer, till the firſt day of Iune: Anno, which was full 14. dayes, and 15. nights, for that Eaſter Terme beginneth not afore 17. dayes after Eaſter. The cauſe of his thus dapping could not be knowne, though the same were diligently ſearched for by the Kings Phyſitians and other learned men, yea the King himſelfe examined the ſaid W. Foxley, who was in all points found at his wakening, to be as if he had kept but one night, and liued 41. yeares after, to wit, till the yeare of Chriſt 1587.

A ſtrange Comet ſeene.

The 18. of May, there were 4. of the Kings ſhips, and 4. Pinnaces abroad on the ſeas afore the Hauen of Hamble iow, and there came 8. of the French Galleies to ſet vpon them, there was great ſhooting betweene them: but at the laſt, one of the Galleies was taken, in the which were 280. ſouldiers, and 140. rowers. The reſt of the Galleies packed away. Moreouer, while the Camp lay thus at Hamble iow, it chanced that one day a Mutenie roſe among the Launſequents againſt their Captaine, ſo that they gat themſelues into order of battell, ſeiſed vpon the great Artillery, and ſhewed countenance, as if they would haue ſet vpon the reſidue of the whole Camp. Hereupon euery man was commanded to repaire to his Enſigne, and the Spaniards came and ioyned themſelues with the Engliſhmen, ready to take ſuch part as they did. At length by the diligence of the Chiefe taines, and good countenance of the Engliſh Souldiers and Spaniards, the tumult was layed, and fire of the principall beginners thereof were hanged.

The 21. of May, the French Army came and encamped beyond Boloigne at the Church on the hill, and the morow after the Earle of Hertford marched with his power to a place within two miles of them, and certaine horſemen and footmen went forth and ſkirmiſhed with them, and in the meane time the Artillery ceaſed not to ſhot off, as well from the French Camp, as from Boloigne, and the Dio man. This day were ſlaine 14. French men, and two taken priſoners: and three of the Engliſh were taken, and ſo the Earle of Hertford retired to his Camp, and left the Launcequents vpon the hill, encamped before the Enemies, not two miles diſtant from them, in which place a Fort was begun to be raiſed, which was called the Fort of Boloigne beage.

The 23. of May, the Souldiers of Boloigne and the Launſquents ſkirmiſhed with the French men, and diuers and take of them about the number of ſeuen ſcore, of the which there were 30. of them in veluet coates, and ſome with chaines.

In this meane while, by the motion of diuers Princes, a meeting was had of diuers Commiſſioners appointed to treat of ſome peace, to be concluded betwixt the two Kings of England and France, hereupon there came to Guines for the King of England, the Earle of Hertford, the Biſhop of Winchester, Sir John Dudley Viſcount Lile, Baron of Dudley, and high Admirall of England, Sir Wil. Paget the Kings Secretary, and Doctor Nicholas Wotton Deane of Canterbury: For the French King there came to Arde, Monſieur Claude Dandebaulte Admirall of France, the Biſhop of Carcen, Monſieur Reimond chiefe Preſident of Roane, the Secretary Boucherell. Theſe met diuers times betwixt Arde and Guiſnes. After long debating, on the 7. of June a peace was concluded, which peace was with Heraulds and ſound of Trumpets, proclaimed at London on Sabbath ſunday, being the 13. of June, and the ſame day was a generall Proceſſion, before the which was borne all the richeſt ſiluer croſſes in London, to wit, of euery Church one, then proceeded all the Parith Clarkes, Conduits, Quiriſters, and Prieſts in London, with the quire of Pauls, all of them in their richeſt Coapes, ſinging: Then the Companies of the Citie in their beſt Liueries. The Lord Maior, the Aldermen and Sheriffes in skarlet, &c. All theſe went from Pauls Church through Cheape, and Cornhill vp to Leaden hall, and ſo back againe to Paules. And this was the laſt ſhewe of the rich croſſes and coapes in London: for ſhortly after they, with other their Church Plate, were called in to the Kings Treaſury and Wardrobe. And the ſame day was the ſame Peace proclaimed in the Citie of Paris, in Roan, and other places: the firſt Article of which peace was, that the French King paying to the King of England 800000. crownes, within the terme of 8. yeers he ſhould haue Boloigne again to him reſtored, which in the meane time ſhould remaine in the hands and poſſeſſion of the King of England.

Peace proclaimed, and generall proceſſion.

Moreouer, for the full eſtabliſhing of the peace, and for to receiue the French Kings oath, the Viſcount Lile L. Admirall, with the Biſhop of Durham, 5 diuers other Lords & Gentlemen, to the number of more than 100. all in veluet coates and chaines of gold, with 45. Peomen ſemly appointed, went into France from Boloign, the 10. of Iuly, & came to Pellane, a town beyond Paris, where the French King lay: by whom, and the Dolphin his sonne, they were royally received, feasted, & banquetted: and having done that for the which they came, the said Lord Admirall Dudley the first of August tooke his leave of the French King, who rewarded him with a Cupbord of plate of gold, valued at 1500. pound. The Lords also and Gentlemen had chaines of gold given to them, and women had 1200. crownes bestowed amongst them, and so they returned into England.

Anne Askew and others burne.

The 16. of July, was burned in Smithfield for the Sacrament, Anne Askew, alias Kenne, John Lascles, Nicholas Otorden Priest, 1. Adlam Cayley, and Doctor Shaxton sometime Bishop of Salisbury, preached at the same fire, and there recanted, perswading them to doe the like, but they would not.

Admirall of France came to London.

The 21. of August, came into England Claude de Honnebale, high Admiral of France, who brought with him the Sacre of Diep, and 12. Galleies, he landed at the Tower-wharfe, where he was honourably received, and brought to the Bishop of Londons Pallace, where hee lodged two nights, and then rode to Hampton Court where the King lay. By the way, Prince Edward received him with a company of 500. coates of velvet, with one sleeve of cloth of gold, and halfe the coat embroydered with gold: there was in all to the number of 800. horses. And to the French Admirall came to the Court, giving the Prince the upper hand as they rode; and at the entry gate of the Court, the Lord Chancellour and all the Kings Councell received him, and brought him to his lodging.

On Bartholomew day, the King admitted him to his presence, welcommed him, and in great triumph went to the Chappell, where the King received his oath, to performe the articles of the league. I omit to speake of huntings and banquettings, which was wonderfull. But on the 27. of August, hee being rewarded with a Cupboard of plate, to the value of 1200. pound, he returned to London, and so to his Galleies, and departed homeward: besides the Kings gift, hee had given to him by the Citie of London, two Flagons guilt, and two other parcell guilt, valued at 126. pound, besides wine, wax, &c.

Duke of Norfolke and Earle of Surrey sent to the Tower

The 12. of Decem. The Duke of Norfolke, and Henry Earle of Surrey, his sonne and heire upon certaine surmises of Treason, were committed to the Tower of London, the one by water, the other by land, that the one knew not of the others apprehension.

K. H. his gift to the Citie of London.

The 3. day of January, the late dissolued Church of the Gray Freyers in London was opened, and Masse sung there: and that day preached at Paules Crosse the Bishop of Rochester, who declared the Kings gift to the Citie of London, for the reliefe of the poore people, which Gift was by Patent under his great Seale, S. Bartholomewes Spittle in Smithfield, lately valued at 305. pound 6. shillings and 7. pence, and surrendred to the King, the Church of the said Gray Friers, valued at 32. pound 19. shil. and 7. pence, and surrendred, and two Parish Churches, the one of S. Nicholas in the Shambles, the other Saint Ewine in Newgate Market at Warwick lane end, all to be made one Parish, in the said Church of the Gray Friers: and in lands hee gave for the maintenance of the same Church, with divine service, reparation, &c. five hundred Markes by yeare for ever, and this Church to be named Christs Church, founded by King Henry the eight.

The 13. day of January, the King then lying dangerously sicke, the Earle of Surrey, was arraigned in the Guild-hall of London, before the Lord Maior, the Lord Chancelour, and other Lords and Judges being there in Commission, some things hee flatly denied, weakening the credite of his accusers, by certaine circumstances, other he excused with interpretations of his meanings, to prove the same to be farre otherwise than was alleaged against him: the especiall matter, wherewith he was charged, was, for bearing certaine Armes that were said belonged to the King and Prince: the bearing whereof he intituled, that as he took it, he might beare them, as belonging to his Ancestors, and withall affirmed that he had the opinion of the Heraulds therein, and so to his indictment he pleaded, not guilty. And for that hee was no Lord of the Parliament, hee was enforced to stand to the triall of a common inquest of his Country, which found him guilty, and thereupon hee had judgement of death: and shortly after, to wit, on the 19. of January he was beheaded on the Tower hill. 1547. Earle of Surrey arraigned and beheaded.

Tombe for King Henry the eight made by Cardinall Wolsey.

The King lying dangerously sick (as ye have heard) and in great perill of death, made his last will and testament, dated the 30. day of December, the 38. yeare of his raigne, &c. Wherein, amongst other things, he appointed his body to be buried in his College, or free Chappell at Windsore, in an honourable Tombe prepared, and at that time almost finished for that purpose, which tombe I have seene, with this inscription cast in the grates of melosine thereof (being copper) Henricus octauus Rex Anglie, Francie, dominus Hibernie, fides defensor: hee appointed the tombes of King Henry the 6. and of Edward the fourth, to be more princely made in the same places they then stood: one thousand markes to be given in almes to the most needy, in as short time as may be after his decease, and to twelue poore Knights, to each of them twelue pence the day for ever, and every yeare to each of them a long Gowne of white cleath, with the Garter embroydered upon the breast, with a shield and crosse of S. George, and a mantle of red cloath, &c. He appointed his first heire to be Crowne to be Prince Edward: the second, Lady Mary, daughter to Queene Katherine: and the third to be the Lady Elizabeth, by Queene Anne Boleine. Item, he tooke order, that during the minority of his sonne Prince Edward, his executors should be Counsellours and aydes to him in all things, as well concerning private as publique affaires, they were in number fifteene, whose names ensue as followeth.

He was Crowned at Westminster on the 20. day of Februarie. And there was the same day proclaimed a generall pardon of all manner of persons saueing fire, to wit, the Duke of Norfolk, Edward Lord Courtney, eldest sonne to the Marquesse of Exceter, Master Foskew, Master Throkmorton, Cardinall Poole, and Doctor Pates.

Paules steple lay at Anchor.

King Edward crowned.

The first of March, the great Seale of England was taken from Sir Thomas Wriothesly, and on the morrow the same was deliuered to the Lord Saint-Iohn, Lord great Master.

1548. The 11. of Aprill being Monday in the Easter weeke, the Complin (being a part of the Euening prayer) was sung in English in the Kings Chappell. Also the same moneth of Aprill, D. Glasier preaching at Pauls Crosse, affirm'd there, that the Lent was not ordained of God, to be Fasted, neither the eating of flesh to be forbone, but that the same was a politick ordinance of men, and mought therefore be broken by men, at their pleasures. Moze on the 15. of May being Sunday, Doctor Smith Master of Whittington Colledge in London, Doctor of Diuinity, and Reader of the same in the Kings Colledge at Oxford, recanted at Paules Crosse, declaring his former Bookes and teachings, to be erronious and heretical. Also on the 19. of June, one Peren did recant in the Parish Church of S. Andrew Vnderhaft in London, where he had before (to wit, on Saint Georges day) preached that it was good to worship the pictures of Christ, and of Saints, but now he said he had bene deceiued, and was sozie that he had taught such doctrins, &c.

On the same 19. of June was a Dirige sung in euery Parish Church in London, for the French King late deceased (to wit, on the 22. of March last before passed) also the Church of St. Paul in London, being hanged with Black, and a sumptuous Herse set vp in the Quire, a Dirige was there sung, and on the next morrow, the Archbishop of Canterbury, assisted of eight Bishops, all in rich Miters, and other their pontificals, did sing a Masse of Requiem, and the Bishop of Rochester preached there a learned Sermon.

The first of July, two Priests were arraigned, and condemned in the Guild-hall, for hauing of certaine Reliques, amongst the which there was a left arme and shulder of a Saint, of the Charterhouse; on the which arme was written, It was the arme of such a Knight, which suffered Martirdome vnder King Henry the eight.

The 9. of July, 15. Gallies of France, past through the narrow Seas into Scotland, where they destroyed the Castle of Saint Andrewes, wherein were certaine Scots, that had in the same Castle murthered the Cardinall of Saint Andrewes. And on the eight of August the said Gallies returned againe into France.

In the moneth of August, Edward Duke of Somerset, Lord Protector, as generall, and Iohn Dudley Earle of Warwicke Lord Lieutenant, with a noble Armie were sent into Scotland, and here to Oxenbozough at a place called Musselburgh, the English men and Scots met, where betweene them the tenth of September was fought a cruell Battell. The victorie whereof fell to the English men, and of the Scots were slaine 14000. and taken prisoners 1500. wherevpon many were Gentlemen, and not aboue 60. English men slaine: more of this yee may read in Master Patten his Booke certaine entituled, The expedition into Scotland.

The 2. of September, the French Gallies did take a Pinnace of the Kings, called the Roo, betweene Calais and Doner.

The Lord Protector, and the rest of the Councell, sent Commissioners into all part of the Realme, willing them to take all Images out of their Churches, for the auoiding of Idolatry, with them were sent diuers Preachers, to perswade the people from their Beads, and such like ceremonies: and at that time the going in Procession was forbidden to be vsed, and the Gospell, and Epistle was commanded to be read in English. And the fift of September the Kings Commissioners did sit in Pauls Church, there to reforme such ceremonies and superstitions. And on the 18. of September, the Letany was sung in English in Paules Church, betwixt the Quire and the high Altar, the singers kneeling, halfe on the one side, and halfe on the other side. And the same day, the Epistle and Gospell was read in English at the high Masse in Pauls Church. The 17. of November was begun to be pulled downe the Rode in Paules Church, with Mary and Iohn, and all other images in the Church, and then the like was done in all the Churches in London, and so throughout England, and texts of Scriptures were written vpon the walls of those Churches against images, &c. And on the 24. of December the Parliament was prorogued.

In the first of Ianuary, Doctor Latimer preached at Paules Crosse, which was the first Sermon by him preached in almost eight yeares before, for at the making of the Six Articles, he being Bishop of Worcester in vnlo not resident 30 bare them, and therefore was commanded to silence, and gaue vp his Bishoppick: hee also preached at Paules Crosse on the 8. of Ianuary, where he affirmed, that whatsoeuer the Clergie commanded, ought to be obeyed, but he also declared that the Clergie are such as sit in Moyses Chaire, and bidde not their Hallers commission: adding nothing thereto, nor taking any thing there from: and such a Clergie must be obeyed of all men, both high and low. He also preached at Paules on the 15. and on the 29. of Ianuary. And on the 2. of February being the Feast of the Purification of our Lady, commonly called Candlemasse day, the hauing of Candles in the Church was left off through out the whole Citie of London.

The 12. of February being Shrone-Sunday, and the Monday, and Tuesday following, was great Iusts, and warlike feates done in the Parke at Greenewich, where was a Castle of Fozt of turues, beleged and assaulted, to shew the King the manner of Warres, wherein he had great pleasure. The Wednesday following commonly called Ashwednesday, the vse of giuing ashes in the Church was also left.

The 17. of March, being Wednesday, was a Pulpit set vp in the Kings prime Garden at Westminster, and therin Doctor Latimer preached before the King, where he might be heard of moze then foure times so many people as could haue stode in the Kings Chappell: and this was the first Sermon preached there. And this yere the ceremony of bearing of Palmes on Palme Sunday was left off, and not vsed as afore.

1548. Commissioners sent out.

About the beginning of the month of March, the King sent his Commissioners into euery Shire in England, to suruey all Colleges, free Chappels, and Chantries, with other lands, as faces in the Articles of their Commission.

An. Reg. 2.

Also in the said moneth of March, the King sent forth his Proclamation, with a booke for the order of receiuing of the holy Communion of the body & bloud of Christ, vnder both kindes of bread and wine, to be ministred by the Priest to all persons at Easter, and at all times after, when the people required it. Whereupon at Easter following began the Communion and Confection in English, but no man constrained thereto except vpon voluntarie after Easter began the Service in English in diuers Parish Churches, and at Whitsuntide at diuers by the commandement of D. W. Mathew deane of the same church. Barkins Chappell nigh the tower of London and the Colledge Church of Saint Martins le Grand nigh the Shambles were pulled downe. Also the Parish Churches of S. Also the Parish Church at the Strand without Temple barre was pulled downe, both Saints Inne, and Strond bridge, in place whereof to build the Protectors house.

Great Watch at Midsom downe.

The Watch which had bene accustomed in London at Midsommer of long time late past, was now againe vsed, both on the Euen thereof and S. Peters, and S. Peter in a readie order as it had bene accustomed, which watch was greatly beautified by the number of more than 5. hundred demilances and light horsemen that were prepared by the Citizens, to be sent into Scotland for the rescue of the Town of Hadington, and other, kept by Englishmen in Scotland.

The siege of Hadington.

On S. Peters Euen, Monsieur D'Esse Lieutenant to the French King, and the Kingdome of France, with the number of 10000. French and Almains, besides Scots, beleged the Town of Hadington in Scotland, defended by the English men, vnto whose ayde shortly after came from Barwick 1300. Footemen, which were 700. men of Armes and Demilances, the Captaines whereof were Sir Rob. Bowes and Sir Thomas Palmer, which Footemen not long after by the French men were enclosed, and the moze part either slaine, or taken with their Captaines before named: neuertheless, the English men defended the Towne, often skirmishing with the French, and putting them to the worse, vntill the 20. day of August, and then came an Army out of England of 16000. of the which 4000. were Almaines, the Kings Lieutenant was the Earle of Shrewsbury, the Generall of the Almains was Captain Courtpenny.

At the comming of the Armie, the French men and Scots in peaceable manner departed from before Hadington, giuing our Captaines and Souldiers great commendation for their seruice. Francis Earle of Shrewsbury, after he had seene the Towne victualled and stored with fre, Souldiers and Munitions, departed into England, and our men kept the Castle of Badington, oftentimes skirmishing with the French men and Scots, till the 20. day of September, and then came the Castle of Rutland with 3000. Almains, and as many bedderers, who caused the Town to be raced, and to bring their Ordnance and Cariage to Lamberke, and returned without Battell.

Hadington raced by the Scottish men.

On S. Peters day Stephen Gardner, Bishop of Winchester, preached in the Palace of white hall at Westminster before the King, for the which Sermon he was on the morrow after sent to the Tower of London.

In September died Q. Katherine late wife to King Henry, and after married to Sir Tho. Seimer Lord Admirall; shee died of childbirth, being deliuered of a daughter.

Q. Katherine died.

The 16. of January, Sir T. Seimer Knight of the Garter, Baron of Sudley, L. Admirall, brother to the Lord Protector, and Uncle vnto King Edward, was arrested, and sent to the Tower of London. On the 19. of January Sir William Sherington was also committed to the Tower; which Sir William on the 14. of February, was arraigned in the Guild-hall at London, and condemned of Treason, for misusing of the Kings Print at Bristow. The L. Tho. Seimer Uncle to the King, was condemned by the Parliament, and neuer came to his answere. This Parliament brake vp on the 14. of March, and on the 20. of March the said Lord Tho. Seimer was beheaded on the Tower hill, he tooke it on his death, that he had neuer committed or meant any Treason against the King nor Realme. The 29. of March Doctor Latimer preached before the King at Westminster, and there in his Sermon, declaring many things against the L. Thomas Seimer late beheaded, he affirmed that in time whiles he was prisoner in the Tower, hee wrote letters vnto the Lady Mary, and Lady Elizabeth the Kings sisters, that they should make some stur against the Lord Protector, and reuenge his death.

An. Reg. 3.

The 1st of April, Proclamation was made for the Masse, to bee put downe through the whole Realme.

The 10. of April, the cloister of Pauls Church in London, called Pardon Church-yard, with the dance of death, commonly called the dance of Pauls about the same cloister, cruelly and cunningly wrought, and the Chappel in the middest of the same Churchyard, were all begun to bee pulled downe. Also the charnill house of Pauls, with the chappel there (after the tombs & other monuments of the dead were pulled downe, and the dead mens bones buried in the fields) were conuerted into dwelling houses and shops.

About the same time the steple, and nine part of the Church of S. John of Jerusalem, nere vnto Smithfield, most beautifully new builded, and late finished, by the Lord Prior named Docwray, was undermined, and ouerthrowne with Gunpowder, the stone whereof was applied in the building of the Lord Protectors house at the Strand.

The 27. of April, diuers Anabaptists were examined in our Lady Chappell of Saint Pauls Church in London, before T. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Edm. Thirlby late Bishop of Westminster, D. Cox, D. Smith, D. May Deane of Pauls, and D. Cox Deane of the Arches, and Chancellor to the Archb. of Cant. these late in the Altar of our Lady in iudgment of these Anabaptists, and at their next sitting, there late with them the Sheriffes of London; and on the next Sunday being Iohn Sunday, one of them named Champenes bare a faggot at Pauls Crosse, Myles Coverdale preached the rehearsall Sermon there: on the next Saturday the said Commissioners sate there again, before whom was brought Joan of Kent, alias Iean Butcher, alias Knel, she was condemned and a Maner of Colchester named Putto it carted, and on the morrow bare a fagot at Pauls Crosse, and after that at Colchest. Also that day stood at Pauls Crosse a Butcher an Anabap. of Mary Magdal. parish in old fish street and against the Sunday after, because he made a mock at the first time: and thus much of the Anabaptists of that time.

In the meneth of May, by meanes of a Proclamation for inclosures, the Commons of Somersetshire and Lincolnshire made a commotion, and broke vp certaine Parks of sir W. Herberds, and L. Sturtons, but sir W. Herbert fought and ouercame many of those Rebels.

Commotion in Somersetshire & Lincolnshire.

In July, the Commons of Essex and Kent, Suffolke and Norfolke, rose against inclosures, and pulled downe diuers Parks and houses.

Also the Commons of Cornwall and Deuonshire, rose against the Nobles and Gentlemen, and required not onely that the inclosures might be disparked, but also to haue their olde Religion, and act of the articles reuoked: these besieged the Citie of Exceter, which was valiantly defended. Against these Rebels was sent John Lord Russell, Lord priuie Seale, with a number of Souldiers, who entred the Citie of Exceter the 6. of August, where they slew and tooke prisoners of the Rebels more than 4000. and after hanged diuers of them in the Towne and Country about. The Lord Grey was also sent with a number of strangers Almaine and Germaine horsemen, who in diuers conflicts slew many people, and spoyled the Country.

Commotion in Deuonshire & Cornwall.

The last of July, Will. L. Marques of Northampton, entred the Citie of Norwich, and on the next morning, the Rebels also entred the Citie, burned part thereof, put the L. Sheffield to flight, and slew the L. Sheffield.

In this meane time diuers persons were apprehended prehended as ayders of the foresaid Rebels or reporters of their doings of the which one was the Bailiffe of Romford in Essex, hanged with in Alogate, and another of Kent, at the Bridge gate toward Southwark, both on Mary Magdal. day by Martiall law.

The 8. of August, the French Kings Ambassadour, did in name of his Master the French King, make defiance vnto the King of England, and so the warres to begin with all their force, and the same night following, all French men were taken prisoners, and their goods registred.

The French Kings Ambassadour maketh defiance.

In the beginning of August, the French K. determining to take the Iles of Gernsey and Jersey, did set there sodainely vpon our Ships with a great number of Galleys, but they were so manfully encountred by the Kings nauy, that with the losse of a thousand men, & great spoile of their Galleis, they were forced to retire into Fraunce, and desist from their purpose.

The 16. of August, a man was hanged without Bishopsgate of London, and one other without Aldgate, the other at Totenham, the fourth at Waltham, and so forth in diuers other places, all by Martiall law.

The 8. of August, the French Ambassadours gaue a defiance to the Lord Protector, whereupon all French men with their goods being no Denizens, were apprehended and committed to prison.

The Rebels in Norfolk and Suffolk encamped themselues at mount Surrey, in a wood called S. Nicholas wood, nere vnto Norwich, against whom Sir Iohn Dudley Earle of Warwick went with an Army, where both he and a great number of Gentlemen meeting with the rebels, were in such danger, as they had thought all to haue died in that place: but God that confounded the purpose of all Rebels, brought it to passe, that as well there as in all other places, they were partly by power constrained, partly by promise of their pardon, perswaded to submit themselues to their Prince: the Earle of Warwick entred the Citie of Norwich the 27. of August, when he had slaine about 5000. of the Rebels, and taken their chiefe Captaine Robert Ket of Windham Tanner, which might dispend in lands fifty pound by yere, and was worth in mouueables about a thousand marks, when he had put to execution diuers of the Rebels in diuers places about Norwich, he returned.

The Earle of Warwicke sent against the Rebels in Norwich.

The 28. of August, tidings was brought to King Edward, and the Lord Protector, that the French men had taken Blackenes, Hamultewe, and Newhauen by Boleine, and had slaine all the English men, and taken the Kings Ordnance and victuals, which was reported to be begun by one Sturton, a bastard sonne of the Lord Sturtons, which had betrayed Newhauen, and went himselfe to the French Kings seruice: hereupon the Captaine of Boleine Barke, for feare of the French Army, conueyed all the Ordnance, victuals, Gods, & men of that Fort, to the high Towne of Boleine, and after their departing, with Gunpowder blew vp the Fort.

Newhauen by Boleine wonne by the French.

About this time also, a commotion began at Semer in the North riding of Yorkshire, and continued in the East riding, and there ended: the principall traytors whereof were William Ombler of Est Hesterton Yeoman, Tho. Dale Parish Clarke of Semer, and Steuenton of Semer: being presented by the Lord President from riding at Murringham, they drew to a place at Semer by the Sea coast, and there by night rode to the beacon at Scarton, and set it on fire, and so gathered a rude route: then they went to Walter Wars house, and took him, and Clopton his vnkes brother, and Savage a Merchant of Yorke, and Bery seruant to Sir Walter Maldery, which soone they murthered a mile from Semer, and there left them naked: their number encreased 3000.

Commotion in Yorkshire.

On the 21. of August, the kings pardon was offered, which Ombler and other refused, who were shortly after taken, and brought to Yorke where Thomas Dale and other were executed the 21. of September.

Rebels executed at Yorke.

The first of September, Edmund Bonner Bishop of London, preached a Sermon at Pauls Crosse, for the which hee was accused vnto the Councell by William Latimer, Parson of Saint Laurence Pountney, and Iohn Hooper, sometime a white Frenke, and so commented before the Archbishop of Canterburie, and other Commissioners at Lambheath, on the 13. the 16. the 18. and on the 21. day of that same moneth, he was sent to the Earle Marshall in his habite of a Bishop: but on the first of October he was deposed of his Bishoprick, for disobeying the Kings order in Religion.

On the last day of October in the morning, the Earle of Warwick with other Lords of his Councell, sent to the Lord Maior, and the Aldermen of London, to his place in Holborne, where was declared to them by the Lord Chancellor, and other of the Kings Councell, diuers abuses of the Lord Protector, concerning the Kings person, and his affaires both in England and also in Scotland, and other his peeres beyond the Seas. And that afternoone was kept a Court of the Aldermen in the Guild-hall, where was shewed a letter, from the King and the Lord Protector, for to haue one thousand men of the Citie, well harnessed with weapons for defence of the Kings Maiesties person. And another letter also from the Lords of the Councell, to haue two thousand men to ayde them, for defence of the Kings person: and also, that the Citie should be well kept with Watches both day and night, &c.

And the same first day, the King being at Hampton Court, the Lord Protector caused Proclamations to be made in diuers Townes nere to the Court, for men to ayde the King against the Lords, and also sent letters to diuers Townes to the same effect: whereupon great assemblies of people were made at Hampton Court. And in the night of the same day he conueyed the King to Windsor, with a great number of horsemen and footemen.

My Lords, wee commend vs most heartily vnto you: and where the Kings Maiestie was enformed that you were assembled in such sort as ye doe now remember there, was aduised by vs, and such other of his Councell, as were here about his person, to send Master Secretarie Peter vnto you with such a message, as where by might haue enlued the surety of his Maiesties person, with preseruation of his Realme and Subiects, and the quiet both of vs, and your selues, as Master Secretarie can well declare vnto you: his Maiestie, and wee of his Councell here, doe not a little maruell that you haue still with you the said Master Secretarie: and haue not (as it were) vouchsafed to send an answere to his Maiestie, neither by him, nor yet by any other. And for our selues, we doe much more maruell, and are right sorie, as we and you haue good cause to be, to see the manner of your doings, bent with force and violence to bring the Kings Maiestie and vs to these extremities, which as we doubted if you will take none other way but violence to defend vs, as nature and our allegiance doth binde vs, to extremity of death, and put it vnto Gods handes, who guyde vs to a good end. So if our reasonable conditions and offers will take no place, as hitherto none hath beene signified vnto vs from you, nor wee doe not vnderstand what ye doe require or seeke, nor what ye doe meane, and that ye speake no hurt of the Kings Maiesties person: as touching all other priuate matters, to auoide the effusion of Christian blod, and to preserue the Kings Maiesties person, his Realme, and Subiects, ye shall finde vs agreeable to any reasonable conditions that you will require. For we doe esteme the Kings wealth and tranquilitie of the Realm more than all other worldly things, yea more than our owne liues. Thus praying you to send vs determinate answere herein by Master Secretary Peter or if ye will not let him goe) by this bearer, we beseech God to giue both you and vs grace to determine this matter, as may be to Gods honour, the preseruation of the King, and the quiet of vs all, which may be, if the fault be not in you. And so we bid you hartily farewell. From the Kings Maiesties Castle of Windsor the 7. day of October, 1549.

Your Lopps. louing friends E. Somerset, &c.

A letter from the Duke of Somerset, to the Earle of Warwick

My Lord, I cannot perswade my selfe that there is any ill conceiued in your heart as of your selfe against me, for that the same seemeth impossible, that where there hath beene from your youth and mine so great a friendship and amity betwixt vs, as neuer for my part to no man was greater, now so suddenly there should be hatred, and that without iust cause, whatsoeuer rumours and bruits, or perswasion of others haue moued you to conceiue; in the sight and iudgement of almighty God, I protest and affirme this vnto you, I neuer meant woorse to you than to my selfe, wherefore my Lord, for Gods sake, for friendship, for the loue that hath euer beene betwixt vs, or that hereafter may be, perswade your selfe with truth, and let this time declare to me and the world, your iust honour, and perseuerance in friendship, the which, God be my witnes, who seeth all hearts, was neuer diminished, nor euer shall be whilest I liue. And because my heart and minde shall be more plaine and open than my writings: this bearer M. Hobie shall declare vnto you the effect thereof at length, to whom I pray you giue credite, &c. the 8. of October, 1549.

The Lords at Windsore, to the Lords at London.

After our hearty commendations vnto your good L. wee haue receiued from the same a letter by Master Hunnings, dated at London yesterday, whereby you doe vs to vnderstand the causes of your assemble there, and charging the Lord Protector with the manner of gouernment, require that he withdraw himselfe from the Kings Maiestie, disperse the force which he hath leuied, and be contented to be ordered according to iustice and reason. And so you will gladly commune with vs, as touching the surety of the Kings Maesties person, and the order of all other things, with such conformity on that behalfe as appertaineth, and otherwise you must (as you write) make other account of vs, than you trust to haue cause, and burden vs, if things come to extremities. To the first points we bee ruly beleeue that as bruites, rumors, and reports, that your Lordships intended the destruction of the Lord Protector, induced his Grace to flie to the defence which hee hath assembled, ecause your Lordships, hearing that his Grace intended the like destruction towards you, haue beene moued to doe as you haue done. So as for lacke of vnderstanding one of anothers right meaning, things bee growne to such extremities, as if the sauing of the Kings Maiesties person, and the Common-weale, take not more place in his Grace and your Lordships, than priuate respect of affaires, you see we doubt not, as we doe, that both our King, our Country, and also our selues, shall, as verily as God is God, bee vtterly destroyed and cast away. Wherefore might it please you, for the tender passion of Jesus Christ, vse your wisedome, and temper your determination in such sort, as no blod be shed, nor cruelty vsed, neither of his Graces part, nor of your Lordships; for if it come to the point, both you and we are like to see presently with our eyes, that which enery vrine of all our hearts will blede to behold. Wherefore, as true Subiectes to the Kings Maiestie, as faithfull Counsellours, though vnworthy Counsellours to his Maiestie and his Realme, and as lamentable Petitioners, we beseech your Lordshippes most humblie, and from the bottome of our hearts, to take pitie of the King and the Realme, whereof you bee principall members, and to sette apart Summum ius, and to vse at this time Tum bonum & aquum; and thinke not that this is written for any priuate feare, or other respect of our selues, but for that vndoubtedly we heare and know more of this point with your fauours, than you there doe know; yea, and howsoeuer it shall please you to account of vs, we are true men to God, to the King, to the Realme, and so will we liue and die whersoeuer we be, and in respect of them thase esteeme little any other person or thing, no not our owne liues: and hauing cleare consciences, as some whatsoeuer, ill all may follow, vpon the vse of extremity there, that neither now is, nor shall be found fault in vs, and so quieting our selues we rest. Now to that you would haue the Lord Protector to doe, for his part, his grace and we haue communed herein, and much to our comforts and yours also, if it shall like you to way the case, who is contented, if you will agree for your parts vse equity, to put that now in execution, which many times hee hath declared by his words, that is to say, so as the King and the Realme may be otherwise well serued, hee passeth little for the place hee now hath. Mary hee doth consider, that by the Kings Maiestie, with all your aduices, and the consents of the Nobles of the Realme, he was called to the place (as apparetly in writing vnder his Maesties great Seale and Signe, whereunto your owne hands also and ours, with all others the Lords of the vpper house in the Parliament are subscribed: and therefore in violent sort to be thus thrust out against his will, he thinketh it not reasonable: hee is here with the Kings person, where his place is to be, and we be here with him, we trust in God for the good seruice of the King, the weale of the Realme, and the good acquiting both of his Grace and of your Lordships, which wee most heartily desire, and for such hope here thereof, as if you be not too sore bent vpon the extremities, as is reported, and as equity can take no place, my Lords and Grace may liue in quiet, and the Kings Maiesties affaires maintained in such order, as by his Maesties Counsellours shall bee thought conuenient; matre to put himselfe simply into your hands, hauing heard as both wee and he haue, without first knowledge vpon what conditions, it is not reasonable. Litle short my Lords, and they say, you seeke his bloud & his death which if you do, and may haue him other-wise conformable to reason, and by extremity driue him to seeke extremity again, the bloud of him and others that shall die on both sides inocently, shall bee by God iustly required at your hands. And when peraduenture you would haue him againe vpon occasion of seruice, you shall foorethinke to haue lost him. Wherefore good my Lords, wee beseech you againe and againe, if you haue conceiued any such determination, to put it out of your heads, and enclyne your hearts to kindenesse and humanity, remembring that hee hath neuer beene cruell to any of you, and why should you bee cruell to him: as we trust you be not, whatsoeuer hath beene said, but will shew your selues as conformable for your parts as his Grace is contented, for the zeale he beareth to the King and the Realme, to be of his part, as this bearer Sir Phillip Hobie will declare vnto you, to whom we pray you to giue credite, and to re-turne him hither againe with answere hereof. And thus beseeching the liuing God to direct your hearts to the making of a quiet end of these terrible tumults, we bid your Lordships most heartily well to fare. From the Kings Maiesties Castle of Windsore the eight of October 1549.

These letters notwithstanding, the same eight of October, after a common Councell in the Guild-hall at London, whither all the Lords of the Councell came, the Lord Chancellour and other declared diuers abuses of the Lord Protector, deseruing the Citizens to be aydyng and assisting with them, for the preseruing of the Kings Maiesties person, which they greatly feared, being in his aduersaries handes.

The Lords dined with Master Yorke one of the Sheriffes, and in the after noone Proclamation was made in diuers places of the Citie, with Trumpets, Heraulds, and Kings at Armes, wherein was contained diuers articles touching the euill gouernment of the Lord Protector.

Proclamation against the Lord Protector.

First, they charged him with making insurrection, whereby the quiet state of the Realme left by King Henry the eight was now disturbed, and the subiects of the Kings naturall seduced thereby.

Item, the losse of his Maiesties Pares beyond the Sea, which his Highnesse father (not long before his decease) won to the honor of himselfe, and commodity of the Realme, not without the aduenture of his owne person.

Item, that in all times of the warres in France and Scotland he hath enriched himself, and builded sumptuous & faire houses, leauing the Kings poore souldiers vnpaid of their wages.

Item, that hee hath laboured to make himselfe strong in all Countries.

That hee hath subuerted all lawes, iustice, and good order of the Realme, whereby he hath fearefully shaken the chaire of the Kings state.

That he hath little esteemed the graue aduice of the Kings gods and faithfull Councellours.

That hee hath little regarded the order appointed by the late King Henry the eight, for the gouernment of the King his Sonne, his Realmes and Dominions in his tender age.

That hee hath laboured to sowe diuision in the Realme among the Nobles, Gentlemen, and Commons.

Finally, that it is easie for euery man to see what losse the King and Realme haue of late suffered by his wilfull negligence, and lacke of prouision and furniture of the Pares beyond the Sea. Subscribed.

The tenth of October, by a common Counsell at the Guild-hall, was granted fiue hundred men of the Citie, (100. to be hosemen) to be ready on the next morrow: and this day the Lords dined with Maister Turke, one of the Sheriffes of London.

The 11. of October, the Lords sitting at the Lord great Masters, Sir Anthony Wingfield Captaine of the Guard, was sent to the Kings at Windsore, and seuered the Lord Protector from his person, and caused the Guard to watch him till the Lords comming. On the morrow, the Lord Chancellor with the rest of the Councell, rode to Windsore to the king, and that night the Lord Protector was put in ward into Beauchamps Tower in the Castle of Windsor.

Lord Protector committed to the Tower.

The 14. of October in the after noone, the D. of Somerset was brought from Windsore, riding betwixt the Earles of Southampton, and of Huntington, through Oldborne in at Newgate, to the Tower of London, accompanied with diuers Lords and Gentlemen, and with 300. hosse: the Lord Gates, Sir Ralph Warren, Sir Iohn Gresham Maister Recorder, Sir William Lock, and both the Sheriffes, and other Knights sitting on their horses against Soper lane, and all the Officers with halbards, and from Holborne bridge to the Tower, certaine Aldermen or their Deputies on horse backe in euery Streete, with a number of householders standing with Bills as he passed. There was with him committed to the Tower, Sir Michaell Stanhope, Sir Thomas Smith, Sir Iohn Thin, Knights, Wolfe of the priuie Chamber, and Grey of Reading.

King Edward rode through London.

The 17. of October, King Edward came from Hampton Court to his place in Southwarke, then called Suffolke place, and there dined, where after dinner hee made M. Iohn Yorke one of the Sheriffes of London Knight, and then rode through the citie of London to Westminster.

Now when the Duke of Somerset was first apprehended, Steph. Gardener B. of Winchester then being prisoner in the Tower (as before ye haue heard) was borne in hand, he should be set at liberty: in hope whereof he prepared him new apparell for that purpose, thinking verily to haue come abroad within eight or ten dayes: but when he was forgotten, and nothing said vnto him, by the space of one moneth after, he thought it good to put the Lords in remembrance by his letters, wherein (after commendations had vnto them) he wrote as followeth.

I haue continued here in this miserable prison now one yeare, one quarter and one moneth, this same day that I write these my letters, with want of ayre to relieue my body, want of bookes to relieue my minde, want of good company, the onely solace of this world: and finally, want of a iust cause why I should haue come hither at all. More of this Letter came not to my hands, but that the Lords take it in good part, and laughed very merrily thereat, saying, hee had a pleasant head: for reward whereof, they gaue him leaue to remaine still in prison saue or fiue weekes after, without saying or sending any word to him, which when hee considered, then he wrote to them this letter following.

Short letters of Stephen Gardener Bishop of Winchester.

After my due commendations to your good Lordships: Howsoeuer the time is stolen from you with the multitude of businesses and varietie of matters, wherewith ye be trauailed, whereby ye rather want time (as I suppose) then be glutted with it; yet with me (being alone comfortlesse in this miserable prison) the time passeth more sensibly, and as the griefe groweth in length, so it bringeth more encombrance and trauell with it. And being now the time of Parliament, whereof I am a member in my degree called vnto it by writ, and not cast from it by any fault, but onely by power kept here: it is a double calamity to be detained in prison by so intolerable wrong, and excluded from this assembly so much against right. I haue suffered the like in the late Lord Protectors time against all reason; which God hath giuen you power now to reforme, and among many other things which in his time were wrythed amisse, no one thing (as I suppose) was of worse example, ne more preiudiciall to the good order of the high Court of Parliament, which is the direction of all mens liues, lands, and goods in this Realme, then to allow for a president, that any one man being member thereof, might without cause be excluded, and so letted to parlee there his minde in publike matters, for the wealth of the Realme, and such other priuate causes as doe occurre. If the Strength of the Parliament be not empaired by wrong in one, because right consisteth not in number, it shall be at the pleasure of him that ruleth, to doe the same in me, whereby others may take more harme then I, as experience hath shewed in such examples. But I know it becommeth mee not to reason the strength of that Court, ne the order of it: the Lawyers of this Realme know that, and to their knowledge I submit my iudgement, and take for good that they allow. But this I dare say, when Religion is entreated in a generall Councell of Christendome, if the rulers of the Councell let any mans repaire thither that hath right to be there, whatsoeuer is there concluded, is in the lawes of the world abroad taken of no force, by excluding of one member wrongfully that should furnish the body, which I write vnto your Lordships, for the good opinion I haue of you, trusting that ye intend not to vphold or follow the late Lord Protectours doings by wrong, but to fashion your proceedings, as they may agree with Iustice at home, and seeme agreeable to reason, to others abroad: being so assured of mine innocencie, that when your Lordships shall heare what can be said against me, and mine answere thereunto, there shall appeare cause why I should haue had praise, thanks, and commendations of the late Lord Protector (if truth, honesty, and due obedience might take therefore) and no cause of trouble or displeasure at all, so wrongfully haue I been tormented in this prison, so boldly dare I speake to you of my cause, with such an opinion and estimation of your wisedomes which I know, and and reuerence, as I ought not, ne would not vainely hope to abuse you with words: but vpon certaine confidence of your indifferencies, verily I trust that ye will beare with take things in such sort, as being plainly and truly opened, shall appeare vnto you by matter indeede. In consideration whereof, I renue my suite vnto your Lordships, instantly requiring you that I may be heard according to iustice, and that with such speede, as the delay of your audience giue not occasion to such as be ignorant abroad of my matter, to thinke that your Lordships allowed and approued the detaining of me here. Which without hearing my declaration, I trust ye will not, but haue such consideration of me, as mine estate, in the Common-wealth, the passing my former life amongst you, and other respects doe require, wherein you shall binde mee, and doe agreeable to your honours and iustice: the free course whereof, you haue honourably taken vp on you, to make open to the Realme without respect, which is the onely establishment of all Common-wealthes, and therefore the zeale of him was allowed that said, Fiat iustitia, & ruat mundus: signifying, that by it the world is kept from falling indeede, although it might fortune otherwise in some respect, and some trouble to arise in doing it. And this I write, because in the late Lord Protectors time there was an information made vnto me, as though I were kept here by policie, which with the violation of iustice take neuer good effect, as I doubt not of your wisedomes yee can and will consider, and doe therefore accordingly: for the effectuall execution whereof, I shall not faile to pray Almighty God for the preseruation and encrease of your Honours. From the Tower. Thus much concerning these letters, haue I thought good to set downe, for that I finde not the same otherwise extant in larger discourses of the said Bishops writings.

The 29. of November, Robert Ket and William Ket his brother were deliuered out of the Tower of London, to Sir Edmond Windham Knight, and Sheriffe of Norfolke to be conueyed to Norwich, where Robert Ket was hanged in chaines on the top of Norwich Castle, and William Ket likewise hanged on the top of Windham steeple.

Rebels lose in Scotland.

In the moneths of November and December, the Scots take Butterag in Scotland, and other holds then possessed by English men, where the Scots slew, man, woman, and childe, except Sir Iohn Lutterell the Captaine, whom they tooke prisoner.

The Lords of the Councell resorted to the Mower of London, and there charged the Lord Protector with sundry articles, which hee confessed, and subscribed vnto them as followeth.

1 First, you did take vpon you the Offices of Protector and Gouernor vpon condition expressedly and specially, that yee would doe nothing in the Kings affaires publike or priuate, but by the assent of the late Kings executors, or the most part of them.

2 Item, you contrary to the same condition and promise of your owne authority did stay and let iustice, and subuerted the lawes as well by your letters as by your commandement.

3 Item, you caused diuers persons reiued and imprisoned for treason, murther, manslaughter, and felony, to be discharged, and to goe at large, against the lawes and statutes of this Realme.

4 Item, you haue made and ordained Lieutenants for the Kings Armies, and other the Kings waighty affaires, vnder your owne writings and Seales.

5 Item, you communed with the Ambassadors of other Realmes, disceading alone with them the waighty matters and causes of this our Realme.

6 Item, you haue sometimes rebuked, cherished, and taunted as well priuately as openly, diuers of the Kings most honourable Counsellours, for shewing and declaring their mindes and aduices, or opinions against your purpose in the Kings waighty affaires, saying sometime to them, that they were not worthie to sit in Councell, and sometimes saying to them, that you made not to open matters to them, and yee will be otherwise aduised, and that yee would if they were not agreeable to your opinions, put them out, and take in other at your pleasure.

7 Item, yee had and held against the lawes in your owne house, a Court of Requests, and thereby did enforce diuers of the Kings Subiects to answere for their fee holds and goods, and determines the same to the diminution of the same lawes.

8 Item, you being no Officer, without the aduice of the Councell, of the more part of them did dispose the Offices (for money) of the Kings Gifts, and granted Leases and Wards of the Kings, and gaue presentations of the Kings Benefices and Bishoprickes, hauing none authority so to doe: and further, yee did meddle with selling of the Kings lands.

9 Item, you commanded Sophistication and Alamistry to be practised, thereby to abate the Kings coyne.

10 Item, you are charged, that ye haue diuers and many times, both openly and priuately said and affirmed, that the Nobles and Gentlemen, were the onely causes of the dearth of things, whereby the people rose, and did reforme things themselues.

11 Item, you caused Proclamations to bee made concerning Inclosures, whereby the common people haue made diuers insurrections, and leuied open warre, and destroyed and spoiled the Kings Subiects, which Proclamations went forth against the wils of all the Councell.

12 Item, you caused an Iniunction, with certaine Articles thereunto annexed, to be made out concerning Inclosures, Commons, Highwayes, decaying of Cottages, and diuers other things, giuing the Commissioners authority to heare and determine the same causes, to the subuersion of the Lawes, and Statutes of the Realme, whereby much sedition, insurrection, and rebellion haue risen and growne among the Kings Maiesties Subiects.

13 Item, you suffered the Rebels and Trai-

toys to assemble and lie in campe and armour against the Kings Nobles and Gentlemen, without any speedy subduing or appeasing them.

14 Item, you did comfort and encourage diuers of the said Rebels, by giuing to them diuers summes of your owne money, and by promising to diuers of them fees, rewards, and seruices.

15 Item, you in fauour of the said Rebels did against the lawes, and caused Proclamation to be made, that none of the said Rebels or Traytors should be sued or vexed by any manner of person, for any of their offences in the said rebellion, to the cleare subuersion of the lawes here.

16 Item, you haue said in the time of rebellion, that you liked well the doings and proceedings of the said rebellious Traytors, and said that the consentment of Gentlemen gaue occasion to the common people to arise: saying, that better it were for the Commons to dye, than for to perish vtterly for lack of liuing.

17 Item, you said that the Lords of the Parliament, were loath to enclose themselues to reformation of inclosures or other things, therefore the people haue good cause to reforme the things themselues.

18 Item, you after the report and declaration of the defaults and lackes, reported to you by them that the Camp Bologne, and the pences, if you would neuer amend the faults.

19 Item, you would not suffer the Kings power beyond the sea called New-hauen and Boleines, to be furnished with men and victuals, although that yee were aduertised of the defaults thereof by the Captaines of the said peeces, as by others, and was also aduertised by the Kings Counsell, whereby the French King being the Kings enemy, was encouraged and confirmed to inuade and win the said peces, to the Kings great losse and dishonour.

20 Item, also you said, ye would not suffer the Noble men and Gentlemen, to subdue and to represse the said rebellious in time conuenient, neither would you giue any authority to the said Nobles and Gentlemen, to the subduing of the said Rebels, but wrote your letters to them to speake faire to the Rebels, and to handle them gently.

21 Item, you haue caused the first of October last past, at Hampton Court, for the defence of your owne cause, diuers seditious bils to be written in counterfaited hands, and secretly to be throwne abroad in diuers parts of this Realme, thus beguiling the good people, &c. meaning thereby for to stir and raise vp the Kings Subiects vnto armour and open warre.

22 Item, when that the Kings Maiesties priuie Counsellours of their loue and zeale that they did beare vnto the King and the Realme, did counsell at London to come to you, to the intent to commune with you charitably, to amend your doings and misgouernance, you hearing of their assembly, did cause to be declared by letters in diuers places, the said Lords to be Traytors to the King, to the great disturbance of the Realme.

23 Item, you declared and published vntruly as well to the Kings Maiestie, and other the young Lords attendant vpon his Maiesties person, and to the Kings Subiects at diuers and sundry times and places, that the said Lords at London minded to destroy the King, and you required the King neuer to forget it, but to reuenge it, and likewise required the said young Lords to put the King in remembrance thereof, to the intent to make sedition and discord betweene the Kings Maiestie and his Lords.

24 Item, you said in the moneth of October last at Hampton Court, and the 8. of the same moneth at Windsor, or at one of the same places the 8. Lords: The Lords of the Councell at London doe intend to kill me; but if I dye, the King shall die, and if they famish me, they shall famish the King.

25 Item, you caused and procured by your owne letters, the Kings people in great number to rise, and assemble in armour after the manner of war, to your ayde and defence.

26 Item, the 9. of October last, you did of your owne head, sodainly remoue the Kings Maiesties person late in the night from Hampton Court to Windsor, without any precision there made for his Grace, whereby his Highnesse was not onely in great feare, but take also such disease as was to his great perill.

27 Item, you caused your owne seruants, and friends at Hampton Court, and at Windsor to be harnessed with the Kings armour, the Kings Graces seruants hauing no armour nor harnes.

28 Item, you caused at Windsor your owne person in the night time to be garded in harnesse by many persons, leauing the Kings Maiesties person vngarded, and would not suffer his owne gard or seruants to be neer the Kings person, but appointed your seruants and friends to keepe the gates.

29 Item, you minded for to flie to Iarsey or to Wales, and laid post horse, and a boate and men for the same intent.

I Edward Duke of Somerset, haue read and considered these said 29. articles before specified, and doe acknowledge my said offences, faults, and crimes, done, and contained in the same, and most humbly prostrate on my knees, doe fully and wholy submit my selfe to the most abundant mercy and clemency of the Kings Maiestie, for the moderation of my said offences, hauing my full trust and confidence, that his Maiestie with the aduice of his Highnesse most honourable Counsaile, will consider mine offences, faults, words, and proceedings, that if any of my said offences be by his clemency, pardoned, remitted, or otherwise discharged, that I may enioy the benefit thereof, although the same become vnknowne. And farther, I doe most humbly beseech all my Lords and other his Maiesties most honourable Counsaile, not onely to be meanes to his Maiestie, to take away, and consider mine offences to haue proceeded more of ignorance, negligence, folly, wilfulnesse, and for lacke of good consideration, than of any cankered or malicious heart, euill intent or thought, tending to any treason to his Edward Duke of Somerset his first submission.

his Maiestie or Realme: but that it may please his Maiestie by the charitable aduise of their good Lordships to haue pitty vpon me, my wife, and children, and to take some mercifull way with me, not according to the extremity of his lawes, but after his great godnesse and clemencie, whereunto, whatsoeuer it shall be, I doe most humbly with all my heart submit my selfe. Written with mine owne hand the 23. day of December, in the 3. yeere of the raigne of our Soueraigne Lord King Edward the 6.

Edward duke of Somerset his second submission.

The submission of the Duke of Somerset prisoner in the tower, made the 2. of February.

I am most fearefull, and full of heauinesse, my very good Lords, to vnderstand that my last letters were no better accepted at your Lordships hands, to whom I am bound during my life, for your most gentle and mercifull dealing with me, that it pleased your godnesse to bring my cause to a fine. I trust your Lordships neuer thinke that I euer did, or would intend to stand against the Kings Maiesty and your Lordships goodnesse, or that I would goe about to maintaine my cause, saying his Maiestie and your Lordships offereth clemencie, mercy, and pardon. Although the same be to me impossible, yet I doe commit my selfe wholy to his highnesse, and your Lordships mercies, I pray onely the moderation of it. And did comfort to declare to your godnesse mine inhability to be in it: And yet referred all to his Maiesties and your lordships goodnesse, and discretion. And I most humbly before your Lordships doe confesse that I was about to contend with you Lordships, when I did speake of my conference, I might erre, in that I thought I did for the best, as I doe acknowledge and confesse, that neither I am the wisest man in the world, nor yet if I were, I should not escape, with a most singular great, but many times I should offend: But I leaue all that, and most humbly, simply, wholy, and loyally, I submit my selfe to the Kings Maiesty, and to your good Lordships: appealing from the rigour and extremity of his Maiesties lawes, to his Maiesties great mercy and clemency, praying your godnesse to be meanes to his Maiestie, not to be offended with me, nor to exclude his Maiesties mercy and bringing from me, for my rawenesse and lacke of discretion, but to accept my good minde as one that fayne would doe that were well. And when I cannot, or haue not done that thing I ought to doe, I would gladly amend, and am ready at all times, without condition to doe and suffer willingly that thing that your Lordships will appoint me, accepting what clemencie or mercie soeuer I obtaine to be of his Maiesties, and your godnesse: most humbly on my knees praying, his Maiestie and your good Lordships to pardon mine offences, and to order me for them, as to his most high mercifull clemencie shall appeare conuenient. And finally, hoping from extremity of rigour, desire mercie, as you be and are called most mercifull Councellours, not imputing my writings and doings hitherto as of frowardnesse and stubbornnesse, but onely for lacke of discretion and wisedome. For the which once againe I require pardon and fauour to bee shewed. And if it pleased your good Lordships to heare mee, I trust yee should finde me loyall vnto your Honours, and so conformable vnto your Lordships orders, that I trust to make amends, and obtaine pardon for my former folly. And thus I most humbly commit your good Lordships to almighty God: To whom I shall alwayes pray, that yee may long continue in honour. From the Tower the 2. of February.

Duke of Somerset deliuered.

The 10. of February, one Bel a Suffolk man was hanged and quartered at Tyborne, for moouing a new rebellion in Suffolke and Essex.

After diuers meetings of our Ambassadors with the Lords of Fraunce, at Bologne, a finall peace was concluded, vpon condition, that the French King paying a certaine summe of money to the King of England, should haue rendered to him the Towne of Bologne, and all the Fortes thereunto belonging, with all such artillery and munition as was thereat the taking thereof by the English: for the performance whereof hostages were by both parties to be deliuered, so that on the last day of March a generall peace was proclamed betweene the Kings of England and Fraunce, the Emperour and the Scots.

Proclamation of peace.

The 8. of April hostages on either part were deliuered, at a certaine place appointed betweene Arde and Guisnes, where at the deliuerance of the hostages of our party was the Lord Cobham Deputy of Calais, Sir Iohn Wallop Knight, Captaine of the territory and Castle of Guisnes, Sir Mawrice Denice Knight Treasurer of Calais, and Francis Hall Comptroler of the same Towne, with diuers Gentlemen and other. And on the French part there Monsieur de la Kalpe, Monsieur Chatillon, Monsieur de Traye, and other. The hostages for the English were the Duke of Suffolke, the Earle of Hertford, the Lord Matreers, the Lord Talbot, the Lord Grange, and the Lord Fitzwater. On the French part, Duke de Angyne, Marques de Mayne, Monsieur Memorancie Constable Sonne of Fraunce, Monsieur Vieldame de Chartres, la Tremoile, Monsieur Hauceden, the Admirals sonne of Fraunce.

The Citizens of London of diuers Misteries and Corporations, hauing certaine chanterie lands, for Priests wages, obits and lights, surrendred into the Kings hands by Act of Parliament, valued by the Commissioners to 1000. pounds the yere, purchased the said yerely quitrents of the King for 20000. pounds, to be paid within eight daies after, by the Councels commandement: which caused the said Corporations to sell much of their best lands, farre better cheape than they had bought their quitrents, as after 16. or 14. yeres purchase, &c.

The King sold chantry lands.

Also the Lord Maior of London, and the Aldermen purchased all the Liberties of Southwarke, which was in the Kings hands, and cost the Citie about 1000. markes.

Liberties of Southwark purchased.

The 8. of April, the Duke of Somerset came to the Court to the Kings Maiestie at Greenewich, where he was honourably receiued of the King and his Councell, and dined with the King, and was sworne of the Priuy Councell.

In the moneth of August, a Piller, seruant to the piller at Battaile bridge in Southwarke, was set on the pillorie in west Cheape of London, and had both his eares cut off, for seditious words by him spoken against the duke of Somerset, as that he had proclamed himselfe King in the Country, which was false.

Bishop of Winchester deposed.

Also in the moneth of September, Grig a Poulter of Surrey, taken among the people for a Prophet, in curing of diuers diseases by words and prayers, and saying he would take no money for it, was by commandement of the Earle of Warwick, and other of the Counsell, set on a scaffold in the Towne of Croydon in Surrey, with a paper on his breast, wherein was written, his deceitfull and hypocriticall dealings. And after that on the 8. of September set on the pillorie in Southwarke, being then our Lady Faire there kept, and the Maior of London with his brethren the Aldermen riding thether the Faire, the said Grig asked them and all the Citizens forgiuenesse. Thus much for Grig.

Grig counterfeit Prophet set on the pillorie.

Of the like counterfeit Phylitian haue I noted in the summary of my Chronicles Anno 1382. to be set on horse backe, his face to the horse taile, the same taile in his hand as a bridle, a chaplar of Iordans about his necke, a whetstone on his breast, and so led through the Citie of London, with ringing of Basons, and banished. Whereunto I had added as followeth, Such deceiuers no doubt are many, who being neuer trayned vp in reading, or practise of Physicke and Chirurgerie, boast to doe great Cures, especially vpon women, as to make them straight that before were crooked, or bed. or crumped in any part of their bodies, &c. But if the contrary be true, for some haue receiued gold, when they haue better deserued the whereof. These words touching generally against all such counterfait Physitians, hath beene so hardly taken to heart, by one priuate person, not of the best, or second sort, (but my common aduersary) that he hath largely libelled against me, to my great slander, but to the full bewraying of himselfe, as one touched more then other that being wiser, held their peace. I forbeare to answere his libelling, as I haue before borne his false accusing, and other greater matters, still referring my cause to the Almighty: who abhorreth lying lips, and maketh the proud to stumble.

Not to take to nurse a crooked body straight, as nurse Gualtar-queen is one leape out of a docker maketh a Dotor.

On Saint Valentines day, at Feuersham in Kent, one Arden a Gentleman was murthered by procurement of his owne wife, for the which fact, she was the fourteenth of March burnt at Canterburie: Michael Saffer Ardens man was hanged in chaines at Feuersham, and Mayden burnt: Mosbie and his sister were hanged in Smithfield at London: Greene which had fled, came againe certaine yeres after, and was hanged in chaines in the high way against Feuersham, and Blacke Will the Ruffian that was hired to doe that act, after his full escape, was apprehended, and burnt on a scaffold at Flushing in Zeland.

Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, hauing bene diuers times conueyed from the Tower of London to Lambeth, (to wit, on the 15. and the 18. of December, the 8. the 12. and the 16. of January, the 13. and 14. of February, and at euery the said times, examined by the Archbishop of Canterburie, and other the Kings high Commissioners, hee was now on the said 14. of February deposed of his Bishoprick, and committed againe to the Tower: Into his place was translated Doctor Poynet late Bishop of Rochester: and Maister Iohn Scorie was made Bishop of Rochester.

The 5. of April Sir Thomas Darcey Vicechamberlaine, and Captaine of the Gard, was created Lord Darcey at Greenwich.

In the moneth of June, the Earle of Northampton, the Bishop of Ely, and other, were sent Ambassadors into France, who were there honourably receiued and entertained. And after that came diuers Lords of France into England, who were lodged at Suffolke place in Southwarke.

The 9. of July, the base monies (coyned in the time of King Henry the eight, and King Edward the first) was proclamed the shilling to goe for 9. pence the groate for 3. pence, which take effect immediatly after the proclamation made.

First fall of the base monies.

The 15. of April, the infectious sweating sickenesse began at Shrewsbury, which ended not in the North part of England vntill the end of September. In this space what number died, it cannot be well accounted, but certaine it is that in London in few dayes 960. gaue vp the ghost: it began in London the 9. of July, and the 12. of July it was most vehement, which was so terrible, that the people being in best health, were sodainly taken, and dead in foure and twenty houres, and twelue, or lesse, for lack of skill in guiding them in their sweat. And it is to be noted, that this mortality fell chyefely or rather on men, and those cheefe of the best age, as betweene 30. and 40. yeres, fewe women, nor children, nor aldermen died thereof. Skipping in the beginning was present death, for if they were suffered to skape but halfe a quarter of an houre, they neuer tooke after, nor had any kind pledge, but when they waxed full into pangues of death. This was a terrible time in London, for many one lost sodainly his seruants, by the sweat, and their money by the proclamation. Seuen honest householders did sup together, and before eight of the clocke in the next morning, fiue of them were dead: they that were taken with full stomackes scaped hardly. This sickenesse followed English men as well within the Realme, as in strange Countries: whereforo this nation was much afeard of it, for the same began to repent and remember God, but as the disease relented, the deuotion decayed. The first weeke died in London 800. persons.

The 10. of October, D. Day Bishop of Chychester, and Doctor Heathe Bishop of Worcester, which had lien long prisoners in the Fleat, were deposed of their Bishoprickes by the Bishop of London in Paules Church, and sent againe to the Fleat.

The 12. of October, at Hampton Court, Lord Marquesse Dorset, was created Duke of Suffolke: the Earle of Warwicke was created Duke of Northumberland: the Earle of Wiltshire was created Marquesse of Winchester: Sir W. Harbert Lord of Cardise, Maister of the horse, was made Lord of Carmarden, and created Earle of Pembroke. The King also made William Cecill his Secretary, M. Iohn Cheeke one of his Schoolemaisters, M. Henry Dudley, M. Henry Neuill Knights.

Dukes and Earles created.

The seuenth of October, Edward Seimer Duke of Somerset, Lord the Gray of Wilton, Sir Ralph Vane, Sir Thomas Palmer, Sir Myles Partridge, Sir Michaell Stanhope, Sir Thomas Arundell Knights, and diuers other Gentlemen, were brought to the Tower of London. Item, the same yeare, the Dutchesse of Somerset was also brought to the Tower. The liberties of the Stillard were seased into the Kings hands for diuers causes forfaited, contrariwise to the enterconrse.

The Queene of Scots comming to London.

The Queene of Scots being lately arrived at Portsmouth, comming out of France, and desiring licence of the king to passe through England into Scotland, was honorably receiued, and conueied towards London: on the second day of November the said Queene came by water from Hampton Court, and landed at Paules wharffe, from whence she rode accompanied with diuers Noble men and Ladies of England beside her owne traine of Scotland to the B. of Londons pallace, where she receiued (presented by the Chamberlaine of London, as a gift of the citty) certaine kindes of victuals for her prouision, as beeues, muttons, veales, swans, and other kind of poultry meates, with bread, swell, wine, hare, war. &c. On the 4. of November the said Queene rode to the White hall at Westminster in her Chariot, accompanied with the Lady Margarite Douglas, the Dutches of Richmond, the Dutches of Suffolke, the Dutches of Northumberland, with diuers noble women of England, and Ladies of Scotland, following after her: the Dukes of Suffolke and Northumberland, and the Lord Treasurer receiuing her, within the Court gate, all the guard standing in each side: and at her entring into the hall, the King stood in the vpper end of the hall, the Earle of Warwick holding the sword afore the King, she kneeling downe, the King tooke her vp and kissed her, and by the hand led her vp in to her chamber of presence, and from thence to the Queenes chamber of presence, where he kissed all the Ladies of Scotland, and so departed for a while. And that day she dined on the Queenes side with the King, the Kings seruice and hers comming both together, the Kings on the right hand, the Queenes on the left hand, thee sitting by the King apart by his cloth of estate: All the great Ladies of England, and the Ladies of Scotland, dined in the Quenes great chamber, all most sumptuously serued. After dinner the King shewed vnto the Queene his galleries, gardens, &c. And about foure of the clock he brought her downe by the hand into the hall where he kissed her, and so she departed to the Bishoppes palace as afore.

The 6. of Nouem. the said Scottish Queene departed toward Scotland, she rode from Pauls through all the high streetes of the City, out at Bishops gate, accompanied with diuers Noblemen and women, to conuey her through the City to Shoreditch Church, the Duke of Northumberland hauing his horsemen standing in cheapside with Iauelins 100. persons, whereof 40. Gentlemen apparelled in blacke Veluet, garded with white, with veluet hats, & white feathers, and chaines of gold about their necks, next them stood 120 horsemen of the Earle of Pembrookes with blacke Iauelins, hats and feathers, next them stood 100. of the Lord treasurers gentlemen and yemen, with Iauelins, with three rankes of horsemen, compassed from the crosse in Cheape, to Birchen lane end: and when the said nobles had brought her to Shoreditch Church they tooke their leaue and departed, the Sheriffs of London had the conduction of her to Waltham townes end, where they left her, and harbengers were sent afore into euery shire to the Borders of Scotland, that euery Sheriffe in euery shire, accompanied with the gentlemen of the countrey, should receiue her, and making prouision for lodging and victualing both for her selfe, family, and horses, till she came to the borders of Scotland at the charges of the shires.

The 30. and last of Nouem. by commandement from the Kings Councell, order was taken in London, that euery householder should lie in his family, and keepe his house, hauing in a readinesse that day a man in harnesse in euery house, but not to goe abroad till they should be called, if need were: and further that on the night following there should be kept a good and substantiall watch of houholders in euery ward which was so done.

And on the next morrow being the first of December, the Duke of Sommerset was had from the Tower of London, by water, and thor London bridge at fiue of the clocke in the morning, and so went to Westminster, where was made ready a great Scaffold in Westminster Hall, and there the said Duke appeared before the Lords and Peeres of the Realme, the Lord William Poulet Marquesse of Winchester and L. high Treasurer of England, that day sitting vnder the cloth of estate as high Steward of England, the inditement of the said Duke being read, he was immediatly arraigned on the same of felony and Treason, and after tryed by his Peeres the nobles there present, which did acquit him of the Treason, but found him guilty of the felony: whereupon after their verdit giuen, her had iudgement to bee had from thence to the place hee came from, and from thence to the place of execution, there to bee hanged till hee were dead: but the people in the hall supposed he had beene clearely quit, when they saw the Axe of the Tower put downe, made such a shrike casting vp of caps, &c. that their cry was heard to the long Acre beyond Charing crosse, which made the Lords astonied. About 5. of the clocke at night the said Duke landed at the Crane in the Vintry, and so was had through Candlewicke Street to the Tower.

The 7. of December, there was a muster before the King in S. Iames field beyond Charing crosse, the King sitting on horseback with his prinie

The 21. of December, the great Seale was taken from the Lord Rich, being then Lord Chancelour of England, by the D. of Northumberland, and the Earle of Pembrooke in the afternone: and on the next morrow the keeping thereof was committed to Doctor Godrike Bishop of Ely, one of the Kings Councell, he was sworne Lord Chancellour on the 22. of Januarie in the Chancery, the Lord Treasurer gaue him his oath.

Duke of Somerset beheaded. The 22. of January, Edward Duke of Somerset was beheaded on the Tower hill. The same morning early, the Constables of euery Ward in London (according to a precept directed from the Councell to the Maior) streightly charged euery Houshold of the same Citie, not to depart any of them out of their houses, before tenne of the clocke of that day, meaning thereby to restraine the great number of the people, that otherwise were like to haue beene at the said execution: notwithstanding by seuen a clocke the Tower hill was couered with a great multitude, repairing from all parts of the Citie, as well as out of the Suburbes, and before 8. of the clocke the Duke was brought to the scaffold enclosed with the Kings Guard, the Sheriffes Officers, the Wardens of the tower, and other with Halbards, the Duke being ready to haue been executed, suddenly the people were driuen into a great feare, sets of none knowing the cause: wherefore I thinke it good to write what I saw concerning that matter.

Great feare with small cause.

The people of a certaine Hamlet, which were warned to be there by seuen of the clocke, to giue their attendance on the Lieutenant, now came through the Posterne, and perceiuing the Duke to be already on the scaffold, the foremost began to run, crying to their fellowes to follow fast after: which inconuenelle of these men being weaponed with Bils and Halbards thus running, caused the people which first saw them, to thinke some power had come to haue rescued the Duke from execution, and therefore to cry away, away, whereupon the people ran some one way some another, many fell into the Tower ditch, and they which tarried thought some pardon had beene brought, some said it thundered, some that a great rumbling was in the earth vnder them, some that the ground mooued, but there was no such matter, more than the trampling of their feete, which made some noyle.

The 17. of February, on which day was receiued the bookes of the reliefe of all the Wards of London towards the new Hospitals by the Kings Commissioners. The Councell dined at M. Cowpers the Sheriffe, and after dinner M. Tho. Courtes Alderman, came thither to speake with the Lord Chancellour for a matter he had depending afore him in the Chancerie: but for his misdemeanour in words and gestes to the Lord Chancelour at that time, the said M. Courteys was committed to Ward in the Fleete.

An. Reg. 6. Sir Ralph a Vane & other executed. The 26. of February, sir Ralph a Vane and sir Miles Partridge were hanged on the Tower hill, sir Michaell Stanhope with sir Thomas Arundell, were beheaded there: all which foure persons tooke on their death, that they neuer offended against the Kings Maiestie, nor against any of his Councell.

House blowen vp with gunpowder. The last of April, through negligence of the Gunpowder-makers, a certaine house neere to the Tower of London, with their last of powder, was blowne vp and burnt, the Gunpowder-makers being 15. in number, were all slaine.

Muster of horsemen. The 16. of May, was a goodly muster of horsemen made before the King in the Parke of Greenwich.

Under the Kings banner, his band of Pentioners, in number 150. euery Pentioner two great horses and a gelding, the Lord Bray their Lieutenant.

The Lord Marquesse of Winchester high Treasurer, under his banner the Faulcon one hundred men.

The Duke of Northumberland, great Master of the Kings houshold, under the white Lyon and the ragged staffe fifty.

The Duke of Suffolke, under the Unicorne in the starre, an hundred and ten.

The Earle of Bedford, Lord prinie Seale vnder the Goate, an hundred.

The Marques of Northhamton high Chamberlaine, vnder the Mayden-head, an hundred.

The Earle of Warwick Master of the kings horses, vnder the white Lyon fifty.

The Earle of Huntington vnder his banner fifty.

The Earle of Rutland vnder the Peacocke, fifty.

The Earle of Pembrooke vnder the greene Dragon, fifty.

The Lord Darcie vnder the Paydens body, fifty.

The Lord Cobham vnder the Sariyens head, fifty.

The Lord Clinton Lord Admirall vnder the Anchor, fifty.

The Lord Warden of the fiue Ports, vnder the Rose in the sunne beames, an hundred.

To Greene, Garter and George taken from the Lord Paget by the Kings appointment.

In the moneth of Aprill before S. Georges day, Garter the King of Armes was sent by the Kings Maiestie, to the Lord Paget, prisoner in the Tower of London, to fet and take from him the said Lord Paget the Garter & George, appertaining to the order of the Garter, which Garter and George, the said King at Armes called Garter, tooke from the said Lord Paget in such order, as the same was deliuered to him when he was made Knight of the same Order. And the said Lord Paget was well content (as it seemed) to part therewith, saying it was the Kings pleasure it should be so. The King sent the same Garter and George to the Earle of Warwick, sonne and heire to the Duke of Northumberland, who was made Knight of the said Order, in roome and place of the other.

Gray Friers in London an Hospitall.

The 26. of July, began the preparing of the Gray Friers house in London for the poore fatherlesse children: and also in the latter end of the same moneth, begun the repairing of Saint Thomas Hospitall in Southwarke, for poore impotent and lame persons.

A monster.

The third of August, at Stoddleton 11. miles from Orford, a woman brought forth a childe, which had two perfect bodies from the nauell vpward, and were so ioyned together at the nauell, that when they were laid in length, the one head and body was Eastward, and the other West: the legges for both the bodies grew out at the midst where the bodies ioyned, and had but one vsue for the exercments of both bodies: they lined eightene dayes, and were women children.

Great fishes.

The 8. of August, were taken at Quinborough three great fishes called Dolphins, and the whole following at Blackwall, were fiue more taken, and brought to London, the least of them was more than two horse.

This moneth of August, began the great prouision for the poore in London, towards the which euery man was contributory, and gaue certaine money in hand, and couenanted to giue a certaine weekely.

Great fishes taken.

The 7. of October, were three great fishes called Whirlepooles taken at Grauesend, which were drawne vp to the bridge at Westminster.

A presse by the Merchant aduenturers.

In this moneth of October, the King demanded of the Merchant-Aduenturers by way of presse of euery Broad-cloth then Shipped to Bawmes Part, twenty shillings sterling to be paid at Antwarp for certaine debt there, and they to haue the Kings hand for the repayment thereof, which did at that time amount to more than 48000. pound.

Sergeants Feast.

The 17. of October, the Sergeants Feast was kept at Graues Inne by Oldborne, Master Robert Brooke Recorder of London, being the Principall of the new Sergeants, and fiue more besides him: the Lord Maior and Aldermen being bidden to the said Feast, rode from the Lord Maiors house vp Friday Streete through Cheape, and out at Newgate all in their scarlet Gownes to the said Graues Inne.

Booke of Common Prayer.

The first of November, being the feast of all Saints, the new Seruice Booke called Of common Prayer, began in Paules Church, and the like through the whole Cittie, the Bishop of London Doctor Ridley executing the seruice in Paules Church in the forenoone in his rochet onely, without coape or vestment preached in the quier: and at afternoone hee preached at Pauls Crosse, the Lord Maior, Aldermen, and Crafts in their best Liueries being present: which Sermon tending to the setting forth the said late made Booke of Common Prayer, continued till almost fiue of the clocke at night, so that the Maior, Aldermen, and Companies, entred not into Paules Church as had beene accustomed, but departed home by Torchlight. By this Booke of Common Prayer, all coapes and vestments were forbidden through England, and Prebends of Paules left off their Hoods, the Bishops left their crosses, &c. as by an act of Parliament more at large is set out.

After the Feast of All Saints, the vpper quire in Saint Paules Church in London, where the high Altar stoode, was broken downe, and all the quire thereabout: and the Table of the Communion was set in the lower where the Priests sung.

First children in Christs Hospitall.

The 23. of November, the children were taken into the Hospitall at the Gray Friers called Christs Hospitall, to the number of almost foure hundred. And also sicke and poore people into the Hospitall of Saint Thomas in Southwarke, in which two places, the children and poore people should haue meat, drinke, lodging, and cloath, of the almes of the Citie.

First shrife of the children in Christs Hospitall.

The 3. of December, the Earle of Arundell was dispatched of imprisonment out of the Tower of London, and went from thence to his place by Strand. On Christmasse day in the afternoone, when the Lord Maior & Aldermen rode to Paules, all the children of Christs Hospitall, stood in aray from Saint Laurence lane in Cheape towards Paules, all in one Liuory of russet cotton, the men children with red Caps, the women children Kerchifes on their heads, all the Maisters of the Hospitall foremost: next them the Physitians and foure Surgeons, and betweene euery twenty children one woman Keeper, which children were in number 340.

The King kept his Christmasse with open houshold at Greenwich, George Ferrers Seruant of Lincolnes Inne, being Lord of the merry disports all the 12. dayes, who so pleasantly and wisely behaued himselfe, that the King had great delight in his pastimes.

The Shreifs Lord of this Feast.

On Monday the fourth of January, the said Lord of merry disports came by water to London, and landed at the Tower-Wharfe, entered the Tower, and then rode through Tower-streete, where hee was receiued by Sergeant Vawce, Lord of Misrule to John Maynard, one of the Shreifes of London, and so conducted through the Citie with a great company of young Lords and Gentlemen, to the house of Sir George Barne Lord Maior, where he with the chiefe of his company dined, & after had a great banquet, and at his departure, the L. Maior gaue him a standing Cup, with a couer of siluer and guilt, of the value of ten pound for a reward, and also set a Hogshead of Wine, and a Barrell of Beere at his gate, for his traine that followed him, the residue of his Gentlemen and seruants dined at other Aldermens houses, and with the Shreifes, and so departed to the Tower Wharfe againe, and to the Court by water, to the great commendation of the Maior and Aldermen, and highly accepted of the King and Councell.

Bridewell giuen to the City of London.

An. Reg. 7.

In the moneth of January, the King fell sick of a Cough at White-hall, which grieuously encreased, and at the last, ended in a consumption of the lights.

Parliament.

The first of March, began a Parliament at Westminster, and all the Lords spirituall and temporall, assembled that day in the White Hall in their Robes, where a Sermon was preached in the Kings Chappel by Doctor Ridley, Bishop of London, and his Paselme with diuers Lords receiued the Communion. Which being done, the King with the Lords in order, went into the Kings great Chamber on the Kings side, which that day was prepared for the Lords house: the King sitting vnder his cloath of Estate, and all the Lords in their degrees, the Bishop of Ely Doctor Goodrike Lord Chancellour, made a proposition for the King: which being ended, the Lords departed. This was done, because the King was sickly.

The morrow after, the Burgesses sate in the common house at Westminster, and chose for their speaker Master Diar one of the late made Sergeants of the Law.

The 31. of March being good Friday, the Parliament brake vp, and was clearely dissolued at the Kings Pallace of White-Hall, at seuen of the clocke at night.

First shrife of the children in Christs Hospitall in Spittall.

The 3. of Aprill, being Monday after Easter day, the children of Christes Hospitall in London came from thence through the Citie to the Sermon kept at S. Mary Spittle, all cloathed in plonket coates and red Caps and the mayden children in the same Liuory, with Kerchifes on their heads, all which with their Patrones and other Gouernours, were there placed on a scaffold of 8. stages, and there sate the same time, which was a goodly shew.

The tenth of Aprill, the Lord Maior of London was sent for to the Court at White-hall, and there at that time the Kings Maiestie gaue to him, to the Communalty, and Citizens, for to be a Worke-house for the poore and idle persons of the Citie of London, his place of Bridewell, and seuen hundred marke land of the Sauoy rents, with all the beds, bedding, and other furniture of the Hospitall of the Sauoy, towards the maintenance of the saide Worke-house of Bridewell, and the Hospitall of S. Thomas in Southwarke. King Edward confirmed the said Gift, by his Charter dated the 26. of June next following.

Iewels and Church plate called into the Kings hands.

The 11. of Aprill, the Lord Maior was presented to the King in his Pallace of White-hall at Westminster, and was made Knight by his Maiestie, and the same day the King removed in the afternoone to Greenwich.

In this moneth of Aprill and in May, Commissioners were directed through England, for all the Church goods remaining in Cathedrall and Parish Churches, that is to say, Iewels of gold and siluer, croslets, candlesticks, censors, chalices, and all other such like, with their readdy money, to be deliuered to the Maister of the Kings Iewels in the Tower of London, all Coapes and Vestments of cloath of gold, cloath of Tissue, and siluer, to the Maister of the Kings Wardrobe in London, the other Coapes, Vestments, and ornaments to be sold, and the money to be deliuered to the Kings Treasurer sir Edmund Peckham Knight, referring to euery Church one Chalice or Cup, with table-clothes for the Communion boord, at the discretion of the Commissioners, which were for London the Lord Maior, the Bishop, the Lord chiefe Iustice, with other.

Voyage to Muscouy.

The 20. of May, by the encouragement of one Sebastion Cabot, three great Shippes well furnished, were set forth for the aduenture of the vnknowne voyage to Muscouia, and other East parts by the North Seas, diuers Merchants, and other being free of that voyage, payed towards the charges of the same fine and twenty pounds a peece. Sir George Barnes and Sir William Garrard being the principall doers therein.

About the same time, two other Ships were sent to seeke aduentures Southwards.

There note-worthy ge-stes at Durham place.

Whiles King Edward lay dangerously sick, Lord Guilford, the Duke of Northumberlands fourth sonne, married Lady Iane the Duke of Suffolkes daughter, whose mother being then aliue, was daughter to Mary King Henries sister, which was first married to the French King, and after to Charles Duke of Suffolke. Also the Earle of Pembrokes eldest son married Lady Katherine, the Dukes second daughter. And Martin Keyes Gentleman Poyter, married Mary the third daughter of the Duke of Suffolke. And the Earle of Huntingtons son called L. Hastings, married Katherine youngest daughter to the Duke of Northumberland.

King Edward deceased.

K. Edward being about the age of 16. yeares, ended his life at Greenwich, in the 6. of July, when he had raigned fiue yeares, fiue moneths, and odde dayes, & was buried at Westminster. He was in this his youth a Prince of such towardnesse in vertue, learning, and all godly gifts, as seldome hath beene seene the like.

K. Edwards death opened.

The 8. of July, the Lord Maior of London was sent for to the Court then at Greenewich, to bring with them sixe Aldermen, as many Merchants of the Staple, and as many Merchant Aduenturers, into whom by the Councell was secretly declared the death of King Edward, and also how hee did ordaine for the succession of the Crowne by his Letters Patents, to the which they were sworne, and charged to keepe it secret.

Lady Iane proclaimed Quene.

The 10. of July, in the afternoone about 3. of the clocke, Lady Iane daughter to Francis Dutchelle of Suffolke (which Lady Iane was married to the Lord Gilford Dudley, fourth sonne to the Duke of Northumberland) was conuayed by water to the Tower of London, and there receiued as Quene. After fiue of the clocke the same afternoone, was proclamation made of the death of King Edward the sixt, and how hee had ordained by his letters Pattents, bearing date the 21. of June last past, that the Lady Iane (as is afore said) sheuld be heire to the crowne of England, and the heire males of her body, &c.

Gilbert Pot punished in Cheape.

The 11. of July, Gilbert Pot drawer to Ninion Saunders Vintner, dwelling at S. Iohns head within Ludgate, who was accused by the said Saunders his Master, was set on the Pillory in Cheape with both his eares nailed, and cleane cut off for words speaking at the time of the proclamation of Lady Iane, at which execution was a Trumpet blowne, and a Herault in his coate of Armes read his offence, in presence of William Garrard, one of the Sheriffes of London.

Men drowned at London bridge.

About 5. of the clocke the same day in the afternoone, Ninion Saunders Master to the said Gilbert Pot and Iohn Owen a Gunmaker, both Gunners of the Tower, comming from the Tower of London by water in a Whirry, and shooting London bridge towards the Black Friers, were drowned at S. Mary Lock, and the Whirry men saued by their Oyes.

Lady Mary proclaimed Quene at Norwich.

The 12. of July, the Lady Mary sent to Norwich to be proclaimed there, which they refused to doe, for that they were not certaine of the Kings death: but on the next day after, they did not onely proclaime her, but also sent her men and Munition to ayde her.

The same 12. of July, word was brought to the Councell, being then in the Tower with the Lady Iane, that the Lady Mary, eldest daughter to King Henry the eight, was at Kenninghall Castle in Norfolke, and with her the Earle of Bath, Sir Thomas Wharton, sonne to the Lord Wharton, Sir Iohn Mordant, sonne to the Lord Mordant, Sir William Drury, Sir Io. Shelton, Sir Henry Bedingfield, M. Henry Iermingham, Master Iohn Sulierde, M. Richard Freston, Master Sargeant Morgan, M. Clement Higham of Lincolnes Inne, and diuers others, and also that the Earle of Suffer, and Master Henry Ratcliffe his Sonne were comming towards her: whereupon by speedy Councell it was there concluded, that the Duke of Suffolk with certaine other Noble men, should goe towards the Lady Mary, to fetch her vp to the Tower: this was first determined: but by night of the same day, the said voyage of the Duke of Suffolke, was cleane dissolued by the speciall meanes of the Lady Iane his daughter, who taking the matter heauily, with weeping teares made request to the whole Councell, that her Father might tarry at home in her company: whereupon the Councell perswaded with the Duke of Northumberland, to take that voyage vpon him, saying, that no man was so fit therefore, because that he had atchieued the victory in Norfolke once already, and was therefore to feared, that none durst once lift vp their weapon against him: besides that, he was the best man of warre in the Realme, as well for the ordering of his Campes and Souldiers both in battell and in their Tents, as also by experience, knowledge, and wisedome, he could animate his Army with witty perswasions, and also pacifie and slay his enemies pride with his stout courage, or else to discomfite them if neede were, from their enterprise. Finally, said they, this is the shoot and long, the Quene will in no wise graunt, that her Father shall take it vpon him: wherefore (quoth they) we thinke it good, if it may please your Grace, it lyeth in you to remedy the matter. Well (quoth the Duke then) since ye thinke it good, I and mine will goe, not doubting of your fidelity to the Quenes Maiestie, which I leaue in your custodie: so that night hee sent for both Lords, Knights, and other that should goe with him, and caused all things to be prepared accordingly: then went the Councell in to the Lady Iane, & told her of her conclusion, who humbly thanked the Duke for referring her Father at home, and beseeched him to vse his diligence, whereto he answered, that he would doe what in him lay.

Preparation to goe against Lady Mary.

The morrow following, great preparation was made, the Duke early in the morning called for his owne harnesse, and sain it made ready at Durham place, where hee appointed all his retinue to meete.

The same day Carts were laden with Munition and Artillery, and field Peeces were set forward.

The same forenoone the Duke moued estsones the Councell to send their powers after him, as it was before determined, the same to meete with him at New Market, and they promised they would. Hee said further to some of them: My Lords, I and these other Noble personages, with the whole Army that now goe forth, as well for the behalfe of you and yours, as for the establishing of the Quenes Highnesse, shall not onely aduenture our bodies and liues amongst the bloudy strokes and cruell assaults of our aduersaries in the open fields, but also we doe leaue the conseruation of our selues, children, and families at home here with you, as altogether committed to your truth and fidelities, whom, if wee thought ye would through malice, conspiracie, or discention leaue us your friends in the hiers and betray vs, we could as well sundry wayes forsee and prouide for our owne safegards, as any of you, by betraying vs, can doe for yours. But now vpon the onely trust and faithfulnesse of your Honours, whereof we thinke our selues most assured, we doe hazard our liues, which trust and promise if ye shall violate, hoping thereby of life and promotion, yet shall not God count you innocent of our bloods, neither acquite you of the sacred and holy oath of allegeience made fro ly by you to this vertuous Lady the Quenes Highnesse, who by your and our enticement, is rather of force placed ced therein, than by her owne seeking and request. Consider also, that Gods cause, which is the preferment of his word, and feare of Papists entrance, hath beene (as ye haue here before alwayes said) the originall ground whereupon ye erien at the first motion graunted your good wils and consents thereunto, as by your hands writing appeareth: and thinke not the contrary, but if ye meane deceite, though not forthwith, yet hereafter God will reuenge the same.

I can say no more, but in this troublesome time with you to vse constant hearts, abandoning all malice, enuie, and priuate affections: and therewithall the first course for the Lords came vp, whereforee the Duke shut vp his talke with these words; I haue not spoken to you in this sort vpon any mistrust I haue of your truthes, of which alwayes I haue euer hitherto conceiued a trusty confidence, but I haue put you in remembrance thereof, what chance of variance so euer might grow amongst you in mine absence, and this I pray you, with me not woorse good speede in this iourney, than ye would haue to your selues. My Lord, saith one of them, if ye mistrust any of us in this matter, your Grace is farre deceiued, for which of us can wash his hands cleane thereof? and if we should shunke from you as from one that were culpable, which of us can excuse himselfe to be guiltlesse? therefore herein your doubt is too farre cast, I pray God it be (quoth the Duke) let us goe to dinner: and so they sate downe. After dinner the Duke went in to the Quene, where his Commission was by that time sealed, for his Lieutenantship of the Army, and then tooke his leaue of her, and so did certaine other Lords also.

Then as the Duke came through the Councell chamber, he tooke his leaue of the Earle of Arundel, who prayed God to be with his Grace, saying, hee was sorie it was not his chance to goe with him, and beare him company, in whose presence hee could finde in his heart to spend his bloud, euen at his feete: then the Earle of Arundell tooke Thomas Louell the Dukes boy by the hand, and said, Farewell gentle Thomas with all my heart. Then the Duke, with the Lord Marquesse of Northampton, the L. Grey, and diuers other, tooke their barge, and went to Durham place, and to White hall, where that night they mustered their men: and the next day in the morning, the Duke departed with the number of 600. men, or there about. And as they rode through Shoreditch, saith the Duke to the Lord Grey, the people preste to se vs, but not one saith God speede vs.

The same day sir Iohn Gates and other went out after the Duke.

By this time word was brought to the Tower, that the Lady Mary was fled to Framlingham Castle in Suffolke; where the people of the Countrey almost wholy resorted to her: and that William Lord Windsor, sir Edward Hastings, Sir Edm. Peecham with others, were proclaiming Quene Mary in Buckinghamshire, sir Io. Williams in Oxfordshire, &c.

About this time, fiue ships well manned, that were appointed to lye before Parmouth, and to haue taken the Lady Mary if thee had fled that way, were by force of weather driuen into the Hauen, where one Master Iermingham was ruling power on the Lady Maries behalfe, who hearing thereof, came thither, whereupon the Captaines tooke a Boat and went to the Ships, but the Saylers and Souldiers asked Master Iermingham what he would haue, and wyether he would haue their Captaines or no? and hee said yea: marry said they, ye shall haue them, or we will throw them into the bottome of the Sea, but the Captaines said forthwith, that they would serue Quene Mary willingly, and so brought forth their men, and conueyed with them their great Ordnance: Of the comming of these Ships the Lady Mary was wonderfull ioyous, and afterward doubted little the Dukes puissance: but when newes thereof was brought to the Tower, each man there began to draw backward, and ouer that, word of a greater mischefe was brought to the Tower, that is to say, that the Noble-mens Tenants refused to serue their Lords against Quene Mary.

The Duke thought long for his succours, and wrote somewhat sharply to the Councell at the Tower in that behalfe, as well for lack of men as of Munition, but a slender answere had hee againe: And from that time forward certaine of the Councell, to wit, the Earle of Pembrooke, and Sir Thomas Cheney Lord Warden, and other sought to get out of the Tower to consult in London, but could not yet.

I god thats seruice.

The 16. of July, being Sunday, D. Ridley Bishop of London, by commandement of the Councell preached at Paules Crosse, where he vehemently perswaded the people in the title of the Lady Iane, late proclaimed Quene, and inueyed earnestly against the title of Lady Mary, and the Lady Elizabeth her sister.

The 17. of July, the Lord Treasurer was gone out of the Tower to his house in London at night, and forthwith about 7. of the clock the gates of the Tower vpon a sodaine were shut vp, and the Keyes borne vp to the Lady Iane, which was for feare of some packing in the Lord Treasurer, but hee was fetched againe to the Tower, about 12. of the clock in the night.

The 18. day, the Duke perceiuing that the succours promised came not to him, and also receiuing from some of the Councell letters of discomfort, he returned from Bury back againe to Cambridge.

The Councell assembled at Barnards Castle.

The 19. of July, the Councell, partly moued with the right of the Lady Maries cause, partly considering, that the most of the Realme was wholy bent on her side, changed their minds, and assembled themselues at Baynards Castle, where they communed with the Earle of Pembroke, and the Earle of Shrewsbury, with sir Iohn Mason, Clearke of the Councell, spake to the Lord Maior secretly, that he with the Sheriffes, and such other of the Aldermen, with the Recorder, as he thought best, to meete him and the Councell at Baynards Castle, within lesse than an houre, which they did: where the Councell declared to the Lord Maior and his brethren.

then, that he and they must ride with them into Cheape to proclaime a new Queene, which was the Lady Maries grace, daughter to King Henry the eight; and they riding from thence to Paules Churchyard, and into Cheape, the people were so assembled, that the Lords could not ride by them to the Croſſe, where Maſter Garter King at Armes in his rich Coate of Armes, with a Trumpet being ready, the Trumpet was ſounded, and then they proclaimed the Lady Mary, daughter to King Henry the eight, and Queene Katherin, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the Faith, &c. Which Proclamation ended, the Lord Maior and all the Councell rode to Paules Church, where the Canticle of Te Deum was ſung. And the ſame night the Earle of Arundell, and the Lord Paget rode in poſt to Queene Mary with 30. horſe with them.

The 20. of July, Iohn Duke of Northumberland, being then in Cambridge, and having ſure knowledge, that the Lady Mary was by the Nobility, and others of the Councell proclaimed at London proclaimed Queene; about nine of the clocke the ſame night, he with ſuch other of the Nobility as were in his company, came to the higheſt Croſſe of the Towne, and calling for an Herauld, himſelfe proclaimed Queene Mary, and throwe other hee there up his owne Cap, and William an Heare after hee had Letters from the Councell, by the hands of Richard Rofe Herauld: Dated at Weſtminſter the 20. of June in forme following.

In the name of our Soveraigne Lady Mary the Queene, ſo be declared to the Duke of Northumberland, and all other of his bands of what degree ſo euer they be.

We ſhall command a charge in the Queenes Highneſſe name, the ſaid Duke to diſarme himſelfe, and to cauſe all his men of warre: and to forbeare any part of his Armes to doe any villany, or any thing contrary to the peace: and himſelfe to forbeare his coming to this Citie, until the Queenes pleaſure be expreſſedly declared unto him. And if he will ſhew himſelfe like a true ſubiect, we will then continue as we have begun, as humble ſuters to our Soveraigne Lady the Queenes Highneſſe for him and his, and for our ſelues. And if he doe not, we will not faile to ſpend our lives in ſubduing him and his.

Item, we ſhall declare the like matter to the Marqueſſe of Northampton, and all other Noble men and Gentlemen, and to all men of warre in his with any of them.

Item, we ſhall in all places where we come, notifie it: If the Duke of Northumberland doe not ſubmit himſelfe to the Queenes Highneſſe, Queene Mary, he ſhall be accepted as a traytor. And all wee of the Nobility that were Counſellours to the late King, will to the vttermoſt portion, perſecute him and his to their vtter confuſion. Thomas Cant. Archbiſhop, Thomas Elie Chancellor, Will. Winchester Marqueſſe, I. Bedford Earle, H. Suffolke Duke, F. Shrewſbury Earle, W. Penbrough Earle, Thomas Darcy Lord Chamberlain, R. Cotton, W. Peter Secretary, W. Cecill ſecond Secretary, I. C. I. Baker Chancellour of the Tenths, I. Maſon Maſter of Requeſts, R. Bowes Maſter of the Rolls.

The rumour of theſe Letters was no ſooner abroad, but every man departed. And ſhortly after, the Duke was arreſted in the Kings Colledge by one Maſter Sleggs, Sergeant at armes. At the laſt Letters were brought from the Councell at London, that all men ſhould gee each his way: Whereupon the Duke ſaid to them that kept him, Yee doe me wrong to withdraw my liberty, ſee not the Councels Letters with out exception, that all men ſhould gee whither they would? At which words, they that kept him and the other Noble men, ſet them at liberty, and ſo continued they for that night. Inſomuch, that the Earle of Warwicke was ready in the morning to have rode away, but then came the Earle of Arundell from the Queene to the Duke into his Chamber, who went out to make him, and as ſoone as hee ſaw the Earle of Arundell, he fell on his knees, and deſired him to be good to him, for the loue of God; conſider (ſaith he) I have done nothing but by the conſents of you and all the whole Councell: My Lord (quoth the Earle of Arundell) I am ſent hither by the Queenes Maieſty, and in her name I doe arreſt you: and I obey it my Lord (quoth he) I beſeech you my Lord of Arundell (quoth the Duke) vſe mercy towards me, knowing the caſe as it is: my Lord (quoth the Earle) ye ſhould have ſought for mercy ſooner, I muſt doe according to my commandement, and therewith he committed the charge of him, and of other to the Guard and Gentlemen that ſtood by.

The 25. of July, the Duke with other were brought up to the Tower of London, under the conduct of Henry Earle of Arundell, with a great number of light Horſemen, Bowes and Speares, they came into London at Biſhops gate, all the ſtreetes as hee paſſed by ſtanding with men, in harneſſe alone every mans doore, till he came to the Tower-Wharfe: the priſoners names that came in at that time, were the Duke of Northumberland, the Earle of Warwicke, the Earle of Huntington, the Lord Haſtings, Lord Ambroſe Dudley, Lord Henry Dudley, Sir Andrew Dudley, Sir Iohn Gates, Henry Gates, Sir Thomas Palmer, Doctor Sands, but when they came to the Tower, the Earle of Arundell diſcharged the Lord Haſtings, and had him alway with him.

On the five and twentieth, the Lord Marqueſſe of Northampton, the Biſhop of London, the Lord Robert Dudley, and Sir Robert Corbet were brought from the Queenes Campe into the Tower. And thus was the matter ended without bloudſhed, which men feared would have brought the death of many thouſands.

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF QVEENE MARY.

An. Reg. 1.

MARY, the eldeſt daughter of King Henry the eight, began her raigne the firſt of July, in the yeare 1553. when ſhe diſſolued her Camp at Framingham, which was to the number of 13000. men, the Earle of Suſſex being Lieutenant of the Armie: victualls were of ſuch plenty, that a barrell of Beare was ſold for five pence with the caske, and foure great loaues of bread for a penny.

The 27. of July, Sir Roger Cholmeley Lord chiefe Iuſtice of the Kings Bench, Sir Edmond Mountague Lord chiefe Iuſtice of the common pleas, were ſent to the Tower, on the next morrow Henry Duke of Suffolke, and Sir Iohn Cheek, were had to the Tower.

On the 30. of July, the Lady Elizabeth ſiſter to the Queene, rode from her place at Strand (where ſhee had lien the night before) through the Citie of London, out of Aldgate toward the Queene, accompanied with 1000. Horſe, of Knights, Ladies, Gentlemen, and their ſeruants.

On the 31. of July, the Duke of Suffolke was diſcharged out of the Tower, by the Earle of Arundell, and had the Queenes pardon.

Queene Mary came from Wanſtead in Eſſex, to London on the third of Auguſt, being brought in with her Nobles very honourably, and ſtrongly, the number of velvet coates that did ride before her, as well ſtrangers as others were 740. and the number of Ladies and Gentlewomen that followed, was 180. The Earle of Arundell riding next before her, bare a ſword in his hand, and Sir Anthony Browne did beare vp her traine. The Lady Elizabeth her ſiſter followed her next, and after her the Lord Marqueſſe of Excesters wife. The Guard followed the Ladies, & after them Northamptonſhire and Deſonſhire men, and then Buckinghamſhire men, and after them the Lords ſeruants: the whole number of horſemen were eſteemed to be about 1000. The Queene ſtayed without Aldgate, before the ſtage, whereon the poore children of the Hoſpital were placed, and one of them made to her an Oration. Sir George Barnes then Lord Maior, with the Aldermen, brought her into the Citie, the Lord Maior riding next to the Earle of Arundell, with a Scepter or Mace in his hand. A great peale of Ordnance was ſhot off at the Tower of London, when the Queene entered the Citie through Aldgate, vp to Leaden-hall then downe Grace ſtreete, Fanchurch ſtreete, Marke lane, Tower ſtreete, and ſo into the Tower, where Thomas Duke of Norfolke, Doctor Gardener late Biſhop of Winchester, Edward Courtney ſonne and heire to Henry Marqueſſe of Excester, the Dutcheſſe of Somerſet, priſoners in the Tower, kneeling on the hill within the ſame Tower, ſaluted her Grace, and ſhe came to them and kiſſed them, and ſaid, theſe be my priſoners. On the next morrow, Edward Courtney was made Marqueſſe of Excester, and the other forenamed priſoners pardoned, and diſcharged in the Queenes Chamber.

The 5. of Auguſt, Edmond Bonner late Biſhop of London, priſoner in the Marſhalſea, and Cuthert Tonſtall the olde Biſhop of Durham priſoner in the Kings bench, had their pardons, and were reſtored to their Seas. Shortly after all the Biſhops which had been depriued in the time of King Edward the firſt, were reſtored to their Biſhopricks, and the other which were placed in King Edwards time, remoued: alſo all beneficed men that were married, or ſhould not forſake their opinion, were put out of their liuings, and other knowne to be of the contrary part, were ſet in the ſame, eſpecially if any were alme, that had of late bene put out of the ſame, as Biſhop Day of Chicheſter, Heath of Worceſter, &c. And the ſame day there was eight pence giuen to euery poore Houſholder throughout London.

Biſhops reſtored, and other diſplaced.

Eight penny dole to all comers.

Sir Nicholas Hare Maſter of the Rols, was made keeper of the great Seale, for the ſpace of a fortnight or there about.

The ninth of Auguſt in the afternoone, the Queene held an Obſequie in the Tower for King Edward, the Corpſe being ſung in Latine, and on the morrow a Maſſe of Requiem, where at the Queene with her Ladies offered. The ſame day the corpes of K. Edward was buried at Weſtminſter, the Lord Treaſurer, the Earle of Pembroke, and the Earle of Shrewſbury being cheefe mourners, with diuers other Noble men and other. Doctor Day Biſhop of Chicheſter, preached at the ſaid burriall, and all the Seruice with a Communion was in Engliſh.

Burriall of King Edward.

The 11. of Auguſt, certaine Gentlemen minding to paſſe vnder London Bridge in a Wherrie, were there ouerturned, and ſeauen of them drowned, one was Maſter T. Bridges ſonne.

When drowned at London bridge.

The 13. of Auguſt, Maſter Bourne a Canon of of Paules preaching at Paules Crosse, not onely prayed for the dead, but also declared, that Doctor Bonner Bishop of London (late restored, and there in presence) for a Sermon by him made in the same place, upon the same Gospell, was about foure yeres since, uniustly cast into the vile prison of the Marshalsea, and there kept during the raigne of King Edward: which saying so offended some of the audience, that they breaking silence, said the Bishop had preached abomination, other some cried (meaning of the Preacher) pull him out, pull him out; and some being neere the Pulpit, began to clime: wherewith the Preacher stepped back, and one Master Bradford, a Preacher of King Edwards time, stepped into his place, and gently perswaded the audience to quietnesse and obedience, alleadging S. Paul to the Romanes: Let every soule submit himselfe to the authoritie of the higher powers, &c. Neuerthelesse, Master Bourne standing by Master Bradford, one threw a dagger at him, which hit a side post of the Pulpit, and rebounded backe againe a great way, whereupon M. Bradford take off his speach, and forced himselfe with the helpe of I. Rogers another Preacher, to convay M. Bourne out of the audience, which with great labour they brought into Pauls Scholle.

A dagger throwne at the Preacher.

The 18. of August, Iohn Dudley Duke of Northumberland, William Parre Marquesse of Northampton, and Iohn Carle of Warwicke some and heire to the Duke, were arraigned at Westminster hall, before Thomas Duke of Norfolke, high Steward of England, where the Duke of Northumberland with great reuerence towards the Iudges, protested his faith and allegeance to the Queene, whom hee confessed grieuously to haue offended, and said, that he meant not to speake any thing in defence of his fact, but requested to vnderstand the opinion of the Court in two points. First, whether a man doing any act by authority of the Queenes Councell, and by warrant of the great Seale of England, and doing nothing without the same, might be charged with treason for any thing which hee might doe by warrant thereof. Secondly, whether any such persons as were equally culpable in that crime, and those, by whose letters and commandements he was directed in all his doings, might be his Iudges, or passe vpon his tryall as his Peeres.

Duke of Northumberland, and other arraigned.

Whereunto was answered, that as concerning the first, the great Seale (which hee layd for his warrant) was not the Seale of the lawfull Queene of the Realme, nor passed by authority, but the Seale of an vsurper, and therefore could be no warrant to him. As to the second, it was alledged, that if any were as deepely to be touched in the case as himselfe, yet so long as no attaindor were of record against them, they were neuerthelesse persons able in law to passe vpon any triall, and not to be challenged therefore, but at the Princes pleasure. After which answer, the Duke vsed few words, but confessed the inditement, by whose example the other prisoners arraigned with him did the like, and thereupon had iudgement.

And when iudgement was giuen, the Duke sayd, I beseech you my Lords, all to bee humble suters to the Queenes Maiestie, and to grant mee foure requests, which are these. First, that I may haue that death which Noblemen heene had in times past, and not the other. Secondly that her Maiestie will bee gracious to my children, which may hereafter doe good seruice, considering that they went by my commandement, who am their Father, and not of their owne free willes. Thirdly, that I may haue appointed to mee some learned man for the instruction and quiet of my conference. And fourthly, that thee will send two of the councell, to commune with me, to whom I will declare such matters as shall be expedient for her and the Common weale: and thus I beseech you all to pray for me.

On the 19. of August, were arraigned at Westminster, Sir Iohn Gates, Sir Hen. Gates, Sir Andrew Dudley, and Sir Thomas Palmer, where without any Quest they pleaded guilty and submitted themselues to the Queenes mercy, and so had iudgement.

The twentieth of August, Doctor Watson Chaplaine to the Bishop of Winchester Preached at Paules Crosse, by the Queenes appoyntment, and for feare of the like tumult, as had beene the Sunday last past, certaine Lords of the Councell repaired to the Sermon, as the Lord Treasurer, the Lord Privy Seale, the Earle of Bedford, the Earle of Pembroke, the Lord Wentworth, the Lord Rich, and sir Henry Gerningham Captaine of the guard, with two hundred of the Guard, which stood about the Preacher with halberts. Also the Maior had warned the companies of the City to bee present in their liueries, which was well accepted of the Queenes Councell, and the Sermon was quietly ended.

Preacher of Paules Crosse guarded.

The twenty two of August, sir Iohn Gage Lieutenant of the Tower, deliuered to the Sheriffs of London, by Indenture these prisoners following: first Sir Iohn Gates was brought forth, and set at the Garden gate, then the Duke of Northumberland, was likewise brought forth, and Sir Thomas Palmer after him: When the Duke and sir Iohn Gates met, Sir Iohn (sayth the Duke) God haue mercy vpon vs, for this day shall ende both our liues, and I pray you forgiue mee whatsoeuer I haue offended, and I forgiue you with all my heart, although you and your Councell was a great occasion hereof: Well my Lord quoth sir Iohn Gates, I forgiue you, as I would bee forgiuen, and yet you and your authority was the originall cause of all together, but the Lord pardon you, and I pray you forgiue me. So either making obeciance to other, the Duke proceeded, and when he came vpon the Scaffolde, hee putting off his Gowne of Crane coloured Damaske, leaned vpon the East rayle, and sayd to the people: Gut people, all you that be heere present to see me die, though my death bee odious, and horrible to the flesh, yet I pray you iudge the best in Gods workes, for hee doth all for the best. And as for mee, I am a wretched sinner, and and haue deserued to die, and most iustly am condemned to die by law. And yet this act wherefore I dye, was not altogether of mee (as it is thought) but I was procured and induced thereunto by other. I was, I say induced thereunto by other: Notwithstanding, God forbid that I should name any man vnto you, I will name no man vnto you, and therefore I beseech you take not for it. I for my part forgiue all men, and pray God also to forgiue them. And if I haue offended any of you here, I pray you, and all the world to forgiue me: and most chiefly I desire forgiuenesse of the Queenes highnesse, whom I haue most grieuously offended. And I pray you all to witnesse with me, that I departe in perfect loue and charitie with all the world, and that you will assist mee with your prayers at the houre of death. The rest of his speech almost in euery point, was the like as hee had sayd in the Chappell of the Tower, in the day before, saying, when hee had made confession of his beleefe, hee had these words. And heere I doe protest vnto you good people, most earnestly, euen from the bottome of my heart, that this which I haue spoken is of my selfe, not being required nor induced thereunto by any man, nor for any fauour, or hope of life, and I take witnesse of my Lord of Worcester heere, mine olde friend and Ghostly father, that hee found mee in this minde and opinion, when hee came to me; but I haue declared this onely vpon mine owne motion and affection, and for the zeale and loue that I beare to my naturall Country. I could good people rehearse much more then by experience, that I haue of this euill that is happened to this Realme by these occasions, but you know I haue another thing to doe, whereunto I must prepare mee, for the time draweth alway. And now I beseech the Queenes highnesse to forgiue mee mine offences against her Maiestie, whereof I haue a singular hope, forasmuch, as thee hath already extended her goodnesse and clemency so farre vpon me, that whereas she might soothswith, without iudgement or any further tryall, haue put me to most vile and cruell death, by hanging, drawing, and quartering, for as much as I was in the field in Armes against her highnesse, her Maiestie neuerthelesse of her most mercifull goodnesse suffered me to bee brought to my iudgement, and to haue my tryall by law, where I was most iustly and worthily condemned. And her highnesse hath now also extended her mercy and clemencie vpon mee, for the manner and kind of my death. And therefore my hope is, that her Grace of her goodnesse will remit all the rest of her indignation and displeasure towards mee, which I beseech you all most heartily to pray for, and that it may please God long to preserue her Maiestie, to raigne ouer you in much honour and felicity. After hee had thus spoken, hee kneeled downe, saying to them that were about him: I beseech you all to beare mee witnesse that I die in the true Catholike faith, and then sayd the Psalmes of Miserere and De profundis, his Pater noster, and Creed of the first verses of the Psalme, In te Domine speraui, ending with this verse; Into thy handes O Lord I commend my spirit, and when hee had thus finished his prayers, the executioner tyed him togetherselfe, to whom hee sayd: I forgiue thee with all my heart, and doe thy part without feare. And bowing toward the Blocke, hee sayd, I haue deserued a thousand deathes, layd his head vpon the Blocke, and so was beheaded. Whose body with the head was buryed in the Tower, by the body of Edward late Duke of Somerset: so that there lyeth before the high Altar, in S. Peters Church, two Dukes, betweene two Queenes, to wit, the Duke of Somerset and the Duke of Northumberland betweene Queene Anne, and Queene Katherine, all foure beheaded.

Martirs in the Tower.

At the same time and place also, was likewise beheaded Sir Iohn Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, which Sir Iohn Gates in that place vsed these or like words. By comming hither this day good people is to die, whereof I assure you all I am well worthy: for I haue liued as vitiously and wickedly all the dayes of my life as any man hath done in the world. I was the greatest reader of Scripture that might be of a man of my degree: And a wicked follower thereof no liuing: for I did not read to the intent to be edified thereby, nor to seeke the glory of God: but contrariwise, arrogantly, to bee seditious, and to dispute thereof, and priuately to interpret it after my owne braine and affection. Wherefore good people I exhort you all to beware how, and after what sort you come to read Gods holy word, for it is not a trifle, or playing game to deale with Gods holy misteryes: stand not too much in your owne conceits, for like as the Bee of one flower doth gather home, and the Spyder poyson of the same, euen so you, except you humblie submit your selues to God, and charitably reade the same to the intent to bee edified thereby, it is to you as poyson, and worse: and it were better for you to let it alone. And then after he had asked the Queenes highnesse forgiuenesse, and all the world, he desired the people of their charitie to praye vnto God with him for remission of his sinnes, and then refusing the kerchiefe, layd downe his head, which was stricken off at 3. blowes. Sir Thomas Palmer, as soone as he came to the Scaffold, tooke euery man by the hand, and desired them to pray for him: then putting off his Gowne, he leaned vpon the East Rayle, and sayde these words in effect: My masters (quoth he) God saue you all: it is not vnknowne vnto you wherefore I come hither, wherefore I haue worthily well deserued at Gods handes, for I know it to be his diuine ordinance by this meanes to call me to his mercy, and to teach me to know my selfe, what I am, and wherevnto wee are all subiect: I thanke his mercifull goodnesse, for he hath caused mee to learne more in one little darke corner in yonder Tower, than euer I learned by any trauell in so many places as I haue beene, for there I (say)

Sir Iohn Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer beheaded.

I haue seene God, what he is, and how vnsearchable his wonderous workes are, and how infinite his mercies bee; I haue seene there my selfe throughly, and what I am, nothing but a lumpe of sinne, earth, dust, and of all vilenesse most vilest: I haue seene there and known what the world is, how vaine, deceitfull, traiterous, and short it is, how wicked and loathsome the workes thereof are in the sight of Gods Maiestie, how he neither regardeth the menaces of the proud men and mighty ones, neither despiseth the simplenesse of the poore and lowly which are in the same world. Finally, I haue seene there what death is, how neere hanging ouer euery mans head, and yet how vncertaine the time, and how vnknowne to all men, and how little it is to be feared, and should I feare death? or be sad therefore? how I not fame two die before mine eyes? Yea, and within the hearing of mine eares? No, neither the sprinkling of the blood, or the bedding thereof, nor the bloody axe it selfe shall make mee afraid; and now taking my leaue to the same, I pray you all to pray for mee: come on good fellow (quoth he) art thou he that must do the deed? I forgiue thee with all my heart, and then kneeling downe, layeng his head on the blocke, said, I will see how neate the blocke is for my necke, I pray thee strike not yet, for I haue a few prayers to say, and that done, strike on (God Name, good leaue haue then, his prayers ended, and bestring each man to pray for him, he laid downe his head againe, and so the executioner tooke it from him at one stroke.

New Lord Chancellor.

The 23 of August, the Queene deliuered the great Seale to Doctor Gardener, Bishop of Winchester, and made him Lord Chancellor.

Latin seruice.

The twenty seauen of August, the seruice began in Latine to be sung in Paules Church in London.

Profit to the Queene.

The first of September, the Queene demanded a profit of the City of London of 20000. l. to be repayed againe within fourteene dayes after Michaelmas next following, which summe was leuied of the Aldermen, and a hundred and twenty commoners.

Earle of Deuonshire restored.

The third of September, Edward Courtney was created Earle of Deuonshire at Richmond.

The Lord Ferrers of Chartley, the Lord chiefe Iustice, sir Roger Cholmley, the Lord Mountague, sir Iohn Cheeke, and other, were deliuered out of the Tower.

New coines

The 4. of September, was proclaimed certaine new coines of gold and siluer, a Soueraign of gold of 20. s. the halfe Soueraigne, 15. s. an angel of 10. s. the halfe angell 5. s. of siluer, the groat, halfe groat, and penny. All base coines to be current as before.

Subsidie pardoned.

Also the same day by Proclamation, was pardoned the Subsidy of 4. s. the pound lands, and two s. 8. d. the pound of moueable goods, graunted in the last Parliament of King Edward the first.

The 12. of September, the Queene remoued to Saint Iames.

The 14. and 15. of September, Ma. Latiner and Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury were sent to the Tower of London.

The 27. of September, Queene Mary came to the Tower by water, accompanied with the Lady Elizabeth her sister, and other Ladies, before whose arriuall was shot a great peale of gunnes.

The last of September, Queene Mary rode through the City of London towards Westminster, sitting in a Chariot of cloth of tissue drawne with 6. horses, all trapped with the like cloth of tissue. Shee sate in a goune of purple velues furred with powdered Ermine, hauing on her head a caule of cloth of tinsell, beset with pearle and stone, and aboue the same vpon her head, a round circlet of gold beset so richly with precious stone, that the value thereof was inestimable, the same caule and circlet being so massie and ponderous, that shee was fayne to beare vp her head with her hand, and the canape was borne ouer her Chariot. Before her rode a number of gentlemen and knights, then Iudges, then doctors, then Bishops, then Lords, then the Councell: after whom followed the knights of the Bath, thirteene in number, in their robes, the Bishop of Winchester L. Chancellor, and the Marquesse of Winchester Lord high Treasurer, next came the Duke of Norfolke, and after him the Earle of Oxford, who bare the sword before her, the maior of London in a goune of crimson Velues bare the sceptor of gold, &c. After the Queenes chariot, sir Edward Hastings led her horse in his hand: then came another chariot, hauing a couering all of cloth of siluer all white, and six horses trapped with the like, therein sate the Lady Elizabeth and the Lady Anne of Cleue, then Ladies and Gentlewemen riding on horses trapped with red Velues, and their Gownes and kirtles likewise of red Velues: after them followed two other Chariots couered with red Sattin, and the horses betrapped with the same, and certaine Gentlewomen betweene euery of the said Chariots riding in Crimson Sattin, their horses betrapped with the same, the number of the Gentlewomen so riding, were 46. besides them in the Chariots. At Fanchurch was a costly pageant made by the Genowayes: at Grace-church corner there was another Pageant made by the Easterlings. At the vpper end of Grace-street there was another Pageant made by the Florentines very high, on the top whereof there stood foure pictures, and in the midst of them and most highest, there stood an Angel all in greene, with a trumpet in his hand, and when the Trumpeter who stood secretly in the Pageant did sound his Trumpe, the Angel did put his trumpe to his mouth, as though it had bin the same that had sounded, to the great marueiling of many ignorant persons: this Pageant was made with three thousw fares of gates &c. The Conduit in Cornehill ranne wine, and beneath the Conduit a Pageant made at the charges of the city, and another at the great Conduit in Cheape, and a fountaine by it running wine. The standart in Cheape new painted, with the waites of the Citie aloft thereof playe playing. The Crosse in Cheape now washed and burnished. One other Pageant at the little Conduit in Cheape next to Paules made by the City, where the Aldermen stode: and when the Queene came against them, the Recorder made a short proposition to her, and then the Chamberlaine presented to her in the name of the Maior and the City, a purse of cloth of golde, and a thousand markes of golde in it: then shee rode foorth, and in Paules Church yard against the Scholle, one Master Haywood sate in a Pageant vnder a vine, and made to her an Oration in Latine and English. Then was there one Peter a Dutchman stood on the Weathercocke of Paules steeple, holding a streamer in his hand of fiue yard long, and wauing thereof, stod sometime on the one side, and shooke the other, and then stod on his knees, to the great admiration of the people. Shee had made two triumphant arches, one aboue the Crosse, hanged with Clothes and streamers set on it, and euery corner of the bole of the Crosse, likewise set with streames and Clothes, which could not blow the Winde was so great: the said Citie had straine pound thirteene shillings and foure pence given him by the City for his coats and paines, and all his stuffe. Then there was a Pageant made against the Deane of Paules gate, where the querristers of Paules played vpon vials, and sung. Ludgate was newly repaired, painted, and richly hanged, with minstrels playing and singing there: then was there another Pageant at the Conduit in Fleetstreete, and the Temple bar was newly repaired and hanged. And thus shee passed to Whyte hall at Westminster, where shee tooke her leaue of the Lord Maior, giuing him great thankes for his paynes, and the City for their cost. On the morrow, which was the first day of October: the Queene went by water to the old palace, and there remained till about 11. of the clocke, and then went on foote vpon blew cloth, being railed on either side into Saint Peters Church, where she was solemnly crowned, and annointed by the Bishop of Winchester, which Coronation and other ceremonies and solemnities then vsed according to the olde custome, was not fully ended till it was nigh 5. of the clocke at night that shee returned from the Church, before whom then was borne three Swordes sheathed, and one naked. The great seruice that day done in Westminster hall at dinner by diuers noble men, would aske long time to write. The Lord Maior of London and twelue Citizens kept the high Cupbboorde of plate as Butlers, and the Queene gaue to the Maior for his fee a cup of golde with a couer weighing 17. ounces.

Parliament

The 5. of October, the Parliament began at Westminster, sir Iohn Yorke, and H. Dudley were deliuered out of the Tower.

Queene forgo ouer bored.

The 25. day of October, the barge of Greenwich ouer-bored, a Catch running vpon her, was ouerturned, and 14. persons drowned, and 16. saued by swimming.

Cardinall Poole, who had long time beene

Weathercock of Paules.

The 3. of November, the weathercocke of Paules was set vp, which cocke weighed eighty pound, hys length from the bill to the taile was 4. foote, and his breadth ouer the wings three foote and a halfe, the weight being of copper was ouer gilt.

The 13. of November, Doctor Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, Doctor Ridley, that was before Parliament Martyr, and the Lord Guilford Dudley, were arraigned at the Guild hall of London, and condemned of Treason. Hugh Carey was deliuered out of the Tower.

The Parliament was dissolued on the first of December. Also on the one and twentieth of December, began a thanksgiuing in England the Church seruice to be sung in English, as was established by the last Parliament, and as the same had beene left in the last reigne of K. Henry the eight. The Lady Anne had the Liberty of the Tower to walke in, the Queene's garden and on the hill. The Lord Admirall Clinton and the Lord Gifford Dudley, had the Libertie of the parts where they were lodged: the Marquesse of Northampton had his pardon and was deliuered.

Lotterie for the reparation of Paules.

In the beginning of the month of January, the Emperour sent Ambassadors into England to conclude a marriage betweene Philip his sonne, and Queene Mary of England.

The 14. of January, Doctor Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, Lord Chancellor of England, in the Chamber of presence at Court, made to the Lords, Iewells, and gentlemen of Queene Mary very rich, a solemne Feast, wherein was declared that the Queenes Highnesse, part for amity, and other weighty considerations had, after much Suite to the Emperour and Prince of Spaines behalfe made, determined by the consent of the Councell and Nobility, to match her selfe with the said Prince in holy Wedlocke and lawfull Matrimony: and declared further, that shee should haue for her dowrie 300000. Duckets by the yeare, with all the Seigniorie of Flaunders, and that the issue of them happened any) betweene them two should be begotten, should be heire absolute to the Kingdome of Spaine, as also to the said low Countries. The said Chancellor that they were all bound to thank God that so noble, worthy, and famous a Prince would vouchsafe so to humble himselfe, as to this marriage to take vpon him rather as a subiect, than otherwise, for the Queene, and her Councell should rule all things as they did before, and that there should be of the Councell no Straunger, neither to haue the custody of any forts or castles, &c. nor beare any rule or office in the Queenes house, or else where in all England, with diuers other Articles there by him rehearsed, wherefore he said the Queenes pleasure and request was, that his good Subiects for her sake, they would most louingly receiue him with reuerence, loue, and honour.

The next day, the Lord Maior of London with his brethren the Aldermen, were sent for to the Court, and to bring with them forty of the head Commoners of the city, vnto whom before the Councell, the Lord Chancellor made the like Oration desiring them to behaue themselues like good Subiects with all humblenesse and reuerence. Robert Dudley sonne to the late D. of Northumberland, was arraigned at the Guild hall of London of high Treason, he confessed the inditement, and had iudgement giuen by the Earle of Sussex, to be drawne, hanged, bowelled, and quartered.

Within fiue dayes after, there was word brought to the Court, how that sir Peter Carow sir Gawine Carow, sir Thomas Dere, with diuers other, were vp in Deuonshire in the resisting of the King of Spaines comming thither, and that they had taken the City of Exceter, and Caſtle there into their custody.

About the 23. or 25. of January, sir James a Crofts departed from London toward Wales as it was thought, to haue raised power there.

The purpose of the Queenes marriage was so grieuously taken of diuers men, that for this and for religion, they in such sort conspired against the Queene, that if the matter had not broken out before the time by them appointed, men thought it would haue brought much trouble and danger.

Conſpiracy.

The 25. of January, sir John Gage Lord Chamberlaine, certified the Lord Maior of London that sir Thomas Wyat with certaine rebels, were vp in Kent about Maidstone, whereupon great watch was kept, and that night the Lord Maior rode about to perule the same, and euery night after two Aldermen did the like, in the day time the gates of the City were warded by substantiall citizens.

Commotion in Kent by sir Thom. Wyat.

The 26. of January, was brought into the Tower as priſoners, the Lord Marquesse of Northampton, sir Edward Warner, and other. And the same night there went out certaine of the guard, and other against the Kentish men, And the City of London began to be straughtly kept and watched by harnessed men, by the appointment of the Lord Treasurer, who had the day before sent for the Lord Maior and Aldermen, and giuen them some charge for safety of the city. And the same day or rather on the day before, the Duke of Norfolke with his power went toward Gaueston.

About the which time the Lord Bergauenny, by chance, encountred with sir Henry Isle (one of sir Thomas Wyats faction,) and slew 2. or 3 of his men, he fleeing with the rest of his company to Wyats campe.

The 27. of January, the Lord Treasurer came to the Guild-hall from the Councell, to request the Citizens to prepare 500. lx men well harnessed to goe against Wyat, which was granted and made ready the same night, and on the morrow were deliuered to their Captaines, and sent to Gaueston by water.

The Duke of Norfolk sent against Wyat.

The 29. of January, the D. of Norfolke Lieutenant of the army, and with him the Earle of Arundel, S. Henry Bingham Captaine of the gard with a great number of the gard, and other souldiers, and the Captaine and souldiers that were sent from London, runded to assault Rochester castle, where Wyat and his people lay, so that vpon munday they were set in array towards Rochester bridge, which was kept by Wyats company, and furnished with 3. or 4. double Canons: but before the setting forward of these men the D. sent M. Nory an herault vnto Rochwich the Proclamation of pardon to all such as would desist from their purpose, who coming to the bridge, would haue gone through into the city, but they that kept the bridge would not suffer him, til that the Captain came, who at the last granted the same to be read in the city, but holding a bag against him, cryed, speake softly, or els he would shut him through, so that they would not suffer the people to heare the proclamation: which being ended, each man cryed they had done nothing whereby they should need any pardon and in that quarrell which they had taken in hand, they would liue and dye: nevertheleſſe, at the last sir George Harper receiued the pardon outwardly, and being receiued vnder the D. of Norffolks protection, came on forward against the Kentishmen, and euen as the company were set in a readines, and marched forward toward the bridge, Bret being Captain of the 500. Londoners, of which, the more part were in the forewarde, turned himself about, and drawing out his sword, said these or like words, Maisters we go about to fight against our native countrymen of England and our friends, in a quarrell vnrightfull, and partly wicked, for they, considering the great miseries which are like to fall vpon vs, if we shall be vnder the rule of the proud Spaniards, or strangers, are here assembled to make reſistance of their comming for the auoiding of so great inconueniences likely to light, not onely vpon themselues, but on euery of vs and the whole Realme, wherefore I thinke no English heart ought to say against them, much leſſe by fighting to withstand them: wherefore I and others (meaning such as were in that ranke with him) will spend our blood in the quarrell of this worthy Captaine Sir Wyat, and other Gentlemen here assembled: which words once pronounced, each man turned their ordinance against their followers, and thereupon cryed, a Wyat, a Wyat, of which sodaine noyse, the Duke, the Captaine of the guard, and other, being abashed, fled foorthwith: immediatly came in Sir Wyat and his company on horseback, riding in amongst as well the guard, as the Londoners, and said, so many as will come and tarry with vs shall bee welcome, and so many as will part, good leaue haue they, and so all the Londoners, part of the guard, and more then 3. parts of the retinue, went to the camp of the Kentishmen, where they still remained. At this discomfiture, the Duke lost 8. peeces of brasse, with all other munition and ordnance, and himselfe with fewe other hardly escaped.

Wyat greeteth with the ordinance.

The last of January, Wyat and his company came to Detford, and the next day they came full & whole to Greenwich and Depeford, where they remained Thursday, Friday, & the foresayd Saturday. On the Fryday, which was Candlemas day, the most part of the houlholders of London, with the Maior and Aldermen were in harnesse, yea this day and other dayes the iustices, Sergeans at the Law, and other Lawyers in Westminster hall pleaded in harnesse.

In this meane time, to witte, on the 25. of January, Henry Duke of Suffolke, father to the Lady Iane, fleeing into Leicester-shire and Warwickshire with the Lords Grey and the Lord Leonard Grey, and a small company in diuers places as he went, made Proclamation against the Queenes marriage with the Prince of Spain, &c. but the people inclined not to him.

The first day of February, proclamation was made at London, that the Duke of Suffolk was discomfited, and fled with his two brethren. And also that sir Peter Carow, with his vncle sir Gawine Carow and Gibbes, were fled into France: and further, that the Queene did pardon the whole campe of the Kentishmen, except Wyat, Harper, Rudstone, and Isley, and that who soeuer could take sir Tho. Wyat, except the said 4. persons, should haue an hundred pound lands to him and his heirs for euer.

Queen Mary came to the Guildhall in London.

The same day in the afternoone being Candlemas euen, the commons of the City assembled in their liueries at the Guild hall, whither the Queene with her Lords and Ladyes came riding from Westminster, and there after vehement words against Wyat, declared that shee meant not otherwise to marry then the Councell should thinke both honorable and commodious to the Realme, and that she could continue vnmarried, as she had done the greatest part of her age, and therefore willed them truely to assist her, in repelling such as contrary to their duties rebelled. When shee had done vnderstanding that many in London did fauour Wyats part, shee appointed Lord William Howard Lieutenant of the City, and the Earle of Pembrooke generall of the field, which both prepared all things necessary for their purpose. In the meane season, to wit, the 3. of February, about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, sir Thomas Wyat and the Kentishmen, marched forward from Depeford towards London with fiue ancients, being by estimation about two thousand, which their comming so soone as it was perceiued, there was shot off out of the White Tower, 6. or 8. shot, but they missed them, sometime shooting ouer, and sometime short. After knowledge thereof once had in London, foorthwith the draw bridge was cut downe and the bridge gates shut. The Maior and Sheriffes harnessed, commanded each man to shut in their shoppes and windowes, and to be ready harnessed at their doores, what chance so euer might happen. By this time was Wyat entred into Kent streete, and so by S. Georges Church into Southwarke. Himselfe, and part of his company came in good array downe Barmondsey streete, and they were suffered peaceably to enter Southwarke without repulse, or any stroke striken, either by the inhabitants, or of any other: yet was there many men of the countrey in the Innes, rayled and brought thither by the Lord William and other, to haue gone against the sayd Wyat, but they all ioyned themselues to the Kentishmen, and the inhabitants with their best cheere entertained them. Immediatly vpon the sayd Wyats comming, hee made Proclamation, that no souldier should take any thing, but that he should pay for it, and that his comming was to resist the Spanish King. Notwithstanding foorthwith diuers of his company being Gentlemen (as they sayd) went to Winchester place, made hauocke of the Bishops goods (bee being Lord Chancellor) not onely of his victuals, wherof there was plenty, but whatsoeuer els, not leauing so much as one locke of a doore, but the same was taken off and carried away, not a booke in his gallery or library vncut, or rent into peeces, so that men might haue gone vp to the leaues in leaues of bookes, cut out and thrown vnder foote.

Bishop of Winchesters library and other his goods spoyled in Southwarke.

At the Bridge foote he layd two peeces of ordinance, and began a great trench betweene the Bridge and him. He laid one other peece of ordinance at S. Georges, and one going into Barmondsey street, and another toward the Bishop of Winchesters house.

Wyat remoued out of Southwarke.

On Shroue-tuesday, the first of February, Sir Thomas Wyat remained out of Southwarke, toward Kingstone bridge, which was done vpon this occasion. The night before his departing out of Southwarke, by chance as one of the Lieutenants men of the Tower, named Thomas Meechen rowed with a sculler ouer against the Bishop of Winchesters place, there was a waterman of the Tower Wayres, desired the sayd Lieutenants man to take him in, who did so, which being espyed of Wyats men, seuen of them with harquebusses, called to them to land againe, but they would not, whereupon each man discharged their piece, and killed the sayd Waterman, which foorthwith falling downe dead, the sculler with much paine rowed through the bridge to the Tower wharfe with the Lieutenants man, and the dead man in his boat, which thing was no sooner knowne to the Lieutenant, but that euen the same night, and the next morning, hee bent seauen great peeces of Ordinance chiuerings, and demi-canons, full against the gate of the Bridge, and against Southwarke, and the two staples of Saint Olaues, and Saint Mary Overies, besides all the pieces on the White Tower, one chiuering on Diueling Tower, and three fauconets ouer the Water-gate: which so soone as the inhabitants of Southwarke vnderstood, certaine both men and women came to Wyat in most lamentable wise, saying, Sir, we are all like to bee vtterly vndone, and destroyed for your sake, our houses shall by and by be throwne downe vpon our heads, to the vtter spoyle of this borough, with the shot of the Tower, all ready bent and charged towards vs, for the loue of God therefore take pittie vpon vs: at which words, hee being partly abashed, staied a while, and then sayd: I pray you my friends bee content a while, and I will soone ease you of this mischiefe, for God for bid that you, or the least here should be killed or hurt in my behalfe. And so in most speedie manner hee marched away. As he marched towards Kingstone, he met by chance a Merchant named Christopher Dorell, whom he called, saying, cousin Dorel, I pray you commend me unto your citizens the Londeners, and say unto them from mee, that when liberty and freedome was offered them, they would not receive it, neither would they admit mee to enter within their gates, who for their freedom, and the disburthening of their griefs, and oppression by strangers, would have frankly spent my bloud in that their cause and quarrell, but now well apeareth their unthankefullnesse to us their friends, which meaneth them to much good, and therefore they are the lesse to be mated hereafter, when the miserable Tyrannie of strangers shall oppresse them, and so he went forward.

This day about foure of the clocke in the afternoone he came to Kingston upon Thamis, ten myles West from London, where finding the bridge to be broken, as a 30. foote or thereabout to bee taken away, saving the postes that were left standing, & the other side kept by 200. men he caused 2. pieces of ordinance to be planted against them, whereupon they durst not abide: then caused he certaine sailers to swim over the Thames, who I used the Westerne Barges, which there had beene tyed, and so brought them over, by which meanes hee passed the water: it was wonder to see what paines hee and others take, whilest the number of souldiers baited in the towne, hee caused the bridge to bee repaired with ladders, planks, and beames, the same being tyed together with ropes, so as by reason of the clocke in the night, it was in such plight, as both his ordinance, and companies of men might passe over without perill. And to about 11. of the clock, Wyat with his band, with ordinance marched towards London, meaning to have beene at the Court gate before day of the next morning. They came almost to Southwarke or ever they were descryed by the Scouts, who there by chance meeting Bret and his company, Bret said to the Scout, bache villaine, if thou goe further to discover any thing here, thou shalt die out of hand, so the Scout returned in great hast: but as God would have it, before he came within 6. miles of the city, staying upon a piece of his great Ordinance, which was dismounted by breach of the wheeles his comming was discovered, and it was 9. of the clocke of the day following, before hee came to Hide Parke, as ye shall heare anone. Whilest Wyat and his counsell were devising how to raise his ordinance dismounted, many of his society slipped from him, among the which, Mr. Harper was one, who went to the Court, and opened all the premises afore said, to the Queene and Counsell, where Wyat was, what had chanced, and what was his intention. The breaking of the said Gun was such an hinderance to his enterprise, that all about him were amazed, and at their wits end, because by that meanes the houre was broken of appointment, wherefore Vaughan, Bret, and other appointed souldiers and counsellers, such as had brise heads in other affaires, as Dct. Poinet and other, did counsell the said VVyat to march forwards and keep his appointment, and to let the Gun lie, which in no wise hee could be perswaded to do. Dct. Poinet Bishop of Winchester, therefore, considering how many of his confederacy was stolne away from him, he began to perswade with captaine Bret and other his friends to shift for themselves as he would doe, and at that very place where the Gun did breake, he tooke his leave of his secret friends, and bayd he would pray unto God for their good successe, and so did depart, and went into Germany, where he dyed.

The same day in the afternoone, were two men hanged on a gibbet in Paules Churchyard by Martiall law, the one Iohn Egerly servant to the Duke of Suffolke, and late Sheriffe of Leicester, the other a Baker, one of the white coates sent out of the citie against VVyat: and the same day came tydings, that the Duke with his brethren were taken.

Executions in Paules Churchyard.

The same day toward night there was laden 10. or 12. Carts with Ordinance, as bils, pikes, speares, bowes, arrowes, powder, shot, shovels, mattocks, baskets, and other munitions, 2. culverings, 1 Sacre, 3. Faulcons, and a Faulconet, all which stuffe layed in Paules Churchyard.

The same night at 9. about five of the clocke, a Trumpetter went about, and warned all horsemen, and men at armes to be at S. Iames field, and all footemen also to bee there by five of the clocke in the next morning.

The Queenes scout upon his returne to the Court, declared VVyats being at Brentford, which sodaine newes, made all in the Court wonderfully afraid, Drummes went through London about foure of the clocke in the morning, commanding all souldiers to armour, and so to Charing-crosse.

VVyat hearing that the Earle of Pembrooke was come into the field, hee staid at Kingsbridge untill day, where his men being very weary with travell of that night, and the day before, and also partly feebled and faint, having received small sustenance since their comming out of Southwarke restlesse: There was no small adoe in London, and likewise the Tower made great preparation of defence. By ten of the clocke the Earle of Pembrooke had set his troupe of horsemen on the hill in the high way above the new bridge, over against S. Iames: his footmen were set in two battels, somewhat lower, and nearer Charing-crosse, at the lane turning downe by the bricke wall from Islington-ward, where hee had set also certaine other horsemen, and he had planted his ordinance upon the hill side. In the meane season, VVyat and his company planted his ordinance upon a hill beyond S. Iames, almost over against the parke corner, and himselfe after a few words spoken to his souldiers, came downe the old lane on foote, hard by the Court gate at S. Iames. with 4. or 5. ancients, his men marching in good array. Cuthbert Vaughan and two ancients turning downe toward Westminster. The Earle of Pembrookes horsemen hovered all this while while. About morning, untill all was passed by saving the taile, upon which they did set, and set off: the other marched forward in array, and never staid or returned to the end of their taile: the great ordinance that off freshly on both sides: Wyats ordinance overshot the troupe of horsemen. The Queenes Ordinance, one peece strake three of Wyats company in a ranke upon the heads, and slaying them, strake through the wall into the parke: more harme was not done by the great shot of neither party. The Queenes whole battaile of footemen standing still, Wyat passed along by the wall towards Charing crosse where the said horsemen that were there, set upon part of them but was soone forced backe.

At Charing crosse stood sir Iohn Gage Lord Chamberlaine with the guard, and a number of other, being almost a thousand, the which upon VVyats comming, shot at his company, but the last feddoe to the Court gates, which certaine pursued, and forced with shot to shut the Court gates against them. In this repulse the said Lord Chamberlaine and others were so amazed, that many cryed Treason in the Court, and had thought that the Earle of Pembrooke, who was assaulting the taile of his enemies, had gone to VVyat, taking his part against the Queene: there was running and crying out of Ladies and Gentlewomen, shutting of doores and Windowes, and such a thrusting and noyse, as was wonderfull to heare, VVyat with his men marched still toward all along to Temple barre, and so through Fleetstreet till hee came to Bell-Savage an Inne nigh unto Ludgate, without resistance, his men going not in any good order or array. It is said, that at Strand, certaine of the Lord Treasurers band, to the number of three hundreth men, whereof the Lord Chidioke Powlet his sonne was Captaine, met them, and so going on the one side, passed by them on the other side without any thing saying to them. Also this is more strange, the said VVyat and his company passed along by a great company of harnessed men which stood on both sides the streets without any withstanding them. And as he marched forward through Fleetstreet most with their swordes drawne, some crying, Queene Mary hath graunted our request, and given us pardon: other said the Queene hath pardoned us. Thus some of VVyats men, some say it was VVyat himselfe, came even to Ludgate and knocked, calling to come in, saying, there was VVyat: whom the Queene had graunted to have their requests, but the Lord William Howard staid at the gate, and said, avaunt Traytor: thou shalt not come in here. VVyat a while stayed and rested him a while upon a stall over against the Well-Savage gate, and at the last seeing he could not get into the city, and being deceived of the ayde he hoped for, returned backe againe in array towards Charing crosse, and was never stopped till he came at Temple bar, where certaine horsemen which came from the field, met them in the face, and then began the fight againe, till Clarentius an Herault came and said to Master VVyat: Sir, you were best by my counsell to yeeld, you see this day is gone against you, and in resisting, you can get no good, but be the death of all these your souldiers, to your great perill of soule: perchance you may finde the Queene mercifull, and the rather, if yee stint to great bloudshed as is like here to be. Wyat herewith being somewhat astonied (although he saw his men bent to fight) saide, Well, if I shall not needes yeeld, I will yeeld me to a Gentleman, to whom sir Maurice Barkely came straight, and bad him leape up behind him, and another tooke Thomas Cobham, and William Knevet, and so carried more behinde them upon their horses to the Court then was taken of men in all sides. It is said in this conflict, one piece only, setting his backe to the wall at S. Iames, kept seventeene horsemen off him a great time, and at the last was slaine. The whole number on both sides slaine at this battell paged not forty persons, as far as could be learned by them that viewed the field, but there were many hurt. The noyse of women and children, when the conflict was at Charing crosse, was so great that it was heard to the top of the white Tower, and also the great shot was well discerned there out of Saint Iames field: there stood upon the leades the Marques of Northampton, Sir Nicholas Poines, Sir Thomas Pope, Master Iohn Scimer, and other,

Wyat sent to the Tower.

About five of the clocke, Thomas Wyat William Knevet, Thomas Cobham, two brethren named Mantels, Alexander Bret, were brought by sir Henry Jernegham by water to the Tower as prisoners, where sir Philip Denny received them at the Bulwarke, and as Wyat passed by he said, gee Traytor, there was never such a Traytor in England: to whom sir Tho. Wyat turned and said, I am no Traytor, I would then should it well know, that art more Traytor then I, for it is not the part of an honest man to call me so, and so went forth: when hee came to the Tower gate, sir Thomas Bridges, lieutenant of it, said to him, thou wicked Mantel and sayd: Ah thou Traytor, what hast thou and thy company wrought? But hee holding down his head sayd nothing: then came Thomas Knevet, whom Master Chamberlaine Gentleman porter of the Tower tooke in, then came Alexander Bret, whom sir Thomas Pope tooke by the breast, saying: Oh Traytor, how couldest thou find in thy heart to worke such a villany, as to take wages, and being trusted over a band of men, to fall to her enemies, returning against her in battell? Bret answered, yea, I have offended in that sale; then came Thomas Cobham whom sir Thomas Pomes tooke in, and sayd, Alas master Cobham what mind headed you to worke such Treason? and he answered, Oh Sir, I was seduced. Then came sir Thomas Wyat, whom Sir Iohn Bridges tooke by the collar, and sayd; Oh thou villaine and unhappy Traitor, how couldest thou find in thy heart to worke such detestable Treason to the Queenes Majestie, who gave thee thy life and living once already, though thou divdest before this time beare Armes in the field against her, and now to yeeld her battell to her marvellous trouble and fright: if it were not (saith hee) but that the law must passe vpon ther, I would stick ther through with my dagger, to the which Wyat holding his armes vnder his side, and looking greviously with a grim looke vpon the Lieutenant, sayd, it is no maistery now, and so passed on. Thomas Wyat had on a shirt of male, with sleeves very faire, thereon a velvet cassocke, and a yellow lace, with the wandlace of his bag hanging thereon, and a paire of buts and spurs on his legs, and on his head a faire hat of velvet, with brand bone worke lace about it,

William Kneuet, Thomas Cobham, and Brett were the like apparelled.

On the morrow, and next day following were brought into the Tower prisoners, Georg Cobham, sir William Cobham, Anthony Kneuet, Hugh Booth, Thomas Vane, Robert Rudstone, sir George Harper, Edward Wyat, Eward Fog George Moore, and Cuthert Vaughan, whith Cuthert being a very handsome man, Master Thomas Bridges at his entry into the Tower, did wonderfully reproach him, calling him ranke Traytor, and sayd that hanging was too good for him: to whom this Vaughan answered with a stout courage, saying, I pray God to send you charity, and I would all men knew it. I am as true a man to the Quene, and Common wealth, as any man that I shall leave behinde me, and for death I care not for it.

The tenth of February, the Earle of Huntington, and other Gentlemen, and to the number of 300. horsemen, brought into the Tower as prisoner, the Duke of Suffolke and the Lord John Grey his brother from Coventry, where the D. had remained three dayes after his taking in the house and custody of Christopher Warren, Alderman there.

The 11. day sir Henry Isley, who had fled, was brought into the Tower prisoner, in an old russet coat, and an old paire of hosen, all his apparell not worth 4.s. The same day came in two of the Culpeppers, one Cremer, and Thomas Rampton the Duke of Suffolkes Secretary.

The 12. of February being Monday, about ten of the clerke, there went out of the Tower, to the scaffold on the Tower hill, the Lord Guilford Dudley sonne to the Duke of Northumberland, husband to the Lady Jane Gray, daughter to the D. of Suffolke, who at his going out, tooke by the hands sir Anthony Browne, Master John Throckmorton, and many other gentlemen, praying them to pray for him: and without the bulwarke gate master Thomas Offley one of the sheriffs of London receiued him and brought him to the scaffold, where after a small declaration, hee kneeled downe and sayd his prayers, then holding vp his eyes and hands to heauen with teares, at the last hee desired the people to pray for him, and after was beheaded: his body being layd in a car, and his head in a cloth, was brought into the chappell within the Tower, where the Lady Jane, whose lodging was in master Partridges house, did see his dead carcasse taken out of the car, as well as she did see him before alive going to his death, a sight to her woorse then death.

By this time was there a scaffold made vpon the greene, ouer against the white Tower, for the Lady Jane to die vpon, who with her husband was appointed to haue beene put to death on the Friday before, but was staied till then, this Lady being nothing at all abashed, neither with feare of her owne death, which then approached neither with the sight of the dead carcasse of her husband, when hee was brought into the chappell, came forth, the Lieutenant leading her with countenance nothing abashed, neither her eyes any thing moistened with teares (although her gentlewemen Elizabeth Tilney and mistresse Helen wonderfully wept) with a booke in her hand, wherein shee prayed vntill shee came to the sayd scaffold, whereon when she was mounted, she was beheaded: whose deaths were the more hastened for feare of further troubles and sturre for her title, like as her father had attempted.

The same day was brought into the Tower as prisoner by the Lord Chamberlain and 200. of the guard, Edward Courtney Earle of Deuonshire, who as he passed by the Lieutenant, being asked the cause of his thither comming, answered, he could not accuse himselfe.

The 14. and 15. of February, about the number of 50. of Wyats faction were hanged on 20. paire of gallowes made for that purpose in diuers places about the city.

The 17. of February was Proclamation made that all strangers should auoid the realme within foure and twenty dayes next ensuing, vpon paine of their goods to be confiscate, all free denizens, merchants, and ambassadours excepted.

The same 17. day of February the Duke of Suffolke was conueyed to Westminster by the Clearke of the checke and the guard, at his going out hee went with a cheerefull and a very stout countenance, but at his returne very pensiue and heavy, desiring all men to pray for him, the Lord Courtney lying in the Well Tower saw both his going out and returning, hee being arraigned, and the Earle of Arundell sitting vpon him in Iudgement, he said it was no treason for a Peere of the Realme as he was, to raise his power, and to make proclamation, onely to auoide strangers out of the Realme, and therevpon he asked the Sergeants at law standing by, whether it were so or no, but they would say nothing: then was it layd to his charge, hee met with 200. men in armes the Quenes lieutenant the Earle of Huntington, which was Treason against the Quene, forasmuch as the Lieutenant represenieth the Prince: to the which hee answered, that hee knew not the said Earle to bee such a Lieutenant, but quoth hee, I met him indeed with 50. men or thereabouts and would not haue shunke from him if I had had fewer, by which wordes he was found to be guiltie of Treason. Moreouer, he partly accused his brother the Lord Thomas, who had, as hee sayd, perswaded him rather to fly into his country, then to abide, sith it was to be feared hee should againe bee committed to the Tower, where-whereas being in his Countrey amongst his friends and tenants, who durst fetch him: Touching other articles laid to his charge, hee neuer knew of them, sauing that one should say at his table once at supper, that hee would vndertake for twelue, onely with 100. men to set the crowne vpon Courtneys head, and so hee was condemned.

The 18. of February, Alexander Bret one of the Captaines of the Londoners that fled to Wyat, and 22. persons more of the Kentish men were deliuered to the Sheriffe of Kent, to be executed in diuers places of Kent, but for the most part, they were all pardoned. This Bret going out of the Tower, embraced Master Chamberlaine the Gentleman Porter, and desired him to commend him to Sir Tho. Wyat, then praying all men to pray for him, he said, I am worthy of no lesse punishment than I now goe to suffer, for besides my owne offence, I refused life and grace three times offered, but I trust God doeth all for the best, that I might repent, and thereby obtaine grace.

The 20. of February, William Thomas late Clearke of the Councell, William Winter, and Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, were sent to the Tower, and on the next morrow were sir Iames Croft, and the Lord Thomas Grey sent to the Tower.

Kentish men pardoned.

The 20. of February, certaine of Wyats faction, to the number of 400. and more were led to Westminster, coupled together with halters about their necks, and there in the tilt yard, the Quene (who looked togith of her gallery) pardoned them.

D. of Suffolk beheaded.

The 23. of February, Henry Grey Duke of Suffolke, was beheaded on the Tower hill, his words on the scaffold were these: Good people, I am come hither to die, being iustly condemned for my disobedience against the Queenes highnesse, of whom I doe most humbly aske forgiuenesse: Doctor Weston answered and said, My Lord, her Grace hath already forgiuen you: then said the Duke, I beseech you all good people, to let me be an example to you for obedience to the Quene and the Magistrates, for the contrary thereof hath brought mee to this end. I desire you all to beare me witnesse, that I die a true Christian man, beleeuing to be saued by none other meanes but by Almighty God, through the passion of his Sonne Iesus Christ: and now I pray you to pray with me: then kneeling downe, and Doctor Weston with him, they said the Psalme Miserere mei Deus, and In te Domine speraui, the Duke one verse, and Doctor Weston another; which done, hee put off his Gowne and Doublet, knit the kercher about his eyes, held vp his hands, laid his head ouer the blocke, which head at one stroke was taken from him.

The 26. of February, William Thomas had almost slaine himselfe, by thrusting a knife vnder his pap.

The 11. of March, William Lord Howard, Admirall of England, was created Baron of Effingham at Westminster.

The 14. of March, the Earle of Bedford Lord privie Seale, chiefe Ambassadour to the Prince of Spaine, set forwards on his voyage to fetch him hither.

The 15. of March, Sir Thomas Wyat was arraigned at Westminster.

The 18. of March being Palmesunday, the Lady Elizabeth the Quenes sister, was by the Lord Treasurer and the Earle of Sussex, conuayed to the Tower of London, from Westminster by water.

The twelfth of November the Parliament began at Westminster.

The 24. of November Cardinall Poole came out of Brabant into England, and was receiued with much honour: hee was by Parliament restored to his olde dignity that hee was put from by King Henry, and shortly after came into the Parliament house, where the King, Queene and other States were present. Then he declared the cause of his legacy, first exhorting them to returne to the communion of the Church, and to restore the Pope his due authority. Secondly, hee absoluted them to giue thankes to God that had sent them so blessed a King and Queene. Finally he signified, for so much as they had with great gentlenesse restored him to his honour and dignity, that he most earnestly desired to see them restored to the heauenly Court, and vnity of the Church.

The next day the whole Court of Parliament, drew out a scrole of a supplication, the summe whereof was, that they greatly repented them of all that seruice that they had liued in, and therefore desired the King, Queene and Cardinall, that by their meanes they might bee restored to the bosome of the Church, and obedience of the Sea of Rome.

The next day the King, Queene, and Cardinall being present, the L. Chancellor declared what the Parliament had determined concerning the Cardinals request, and offered to the King and Queene the supplication before mentioned, which being read, the Cardinal in a large oration declared how acceptable repentance was in the sight of God, &c. And immediately making prayer vnto God, by authority to him committed, absolued them. When all this was done, they went all vnto the Chappell, and there singing Te Deum with great solemnity, declared the ioy that for this reconciliation was pretended.

The Queene brought to bed with child.

The 21. of November John Feckham late Deane of Pauls in London was made Abbot of Westminster, was stalled, and tooke possession of the same: and 14. Monks more received the habit with him that day of the order of S. Benet.

False accuser set on the pil lorie and burnt in both cheekes.

The 21. of Novemb. a man was brought from Westminster Hall, riding with his face to the horse tayle, and a paper on his head, to the standard in Cheape, and there set on the pillorie, and then burned with an hote iron on both his cheekes, with two letters, F. and A. for false accusing one of the court of the common place in Westminster of treason: the like unjust fact once wished to the like accuser of his master and eldest brother, but it was answered, that in such case could be no remedy, though the accuser himselfe were in the same fact found the principall offender: where through it followeth, the accuser never shewed signe of shame (the way to repentance) but terribly curseth, and blasphemously sweareth hee never committed any such act, though the same be registred before the honorable, the Queenes Paieties high Commissioners: and what horrible slanders, by libelling and otherwise with threats of murther hee dayly bruiteth against mee, the knower of all secrets, God I meane, knoweth, unto whom I refer my cause, being comforted with this sentence of the Prophet Dauid: Fret not thy selfe with these cursed harmefull men, neither envy angerly these workers of wickednesse, for like grasse anon they shall bee cut nowne, and like the greene fresh bent of the flower shall they wither away, &c.

A stranger would have murthered the keeper of Newgate.

The 16. of December, Gregory Carpenter, Blacke-Smith, a Frenchman borne, was arraigned for making counterfeit keyes, whereby to have opened the lockes of Newgate, to have slain the keeper, and let forth the prisoners, at which time of his arraignement, having conveyed a knife into his sleeve, hee thrust it into the side of William Whitrenes his fellow prisoner, who had given witnesse against him, so that he was in great perill of death thereby, for the which fact he was immediatly taken from the barre into the Starre before the Justice hall, where his hand being first taken off, hee was hanged on a gibbet set up for that purpose: the keeper of Newgate was arraigned, and indicted for that the sayd prisoner had a weapon about him, and his hands loose which should have bene bound.

1557 Gunshot in the Court at Greenewich.

The 4. of January, a ship before Greenwich (the Court being there) shot off her ordinance, one piece being charged with a bullet of stone, which passed through the walles of the Court, and did no more hurt.

Ambassadors from Russia and Scotland.

In the yere 1556. an Ambassadour from the high and mighty Euan Vasilouich Emperor of all Russia, great Duke of Volodemer, Muscouia, and Nouogrode, Emperour of Cassan, and of Astarchan, &c. sent by the Sea from the port of Saynt Nicholas in Russia, his honorable Ambassador surnamed Olep Napea, to the famous and excellent Princes Phillip and Mary king and Queene of England with certaine Letters, together with certaine presents and gifts, as a manifest argument of a mutuall amitie to be made and continued betweene their Paieties subiects, for the commodities of both Realmes, and people: which Diator, was the twentieth of July imbarqued in a good English ship named the Edward Bonaventure, belonging to the company of the English marchants, Richard Chancellor being graund Pilote, and John Buckland Master of the said ship. In which was laden, ware, oyle, tallow, furres, felts, yarne, &c. to the summe of 20. thousand pound sterling, together with fifteene Russes: Diuers and above ten other Russes shipped in another shippe called Bona Speranza, with goodes to the value of five thousand pound sterling, which ships in their journey towards the coast of England, were by contrary winds severed the one from the other, to wit, the sayd Bona Speranza with 2. other English shippes the one named the Philip and Mary, the other the Confidentia, were driven on the coast of Norway, where the said Confidentia was seene to perish on a rocke, and the Bona Speranza seemed to winter there. The third being the Phillip and Mary, arrived in the Thamis nigh London the 18. of April, in the yeare 1557. The Edward Bonaventure travelling the seas foure moneths, finally the tenth of November the said yeare 1557. arrived within the Scottish coasts, where by extreme tempest, the sayd ship being beaten from her ground, and tackles, was driven upon the rockes on those, where the brake and split in pieces, in such sorte, as the graund Pilote, taking the boate of the said ship, trusting to attaine the shore, and to save the body of the sayd Ambassadour, and seaven of the company, the same boate was by darke night overwhelmed and drowned, wherein perished, not onely the sayd graund Pilote, with seaven Russes, but also divers Mariners, the Ambassador with a few others with much difficultie saved. In which ship wracke not onely the sayd ship was broken, but also the goods laden in her was by the rude people of the country rifled and carryed away. As soone as by letters it was to the company in London knowne of the losse of their Pilote, men, goods, and ships: the Merchants obtained the Queenes Letters to the Lady Dowager of Scotland, for the gentle entertainement of the said Ambassador with his traine, and restitution of his goods, and also addressed two gentlemen, Master Lawrence Hussie doctor of the civill Law, and George Gilpin with money, and other requisites into Scotland, to conduct him and his there, and also to conduct him into England, so that on the 14. of February, the sayd Ambassadour left Scotland, comming towards England, having attending upon him the sayd two English gentlemen and others, came the 18. day of February to Warwicke, where he was honourably received by the Lord Wharton, Lord Warden of the East Marches: he prosecuting his voyage untill the 27. of February, approched the city within twelve miles, where hee was received with 80. Marchants with chaines of golde, and goodly apparell, ryding, who conducting him to a Merchants house foure miles from London, received there a quantity of golde, velvet, and silke, with all furniture thereto requisite: the next day being the last of February, he was by the Merchants adventurers for Russia, to the number of 140. persons, and so many or more servants in one livorie, conducted towards the city of London, where by the way he had not onely the hunting of the Fore, &c. but also by the Queenes Paieties commandement was received by the Viscount Montague, he being accompanied with divers lustie Knights, Esquires, Gentlemen, and Yeomen, to the number of 300. horses, led him to the North parts of the City of London, where by foure Merchants richly apparrelled, was presented to him a faire richly trapped horse, together with a fost cloth of crimson velvet, enriched with golde laces, whereupon the Ambassadour mounted, ryding toward Smithfield bars, the Lord Maior accompanied with the Aldermen in scarlet did receive him, and so riding through the city of London, in the middle betweene the L. Maior and Viscount Montague, a great number of Merchants, and notable personages riding before, was conducted into his lodging in Fanchurch street. At his first entrance into his chamber, there was presented unto him on the Queens behalfe, for a gift & present one rich piece of cloth of tissue, a piece of cloth of gold, another piece of cloth of gold raised with Crimson Clothes, of purple Veluet, imbroidered with gold, a paire of purple Veluet, a paire of damaske purples, a paire of Crimson damaske: which he thankefully accepted. In this his beautifull lodging he abode expecting the Kings repaire out of Flanders into England: whose highnesse arriuing the 2. of March, the same Ambassador the 23. of March (the day twelue-moneth he before his came from the Emperor his master) was honourably brought to the King and Queene at Westminster, where arriuing at the bridge, was there receiued with 6. Lords, conducted into a Chamber, where by the Lords, Chancellour, Treasurer, Iohn Gray, Admirall, Bishop of Ely, and other Councellers, he was salued, and consequently brought into the Kings & Queens presence sitting vnder a stately cloth of honour. Where after he had deliuered his letters, made his Oration, gaue 2. number of sables, and the rest of the same made both in English and Spanish, with much honour, exhibited readines to depart to his former lodging, to the which he was in two daies after, by assignment of the King and Queene, repayed, and conferred with him two graue Councellers, the Bishop of Ely, and Sir William Peter Knight, chiefe Secretary, who after diuerse talkes and conferences, finally concluded vpon such treaties and Articles of amity, as by the letters of the Kings and Queenes Highnesse vnder their great Seale of England, to him by the said Councellers deliuered, doth appeare.

A league and Articles of mary concluded.

The 24. of April was celebrated the solemnitie of the Noble Order of the Garter at Westminster. The said Ambassador was conducted to the Court by the Lords, Lauer and Mantle, to his Maiesties presence, where he was placed in the high commendations to the Emperour, which being done, he was led vnto the Chappell, where was prepared for him a State by Estate, wherein he accompanied with the Duke of Norfolke, the Lords aboue mentioned and other, was present at the whole seruice: the Diuine Seruice being done, he was reuested and reduced to his Barge, and so to his lodging. The Merchants hauing prepared foure goodly and well trimmed Ships, laden with all things of Merchandizes apt for Russia, the same Ambassador sailed downe the River of Thames, from London to Graueseud, where he with his Traine and furniture, was imbarked with his voiage homeward on the 3. of May. It is to be remembred, that during the whole abode of the said Ambassadour in England, the company of Merchants did frankly giue to him and his, all manner of costs and charges in victuals, trauing from Scotland to London, during his abode there, and vntill setting of sayle aboord a Ship.

Charles Lord Stanton and his men cruelly murthered maister Argile, and his sonne: he caused them to be stricken downe with clubs, then their throats to be cut, and after to bee buried in his owne house 15. foote deepe, for the which he was arraigned and condemned at Westminster, and after conueyed from the Tower of London through the City, and so to Salsbury, and there hanged with foure of his men seruants, the 6. of March.

Lord Stanton executed.

King Philip returned into England, and landed at Douer on the eighteene of March, and the twenty three of March passed through London with the Queene and Nobles of the Realme.

King Philip returneth into England.

Thomas Stafford, and other hauing conspired diuers treasons against the King and Queene, fearing iust punishment for their desertes, fled beyond the seas, and there remaining attempted diuers times to stirre rebellion within this Realme, by sending Bookes, Billes, and Letters, written and painted, farced full of vntruthes, and at length the sayd Stafford, and other English Rebels, and some strangers, entred this Realme, on the foure and twentieth of April, and tooke by stealth the Castle of Skarborough in the county of Yorke, and set out a shamefull Proclamation, wherein he traiterously called and affirmed the Queen to be vnrighteous and most vniworthy Queene, and that the King had brought into this Realme the number of twelue thousand Spaniards, and that into their handes were deliuered 12. of the strongest holdes in this Realme. In which Proclamation the sayde Stafford named himselfe Protector and gouernour of this Realme, but he with the other his complices, by the good diligence of the Earle of Westmerland and other Noble men, were apprehended on the last of April.

Thomas Stafford & his complices take Skarborough Castle.

The last of April, Thomas Piercy Esquire was

was made Baron Percy at Westminster, and on the next morow which was the first of May, he was created Earle of Northumberland, and the Queene gaue him all the lands which had beene his Auncestors remaining in her hands.

Thomas Stafford beheaded.

The 28. day of May, Thomas Stafford was beheaded on the Tower hill, and on the morrowe three of his company, to wit, Strechley, Bradford, and Proctor, were drawne to Tyborne, and there hanged and quartered.

Warre with France.

The 7. of June, for that the French King had supported the treason of the Duke of Northumberland, and also the trayterous hand of Wyat, and not long after when the deuill put in the heads of Dudley, Ashton, and others their complices, to enter into a new conspiracie, the said Kings Ambassadour was not onely paide, but receiued them into his house, there to assemble and contriue their malicious and deuillish enterprise: and although the said King were aduertised thereof by our Ambassadours: neuertheless, Dudley, Ashton, and others flying into France, were both receiued of the King, and also maintained with annuall pensions by him giuen, contrary to his promise. Also hee hath receiued sundry famous Pirates, and notorious enemies, and of late he sent Stafford with other Rebels, whom hee had entertained, furnished with armour, money, munition and ships, to suppresse the Castle of Skarborough: Proclamation was made to giue warning to our Subiects, to forbeare all Traffique with any of that Realme, and to repute the French King and his Subiects as open enemies, &c.

The last of June, the Lord Philip Howard, sonne of Thomas Duke of Norfolke, was borne in London, at the Earle of Arundels house without Temple barre, which house sometime belonged to the Bishop of Bathe, and shortly after was Christned in the Queenes Chappell at Westminster in a font of gold, where Philip King of Spaine, and Nicholas Heath Archbishop of Yorke, then Chancelour of England, were his Godfathers in proper person, and the Lady Elizabeth, Dutchesse of Norfolke, his great Grandmother, was his Godmother. This Lord Philip was the onely begotten childe of the said Duke, borne of the Lady Mary, daughter and heire of Henry Fitz Allen, the last Earle of Arundell of that name. To whom the inheritance and dignity of the said Earle therefore descended.

English men sent to Saint Quintens.

The 6. of July, the King passed ouer to Calleis, and so into Flaunders, where hee made great prouision for warre against the French King. The same moneth, the Queene sent ouer an Army of a thousand horsemen, foure thousand footemen, and two thousand Pioners, to ayde King Philip, whereof the Earle of Pembrooke was Generall. The Lord Robert Dudley Maister of the Ordenance.

A final terme at Westminster.

This yere in Michaelmas Terme, men might haue seene in Westminster Hall at the Kings Bench barre, not two men of Law before the Iustices, there was but one named Molton, who looked about, and had nothing to doe, the Iudges taking about them. In the Common Pleas no moe Sergeants but one, which was Sergeant Stanton, who looked about him, there was elbow rome enough, which made the Lawyers complaine of their iniuries in that Termne.

Lord Paioy of S. Johns.

The 30. of November, Sir Thom. Tresham Knight, receiued the order of the Croste, and was made Lord Paioy of S. Iohn of Ierusalem in England.

Calais besieged by the French.

The first of January, the Duke of Guise with a great Army of French men, entred a plot of ground, entrenched at Sandgate, and there building his power into two parts, sent the one with certain Peeces of Ordenance along the Downes towards Risebanke: and the other with battering Peeces to Newnam Bridge, which two Forts both at one time they shot at, and some recouered without resistance, for there was not a man in them, for they priuily fled into the Towne of Caleis. The next day there, fore the French men began a Battery from the sand hils next Risebanke, against the wall of Calais, betwixt the water-gate and the prison, and continued the same by the space of two or three dayes, vntil they had made a little breach, but yet not faultable, neither was it meant, but to make the Englishmen to haue the lesse regard to the defence of the Castle, where they were ascertained to haue an easie entry: so that while the Englishmen trauailed to defend the breach, the French men being passed through the ditch fell of water, entred the Castle, and thought to haue entred the Towne that way: but by the prouesse of sir Anthony Agar knight, and Marshall of the Towne, they were put backe into the Castle, but the same sir Anthony Agar left his life, and this was on the 1st of January.

The Towne of Calais was deliuered to the French on the 8th of January.

The same night William Lord Wentworth, Deputie or Lieutenant of the Towne, sent Nicholas Wotton alias Owen, and Richard Turpin, alias Hans to the Castle to demand parlee, which they graunted, putting forth of the Peterne two French Gentlemen, and receiued in pledge of them into the Castle Richard Spilman of the Ordinance, and Iohn Mosse a Gentleman of the Staple. Vpon which they hauing intelligence, that the Towne with all the Artillery, Victuals, and Ammunition, should be yeelded to the French, the Duke of the Inhabitants saued, they vnder the conduct to passe whither they would, sauing the Lord Deputy with 50. other, such as the Duke of Guise should appoint, to remaine prisoners, and to be put to no fine. The next morning the French men entred the Towne and possessed it. And forthwith all the men, women, and children, were commanded to leaue their owne and to goe into certaine places appointed for them, there to remaine till order were further taken for their sending away. The places appointed for them to remaine in, were chiefely feare, the two Churches of our Ladie, and of S. Nicholas, the Departure house, and the Staple, where they might part of that day, the night following, and the next day till the afternoone. And while they were thus in these seuerall places, peculiar mention was made in their hearings, straightly charging them that were Inhabitants of the Towne of Calais, hauing about them any money, plate, or iewels, to the value of 4. pence, to bring the same forthwith, and lay it on the high Altars of the said Churches, vpon paine of death, bearing them in hand they should be searched. The reason of which Proclamation, there was made a verie fruitfull offering, and while they were at the offering in the Churches, the French men rifled their houses, where they found inestimable riches and treasure: but especially in that Towne, Ordinance, Armour, and other Munitions, as the French men write, besides the great riches of gold and siluer, coine, iewels, plate, wools, and other Merchandize, (which was inestimable) there were found 30. peeces of brasse mounted on wheeles, and as many of yron, with such furniture of powder, pellets, armour, victuals, and other munitions of warre scarcely credible. On the next day being the seuenth of Ianuary in the afternoone, a great number of the meanest sort were suffered to passe out of the Towne in safetie, being guarded through the Army with a number of Scottish light Horsemen, who vsed the Englishmen very well and friendly, and after this, euery day for the space of three or foure dayes, there were sent away diuers companies, till they were all auoyded, those excepted that were reserued prisoners.

The French men enter the Towne of Calais.

There were in the Towne of Calais, 500. English Souldiers in ordinarie pay, and of the townes men about 200. fighting men: and there were in the whole number of men, women, and children, as they were accounted going out of the gate, 4200. persons or thereabout. The Lord Wentworth deputie of Calais, sir Ralph Chamberlaine Captaine of the Castle, Iohn Harlestone, Captaine of Rysbanke, Nicholas Alexander captaine of Newnam bridge, Edward Grimston Controuller, Iohn Rogers surueior, with other to the number in all of fiftie persons, were sent prisoners into France.

The losse of this towne seemed strange to many men of great experience, the same towne being so many yeeres so strongly fortified with all munitions that could be deuised, should now in so short space bee taken of our enemies without stroke or slaughter of any man, more then sir Anthony Agar, as ye haue heard. The Councell of England had with all expedition raised a great power, to haue beene sent for the defence of that Towne but it availed not, for such a tempest of wind arose, as the like in many yeeres had not been seene, whereby no ship could brooke the sea, by meanes whereof our men were forced to remaine at Douer in a readinesse to haue passed the seas, till newes was brought the towne was lost, as ye haue heard, and then euery man returned to his home. And shortly after, to wit, in the same moneth of Ianuary, the Strong Forts of Guisnes and Hames, though most valiantly defended by the Lord Gray of Wilton and others, Englishmen, was wonne by the French, and by them possessed: wherof Master George Ferrers hath written at large, for he collected the whole History of Queene Mary, as the same is set downe vnder the name of Richard Grafton.

George Ferrers in the raigne of Queene Mary.

The 18. of Ianuarie, Edward Hastings knight of the Garter, Lord Chamberlaine to the Queene, was created Baron Hastings of Loughborough at Westminster.

The 20. of Ianuary began a Parliament at Westminster.

Parliament.

In the moneth of March, a pres was graunted to the Queene by the Citizens of London, of twentie thousand pound, which was leuied of the Companies, for the which summe to be repaid againe, the Queene bound certaine lands, and also allowed for interest of the money 12. pounds of euery hundred for a yeere.

A pres forth Queene.

The twentie eight of Aprill, Francois the French Kings eldest sonne called the Dolphin, was married vnto Mary Stewart, daughter and sole heire of Iames the fift, late King of Scotland, in the Citie of Paris, with great pompe and triumph.

Queene of Scots married into France.

The losse of Calais being generally grieuous to the whole Realme of England, but especially to Queene Mary, she could not to trauell with King Philip her husband, as with her owne Councell, and Lords of the Realme which way should should be best to reuenge this iniurie, especially now whilest the French King was occupied in warres with King Philip, to endomage some of his countreys by way of inuasion, and to surprise some of his townes vpon a sudden. And amongst sundry deuises none was thought so fit to bee attempted as an hauen Towne in Flanders called Ysell, a Towne as well for the situation thereof conuenient to receiue fresh succours, and vittuall out of England by sea, as also for that it was knowne to the Queene and her Councell at that time not to be furnished with any garrison of souldiers sufficient to repulse the power of a Prince vpon a sudden. Wherefore there was immediately order giuen to Edward Lord Clinton then high Admirall of England, with all expedition to prepare himselfe, with all the Queenes ships of warre, furnished with souldiers, munition, and victuall, to ioyne with the Admirall of King Philip, who had the ouer from the said King to ioyne with the Nauy of England, for the atchieuing of this enterprise.

In the meane time while King Philip being absent from the Low Countries, was occupied with his wars in France, Monsier de Thermes Captaine of Calais, being a man very expert in the wars, taking out of Calais so many of his souldiers as might be spared from thence, ac-ioyned to them all the forces of the French garrysons in Arroys, Bollonois, and Picardie, whereof together with the souldiers of Calais, being to the number of 700. Footmen, and 300. light horsemen, there were assembled 14. ensignes of the French footmen, 18. Cornets of Almaines, 4. or 5. hundred men at armes of France, besides the light horsemen Scotters, amounting in the whole to the number of 9000. Footmen, and 1500. Horsemen, entred into Flanders with full determination to spoile B. Philippes countrey along the Sea coast, and namely a proper hauen towne called Dunkerke, and with like purpose to haue surprised the Towne of Graueling. This Captaine of pollicie passing by the towne of Gaueling, layd siege to a little Fort not farre from thence called Bergines, which he won with small resistance. And without long staying marched on to Dunkerke, and planting a siege there, battering the same so sharply with the Cannon, that within lesse than foure dayes hee won the towne, which he (like as the other) put to sacke, and after setting the towne on fire, he with his French men spred abroad, wasted the most fruitfull quarter of that part of Flanders almost to Newport: the army withdrew, and encamped within halfe a mile of Gaueling. The county Egmont lieutenant generall for King Philip in the low countrey, assembled all the power as well of King Philips garrisons, as also of men of warre in the low country, to the number of 14. M. or more footmen, and 2. or 3. M. horsemen, determining so to affront the French, that either they should passe no further into the country, or at the least to impeach them from the siege of Gaueling: Monsier de Thermes hearing of this power assembled, made all possible hast toward Gaueling, where he was no sooner arriued, but that hee saw his enemies ready ranged in the field, by reason whereof his Army was now nothing rife, but how he might bring home his army in safety to Calais. The county Egmont espying the French men bent to march away with the people of the countrey, cut betweene them and home, placing his battailes in such order, that the Frenchmen had no way to passe, but vpon the sands betweene the towne and the seaside: as by good chance lay a great fleet of D. Maries ships of warre, within eye shoot of whole iron shot the French men had no feare, but to passe as their iourney lay: and so hauing forces on either hand to fight at aduantage. Monsier de Thermes without staying any longer, caused his trumpets to passe ouer the riuer somewhat more towards the west of the English ships, and staid vpon the further side for the residue of his battels: there came such thicke haile shot of artillery out of the foure on the one side, and from the English ships on the other side, that there was a full battery made vpon the French men on all sides, which they nothelesse abode without breaking order for the time, when suddenly appeared before them two great troopes of horsemen of 1500. apiece part Iuart Rutters, and part Almaines, whereof the one in front, and the other in flanke, gaue strong charges vpon the French vantgard, who being well backed with their other battels, stoutly repulsed those two first troopes. Thus both parties being at a stay, the county Egmont with 180. men of armes, and his forte battels following, before the French had well recouered breath, rechearged vpon them with all his forces together so terrible, that he shooke all their battell and the other tooke them to flight, the victory was soone had, by reason the Almaines beaten backe with the artillerie, all well of the towne as of the ships, brake their order, and came not to the charge, whereby the whole charge of the battell rested vpon the French mens heads. This field was fought on the 13. of July vpon the sea sands, neere to Gaueling, where besides those that were slaine, which were esteemed to the number of fiue thousand, there were taken prisoners the Marshall de Thermes Captaine of Calais, Monsier Senerpont gouernour of Boleigne, Monsier Villebon gouernour of Hambye, Monsier Annabaule sonne to the late Admirall, Monsier de Montmillers gouernour of Arroule, Monsier de Channe gouernour of Coxbier, beside a number of gentlemen, Captaines and souldiers, but especially the bandes of Calais went to wracke, so as very few returned home. The admirals beeing named knew nothing of this matter, wherefore following their prescribed course, and hoping together at the place appointed, sayled from thence with prosperous wind, and on the third and twentieth of the same moneth, with seuentie shippes of warre appeared before the hauen of Conquet in Britaine at whose arriuall there, they sounded their trumpets, and with a peale of great ordinance, gaue a loud salue to the Britaines: and by eight of the clocke the same morning, the English men manning foorth their Ship-boates, recouered landing, and within short time became Maisters of the said Towne of Conquet, which they sacked and burnt with a great Abby, and many pretty Towns and Villages neere there abouts, where our men found great store of pillage.

Towne of Conquet burnt.

This being done, the English men withdrew downe to the Seaside, where their Ships lay ready to receiue them. But the Flemings being courteous of the spoile passing further into the land, before they could recouer their Ships againe, were encountered by the power of the Country, by whom there were slaine of them to the number of foure or fiue hundred. The Admirall perceiuing the power of the Country greatly to encrease, thought it not best to attempt any assault against the Towne of Brest, or to make longer abode there, but returned home.

In this meane time while King Philip and the French King with two most puissant Armies, affronted each other neere vnto the water of Some, either of them being obstinately bent to driue the other out of the field, for which cause they entrenched their Campes: diuers conferences were had concerning Peace, and at the last concluded vpon all controuersies, except the restitution of Calais required by the Ambassadours of Queene Mary, which the French part would in no wise heare of, by reason of which difficulty this treaty could take no effect, nor come to good conclusion. King Philip thinking himselfe bound to stand in that case with the Queene his wife, did therefore stay a long time before he concluded peace with the French King.

A treaty of Peace about the deliuery of Calais.

The second of July, the Lord Wenewoorth and diuers other that had beene Gouernours of Calais, were attainted of treason being then in France.

The 11. of July, within a mile of Nottingham, was a meruailous tempest of thunder, which, as it came through two Townes, beat downe all the houses and Churches, the Bells were cast to the out side of the Churchyards, and some webs of Lead foure hundred foote into the field, withen like a paire of Gloues.

An. Reg. 6. Tempest at Nottingham.

The riuer of Trent running betweene the two Townes, the water with the mud in the bottome was carried a quarter of a mile, and cast against the trees, the trees were plucked vp by the rootes, and cast twelue score off. Also a childe was taken forth of a mans hands two speares length high, and carried a hundred foote, and then let fall, wherewith his arme was broken, and so died. Fiue or sixe men there about were slaine, and neither flesh nor skin perished: there fell some hailestones that were 15. inches about, &c.

This yeere in Harueſt time, the quartaine Agues continued in like manner or more vehemently, than they had done the last yeare passed, wherethrough died many olde people, and specially Priests, so that a great number of Parishes were vnserued, and no Curates to be gotten, and much corne was left in the field for lacke of workmen and labourers.

Quartaine Agues raigned sore.

In the beginning of this yeare, corne rose to foureteene shillings the quarter, and wood was sold scant in London, and was sold for thirteene and fourteene shillings the thousand of billets, and coales at ten pence the sacke, by reason of the great death and sickneſſe the last Sommer for lacke of helpe and carriage.

Corne and wood dare.

King Philip being absent out of the Realme (as ye haue heard) and Queene Mary being dangerously sicke, ended her life at her Mannour of Saint Iames by Charing Crosse the 17. of November being Thursday, in the yeare 1558. when she had raigned fiue yeares, 4. monethes, and odde dayes. The same day deceased Cardinall Poole at Lambeth, and a little before, two of her Physitians, besides diuers Bishops and Noble men. Queene Mary was buried at Westm. and Cardinall Poole at Canterbury.

THE

THE LIFE AND RAIGNE OF QVEENE ELIZABETH.

An. Reg. 1. 1558.

THe Parliament house being aſcertained of Queene Maries death, many were amazed, and some reioyced. Doctor Heath, Archbishop of Yorke, then Lord Chancelour, published vnto the whole assemblie, the immediate right of the Lady Elizabeth, which they all acknowledged, and forthwith shee was Proclaimed in Westminster Hall, and London, the Queen being now at Bishops Hatfield, was not Proclaimed there vntill two dayes after.

This newes of Queene Maries death was deadly vnto all Abbots, Priors, & Priorasses, &c. who saw their suddaine deſolation before their face, and although the Queene were resolued to alter the manner of Religion, yet she ordered all things to remaine, as shee found them vntill the end of the next Parliament, saue only by her Proclamation, commanded that none should preach but such as should be specially licensed thereunto, and that such rites and ceremonies should be vsed in all Churches as had beene vsed in her Highneſſe Chappell, and that the Epiſtle, and Gospel, with Procession, should be read in the English tongue, in the time of Masse.

Proclamation.

The 19. of November, the Queene came from Hatfield, being met, by the Bishops at Highgate, who kneeling, acknowledged their Allegeance, which shee very graciously accepted, giuing to euery of them her hand to kisse, except Bishop Bonner; which shee omitted for sundry seuerities, in the time of his authority, and was very dutifully, and honourably met, by the Lord Maior and whole Estate of London, and so brought to the Charterhouse, where she stayed many dayes, from thence entred in at Cripplegate, rid in State along by the Wall, to the Tower, and the 28 of December she removed thence to Somerset house.

Great thanks giuen from many parts.

The Oath of Supremacie.

The Queene being now to take an exact survay of all her Clergie, and Officers of State, began to put in practise the Oath of Supremacy, which her Father first ordained, and amongst many which refused that Oath, was the Lord Chancelour aforesaid; yet neuertheleſſe, the Queene hauing a good respect vnto him, would not deprive him of his title, but committed the custody of the great Seale vnto Sir Nicholas Bacon, then Attourny of the Court of Wards, who from that time was called Lord Keeper, and by Parliament confirmed to haue as ample power, and preroguatiue, as the ancient Lord Chancelours of England, in which place he liued and died very honourably.

The 13. of December, in the Abby of Westminster, the corpes of Queene Mary was very Royally enterred with all solemne Funerall rites, and a Masse of Requiem: her body was laid on the North side of Henry the seuenth his Chappell.

Queene Mary buried.

The 24. of December in the same place, and in like Princely manner were performed solemne obsequies, for the late famous Emperor Charles the fift, who died in September, a rich pall of gold lying vpon the Hearse, the Emperours Ambassadour was three Mourner, accompanied with many Princes and Peeres of England.

Obsequies for Charles the Emperour.

The 12. of January, the Queene went by Barge, from Whitehall to the Tower, the Lord Maior and Citizens, attended her Highneſſe with Musicke and many triumphant shewes vpon the water.

The 13. of January the Queene in the Morning created Sir William Parre Lord Marques of Northampton, Edward Seymour sonne to the late Duke of Somerset Viscount Beauchamp, and Earle of Hertford, Thomas Howard, Viscount Bindon, Sir Oliuer Saint-John Barron of Bletso, and Sir Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon.

Creation of Lords.

The morrow after being the 14. day of January, the Queene with great Maiestie, rode through London to Westminster, against which time, the Lord Maior, and Citizens of London had furnished the Streetes with stately Pageants, sumptuous shewes and deuises; the next day shee was Crowned by Doctor Ogiethorp, Bishop of Carlile.

Queene Elizabeth crowned.

At this time the English Nation was wonderfully deuided in opinions, as well in matters of Ecclesiasticall gouernment, as in diuers points of Religion, by reason of these changes, within the compaſſe of 12. yeares, and euery of those changes, varying from that which was authorized by Henry the eight, viz King Henry retained the Ecclesiasticall Supremacie, with the first fruites and tenths, maintained seuen Sacraments, with Obits, and Masse, for the quicke and dead, King Edward abolished the Masse, authorized one Booke of Common Prayers of the clocke the same morning, the English men manning forth their Ship-boates, recouered landing, and within short time became Masters of the said Towne of Conquet, which they sacked and burnt with a great Abby, and many pretty Townes and Villages neere there abouts, where our men found great store of pillage.

This being done, the English men withdrew downe to the Seaside, where their Ships lay ready to receiue them. But the Flemings being couetous of the spoile passing further into the land, before they could recouer their Ships againe, were encountered by the power of the Country, by whom there were slaine of them to the number of foure or fiue hundred. The Admirall perceiuing the power of the Country greatly to encrease, thought it not best to attempt any assault against the Towne of Brest, or to make longer abode there, but returned home.

The 5. of Ianuary, the Queene rode by Barge, from Whitehall to the Tower, the Lord Maior and Citizens, attended her Highnesse with Musicke and many triumphant shewes vpon the water.

Creation of Lords.

The 13. of January the Queene in the Tower created Sir William Parre Lord Marques of Northampton, Edward Seymour sonne to the late Duke of Somerset Viscount Beauchamp, and Earle of Hertford; Thomas Howard, Viscount Bindon, Sir Oliuer Saint-Iohn Baron of Bletso, and Sir Henry Carey, Lord Hunsdon.

Prayers

Prayers in English, with hallowing the bread, and wine, &c. and eſtabliſhed onely the two Sacraments; Queene Mary reſtored all things according to the Church of Rome, reduced all Eccleſiaſticall Iuriſdiction, vnto the Papall obedience, with reſtitution of firſt fruites, and tenths, permitting nothing within her dominion, repugnant to the Roman catholike Church; Queene Elizabeth in this her firſt Parliament, holden at Weſtminſter the 25. of this moneth of January, expelled the Papall Supremacie, reſumed the firſt fruites and tenthes, repreſſed the Maſſe, and for the generall vniformity of her Dominions, eſtabliſhed the booke of Common Prayer in the Engliſh tongue, forbidding all other, and within fewe yeeres after that, great care was taken, to haue the ſame tranſlated into Welch for particular vſe of the ancient Brittaines.

Parliament. The 25. of January, began a Parliament at Weſtminſter, before the eſtates whereof Doctor Cox late come from beyond the Seas, and ſometime Schoolemaſter to King Edward the firſt, made a learned Sermon.

The firſt fruites and tenths granted to the Crowne. In this Parliament, the firſt fruites and tenths were graunted to the Crowne, and alſo the ſupreame gouernment euer the ſtate Eccleſiaſticall.

Likewiſe the booke of Common Prayer, and adminiſtration of the Sacraments in our vulgar tongue, was reſtored, to be done as in the time of King Edward the firſt.

Moreouer, in the time of this Parliament, a motion was made by the Common houſe, that the Queenes Maieſtie might be ſued vnto, to graunt her Graces lycence to the Speaker, Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes, to haue acceſſe vnto her Graces preſence, to declare vnto her matter of great importance, concerning the ſtate of this her Graces Realme. The which Petition being moued to her Grace, ſhee moſt honeſtly agreed, and conſented thereunto, and aſſigned a day of hearing: when the day came, the Speaker and the Common houſe, reſorted vnto her Graces Pallace at Weſtminſter, called the White Hall: and in the great Gallery there, her Grace moſt honeſtly ſhewed her ſelfe, ready to heare their motion and petition. And when the Speaker had ſolemnly and eloquently ſet forth the meſſage, the ſpeciall matter whereof was, to moue her Grace to marriage, whereby to all our comforts wee might enioy the Royall iſſue of her body to Raigne ouer vs, &c.

Speech made to her Graces for her marriage.

Anſwere of her Maieſty. The Queenes Maieſtie after a little pauſe, made this anſwere following. As I haue good cauſe, ſo doe I giue you all my hearty thankes, for the good zeale and louing care you beare to haue, as well towards me, as to the whole eſtate of your Country: your petition I perceiue, conſiſteth of three parts, and mine anſwere to the ſame ſhall depend of two.

Alex. Euesham. And to the firſt part I may ſay vnto you, that from my yeeres of vnderſtanding, ſith I firſt had conſideration of my life, to be borne a ſeruitour of Almighty God, I happily choſe this kinde of life, in the which I yet liue, which I aſſure you for mine owne part, hath hitherto beſt contented my ſelfe, and I truſt hath beene moſt acceptable vnto God. From the which, if either ambition of high eſtate offered to mee in marriage by the pleaſure and appointment of my Prince, whereof I haue ſome Records in this preſence (as you our Treaſurer well know) or if eſchewing the danger of mine enemies, or the auoyding of the perill of death, whoſe meſſenger, or rather a continuall watchman, the Princes indignation, was no little time daily before mine eyes, by whoſe meanes, although I know, or iuſtly may ſuſpect, yet I will not now vtter, or if the whole cauſe were in my ſiſter her ſelfe, I will not now burthen her there, withall: becauſe I will not charge the dead: if any of theſe, I ſay, could haue driuen or withdrawen me from this kinde of life, I had not, now remained in this eſtate wherein you ſee me, but ſo conſtant haue I alwayes continued in this determination, although my youth and yeeres may ſeeme to ſome hardly to agree together: yet is it moſt true, that at this day I ſtand free from any other meaning, that either I haue had in times paſt, or haue at this preſent, with which trade of life I am ſo throughly acquainted, that I truſt, God, who hath hitherto there, in preſerued and led me by the hand, will not of his goodneſſe ſuffer me to goe alone.

For the other part, the manner of your petition I doe well like, and take it in good part, becauſe that is ſimple, and containeth no limitation of place or perſon, for if it had been otherwiſe, I muſt needes haue miſliked it very much, and thought it in you a very great preſumption, being vnkitting, and altogether vnmeete for you to require them that may commaund, or thoſe to appoint, whoſe parts are to deſire, or ſuch to binde and limit, whoſe duties are to obey, or to take vpon you to draw my loue to your liking, or to frame my will to your fantaſie: for a guerdon conſtrained, and gift freely giuen can neuer agree together. Neuertheleſſe, if any of you be in ſuſpect, that whenſoeuer it may pleaſe God to enclyne my heart to another kinde of life, you may well aſſure your ſelues, my meaning is not to doe or determine any thing, wherewith the Realme may or ſhall haue iuſt cauſe to be diſcontented. And therefore put that cleane out of your heads, for I aſſure you, what credit my aſſurance may haue with you, I cannot tell, but what credit it ſhall deſerue to haue, the ſequell ſhall declare, I will neuer in that matter conclude any thing that ſhall be preiudiciall to the Realme: for the weale, go I, and ſafely whereof, I will neuer thinne to ſpend my life. And whom ſoeuer my chance ſhall be to light vpon, I truſt hee ſhall be ſuch, as ſhall be as carefull for the Realme and you, I will not ſay as my ſelfe, becauſe I cannot ſo certainely determine of any other, but at the leaſt-wiſe by my good will and deſire he ſhall be ſuch as ſhall be as carefull for the preſeruation of the realm, and you, as my ſelfe. And albeit, it might pleaſe Almighty God to continue mee ſtill in this minde, to liue out of the ſtate of marriage, yet is it not to be feared, but hee will ſo worke in in my heart, and in your wiſedomes, as good prouiſion by his helpe may be made conuenient, whereby the Realme ſhall not remaine deſtitute of an heire, that may be a fit Gouernor, and peraduenture more beneficiall to the Realme, then ſuch offſpring as may come of mee. For though I be neuer ſo carefull of your well doings, and minde euer ſo to be, yet may iſſue grow out of kinde, and become perhaps vngracious. And in the end this ſhall be for me ſufficient, that a marble ſtone ſhall declare, that a Queene hauing raigned ſuch a time, liued, and died a Virgine. And here I end, and take your comming vnto me in good part, and giue vnto you all eſt-ſtones my hearty thankes, more yet for your zeale and good meaning, then for your petition.

Preachers at the Spittle, and at Paules croſſe. In the Eaſter Holidayes, preached at the Spittle, Doctor Bill the Queenes Almoner, Doctor Coxe, and Maſter Horne, the two laſt came lately from beyond the Seas.

On Low Sunday, the ſecond of Aprill, Maſter Sampſon, late came from beyond the Seas, made the Rehearſall Sermon at Paules Croſſe: but when the Lord Maior and Aldermen came to their places in Paules Churchyard, the Pulpit doore was locked, and the key could not be heard of: whereupon the Lord Maior ſent for a Smith to open the locke, which was done, and when the Preacher ſhould enter the place, it was found very nithy and vncleane: moreouer, the Sergeant that had the key of the place, where the Biſhops and Prelates vſe to ſtand to heare the Sermon, could not be found: whereupon certaine Gentlemen with a fourme, brake open the doore. This diſorder chanced, by reaſon that ſince Chriſtmaſſe laſt paſt, there was not a Sermon preached at Paules Croſſe, for an inhibition had beene ſent from the Councell vnto the Biſhop of London, that he ſhould admit no Preacher, becauſe of the controuerſie betwixt the Biſhoppes, and them of the Clergie that were new returned into the Realme from beyond the Seas.

Conference appointed betwixt the ab Biſhops and other Preachers. The laſt of March, the Parliament yet continuing, a conference was begun at Weſtminſter, concerning Articles of Religion, betwixt the Biſhops and other of the Clergy on the one part, and certaine learned Preachers, of whom ſome had beene in dignity in the Church of England, before that time on the other part. The declaration of the proceeding wherein and the cauſe of the breaking vp of the ſame conference, by default and contempt of certaine Biſhops, part of the ſaid conference was publiſhed in a Treatiſe printed by Richard Iugge and Cawood, Printers to the Queenes Maieſtie as followeth.

The Queenes moſt excellent Maiеſtie, hauing heard of diuerſitie of opinions in certaine matters of Religion, amongſt ſundry of her louing ſubiects, and being very deſirous to haue the ſame reduced to ſome godly and Chriſtian concord, thought it beſt by the aduice of the Lords, and other her priuie Councell, as well for the ſatisfaction of perſons doubtfull, as alſo for the knowledge of the very truth in certaine matter of difference: to haue a conuenient choſen number of the beſt learned of either part, to conferre together their opinions and reaſons, and thereby to come to ſome good and charitable agreement. And hereupon by her Maieſties commandement, certaine of her priuy Councell declared this purpoſe to the Archbiſhop of Yorke (being alſo one of the ſame priuie Councell) and required him that he would impart the ſame to ſome of the Biſhops, and to make choyſe of eight, nine, or ten of them, and that there ſhould be the like number named of the other part: and further alſo declared to him (as then was ſuppoſed) what the matters ſhould be: And as for the time, it was thought meete to be as ſeene as poſſible might be agreed vpon. And then after certaine dayes paſt, it was ſignified by the ſaid Archbiſhop, that there was appointed by ſuch of the Biſhops to whom he had imparted this matter, eight perſons, that is to ſay, foure Biſhops, and foure Doctors, who were content at the Queenes Maieſties commandement to ſhew their opinions, and as he termed it, render account of their faith in thoſe matters which were mentioned, and that ſpecially in writing, although he ſaid they thought the ſame ſo determined, as there was no cauſe to diſpute vpon them.

It was hereupon fully reſolued by the Queenes Maieſtie, with the aduiſe aforeſaid, that according to their deſire, it ſhould be in writing on both parts, for auoyding of much alteration in words, and that the ſaid Biſhops ſhould, becauſe they were in authority, of degree ſuperiours, firſt declare their mindes and opinions to the matter, with their reaſons in writing: and the other number being alſo 8. men of good degree in ſchooles, & ſome hauing bin of dignity in the Church of England, if they had any thing to ſay to the contrary, ſhould the ſame day declare their opinions in like manner. And ſo each of them ſhould deliuer their writings to the other, to be conſidered what were to be improoued therein, and the ſame to declare againe in writing at ſome other conuenient day, and the like order to be kept in all the reſt of the matters: all this was fully agreed vpon with the Archb. of Yorke, and ſo alſo ſignified to both parties. And immediatly hereupon diuers of the Nobility & ſtates of the Realme, vnderſtanding that ſuch a meeting and conference ſhould be, and that in certain matters, whereupon the Court of Parliament conſequently following, ſome lawes might be grounded: they made earneſt meanes to her Maieſty, that the parties of this conference, might put and reade their aſſertions in the Engliſh tongue, and that in the preſence of them of the Nobility, & others of the Parliament houſe, for the better ſatisfaction & inabling of their owne iudgements, to treat and conclude of ſuch lawes as mought depend thereupon. This alſo being thought very reaſonable, was ſignified to both parties, & ſo fully agreed vpon, & the day appointed for the firſt meeting to be the Friday in the foreenoone, being the laſt of March, at Weſtm. Church, where both for good order & for honor of the conference, by the Queenes Maieſties commandement, the Lords and others of the priuy Councell were present, and a great part of the Nobility also: and notwithstanding the former order appointed and consented vnto by both parties, yet the Bishop of Winchester, and his Collegues, alleaging they had mistaken that their assertions, and reasons should be written, and so onely recited out of the booke, said, their booke was not ready then written, but they were ready to argue and dispute, and therefore they would for that time repeate in speech that which they had to say to the first proposition. This variation from the order, and specially from that which themselues had by the said Archbishop in writing before required, adding thereto the reason of the Apostle, That to contend in words, is profitable to nothing but to subuersion of the hearer, seemed to the Queenes Maiesties Councell somewhat strange, and yet was it permitted without any great reprehension, because they ceased themselues with mistaking the order, and agreed, that they should not faile but put it in writing, and according to the former order, deliuer it to the other part, and so the said Bishop of Winchester and his Collegues, appointed Doctor Cole Deane of Paules, to be the vtterer of their mindes, who partly by speech onely, and partly by reading of Authorities written, and at certaine times being informed of his Collegues what to say, made a declaration of their meaning, and their reasons to the first proposition, which being ended, they were asked by the priuie Councell, if any of them had any more to be said: and they said no. So as then the other part was licensed to shew their mindes, which they did according to the first order, exhibiting all that which they meant to be propounded in a booke written, which after a prayer and inuocation made most humbly to Almighty God, for the ending of them with his holy spirit, and a protestation also to stand to the doctrine of the Catholique Church, builded vpon the Scriptures, and the doctrine of the Prophets and the Apostles, was distinctly read by one Robert Horne Batcheler in Diuinity, late Deane of Duresme. And the same being ended with some likelihood, as it seemed, that the same was much allowable to the audience, certaine of the Bishops began to say contrary to their former answere, that they had much more to say to this matter: wherein although they might haue beene well reprehended for such manner of cauillation, yet for auoyding of any mistaking of orders in this colloquie or conference, and for that they should vtter all that which they had to say: it was both ordered, and thus openly agreed vpon of both parts in the full audience, that vpon the Monday following, the Bishops should bring their mindes and reasons in writing to the second assertion, and the last also if they could, and first reade the same, and that done the other part should bring likewise theirs to the same. And being read, each of them should deliuer to other the same writings. And in the meane time the Bishops should put in writing, not onely all that which Doctor Cole had that day vttered: but all such other matters as they any otherwise could thinke of for the same, and as done as they might possible, to send the same booke touching the first assertion to the other part, and they should receiue of them that writing which Master Horne had there read that day, and vpon Monday it should be agreed what day they should exhibite their answers touching the first proposition. Thus both parts assented thereto, and the assembly quietly dismissed. And therefore vpon Monday, the like assembly began againe, at the place and houre appointed, and there, vpon what smister or disordered meaning is not yet knowne (though in some part it be vnderstanded) the Bishop of Winchester and his Collegues, and especially Lincolne, refused to exhibite or reade according to the former notorious order on Friday, that which they had prepared for the second assertion. And thereupon by the Lord Keper of the great Seale, they being gently and fauourably required to keepe the order appointed: and that taking no place, being secondly as it behoued, pressed with more earnest request, they neither regarding the authority of that place, nor their owne reputation, nor the credit of the cause, vtterly refused that to doe. And finally, being againe particularly euery of them apart distinctly by name, required to vnderstand their opinions therein, they all sauing one (which was the Abbot of Westminster, hauing some more consideration of order, and his duty of obedience then the other) vtterly and plainely denied to haue their booke read, some of them as more earnestly than other, some so also, some other more vndiscreetly, and vnreuerently then others. Whereupon, giuing such example of disorder, stubbornesse, and selfe-will, as hath not beene seene and suffered in such an honourable assembly, being of the two Estates of this Realme, the Nobility, and the Commons, besides the presence of the Queenes Maiesties most Honourable priuie Councell, the same assembly was dismissed, and the godly and most Christian purpose of the Queenes Maiestie made frustrate. And afterward, for the contempt so notoriously made, the Bishops of Winchester and Lincolne, hauing most obstinately both disobeyed common authority, and varied manifestly from their owne order, and especially Lincolne, who shewed more folly than the other, were condignly committed to the Tower of London, and the rest (sauing the Abbot of Westminster) stode bound to make daily and personall appearance before the Councell, and not to depart the Citie of London and Westminster, vntill further order were taken with them for their disobedience and contempt.

The three propositions, whereupon conference was determined to haue beene at Westminster.

1 It is against the word of God, and the custome of the ancient Church, to vse a tongue vnknowne to the people, in common prayer, and the administration of the Sacraments.

2 Euery Church hath authority to appoint, take away and change ceremonies and Ecclesiasticall Ecclesiasticall rites, so the same be to edification.

3 It cannot be proued by the word of God, that there is in the Masse offered vp a sacrifice propitiatory for the quicke and the dead.

The Bishops and Doctors sate on the one side of the Quier at a table, and the other learned men sate at another table on the other side of the Quier. And at the vpper end thereof at another table sate the Queenes Councell to haue heard some good conclusion of the said conference, but it came to small effect, as ye haue heard.

The 5. of Aprill the Bishops of Winchester Doctor White, and of Lincolne, Doctor Watson were committed to the Tower of London.

Treaty of peace termed.

In this meane time, a treatie of peace, which had beene in hand the last yeere, betwixt the 2. Kings, of Spaine and France, was now renued againe, and the deputies were appointed to meet at Chasteau Cambresis, a 6. miles distant from Cambray. For the King of Spaine, the Duke of Alua, the Prince of Oringe, the Bishop of Arras, Rigomes de Silua, Earle of Fells, Monsieur Vigilius Zwichen knight and president of the priuie Councell in the Low countries, who was letted by sicknesse, and could not come. For the French King, there came the Cardinall of Lorraine, the Constable, the Marshall of Saint Andrew, the Bishop of Orliance, and Claude de Aubespine the said Kings secretary. For the Queene of England, the Bishop of Ely, the Lord William Howard, Baron of Effingham, Lord Chamberlaine to the said Queene, Doctor Nicholas Wotton, Deane of Canterbury and Doctor. After this treaty had continued long, and now relied nothing to stay the from concluding a generall peace, but onely the article touching Caleis, at length the matter was also accorded by a speciall treaty betwixt the M. Paiestly of England and the French King. The substance of which article was, that Caleis should rest in the Frenchmens hands for the terme of 8. yeres and at the end of that terme, to render the same to the M. Highnes, or for default thereof, to forfeit vnto her, the sum of 500000. Croines: and for sweety hereof, to deliuer 4. hostages, such as her Paiestly should thinke sufficient. It was concluded also a firme peace betwixt the Realms of England and Scotland, such fortresses to be raised as had bin built, and made by the Scots and the French in the borders towards England: Sir Iohn Mason knight, secretary for the French tongue, was sent ouer in post with instructions vnto the English Commissioners, after whose comming, within two or three dayes a generall peace was concluded betwixt all the parties. And so on the 7. of Aprill, the said peace was proclaimed, to wit, betwixt the Queenes Maiestie on the one party, and the French King on the other, their Realmes, Dominions and subiects, and likewise betwixt her Maiestie and the King, Dolphine, and Queene of Scots his wife, their Realmes, Dominions and subiects. This Proclamation was made at London by Garter and Norrey, Kings at armes, accompanied with 3. other Heraults, and 5. Trumpeters, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in their skarlet Gownes, being present on horseback.

Peace proclaimed.

Commissioners for the Prince.

Conclusion of peace concluded with commission to deliuer Caleis to the English.

The 22. of Aprill, William Lord Wentworth late deputy of Caleis, was arraigned at Westminster vpon an inditement of treason found against him, in the late Queene Maries dayes for the losse of Caleis, but hee was acquit by his Peeres, the Lord Marquesse of Northampton, sitting that day as chiefe Steward of England, so hee was deliuered presently vnto his house, without returning to any prison.

Lord Wentworth arraigned and quit.

The 8. of May the Parliament broke vp, in which Parliament, besides other things before recited, a Subsidy was granted to the Queene of two shillings eightpence the pound, of moueable goods, and foure shillings of lands to be payd at two seuerall payments of euery person, Spirituall and Temporall.

Church seruice in the English tongue.

The 8. of May, being Whitsunday, the seruice in Churches began according to the Booke of Common prayer, set forth and established by this last Parliament, correspondent to that of King Edwards time.

The 2. of July, the Citizens of London had a muster before the Queenes Maiestie at Greenwich in the Parke, of a 1400. men, whereof 800. were pikemen all in fine coslets, 400. harquebuts in shirts of male, with morians, & 200. halberters in Almain riuets, which were furnished and set forth by the company of the citie of London: they had to euery hundred two Mistelers, richly apparelled, and 12. Wardens of the best companies riding in coats of blacke veluet, to conduct them with drums and fifes, and fiue ensignes, all in Ierkins of white bridges lattern, cut, and lined with blacke sarsenet, with caps, hosen and scarfes according, the Captaines Robert Constable, and maister Saunders, brought them in battell ray afore the Queene, euen as they should haue fought, which made a goodly shew before her Maiestie, the Emperours and French Kings Ambassadours being present.

Citizens of London mustered at Greenwich.

In the moneth of July, the old Bishops of England then liuing, were called and examined by certaine of the Q. Maiesties Councel, where the Bishops of Yorke, Ely, and London, with other, to the number of 13. or 14. for refusing to take the oath touching the Queenes supremacy and other Articles, they were deprined from their Bishopricks. And likewise diuers Deans, archdeacons, Parsons, and vicars, deprined from their benefices, and some committed to prison in the Tower, Fleet, Marshalsea the Kings bench.

Commissioners. Commissioners were likewise appointed for the establishing of Religion through the whole Realme. For London were appointed, sir Richard Sackvile Knight, Doctor Horne a Diuine, Doctor Huicke, a Civilian, and maister Salvage, Iniunctions. who called before them diuers persons of euery Parish, and sware them to enquire and present vpon certaine iniunctions.

Also the houses of Religion by Queene Mary, Houses suppressed. as the Priory of Saint Iohn of Jerusalem by Smithfield, the Nuns and brethren of Sion and Sheene, the blacke Friers in Smithfield, and the Friers of Greenwich were all suppressed: the Abbot and Monkes of Westminster, were put out, a Deane, Prebends, and Canons placed there, and so named the Colledge of Westminster, founded by Queene Elizabeth.

Church images burned. On the euen of S. Bartholomew, the day and the morrow after, they were burned in Paules Churchyard, Cheape, and diuers other places of the City of London, all the roodes and other Images of the Churches, in some places the Copes, vestments, altar clothes, bookes, banners sepulchres, and rood lofts were burned.

Churches in London striken and broken by tempest. The 5. of September, there fell a three houres tempest at London, in the forenoone, in the end whereof a great lightning, with a terrible clap of thunder, strake the spire (being stone) of the steeple of Allhallowes Church in Bredstreete, about a ten foot beneath the top, out of the which fell a stone that slew a dogge, and cuerthrew a man playing with the same dogge, and not long after, the same spire was taken downe by the Churchwardens, to saue charges of repairing. And at the same instant, by the same tempest, one of the South doores of Saint Dionies Church, in Fanchurch streete, with the doore of the rencstire of the same Church, were both striken through and broken.

Obsequie for the French King. The 8. and 9. of September, a solemne obsequie was kept in Paules Church at London for Henry the second of that name K. of France, who deceased about the 10. of July last past, of a wound receiued the 29. of June, in running at Tilt, in solemne Iusts holden at Paris, in honor of the marriage celebrated betwixt his sister the Lady Margaret of France, and Philibert, Duke of Sauoy. He was striken on the viser with a launce, as he ran against the Count Montgomerie: the splits entring by the sight of his head, piercing through his eye into his head, so perished his braine, that there was no meane to saue his life. The obsequie for him was kept in very solemne wise, with a rich hearse made like an imperiall Crowne, suteyned with 8. pillars, and couered with blacke velure, with a valence fringed with gold, and richly hanged with scutchions, penons, and banners of the French Kings armes, without any lights. And on the hearse was layd a palle of cloth of gold, with a coat armour of the armes of France, and a crest with an imperiall crowne standing vpon the hearse. Doctor Parker Archbishop of Canterbury elect, Doctor Barlow Bishop of Chester elect, and Doctor Scory, Bishop of Hereford elect, executing at the dirige of the Euening song in English, they sitting in the Bishop of London seate, in the vpper Quire in surplices, with Doctors Hoods about their shoulders. The cheefe mourner was the Marquesse of Winchester, Lord Treasurer, assisted with 10. other Lords mourners, with all the Heraults in blacke, and their coat armours vppermost.

On the morrow being the 9. of September, a Sermon was preached by Doctor Scory, in place of Doctor Grindall Bishop of London. After the Sermon, fire of the Lords, mourners, receiued the communion with the Bishops, which Bishops were in Copes on their surplices, onely at the ministration of the said Communion. Which being finished, there was a great dinner kept in the Bishop of Londons palace by Paules where the mourners apparelled them, and so ended the solemnitie of the said obsequies.

About the last of September, Iohn Duke of Finland, second sonne to Gustabus King of Swethen, was sent by his Father to treat a marriage for his eldest brother Ericus, with the Quenes Maiestie of England, he arriued at Harwich in Essex, and was there honorably receiued and entertained by the Earle of Oxford, which sayd Earle, and the Lord Robert Dudley, with a goodly band of Gentlemen and Yeomen, conueyed him to London, where he was receiued of diuers Knights and Gentlemen of the Court, on the 5. of October, and was with his traine of about the number of 50. persons well hosted, conueyed to the Bishop of Winchesters place in Southwarke, where he was lodged during his abode here, and remoued from thence 2. dayes before Easter homeward, and sped on his message, as may appeare by that which followeth taken out of Iohannes Lewenclauij, comment. de bellis Moscouitis.

Ericus King of Sweden son of Gustabus late King of the sayd Kingdome, hauing committed to prison his brother Iohn Duke of Finland, whom a little before he had employed into England on an Ambassage to the Queens Maiestie, whom he sued to for marriage, and had his suite receiued: againe, the second time solicited her Maiestie in the same suite, notwithstanding (to his great dishonour, and (as it fell out) his suit disgrace) he attempted the same matter with the youngest daughter of Philip Iaugraue van Hessen, at whose hand (hauing the second time bin reiected of her Maiestie here) the matter being knowne there, he also not only receiued a denial, but the Lady was by her father bestowed vpon Adolfe D. Van-Holst vncle of Frederick King of Denmarke, then enemie of the sayd Ericus.

The 22. of December, Chamberlen that was Captain of the Castle of Caleis, and Hurlestone that was Captaine of Risebanke were condemned of high Treason, because they left their charge, when the French men came thither.

In this meane time, through controuersie raised betwixt the Scottish Nobilitie, and the Quene Dowager of Scotland, which chanced specially specially about matters of Religion, certaine of the Lords there inuying reformation therein and the Quene resisting them to her power, diuerse companies of souldiers, and men of warre, were sent out of France into Scotland to ayde the sayd Quene, where they were placed in diuers townes and forts, to the displeasure of the most part of the Scottish Nobilitie, who were forced to sue vnto the Quene of England for ayde to expell the French. Their suite was the better liked of, for that it was doubted lest the French men vnder pretence of bringing an army into Scotland to appease the Scots, might attempt some inuasion here in England, considering that by procurement, as was thought, of the Duke of Guise, Uncle to the Q. of France and Scotland, a title should seeme to bee pretended by his neece the aforesayd Quene, as might be gathered by coniectures. The names of the Lords of Scotland that made suite for ayde against the Frenchmen at that season were these.

The Queenes Maiestie with aduice of her graces Counsell, considering of this waighty businesses, and withall, foreseeing the malicious purpose of her aduersaries, and how the Quene of Scots was in France married and governed, so as she was not able to vse the liberte of her Crowne, did thinke it best to preuent such mischiefes as might ensue, if timely remedy were not vsed to displace such dangerous neighbours, the Frenchmen, that began to nestle themselues thus strongly so neare at hand. Hereupon was a power raised and sent foorth, both by Sea and land, the Duke of Norfolke being appointed Generall, and sent into the North for the direction thereof. And first Master W. Winter appointed vice Admirall of the Queenes Naune, Northwards made saile toward Scotland, and waiting along the coast, in the moneth of January, came into the Forth, and so to the rode of Leith, and there cast Anchor, as well to impeach the landing of such Frenchmen as might happily bee sent forth of France, against the Scottish Lords of the congregation, as also to keepe them that lay in Inse keith from victuals: moreouer after that the army by land was come together into the North parts, and had soiourned a while at Barwicke and thereabouts, the Lord Grey of Wilton being appointed Generall of the sayd army, departed with the same, and marched to Coldingham, where they encamped that night.

The 30. of March, Sir Iames Croft, and Sir George Howard, departed from Barwicke to the army, with all the lances and light horsemen containing the number of 1250. horses. The number of Footmen, more then 6000. The cheefe gouernours of which army were these: The Lord Grey of Wilton Lieutenant Generall, Sir Iames Croft assistant with him in the charge, the Lord Scrope L. Marshall, sir George Howard Generall of the men at armes and demilances, maister Barnaby fitz Patricke his lieutenant, Sir Henry Percy, Generall of the light horsemen: Thomas Hugghen Esquire Provost Marshall, Tho: Gower, Esq. of the Ordinance, M. William Pellham Captaine of the Pioners, Edward Randall Esquire, Sergeant Maior, Maister Thomas Borrough, Maister Cuthbert Vaughan, Maister Williams, and maister Cornewall Corporals, this day at night the army encamped at Dunglas, and thereabout.

The last of March, the army marching by Dunbar, there issued out of the towne certaine horsemen, and footmen, offering to skirmish, towards whom certaine harquebusiers made forward, but they kept themselues within their strength, two of the enemies horsemen, and one footman were slaine. This done the army marched on to Linton bridges, where the footmen encamped that night. The horsemen lay at Hadington and in diuers other small townes, Sir Iames Crofts lay at Clarkington west to Hadington, at the Lord of Tockburnes house. The first of Aprill the campe remoued to Salt Preston, and there incamped: this euening sir Iames Croft, with diuers of the Captaines in his company, met with the Earle of Arraine, the Lord Iames Prior of Saint Andrewes, the maister of Marwel, Sir William Kirkaudy Lord of Grange and diuers other of the Scottish Nobility, with three hundred horse in their traine.

After they had saluted each other, they rode together to Salt Preston, where the Lord Grey Lord Lieutenant met them, where they entred into communication and after departed. The second of Aprill, the Lord Grey, Sir Iames Croft, the Lord Scrope, Sir George Howard, with other Captaines rode to Musselburgh Church, whither came to them the Duke Chateau le Raule, with his son the Earle of Arraine, the Earles of Argule, Glencaine, Southerland, Mentith, and Rothus, the Lord Iames Prior of Saint Andrews, the Lord Ruythuen alias Riuen the Lord Ogletree, the Lord Boyde, the master of Sarwel, the Lord of Quneckone, the master of Lindsey, the Bishop of Galloway, the Abbot of Saint Colmes Inch, the Abbot of Culros, the Lord of Pettirow, the Lord of Cunningham head, the Lord of Grange and other, about 200. horse, there they sate in Councell, and departed for that night.

On the 3. of Aprill, the Lord Grey, sir James Croft, the Lord Scrope, sir George Howard, sir Henry Percy, and diuers other Captaines, and Gentlemen, rode vnto Dunkey, a house of the Abbot of Dunfermes, where the Earle of Arraine, and the Lord Iames Steward, with diuers other Noble men of Scotland meeting them did conduct them into the said house, where they had long conference together, and after dinner they returned with the Lord Lieutenant vnto Salt Preston.

The 4. of Aprill, fiue yong Gentlemen, appointed to passe into England for pledges, their names were L. Claude Hamilton, fourth son to the Duke Chateau le Reault, Robert Dowglas, Archebald Cambel, L. of Longhennel, George Gream second son to the E. of Suntithe, Iames Coningham, son to the Earle of Glencorne.

The first of Aprill, the Campe raised from Salt Preston and marched forwards halfe a mile from Lestricke, beneath a Crage called Arthurs seate, the Duke of Chateau le Reault, the Earle of Arraine, the Earle of Argile, the Lord Iames, Lord Prior of Saint Andrewes, and the rest of the Noblemen of Scotland, accompanied with 2000. horsemen, and fiue hundred footmen staid for the comming of the English army, whereupon the Lord Grey, sir Iames Croft, the Lord Scrope, sir George Howard, and sir Henry Percy, repaired to them, and had conference there with the Duke, and other the Scottish Lords that were in his company.

In the meane while the army staid, but yet at length the horsemen, the vantgard and battell, were commanded to march forth, who accordingly passed along by the place where the Duke and Scottish Lords stood, vntill they approched neere to Lestericke: There came Trumpet the Queenes Regent Trumpet, to the Lieutenant and brought him with a safe conduct giuen vnder the hand and Seale, for the safe repaire of sir Iames Croft, sir George Howard, and 6. other to accompany them. Whereupon they preparing themselues, departed towards Edenbrough, where the said Queene as then lay within the Castle. There went with them master Somerset, master Pelham, and foure other Gentlemen, whilest they were in conference with the D. the Frenchmen to the number of nine hundred or a thousand shot, backed with fiue hundred rowters and pikes, and about 50. horsemen, were came forth of Lieth, vnder conduction of master Doncle, and the county Mortigues, Cozonell of the French footmen. The Lord Grey vnderstanding thereof, came vp to the hill, appointed an officer at armes called Rouge Crosse, to go vnto them, with commandement from him, that they should retire their forces forth of the field into the towne of Lieth: for if it were not for the promise which he had made to the Queen Dowager, hee would cause them to depart, The Herault doing his message, received answere, that they were vpon their master and mistresse ground, and therefore meant not to remoue from it. Rouge Crosse returning with this answere, was sent againe, to command them eftsones to go their way backe to Lieth, for if they did not, they should bee sent away with a mischiefe. Vnt vnneath had the Herault done this second message, when the Frenchmen stepping forth discharged a whole volie of their shot into the field against the Lord Grey and his company. Hereupon, the Englishmen and they fell in skirmish, which continued for the space of 4. houres and more, so hote and earnestly maintained on both parts, that the like had not lightly bene seene long time before: yet at the length the Englishmen beate the French footmen ouer the hill and wan the Crag from them, and put them from a Chappell, where they had made a great while, vsing it for a couert from the Englishmens shot. Then the enemies that were in Lieth shot off diuers peeces of their great artillerie out of the towne against the English men who on the other part brought foorth two field peeces, and couered them with a troup of horsemen, and hauing planted them to some aduantage, discharged the same among the enemies, who perceiuing that, gaue place, and sodainely the English demilances gaue a charge on them, bashe in amongst them, and fiue diuerse of them, whereby they bee forced to retire backe into Lieth, being followed verie neere to the gates of the towne. There were slaine in this skirmish of the French about 140. beside them that remained prisoners. Of the English men there were also diuers slaine, and many hurt. The same day sir Iames Croft and sir George Howard returned from the Queene Regent, after they had spent a long time in talke with her.

The seuenth of Aprill, a new trench was cast beside the Crag, and thereon two peeces of Ordinance planted. The 8. of Aprill, the Frenchmen shot at the English Campe very fore out of Saint Nicholas steeple, where were planted two great peeces of Ordinance, although they did no great hurt: but the same night the Englishmen cast a trench beyond the Crag, and placed in the same trench certaine small peeces of artillery, which went off the nert day against the enemies, and they likewise shot off against the English. The 12. of Aprill, a bullet of a great peece of Ordinance being shot out of Lieth, did light in the Campe and slue three men but they were answered againe with our Cannons. The fourteenth day of Aprill, being Easter day, the Englishmen shot off their great Ordinance, and the Frenchmen answered them againe all that day. The Frenchmen also skirmished, so that diuers were hurt on both parties. The same day the pile of Blackenes was surrendred to Master Winter. The same day, 9. Frenchmen apparelled like women came foorth of Lieth, and counterfeiting some light demeanour, trained one of the English scowts within their danger, whom whom they tooke and chopped off his head, which they set vpon the toppe of one of their Church steeples. The 15. day of Aprill, a fifty horsemen, and about fiue hundred harquebuiers, who making to the new Trenches, were vpon the English men that warded, vpon such a sodain, that they slew and wounded no small number, and possessing the trenches a while, stopped the touch holes of three peeces of the Artillery, tooke Master Maurice Barkeley prisoner, and his ensigne Brian Fitz Williams was sore wounded, &c. The alarm being brought to the Campe, Sir Iames Croft, and other repaired towards the Trench with all expedition, and perceiuing the Frenchmen to bee masters of one of the Trenches, hee commanded captaine Vaughan with his band to enter the Trench, and to relieue those that were hardly beset of the Frenchmen, which was done with such manhood, that the enemies were expulsed, and foure of them slaine: Captaine Somerset and Captaine Reade with their bandes followed them, as they retired, and Master Arthur Grey with certaine demilances, and charging them with great courage, draue them into the towne, and made of them great slaughter, but Arthur Grey was shot through the shoulder. The 16. of Aprill, a supply of 2200. footmen came to the campe, sir Andrew Corber, sir Rowland Standley, sir Thomas Hesketh, Sir Arthur Manwering, sir Laurence Smith, Master Francis Tuntall, Master Edward Littleton, Captaine Carnell, Phillip Shurley, and Dauid Morris. They were garbed with 500. horsemen, Sir Ralph Sadler, Sir Francis Leake, Sir John Foster, and Sir Nicholas Strange, hauing charge to see them safely conducted, who after they had brought them past all danger of enemies, left them in safety by the way, and were come a day or two before them to the campe.

The 17. of Aprill, Master Winter caused diuers of the ship boats, being well manned to giue a great alarme at the side of the towne towards the water, discharging many hasses and harquebusiers of croke into the towne, during which time there was a piteous cry made by the women and children within the town. The 20. of Aprill, many peeces were shot off, out of the trenches into the Towne. There issued out at the gates one hundred shot, to hasse such of the Englishmen as came forth to offer skirmish, the pioners both Scots and English were occupied in making of a new trench neare to the towne.

The 20. of Aprill, the Bishop of Valence, accompanied with Sir Henry Percy and three hundred horsemen, came to Lestricke, the Lord Lieutenant, Sir Iames Croft, the Lord Scrope, and Sir Ralph Sadler, met him at the further end of the ward. And after they had receiued him with salutations, hee was conducted by Rogue crosse from the campe vnto Edenbrough, so by to the Castle, to confer with the Queen Dowager. He was no sooner in the Castle, but there issued forth of Lieth, the number of 200. French men, and began a hot skirmish, which continued two houres, at which diuers were slaine on both parties. The same night nine peeces of ordinance were planted in the new trench, so that the nert day the same peeces were shot off toward the steeple of Saint Anthonies Church, whereby the peeces of ordinance that lay in the same steeple, were dismounted by them, and like wise those that lay in the steeple of S. Nicholas Church, where a Gunner was slaine that stood at one of them, the peece and the Gunner tumbling downe both together: a great piece of this Church was beaten downe, and the steeple defaced. The Bishop of Valence after he had talked with the Queene, returned to commune with the Lords of the Congregation.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, the Pioners, Scottish and English, were busied in casting of trenches.

The 24. of Aprill, there issued out of Lieth seuentene hundred horsemen, who offered the skirmish, and vnder the place called little London, 300. or 400. of their shot were placed, at length certaine of the English Lances gaue a charge vpon their horsemen, who therewith retiring drew the Englishmen within danger of their shot, but the French were forced to retire, without any great hurt done to the Englishmen.

The 25. of Aprill, the Pioners finished the new fort, named Mount Pelham, to the gard whereof Captaine Vaughan was appointed gouernour, with 1200. souldiers. This fort was raised on the South side of the towne, the plot whereof was cast square with foure bulwarkes at euery corner, and 12 battering pieces planted in places conuenient. This day there issued out of Lieth on the East side, 70. or 80. horsemen, and 200. harquebusiers offering the skirmish, toward whom certain of the English light horsemen made, and charging them, draue them backe to their footmen, who with their shot receiued the light horsemen so sharpely, that they were forced to retire: in the retire Iames Hamilton a Scottish man was taken prisoner. This day Captaine Perick, and Captaine Hayes, hauing charge of a troupe of light horsemen, vnder sir Henry Percy, and the Lord of Grange, were taken prisoner before Dunbar, to the number of 20. or 30. other were likewise taken or slain. The same night also 2000. footmen with the Pioners, were sent to the other side of the towne, beyond the Canon miles, where the Pioners cast a trench for the safe lodging of the army, which remained the nert day from Lestrick downe into the valley by the said Canon miles called the red Banes. As the army was incamping, certaine of the enemies horsemen and footmen skirmished with the English Lances, and light horsemen a long time, there were two Frenchmen slaine with their horses also. In the time of this skirmish 2. Canons were conueyed and planted in the new trench, which discharged diuers shot at the enemies.

The seuen and twentieth of Aprill, the great artillery was planted aloft on the hill aboue the campe, within lesse then a furlongs shot of the towne wals, and the pioners were set a worke to cast new trenches; from the place where the same ordinance was lodged vnto mount Pelham ham, drawing so nere vnto Lieth, as the harquebuse might reach them that watched and warded without the great bulwarke. The French kept the same day a trench which they had made without the towne continually shooting at the Englishmen in the Campe, but the same night the Englishmen wonne that trench from them, slue diuers of them therein with their sword, which being done they gaue a great alarme to the Towne both by land and water, the shippe boats shooting off against the Town very hotly, and they within the Towne likewise at the Englishmen. The same night was the great ordinance planted, and maister Markham hurt. The 28. the said great Ordinance went off, and shot continually the more part of the day. The Bishop of Valence departed the same day toward Warwicke, and this night Sir George Howard, that had been sent backe to Warwicke, to signifie to the Duke of Norfolke the estate of the siege, returned with sir Richard Lee, being conducted with 500. horsemen.

The 30. of April, the great artillery were shot off very hotly, and the French likewise shot off theirs, and comming forth of the Town, skirmished with the Englishmen: this night the pioners made new Trenches towardes the South bulwarke. The last of April, a sodaine fire was raised within the Towne, which hugely encreased and continued the most part of the night following: at the beginning when it first appeared, the English Ordinance was shot off to the place where the fire was, which shot together with helpe of the wind which was very great, did marueilously augment the same fire: neuertheles the French at the present time offred a skirmish and continued the same neere the space of two houres. It was appointed, that certaine bands should make alarme to the towne, insomuch that Captaine Vaughan, with other diuers soulditers of Mountpelham, entred the ditch, & approached the walles, but retiring without receiuing any great hurt. The 1. of May, the Frenchmen early in the morning set vp their May poles in certaine bulwarks and 14. Ensignes, the which being discouered of them in the camp, they saluted them with a peale of great Ordinance, and likewise the French answered them againe, and so continued the most part of that day.

The 2. of May, the pioners made the trenches for the artillery to be planted in battery. The night following they placed the artillery in the new trench, and the next morning, the same battery went off, and continued all that day. The night ensuing, the Pioners made a trench by the Citadell, wherein they might lodge some shot, and Captain Vaughan with diuers of the bands in Mountpelham, gaue two fierce assaults to the towne, entred the ditches and viewed the flankers, whereupon the French shot off the same flankers, and manning their walles shot off two or three volies of their small artillery, slaying and hurting to the number of 20. Englishmen among other little Norton was one.

The 4. of May, there was three ensignes appointed to gard the new trenches, and towardes night the Frenchmen that were in the trench vnder the Citadell, made a sally vpon the English men that garded the said trench, but could not preuaile. The same night the English conueyed two culuerings ouer the water to secure the mills, and before the breake of the day they had burnt one of the same mils. The 5. of May, 4 souldiers belonging to our great ordinance, set fire and burnt the other mill. This day also, as French gentlemen came forth to discouer the English trenches, Captaine Reade commanded one of his souldiers to shoote at them, but through mishap his piece burst, and a thiuer thereof brake the arme of the said Captaine.

The 6. of May, the English Ordinance on the further side the water, began to shot off against the enemies very hotly. This day the Earle of Argule, and diuers other Noble men of Scotland, came to Edenbrough with two thousand horsemen and footmen, who shewed themselues in order of a muster on the hill vnderneath the Castle, which being perceiued of the French within Lieth, they shot off three great peces of artillery at them, but hurt them not. The night ensuing, the great Ordinance in the Englishmens trenches and bulwarks, continued shooting on euery side: and herewith commandement was giuen by the Lord Lieutenant and the Councell that the whole army should be ready armed by midnight. In the morning by two of the clocke, diuers bands passed forth toward the towne, and entring the ditches offered to scale, other Captaines with their men approches the bulwarks, and other were appointed to enter beside the mils. Beside the English bands, there a thousand Scots ioyned with them, whereof fiue hundred with Captaine Vaughan and other were commanded to attempt the bulwarke next to Mountpelham, and other fiue hundred went with such English Captaines as were commanded to assault the breach.

Moreouer, a wel the lances as light horsmen were assigned to gard the fields: sir George Howard with the lances, keeping betwixt the foot Mountpelham and the Sea Westward, and sir Henry Percy with the light horsemen, betwixt the Campe and the Sea Eastward. The rest of the footmen that went not to the assault, were also appointed to gard the trenches and field, in such wise as was thought expedient, and vpon warning giuen by Captaine Kandall, Sergeant Maior, such as had beene commanded to giue the assault in their seuerall appointed places, pressed with courage, and boldly aduentured to climbe the walles, and enter at the breaches, but yet their attempt wanted the wished successe: for what through the policy of the French, in stopping the currant of the riuer that night, and what by reason of the vnsittnesse of the ladders, being too short, the assailants were repulsed, and were forced to retire with the losse of 700. 8. score Englishmen, or more, which were slaine outright, besides those that were wounded being at the least two or three hundred.

The 8. of May, sir George Howard & sir Richard Lee departed toward Warwick with certain companies of horsmen for their safe conduction.

The ninth of May, the Frenchmen wrought within within the Towne to fortifie and repaire the breaches. The same day also the French had manned to the seawards a Boat fraught with fifty Harquebusiers, meaning to conuay them ouer to Inskeith, but the English ships discouering them, prepared certaine Boates to encounter them, whereof they being aware, returned.

The 10. of May, Master Ingleby, Captaine Pickman, and Captaine Browne came to the campe from Barwicke, with a supply of foure hundred and fifty souldiers.

The twelfth of May about midnight, the French men to the number of 200. sallied forth of the Towne, minding to giue a camisado to the English men that kept watch in the trenches at the West side of Mountpelham, but they were descried and repulsed.

The 15. of May, Sir Francis Leake came to the Campe with a supply of 500. men from Barwicke.

The 21. of May, about 7. of the clocke at night, there issued forth of Lieth fiue horsemen, and an 100. footmen Harquebusiers, marching toward Mountpelham to offer skirmish: whereupon Captaine Vaughan went forth to them very orderly, and skirmished with them a pretty while, in the end the French men were driuen to retire. The same night Master Francis Somerset and other Captains were appointed to keepe a Fort built aboue the Campe, and tooke the name of him being Captaine thereof, and was called Somersets Mount. The 22. sir Peter Carew came to the Campe, being sent from the Court. The 24. of May at night about 7. of the clock, the French sallied forth to the number of 200. footmen and 20. horsemen, meaning, as it appeared, to haue wonne the trenches from the English men, whereupon a sore skirmish followed, diuers slaine, and many hurt on both parts: yet in the end the French were driuen home by force. The same day the French men of Dunbar take an English Hoy laden with Beere, Bose, and Bacon.

Queen Dowager of Scotland deceased.

The 8. of June, Sir John Neuill with 300. men, Captaine Bridges, and Captaine Drewry, with other 300. set from Barwick towards the Campe, where they arriued on the 10. of June, on which day the Queene Dowager departed this life.

The 13. of June, Sir William Cicill principall Secretary to the Queenes Maiestie with sir William Cordall, and Doct. Wotton Deane of Canterbury and Yorke, came to Barwicke, appointed Commissioners on her said Maiesties behalfe, to treate of an accord with the County de Randon, and the Bishop of Valence Commissioners, sent for that purpose from the French K. and his wife Mary Q. of Scots.

The 14. of June a certain number of French men came forth of Lieth to gather Cockles on sands towards Mountpelham, whereof the English men perceiuing, set vpon them, slew 70. and tooke 16. of them prisoners.

The 16. of June, the foresaid Commissioners came to Edenbrough, and as Master Secretary and the other passed the English Forts and Campe, they were saluted with a gallant peale of Harquebusiers.

The 17. of June, about 8. of the clocke, an abstinence of warre was concluded, warning being giuen by the discharging two Peces of Ordinance out of the Castle, & then the French men themselues vpon the Rampiers.

The 22. of June, the abstinence of warre was broken off.

The 4. of July, about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, the French came out of Lieth to gather Cockles, whereupon the Lord Lieutenant being at that present in Mountpelham, sent a Drum vnto Monsieur Doysell, to signifie vnto him, that his souldiers had gone further without their bounds then they might doe, by the order taken by the Commissioners of both parts: Doysell answered, that they were no souldiers, but poore people which went to gather Cockles for their reliefe and sustenance. The Drumme said, that if they kept not themselues within their appointed limits, the Lord Lieutenant meant to send them backe, not greatly to their ease: whereunto Doysell replied, That if he so did, he would doe the best he could to ayd them: hereupon the English horsemen and footmen of Mountpelham gaue a charge vpon them, and slew of them to the number of fifty, and tooke certaine prisoners.

The first of July issued out of Lieth 14. horsemen, and 100. footmen, which entered the skirmish, but vpon the shooting of the great Artillery from Mountpelham, they retired home againe into the Towne. The night following about 12. of the clocke, one Scattergood an English man, that was a Gunner, and had laigned himselfe to flie from the English Campe for manslaughter into Lieth, and was receiued of the French men, beleeuing that he had meant no deceipt, came out of the Towne, after he had remained there about seuen dayes, in which meane while he had vnderstood fully the state of the Towne, and now vpon his returne, made relation thereof as he knew.

The first of July, the Lord Grey Lord Lieutenant, Sir William Cicill Secretary, and Sir Ralph Sadler, about 3. of the clocke in the afternoone, gaue order, that there should no Peace be shot, nor shew of hostility made vntill seuen of the clocke the same night: and herewith sent Gerueis Clifton vnto all the souldiers that warded in the trenches and bulwarks on the West side of Lieth, to command them to obserue the like order, and Sir John Neuill was sent with like order vnto the Soulditers that lay in Somerset Mount.

The Peace now being concluded, on the 7. of July, Sir Francis Leake, and Sir Gerueis Clifton, accompanied with two French Gentlemen, were sent to the Towne of Lieth, to signifie vnto Monsieur Doysell, the Bishop of Amiens, Labrosse, Marrignes, and other the French Lords and Captaines, that they were come thither by commandement from the Commissioners, to cause the Peace already concluded, to be proclaimed, which accordingly was done in manner following.

Peace concluded in Scotland.

The most mighty princesse, Elizabeth by the Peace proclaimed in Scotland.

grace of God, Queene of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. And the most Christian king Francis and Mary, by the same grace of God king and Queene of France and Scotland, haue accorded vpon a reconciliation of a peace and amitie to be inuiolably kept betwixt them, their Subiects, kingdomes, and Countries, and therefore in their names it is straitly commanded to all manner of persons borne vnder their obeysances, or being in their ferule, to forbeare all hostility either by sea or land, and to keepe good peace each with other from this time forwards, as they will answere thereto at their vttermost perils. Immediatly after this Proclamation was ended, Sir Francis Leake, and sir Gerueis Clifton were brought to Monsieur Doytels lodging, where was prepared for them a banquet of thirty or forty dishes, and yet not one either of flesh or fish, hauing one of a powdered hogge, as was auouched by one that auouched himselfe to haue tasted thereof.

Articles of the peace, thirteene in number, were to this effect.

Treaties of peace at the Burgh of Leeth.

1 First, the French king and Queene doe not onely relinquish the title, title, and Armes of England and Ireland, but doe also binde themselues from henceforth to forbeare any more to vse or beare the same, and shall forbid their Subiects the vsing of the same title, in what sort soeuer it be, within any of their countries or dominions, forbidding also as much as in them lieth, the ioyning or quartering any manner of wayes the Armes of England, with those of Scotland or France.

2 All such letters patents, or other writings as haue beene heretofore made, wherein the said title is mentioned, or whereunto any stile concerning the said Armes is annexed, shall be reformed, and new made, without putting to them the title or Armes of England or Ireland, and that all manner of writings or instruments concerning the said title, and being sealed with the said Armes, not being renewed or reformed within 6. moneths after the publication of this Treaty, shall be voyd and of none effect.

3 Scotland shall be gouerned by a Councell of twelue of the noblest of that Country, which Nobility shall be taken out of foure and twenty, to be first chosen by Parliament, by the three Estates there, and of those twelue, seuen shall be named by the Scottish Queene, and fiue by the Lords of the Parliament.

4 All things passed there since March 1558. shal be euer passed and forgotten, and by Parliament the surety of the same shall be confirmed, and euery man restored to his Office in that Realme.

5 No French man shall haue any Office in Scotland.

6 Three score French men Souldiers onely shall remaine in Scotland, viz. three score in Dunbar, and three score in Inskith, and those to bee monethly mustered, and payed by the Councell of the Realme, and to be iustified by the lawes of Scotland.

7 No munition nor victuals shal be brought into Scotland, but from five moneths to five moneths, and then onely for those places, and for the said number of five score souldiers.

8 No forraigne ships or men of warre shal be from henceforth brought into Scotland, but by the consent and will of the Scots.

9 Leith shall be demolished by the view of the Queenes Maiesties Commissioners, and in such sort as they shall thinke conuenient.

10 The new buildings of Dunbar shall also be raced.

11 Matters of religion in Scotland be ouerpassed in silence without any alteration.

12 The league betweene the Queenes Maiestie and the Nobility of Scotland, is also passed ouer without any renouation.

13 Finally, in the treaty betweene her Highnesse, and the said French king and Queene, the said king and Queene, are by the speciall clause bound to her Highnesse to performe, and keepe the said couenants that touch the Realme and Subiects of Scotland.

After that this Peace was then fully established, the French men were embarqued at Leith in English vessels, those onely excepted that were appointed to remain as pledges with the English men, till the ships came back again, and a fewe other that were permitted to passe through England into their Country.

The fift of July, through shooting of a Gun which brake in the house of one named Adrian Arren a Dutch man in Crooked lane, and setting fire on a firkin and barrell of Gunpowder, foure houses were blowne vp, and diuers other sore shattered, nine men and women were slain, and diuers other sore bruised.

Houses blowne vp.

The 28. of September, this yere 1559. proclamation was made, that the Teston, which at first was coyned for twelue pence, and in the raigne of K. Edward the first, had beene abated and brought downe to fiue pence, should now againe be abated and brought downe to foure pence halfe penny, being of the best sort, and the two other sorts of Testons being distinguished by seuerall stamps, should likewise be abated, viz. the second sort to two pence farthing, and the third sort was made of no value. And by this Proclamation the old Groat was also abated, and brought downe to two pence, and the old two pence was brought downe to a penny: these old monies being thus abated, the Queene caused them all to be brought into her Mint, and according to the last valuation of them, she gaue them fine money of cleane siluer for them, commonly called Sterling money, and from this time there was no manner of base money coyned or vsed in England, which had beene vsuall and currant throughout this Realme in all former ages: but all English monies were made of gold and siluer, which is not so in any other Nation whatsoeuer, but haue sundry sorts of coyne or money.

The third and last fall of base money.

The 9. of October, the French crowne that went current for fiue shillings foure pence, was proclaimed to be fiue shillings.

The Queenes Maiestie made great preparation, of Armour, Munition, and Powder, to be in a readinesse to defend her Realme, if neede should happen.

1561. The Queene erecteth Tapisting free Schoole.

The 21. of March, a notable Grammar Schoole was founded by the Master, Wardens, and Assistants of the Worshipfull Company of the Marchant Taylors of London, in the Parish of Saint Lawrence Pountney in the same Citie: Richard Hils late Master of that Company, hauing giuen 500. pound toward the purchase of an house, called the Mannour of the Rose, sometime the Duke of Buckinghams, wherein the Schoole is kept.

The 10. of April, was one William Geffrey whipped from the Marshalsea in Southwarke to Bedlem without Bishops gate of London, for that hee professed one Iohn Moore to bee Christ our Sauiour: on his head was set a paper, wherein was written as followeth: William Geffrey a most blasphemous heretike, denying Christ our Sauiour in heauen. The said Geffrey being stayed at Bedlem gate, Iohn Moore was brought forth, before whom William Geffrey was whipped, till he confessed Christ to bee in heauen. When the said Iohn Moore being examined, and answering ouerthwartly, was commanded to put off his coate, doublet, and shirt, which he seemed to doe very willingly, and after being tyed to the Cart, was whipped an arrowes shot from Bedlem, where at the last he also confessed Christ to be in heauen, and himselfe to be a sinfull man: then was Iohn Moore sent again into Bedlem, and William Geffrey to the Marshalsea, where they had lame prisoners nigh a yere and a halfe, the one for professing himselfe to be Christ, the other a disciple of the same Christ.

Idolatrie Christ.

This yere was such a scarcity of Wheat and other graine, that Sir William Chester Maior of London, and other the principall magistrates of the Citie, were forced to make prouision for Wheat and Rye from beyond the Seas, to a great quantity, which was a reliefe, not onely to the Citizens, but also to the Countries nere adioyning.

On Wednesday the 4. of June, betweene 4. and 5. of the clock in the afternoone, the steeple of Paules in London, being fired by lightning, built forth (as it seemed to the beholders) two or three yards beneath the vane of the cresse, and from thence burnt downe the spere to the stone worke and Bels, so terribly, that within the space of foure houres, the same steeple, with the roofes of the Church to much as was timber, or otherwise combustible, were consumed, which was a lamentable sight, and pittifull remembrance to the beholders thereof.

Paules steeple on fire by lightning.

The length of Paules Church in London is twelue score Taylors yards, which is 7. hundred and twenty foote: the breadth thereof is one hundred and thirty foote: the height of the steeple was fiue hundred and twenty foot, where of the stone worke is two hundred and fifty foote: and the spere which now is burnt, was likewise two hundred and fifty foot: the height of the body of that Church, is one hundred and fifty foote.

After this mischance, the Queenes Maiestie being much grieued for the losse of so beautifull a monument, directed her Highnesse Letters to the Maior of London, willing him to assemble the Citizens, to take some order for speciall ayde and helpe for the repairing againe of the same, they of her most gracious disposition, to giue a comfort vnto other, for the furtherance thereof, did presently giue and deliuer in gold, one thousand markes, and a warrant for one thousand load of timber, to be taken out of her Maiesties Woods or elsewhere. And the Citizens of London granted one benevolence, and three fifteenes to be forthwith paid. And the Clergie of England vnder the Province of Canterbury granted to giue the fortieth part of the value of their Benefices, being charged with first fruits, and not being charged with first fruits, to pay the thirtieth part. And the Clergy of the Diocese of London graunted to giue the thirtieth part of their Benefices, being in first fruits, and the fiue and tieth part being out of first fruits. And immediatly by commandement of her Maiestie, her priuie Councell take order, that five Citizens of London, and two of the Clergie of the Church of Paules, had charge to ouersee and set forward this worke, who made such expedition, that within one moneth next following the burning thereof, the same was couered with bords and lead, after the manner of a false roofe: and the greatnes of the worke dispatched in so short time, could scarcely be credited of any but such as saw the same. And the cause of this great hast, was for feare of rame which might haue perished the vaults, to the destruction of the whole Church: and before the said yeare was fully ended, all the side Iles of the said Church were framed of new and maine timber, and couered with lead, and fully finished. And the same yere also the great roofe of the West end was framed, and made of new and great timber in Yorkshire, and brought to London by Sea, and set vp and couered with lead, and fully finished. And in like manner within the said yere, the whole vaile and frame of the East end of the said Church, was made in Yorkshire, and brought by Sea to London and after set vp as the rest of the roofes, but the roofes of the North and South ends of the same church remained couered with bords till 1564. that the Bishop (as I am enformed) take vp on him the charge of repairing them, and for the same laid out seuen hundred and twentie pound, and so that worke ceased to proceede any further.

The fifteenth of November, the Queenes Maiestie published a Proclamation for diuers small peces of siluer money to be currant, as the fine pence, foure pence, three pence, 2. pence, and a peny, three halfe pence, and 3. farthings: and also forbad all forraigne coynes to be current within the same Realme, as well gold as siluer, calling them into her Maiesties Mints, except two sorts of crownes of gold, the one the French crowne, the other the Flemish crowne: whereupon for the space of halfe a yere, was weekely brought into the Tower of London 8000. 10000. 12000. 16000. 20000. 22000. pound pound of siluer plates: and as much or more in pistolets, and other gold of Spanish coynes, and one waske in pistolets and other Spanish gold 16000. pound, all these to be coyned with the Queenes stamps.

The twenty fiue of December, Sir Ambrose Dudley knight, called Lord Ambrose Dudley, second sonne of Iohn late Duke of Northumberland, was created Barron Lisle, and afterward the same day Earle of Warwicke at Westminster.

1562. Monstrous birthes.

This yere in England were many monstrous birthes: in March a Mare brought forth a Foale with one body and two heads, and as it were a long taile growing out betweene the two heads. Also a Sow farrowed a Pigge with foure legges like to the armes of a man childe, with hands and fingers, &c. In Aprill a Sow farrowed a Pigge with two bodies, eight feete, and but one head, many Calues and Lambes were monstrous, some with collers of flamme growing about their neckes, like to the double ruffes of shirts and neckerchefes then wed. The foure and twenty day of May, a man child was borne at Chichester in Sussex, the head, armes, and legges whereof, were like an Anatome, the breast and belly monstrous bigge, from the nauell, as it were a long thing hanging: about the necke a great collar of flesh and flamme, growing like to the ruffe of a shirt or neckerchefe, comming vp aboue the eares playting and folding, &c.

Declaration of her Highnes causes, why to aide her Subiects into France.

The Realme of France being in great trouble about this season, by meanes of ciuill dissension and warres that rose amongst themselues, the Queenes Maiestie and her honourable priuy Councell being enformed thereof, first published a booke entituled, A declaration of the Queenes Maiestie, containing the causes which haue constrained her to arme certaine of her Subiects for defence both of her own estate, and of the most Christian King Charles the ninth her good brother, and his Subiects. The booke followeth thus.

Although the miserable and afflicted estate of the Realme of France, is to be lamented of all Christian Princes and Nations, and requireth some good remedy, not onely for preseruation of the King there, with the Queene his mother, and the Subiects of that Realme from danger and ruine: but also for the stay of the rest of Christendome in peace, and to be free from the like ciuill warre, into the which, as it appeareth by these strange dealings in the said Realme, it is meant the same shall fall: yet there is no Prince that hath more iust cause to haue regard hereunto, nor that hath more indifferently and earnestly intended the recouery of quietnesse and accord therein, then the Queenes Maiestie of this Realme of England, both by her owne gracious disposition, and by aduice of her Councell. For as the matter is now plainly discouered to the world, and as her Maiestie hath proued the same sufficiently by her owne late experience, there is not onely touched as other Princes ought to be, with great compassion and commiseration for the vnnaturall abusing of the French King her good brother, by certaine of his Subiects, the danger of his person and his bloud, the lamentable and barbarous destruction, hauocke, and spoyle of so many Christian innocent people beyond all measure: but her Maiestie also euidently saith before her eyes, that if some good remedy be not by Gods goodnesse prouided in season, the very fire that is now kindled and dispersed there, is purposely meant and intended to be conuayed and blowne ouer to enflame this her Crowne and her Realme. Which great perill, although it be so plainely seene to all wise and prudent men both at home and abroad, that they cannot mistake her care and prouidence to remedy the same in time, yet hath her Maiestie thought not vnmeet to notifie some part of her dealings herein, for as it shall well appeare how sincerely her Maiestie hath both hitherto proceded with her neighbours, and how plainely and vpright she is determined to continue.

The Queene of England moueth controuersies with the French ministers.

First, it hath bene well seene to the world how well disposed her Maiestie was euen at the beginning of her Raigne, to the restitution of peace to Christendome, that for loue thereof, was contented to forbeare for certaine yeres the restitution of a portion of her ancient dominion, when all other parties to the same peace, with whom, and by whose alliance her Crowne sustained losse, were immediately restored to the most part of their owne in possession: and yet it cannot be forgotten within how short a space, or rather no space after, and by whom, and vpon how great, euident, and iust causes, as well by meanes of force and Armes first taken, as by other open attempts against her Maiestie, she was constrained to prepare like armes of defence onely, euen for her whole Crowne and Kingdome, and iointly therewith for the safety of her next neighbours from a plaine inuasion. And also how sincerely her Maiestie proceeded therein: first by simple requests and meanes made, to forbeare their attempts: next, by open declaration of her intent, to bee onely for defence of her selfe, and by the whole handling of the matter: and lastly, by the euent and issue of the cause, all the world hath clearely vnderstoode.

The peace made at Cambresie. The Queene of Scots her resolution to the Queene of England.

After which dangerous troubles pacified, the Queene of Scots at her returne to her Country, feeling the great commodity hereof following, both to her selfe and her Realme, and vnderstanding the sincere dealing of the Queenes Maiestie in all her former actions, did by diuers meanes giue signification to her Maiestie of a great desire to enter with her into a straiter bande of amity: whereunto her Maiestie being of her owne nature much enclined, readily accorded. And how farre and prosperously they both proceeded therein by many and sundry mutuall Offices of friendship, as well the good will shewed by her Maiestie to the Queene of Scots Vncles, the Guises, and to all her friends and Kinsfolkes passing and repassing through this her Realme, as also the accord of the enterview intended betwixt them both this last Sommer, hath well declared.

But

Particular seuerities, made of the common troubles. Dyo. of the great Parliament at Poictiers in Ian. 1560. The diuer. of Ian. 1562. The slaughters at Vassy, Paris, Sens, Thoulouse, Blois, Roan, Orleance, Tours, Lyons, and diuers other places, by credible information reported out of France, to the number of 10.000 persons dead in the first at Vassy March and Aprill at Paris, and Lyons at Iuly last. 1562.

But in the midst of these her Maiesties quiet and peaceable determinations, she had bene to her great griefe vtterly disappointed, and constrained for her owne interest to attend and intermeddle in the pacification of these great troubles in France nere to her Realme, the same being stirred vp by such as both were her last manifest great enemies, and haue also (they know how) continued the cause of mistrust till this day, by manifest arguments of iniustice, which her Maiestie is content to conceale, for the great affection that she beareth to the Scottish Queene. First, her Maiestie at the beginning, doubting by the encrease of these French troubles, that not onely that Realme should fall into danger of ruine by diuision, as it now is, but also, that the rest of Christendome, and specially her owne Realme, both for the neere neighbourhood thereto, and for the respects of them which were the principall Authors and parties in these troubles, should bee also disturbed and brought to danger: vsed all the meanes that might be by messages, by solicitations, by aduice, yea by a speciall Ambassage of a person of good credit, to haue some mediation made betwixt these parties being at controuersie. But such was the policie and violence of the one party in hastie proceeding euen at the first, as no mediation could be heard of or allowed. And yet could not her Maiestie discontinue her good intent, but seeing the cruelties encrease, the bloud-shedding, and murthers continued: yea, which was most perillous, the young King, and the Queene his mother being sodainly assalted, and found without feare, were diuerted and drawne altogether by the very Authors of the troubles, to suffer their name and authority to be abused, euen to the killing of the Kings owne vnarmed innocent bloud, the spoiling of his rich Crowne, the breaking of his best adunited Edicts, the persecuting of his owne bloud and his Nobility, the destroying of his faithfull approoued seruants, with many such other heapes of mischiefe: and all these for no other cause, but for the particular appetites of some, and to breake with violence the ordinances of the Realme, specially those which were lately deuised by the long and great councell of the Realme, both for quietnes in matters of Religion, and for the relefe of the Kings estate diuers wayes.

1. Aprill 1562. The peace made at Cambresie. The Queene of Scots her resolution to the Queene of England.

The Ambassage intended by the Queen of England.

And finally, her Maiestie vnderstanding by certainty of an open destruction and subuersion there put already in vre, and likewise intended against all states and persons professing the Gospell abroad, her Maiestie thought it very needfull to thinke of some other meanes of more efficacie, to induce the Authors of those troubles, to giue eare to some reasonable motions of accord, and not to aduenture the ruine of a Realme for their particular appetites: and therefore determined to send a solemne Ambassage of a certaine number of personages of her counsell, being of great authority, experience, and indifferency, to repaire into France, to assay how some stay might be reasonably deuised for these extremities, by preserving of both parts indifferently, to the seruice of the King their Soueraigne, according to their estates of birth and calling.

But this manner of proceeding also could no wise be liked nor allowed, neither could answere bee had hereunto from the good young King, nor the timerous Queen his good mother, without the only direction of that part, which both began and continued the troubles from the beginning.

And whilest her Maiestie was thus well occupied, meaning principally the weale and honor of the King her good brother, and secondly, well towardes both the parties being at diuision, without the preiudice of either: a plaine contrary course and proceeding was vsed against her Maiestie, by the which was made manifest what was further meant and intended by them that had so oftentimes refused to heare her Maiestie speake for mediation and accord. All her Maiesties subiects, and Merchants as well of her Cities of London and Excester, as of other port townes in the West parts of the Realme, being at that very time in diuers parts of the Country of Brittaine, resorting thither onely for trade of Merchandizes, and ready to returne to their owne ports, were in the same time apprehended, spoyled, miserably imprisoned: yea, such as sought to defend themselues, cruelly killed, their ships taken, their goods and marchandise sealed, and nothing laid nor deuised to charge them, but onely furiously calling them all Hugonots, a word though very strange and foolish to many of the honest Merchants and poore mariners: yet fully sufficient to declare from whence these commandements came and what their intent is to prosecute, when their time shall serue them: neither were these spoiles small or few, but in value and number great and many. neither done by priuate fury, but by publike officers, who were also maintained by gouernors of the Countries: yea, none of her Maiesties subiects were spared that could bee taken, though some escaped with great hazzard. Well, hereof complaint was made where it ought to bee, but therein hath bene as small regard had, as was before for robbing of her Maiesties owne messengers with her letters from her Ambassadour, and yet the fact vnpunished without any satisfaction for the same: wherein her Maiestie surely noteth and pitieth the lack rather of authority, then of good will in the King or the Queene his mother, or the King of Nauarre his Lieutenant: but seeth manifestly by this and by all other proceedings, in what hard termes the estate of the yong King is set, that can neither bee permitted to pacifie his owne people and seruants, his owne Lawes and Ordinances, neither to answere other Princes and people in forme of iustice: that which bee ought to doe.

3. July. 19 August. 1561. Spoyles of Englishships of London, Exceter, and Falmouth & other places committed by the French in Brittaine. 20. August. 1562.

Imbasadors robbed of the Queen's letters

Upon these and other former dangerous enterprises against her Maiestie and her Crowne, it might well appeare to all persons of indifferent iudgement, how the violent proceedings in Fraunce, concurring at this time by the Duke of Guise, and his adherents, to touch the Queenes Maiestie, must needes for her state and Realme then then any other Prince of Christendom. Wherefore seeing the authority of the King and the Quæne his mother, with their quet good Councellours, cannot at this time haue place to direct their affaires neither towards their owne people, nor towards their neighbours, neither can any mediation sought by her Maiestie for concord be allowed: but contrariwise, the tender persons of the King and the Quæne his mother, be manifestly abused, and dangerously carried about for the particular pleasures onely of a few persons, and specially those of Guise, to wast the Kings Countries, to sacke and spoile his rich great Townes, to kill and murther the multitude of his good and true Subiects: and seeing also the quarrell manifestly published and prosecuted both by writing and otherwise by them, to subuert the whole The principall quarrell is to subuert Religion. profession of true Religion through Christendome by force, without mercy, and thereby to stirre vp a cruell, bloody, lamentable warre in all Christendome. Lastly, seeing they which be the Authors and maintainers of all the diuisions, are well knowne to the world to be the same, that when time serued them, bent their whole endeuours to offend and diminish the Crowne & dignity of this Realme of England, and of late time for the exaltation of their particular house, deuised vniustly to assaile the whole Crowne of England by sundry wayes, though by Gods goodnesse their practises and Councels turned for that time to their owne confusion: As by the same goodnesse they shall at all times hereafter.

Calais.

1560. French Armies sent by way of Scotland & other deuises, to claime the Crowne of England, &c.

How may her Maiestie, without note of manifest vnkindnesse to her deare young brother and confederate, of vnmercifulnesse to her next neighbours his Subiects, of vnrighteousnesse to the common quiet of Christendome: and lastly, which is nearest to her selfe, of more negligence to the surety of her owne estate, her Country and people, suffer these fewe troublesome men, first to destroy and shed the bloud of a number of Christian people, whose bloud by narrownesse of place to her Maiesties Realme may be stopped, or some wayes saued, next to surprise and take such Townes and Hauens, whereby their former long intended and manifest practises against the Crown of this Realm, may be most easily for them, and dangerously for this Realme, put in vre and execution? Wherefore for these reasonable, euident, vrgent, and necessary considerations, and not without the lamentable and continuall request of the French Kings Subiects, her Maiesties next neighbours, crying to her Maiestie onely for defence of themselues, their Ports and Townes from tyrannie and subuertion, during this their King's minority, or at the least during this his vnability to pacifie these troubles: Her Maiestie hath put certaine numbers of her subiects in order both by sea and land, to saue some part of her good brothers innocent people from this tyrannie, slaughter, and ruine, and to preserue some special Townes in Picardie importante, for the King her good brother, if they come not into the possession of them: which if they had them, might more easily thereby prosecute their olde particular practises against this Realme, as in times lately past they did manifestly attempt, whereby of necessity they must nedes endanger the perpetuity of the peace betwixt the French King and her Maiestie, and so consequently, though against the meaning of the King, depriue her Maiestie of her good right to her Towne of Calais and the members thereof: Whereof if by meanes her Maiestie, as things be handled, to haue good regard. And in this sort her Maiestie doubteth not, but the sincerity of her doings, tending only to procure Christian quietnesse by sauing of Christian bloud, shall well please Almighty God, content the King her good brother, when hee shall be in estate and like, to ponder the same indifferently, and serue also for the iust and naturall defence of her selfe, her peoples and Countries: and finally, by Gods grace shall establish the continuance of some more assured peace and concord betwixt both their Maiesties and Countries, so as either of them may quietly enioy and rule their owne. And in the meane time, her Maiestie aduerth the said King, the Quæne his mother, the King of Nauarre, and all his good Councellors and Subiects, that whatsoeuer any malicious or mis-contented person shall finisterly report of her intent and doings: Her Maiestie meaneth nothing herein, but sincerely, and as the necessity of the time and cause requireth, without blurping any thing, or doing wrong or violence to wards any the French Kings Subiects, protesting before God and all the world, that her meaning is for a necessary defence onely of the true and good Subiects of the French King, which otherwise apparantly in this troublesome time should be violently killed or destroyed: and so consequently her Maiestie intended by all manner of meanes possible, to keepe and continue good peace with the said King and all his Countries, and to neglect no reasonable meanes that may procure liberty to himselfe, and quietnesse betwixt his Subiects, which then shall succede when it shall please Almighty God to giue to the first and chiefe Authors of these troubles, grace to content themselues with their owne estates, and to liue within the compasse of their degrees, like quiet Subiects and fauourers of the common peace and tranquillity of Christendome. A matter more necessary at this time to be sought for, rather by coniunction of Christian Princes and States in vnity of minde, and loue of peace and concord, then in this sort by sword and fire, by priuate deuises, and secret factions, to stirre a diuision and ciuill warre in Christendome, vnder the cloake and pretence of Religion.

Perill and doubt of the restitution of the towne of Calais.

These causes thus published at the request of the French themselues, namely, Monsieur de Vidame then Captain of Newhauen, the Bayliffe of Roan, the Treasurer of Dieppe, and other, proffering the foresaid Townes whereof they had charge, vnto her Maiestie (if it would please her to further their procedings of the Gospell) for that her Maiestie was true inheritour, ritor not onely to those Townes, but to all the whole Kingdome of France, as they themselues confessed. In the moneth of September, her Maiestie sent a band of her subiects to the town of Newhauen in Normandy: who were embarked at Portsmouth, because that hauen is most apt for transportation to that place, vpon whose arriuall the Townes-men and inhabitants ioyfully surrendzed themselues and their towne into the possession of the Quænes Maiestie, which was kept by Englishmen from this moneth of September in Anno. 1562. vnto the 29. of July, then next following in the yeere 1563. as more at large shall be shewed. For the conduction of such forces as were to be sent ouer, her Maiestie ordained the Lord Ambrose Dudley Earle of Warwick to be her principall Lieutenant, Captain General, chiefe leader and Gouernour of her sayd subiects, that should in such wise passe ouer into Normandy. Hereupon the sayd Earle the 17. of October, tooke shipping at Portsmouth in the hauen there, being aboard himselfe in the Quænes ship called the New barke, and setting forward sailed all that afternoone, and the night following directly towards Newhauen: but in the morning when hee was within twenty myles of the towne of Newhauen, the wind suddenly changed contrary to his course, so that being driuen to retume, about the next midnight hee arriued in the Downes, and there remained at Anchor till the next morning, and then was set on land by boate at Sandon Castle beside Deale, and the same day at night came to Douer, and there lay till the 28. of October, and then taking ship againe sayled forth, but finding the wind nothing prosperous to his course, after he had lyen all that night and day following, tossing on the Seas, hee was constrained backe againe to the hauen of Douer, where hee remained till the 28. of October, and on the twentie nine he landed at Newhauen, where he was most ioyfully received with a great peale of Artillery. The 30. of October, there came to Newhauen from Diepe 50. light horsemen Scots, brought by one of master Killegrewes seruants. The last of October, the Earle of Warwickes commission was Proclaimed in Latin, English, and French, by Blew Mantell pursuiant at armes, which being ended, his Lordship went into the Church, and there sir Adrian Poinings Knight Marshall, gaue him his oath, and then my Lord gaue the said Sir Adrian his oath, and after him were sworne, Cuthbert Vaughan, Controller, John Fither, Knight porter, William Bromfield Maister of the Ordinance, William Robinson, Walter Bayliffe, and Captaine T. Wood Clark of the Councell. The second of November, the Earle of Warwicke with the Knight Marshall and the Controller, rode out of Newhauen to Hauteuile, and so towards Mondeuile, accompanied with all the horsmen English, and Scottish, and a thousand footmen. The Scottish men and Montgomeries band passed forth and skirmished with them of Mondeuile, and the Scottes brought away with them a bootie of 300. sheepe, but in the morning they were returned backe againe, by commandement of the Earle of Warwicke. Maister Controllers souldiers went as farre as Harflew, and there skirmished with them of the garrison, but without any hurt to either part. The 4. of November, a barke of Newhauen belonging to Francis Clarke, brought into the hauen of the same towne 4. Buttains laden with Gascoine wine to the quantity of 200. tuns, which they meant to haue brought to the enemies, but was discharged in Newhauen, and sold the Citizens in good stead. The 6. of November, a great alarme was raised in the Towne of Newhauen, for vpon the hills on the South side of the Towne, the Reingraue and other shewed themselues with 2000. footemen, and 500. Horsemen; and therewith the Reingrauers a trumpeter to the towne, to aduertise the Lord Lieutenant, that he was there on the hilles, and that if it would please him to promise vpon his honor and by the faith of a Gentleman that he might come and goe safe, hee would be glad to come and see him, and talke with him. Whereupon the Lord Lieutenant taking with him certaine Captains and gentlemen, rode forth of the town and sent before him, Sir Adrian Poinings the Marshall, with Steph: Medcalfe, her Maiesties Trumpeter, vnto the Reingraue, who talking with him, returned and met with the Lord Lieutenant, who thereuppon passed forward, and meeting with the Reingraue, they embraced each other, and conferred together: and the Reingraue told the Lord Lieutenant, that hee was come to see his neighbour, with such other merry speech, and after taking leaue each of other, they returned. The County Montgomery, and Monsieur Beauoys had some talke also with the Reingraue, calling out bitter words in reproche of the Duke of Guise, and other whom they hated. The Reingraue comming backe to his army, foorthwith all the countrey, and driue away the more part of all the cattell that they could find, and comming to the Church of Hauteuile, where an hundred and fiftie of Montgomeries band lay, they skirmished with them, and in the end Montgomeries souldiers were forced to retire, and abandon the place, and came to Newhauen, but the next morrow they returned, tooke the Church, and kept it against the enemies as afore.

and of Guisians sent to Newhauen.

The Queenes maiesties intent to procure peace, and to obserue it.

They of Guise to liue in their degrees vnder our Soueraigne ouer the King, and the rest of his blood.

Free generall Counsell by the consent of Christian Princes, meeter then ciuill warre, to bring the Church to vnity.

The 11. of November, a Proclamation was made in the name of the Lord Lieutenant, as well for good orders to be kept by the souldiers against the French inhabitants of the Towne, and reforming of certaine grieuances, whereof the French had made complaint, as also for their comming to Church, to heare common prayer and preaching at diuerse times, for the auoyding of vnlawfull games, &c. The 12. of November, there went out of Newhauen towards Harflew three bands of Frenchmen, containing about fiue hundred footemen, and suddenly they were beset by the Almaines and Frenchmen of the garrison of Harflew, so that the French men of Newhauen were driuen to take the village of Graule, where they maintained the skirmish for the space of two houres, till the Lord Lieutenant sent foorth with the Controller, the number of one thousand footmen, and all the English and Scottish horsemen, and master Beaunoys with diuers French horsemen, who comming before Hurlew, fell in skirmish with the enemies, to whose succour there issued foorth of Hurlew a great number of the Almaines, both horsemen and footmen: but the English men behaued themselues so valiantly, that they beat them out of the field into the towne: and the Englishmen returned to Newhauen, with honor, hauing not lost past eight of their souldiers that were slaine, and fiue hurt.

Prises of wine brought into Newhauen.

The 13. of November, a pinnesse of the Frenchmen that belonged to Newhauen, hauing gone foorth the night before, brought into the hauen a ship laden with Rochell wine, fiue and twenty tunnes, that was bound to the enemies. The 14. of November, another ship fraught with twenty Tuns of Gascoine wine was brought in as a prise, taken by a barke of Newhauen. The 17. of November, a proclamation was made concerning orders taken by the Lord Lieutenant, that no English man nor French man should shoote off any harquebut within the towne, nor that any French man except Monsieur Beaunoys, or Monsieur Bricquemault, or their companies should be out of their lodgings after nine of the clocke at night till the next morning, on paine of death, except in alarmes.

The 23. of November, the Reingraue was came on the North hilles of the Towne, with fourescore horsemen, whereupon the Scottish horsemen, and three bands of footmen issued out, marched vp towardes the same hilles in hope to meete with the enemies, but they were retired towardes Pondeuile, and so nothing was done.

A souldier executed. Prises brought into Newhauen.

The twenty fiue of November, a souldier was hanged in the market place in Newhauen, and therewith Proclamation made, that none should take any thing forcibly from the French on paine of death. The same day came into the hauen hoyes and boats laden with wine, rider, perry, wheate, beefe, bisket, meale, &c. The same day also there landed at Newhauen fiue hundred souldiers vnder the leading of Avery Darcy, Reignald Higate, and William Twedie. The same day the Queenes ship called the Hare, comming from Portsmouth, arryued at Newhauen, and in her came Sir John Portinarie, a man of great experience in fortification, they were by the way assayled by a French ship of ninty tuns and better, but they that were aboord the Hare, vanquished the enemies, tooke the same ship, and brought her with them, being laden with Wines. The same day Sir John Moore landed at Newhauen, bringing ouer with him fiue hundred souldiers for a supply of the garrison.

The 8. of December, Mounsieur de Beaunoys Captaine Francis Somerset, and Captaine Edward Horsey, with diuers other Captaines and Gentlemen, rode to the Reingraue, lying at a faire house not farre from Pondeuile, where they dined with him, had great cheere, and returned to Newhauen. The Reingraue sent for a present to the Earle of Warwicke a great horse, very faire, with saddle and bridle, esteemed to bee well worth an hundred pound. The same day at night, the double Rose with other boates pulled out of the hauen, Edward Dudley, and Captaine John Ward, being aboord with other to the number of an hundred good souldiours, sayling downe the riuer, landed besides Tankeruile, and lay close all that night in a wood: in the morning Monsieur Bimare Enseigne bearer to the Countie Montgomerie, with fiue or seuen Frenchmen vnarmed went to the Castle gate, and there fell in talke with Monsieur Dimence, that was Captaine of that fortresse, hauing about him twentie souldiours. Whilest they were thus in talke, the Englishmen and French men comming foorth of the Wood that was there at hand, reared vp their ladders at the breach, which was made the summer before, and entring by the same, came downe into the base Court. Which thing when the French souldiers that kept talke at the Castle gate perceiued, the Captaine beholding as good as thzeefoze armed men within the Castle at his backe, he suddenly yeelded himselfe, and in this sort was the Castle taken, and the Captaine brought paysoner to Newhauen. The 12. of December, the Earle of Warwicke, Monsieur de Beaunoys, and Monsieur de Bricquemault, with all the horsemen, and 3000. footmen, passe foorth of Newhauen vnto Hurlew, out of which towne issued 700. Reisters of the retinue of County Reingraue, and 300. footmen, who fell in skirmish with the French & English very hotly, but the English draue them to the gates of Hurlew, and slew them there, and vpon the walls of the towne: yet was there not slaine past 7. of the English part. The 17. of December, the county of Montgomery and Sir Hugh Paulet arriued at Newhauen in one of the Quenes ships called the Hyde.

Whilest things passed thus in Normandy, there ended his life at home the honorable Baron and famous Captaine, William Lord Grey of Wilton, knight of the most Noble order of the garter, at that present gouernor of Barwick, and warden of the East Marches against Scotland, he deceased the 25. of December, at Chesthunt in Hertfordshire.

The 26. of December, the County de Montgomery toke shipping at Newhauen roade, accompanied with foure hundred harquebuziers Frenchmen, and sayled to Diepe, there to be gouernour of that towne.

The first of January, were apprehended Captaine Blondell, Captain Moucombel, Monsieur de Mainie, and Viranua, with others, for some conspiracy or trayterous practise which they went about, and had contriued.

The same day Captaine Edward Horsey with 200. souldiers, and Captain Francis Blunt with 100. tooke shipping at Newhauen roade, and sayled to Diepe, there to remaine with the County Montgomery.

The 9. of January, a great tempest of wind and thunder happened in the Towne of Leicester, which vncouered 411. baies of houles, and ouerthrew many.

A present from the Reingraue to the Lieutenant.

The Castle of Tankeruile surrendred.

The 16. of January, the Castle of Tankeruile was surrendred to the Reingraue, after he had layne about 18. dayes, with 2. thousand horsemen and footmen. The nintenth of January, there landed at Newhauen, Captaine Tremaine with fifty horsemen very well appointed to serue there. The twenty foure of January, Francis Clarke Frenchman arriued at Newhauen with two tall ships of his owne, right well appointed for the warres, bringing with him three rich prises.

Prises brought into Newhauen.

The 5. of January, two ships of Britaines laden with Gascoine wine, butter, bacon, salt, and other victuals, were brought into Newhauen, by a shallop of Killebeut, that was reskant with other Frenchmen in Newhauen, and had taken these two vessels as they were going to victuall the enemies. The 6. of February, three mighty ships of warre, belonging to Francis Clarke, brought into Newhauen three rich prises laden with Sacks, Bastards, Sugar, Orenges, grains, and other Merchandises. This Clarke had not beene foorth past 6. weekes at this time, and yet he had got aboue 18. prises well worth the sum of 50000. pounds. The 7. of February, was Hunsiew summoned by an Herault sent from the French Admirall, Monsieur de Chatillon. The 8. of that moneth, the saic Admirall came before Hunsiew with 6000. horsemen Reisters, and other of his owne retinues, beside footmen, and 100. horsemen of the countries thereabout, and about fiue of the clocke at night, there was a great peale of Ordinance shot off at Newhauen for a welcome to the sayd Admirall.

Castle of Tankeruile taken by them of Newhauen.

The 12. of February, the French galliasse of Newhauen passing foorth and wafting about Hunsiew to seeke aduentures in hope of suretie, by reason the Lord Admiral of France lay there by at Tongue, rode at an Anchor, whilest some that were aboord in her went aland to gaine somwhat of the enemies, but they within Hunsiew perceiuing this, made out their great galliasse with 50. marriners and souldiers, who coming vpon the galliasse of Newhauen put her in great danger of taking, but waying anchor drew toward the shore, tooke in the rest of their company, stod at their defence, behauing themselues so well, that continuing in sight aboue a long houre, at length they ouercame their enemies, slew 7. of them, wounded 37. tooke their galliasse, and brought her to Newhauen with 13. belsi, diuers coapes and Church ornaments, sheepe, and other spoyles which they had got aboard in the country, together with 43. prisoners, and the artillery of the galliasse. The 14. of February, there came from the L. Admirall of France lying then at Tongue, Monsieur de Rohet, and Monsieur de Grandemont a knight of the order, Monsieur Telegny the Admirals son in law, and diuers other French Gentlemen to conferr with the Lord Lieutenant, who receiued them right gladly, & made them great cheere, they remained there till the 18. and then departed and went to Caen, whither the sayd Lord Lieutenant was remooued, and had entered the Towne, preparing to beseege the Castle. The same day Monsieur Bricquemault and Sir Nicholas Throckmorton knight arriued at Newhauen. The admirall Chatillon kept the Castle of Caen beseeged, within the which was the Marquesse Dalbeuf, there were sent vnto him from Newhauen the 25. of February, 7. Canons 2. demy culuerings, and one minion. The 26. Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, monsieur Bricquemault, and Monsieur Beaunoys, with a thousand souldiers, French, and as many English: to wit, Captaine Zouch, Captaine Swedie, Captaine Higate, each of them two hundred, Captaine John Warde, Captaine Parkinson, Captaine Saule, and master Wheeler, Captain Fisher, Lieutenant with his band, each of them with his hundred, and Captaine Pelham with the labourers, were embarked in the roade of Newhauen, and sayled foorth towards Caen to come to the siege, which the Admiral of France had layd to the Castle there. The same day as County Montgomery had embarked at the hauen of Diepe in an English vessell, and was comming towards Newhauen, there came from Fics Campe 3. shallops, by the appointment of the Reingraue, which made towards Montgomerie, whose meaning when hee perceiued, hee set vpon the strongest of the same shallops, so that there followed a sharpe conflict betwixt them, but in the end, the victory fell to Montgomery, the shallop being taken, the Captaine and master slaine, and three English victualers rescued, which the sayd shallop had taken, Montgomery herewith arriuing at Newhauen, and bringing with him his prise, was ioyfully receiued, and went abroad againe, and sailed to Caen, there to confer with the Admirall. The first of March, they began to batter Caen in such wise, that about 4. of the clock in the afternoone they within the towne began to parley, but it tooke none effect. And then went off the artillerie againe till night, and in the morning, the battery effsones began, and before that 2. tires of the shyd artillery had gone off, they within offered again to parley, and finally agreed by composition to yeeld, and so the same day the castle was surrendred vnto the French Admirall, and the Marquelle Dalbeut and other that kept that place departed,

Sir Nicholas Throckmorton

Ayde from Newhauen to the siege of Caen.

Montgomery taketh a shallope, he goeth to Caen.

The Castle of Caen surrendred to the Admirall.

The 3. of March, the towne of Bayeuil was yeelded to the Admirall, and on the morrow following, Falaise, and after S. Lo, with diuers other townes and Castles yeelded vnto him.

Galliasse of Newhauen taken by them of Newhauen.

The 10. of March, the great galley and the foyles were sent from Newhauen with a canon, and shot, powder, &c. to Hunsiew, where they met with Monsieur de Mouy, that came thither with a faire company of horsemen, and diuers footmen, French: and of the Englishmen, Captaine Tuttie, with his 2. hundred, and Captaine Fisher with his hundred. The Canon was immediatly planted, & shot off 6. times. Whereupon they within began to parle, and in the end agreed to yeeld vp the castle vnto Monsieur de Mouy with condition: and so left the Castle vnto Monsieur deMouy, whereby his souldiers as well English as others gained greatly by the spoyle:

The French appointed to depart from Newhauen.

ſpoyle: whereas Monſieur de Beawoys had by the Admirall Chatillons commandement, charged by Proclamation, all ſtrangers, forreiners, and French ſouldiers, to depart the Iſlonde of Newhauen, by the 23 of March laſt paſt, and that all other, hauing their wiues and families, ſhould depart with them, or within 4 dates after to giue ayde for the keeping of the townes of Dunkirke, Caine, Bayeux, Falaize, S. Lo, and other places, lately brought vnder the obedience and authority of the Prince of Condy, vnder payne for making default, to be taken as good priſoners of warre, to thoſe that ſhould apprehend them. Proclamation was alſo thereupon made in the Lord Lieutenants name, the 26. of March, that it ſhould bee lawfull to the Queenes Maieſties ſubiects, to apprehend and take as their good and lawfull priſoners, all ſuch as contrary to the former Proclamation ſhould remaine in the towne of Newhauen, after fiue of the clocke after noone of the day next following (thoſe perſons onely excepted, whoſe names were enrolled) remaining with the Lord Lieutenants ſecretary.

The firſt of Aprill, the Reingraue with 400. horſemen, and about 500. footmen, came downe the hill, betwixt S. Addreſſes and Engleſield, where Sir Hugh Pawlet Knight met with him by the appointment of the Lord Lieutenant, accompanied with 40. horſemen, and a 1000. Engliſh footmen, and after they had talked together, Sir Hugh Pawlet returned into Newhauen, and the Reingraue to Pendemile

On Eaſter euen, two ſouldiers that ſerued vnder Captaine Parkenſon were hanged in Newhauen, for running away to the Reingraue.

The firſt day of May, Garter King at armes, arriued at Newhauen, bringing with him the Garter to Ambroſe Earle of Warwicke, the Lord Lieutenant, choſen on S. Georges day laſt paſt, to be one of that moſt Noble Order.

The 7. of May, Proclamation was made, that all manner of furniture and apparrell, appertaining to ſhips, within the garriſon, haue, or rode of the towne of Newhauen, ſhould bee brought in, or a note to be giuen thereof in writing to the Lord Lieutenant and Councel there.

The 22. of May, about one of the clock in the morning, the Reingraue with 500. horſemen, and 22. Enſignes of footmen, came downe to a village called Lheure, neere vnto the new fort, which by order of the Lord Lieutenant was lately before begun to be built. The enemies meaning was to haue taken the ſame fort by a ſudden aſſault, but the Engliſh ſcouts gaue intelligence to the L. Lieutenant thereof, who incontinently going to the bulwarke Royall, ſet out by the Poſterne, Captaine Ward with his 100. ſouldiers, and Captain Parkinſon with his 100. to paſſe the fort, there to be an ayde and defence to them that lay in the ſame. About 3. of the clocke in the morning, the Reingraue ſuddenly with his bands of horſe and footmen, gaue them in the fort a hot alarme, and immediatly the Earle of Warwick gaue in charge to Captains, Read, Appleyard, Turry, Souch, Antwiſell, Ward, Morton, and Parkinſon, hauing with them 1000. footmen, and 200. horſemen, to ſet vpon the enemies in the village of Lheure, neere adioyning vnto the ſaid new fort, when the Engliſh ſouldiers beat backe their enemies flew and tooke of them to the number of an hundred, beſides 30. faire horſes, and an Enſigne, and ſet fire on the towne, becauſe the enemies ſhould not come to encampe therein as their purpoſe was.

Alarme giuen to the new fort by Newhauen.

The 26. of May, the Frenchmen in number a bout three thouſand horſemen and footmen, came downe towards the wind-mils, neere to the bulwark called Saint Addreſſes, againſt whom the Engliſh horſemen and footmen iſſued forth of the town, giuing them a hot ſkirmiſh, wher were ſlaine two hundred of the French, beſides two hundred and aboue that were hurt. Amongſt the Engliſh, Captaine Tremayne and about ſome twelue perſons more were ſlain: but the French were driuen to retire. The firſt of June, at ſeauen of the clocke at night, the Reingraue hauing layd in the Village of Lheure an armie of fiue hundred horſemen, and fiftéene hundred footmen, there came downe alſo betweene the Abbey and the Village called Engleſield towards the towne, the number of a thouſand footmen, which began a very hot ſkirmiſh, firſt at the new fort, comming euen hard to the dikes where the Engliſhmen manfully encountered them. Herewith alſo, the Reingraue appointed other to come downe and approch the bulwarks of Saint Addreſſe, Saint Francis, Michaell and other, round about the towne, ſo that ther were of them the number of fiue thouſand, that were employed in this ſkirmiſh, which was maintained right fiercely, for the ſpace of two houres, till in the end, the enemies were forced to giue place, with the loſſe of fiue hundred of their men, Almaines, Frenchmen, and other. Of Engliſhmen there were hurt, Captaine Gelbert, and Captaine Welham, and a bout fiftéene other hurt and ſlain.

A great fight.

Thurſdaie ſkirmiſh.

The 7. of June, the firſt Canon ſhot light within the towne of Newhauen, neere to the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe. The ninth of June, arriued at Newhauen three Captaines with their bandes of an hundred the piece, being of the garriſon of Warwicke. Alſo the ſame day landed there Edward Randoll, appointed to bee Knight Marſhall. For you muſt vnderſtand that ſir Adrian Poinings, being Knight Marſhall, vpon his returne into England went not backe againe: and then was ſir Thomas Finch of Kent, appointed to goe ouer to ſupply the roomth of Knight Marſhall, who making his proviſion ready, ſent ouer his brother Erasmus Finch, to haue charge of his band, and his kinſman Thomas Finch, to bee Yeoman Marſhall, whileſt he ſtaying till he had euery thing in a readineſſe to paſſe ouer himſelfe, at length embarqued in one of the Queenes ſhips, called the Gryphonnd, hauing there aboord with him beſides three ſcore and fiue of his owne retinue, foure and fourty other Gentlemen, two of them being brethren to the Lord Wentworth, to wit, Iames Wentworth, and Iohn Wentworth with diuers others, who in the whole whole (accompting the marriners) amounted to the number of two hundred perſons and vpward: and as they were on the further coaſt towardes Newhauen, they were by contrary wind and foule weather driuen backe againe toward the coaſt of England, and plying towards Rye, they forced the Captaine of the ſhip a very good Sea-man, named William Nalme, and alſo the maiſter and marriners, to thruſt into the hauen before the tide, and ſo they all perithed, ſeuen of the meaner ſort only excepted, whereof three dyed ſhortly after they came on land. After this miſchance, Edmond Randoll was appointed Knight Marſhall.

The 25. of June, the Captains Richard Sanders and William Soul, with their bands of an hundred ſouldiers a piece, and Captaine Drurie with two hundred arriued at Newhauen, and the morrow after arryued Captaine Roberts, with another hundred ſouldiers. On the 17. day ſir Francis Knowles, vice-chamberlaine to the Quéenes Maieſties houſe, landing at Newhauen, ſent to view the ſtate of the towne.

The 18. of June, two ſouldiers were executed for drawing weapon againſt their Captaine.

The 28. of June, the Frenchmen came down to the village of Lheure, and there very neere to the fort, began a ſkirmiſh with the Engliſh men: there were of them tenne Enſignes of footmen, and two hundreth horſemen, this ſkirmiſh laſted three houres, and yet not paſt ſome perſons ſlaine. The night following, they placed fiue Canons betwixt the towne and the bricke-hilles, and likewiſe other pieces of Artillerie at the foreſayd Village of Lheure, ſo that they ſhot both into the towne and fort. The firſt of July, about midnight, they iſſued forth of their trenches, and ſkirmiſhed with the Engliſh Rontes, drone them vnder the bulwarke of Saint Addreſſe, and there perceiuing that the Engliſhmen had prouided to ſally out, after a long ſkirmiſh they retired. About the third of July, there landed 9. hundred ſouldiers well appointed all in yellow clokes, and bleus, Captaine Saunders was hurt in the legge, whereof he dyed. The 12. of July about foure of the clocke in the morning, the French layd battery to the bulwark of Saint Addreſſes, continuing the ſame all that day. They alſo dismounted the ſame day the Ordinance in the ſteeple of Newhauen, and beate downe the great bell, cleane defacing the ſteeple: the ſame euening, was William Robinſon Eſquire, Bayliffe of Newhauen, ſlaine with a ſhot, and William Bromfield, Maiſter of the Ordinance hurt, whereof he dyed ſhortly after.

The 14. of July, Sir Hugh Pawlet Knight landed at Newhauen, bringing with him eight hundred ſouldiers. The ſame day came downe the Frenchmen to the number of 3000. euen hard to the gates of the towne, beating the Engliſhmen out of their trenches, but in the end they were forced to retire, and not paſt twenty Engliſhmen ſlaine, and about an hundred hurt: but the French loſt (as was thought) aboue 4. hundred horſemen and footmen. The ſame day, the little Galiaſſe called the Fore, went out of Newhauen, fraught with 50. men, to ſtanke a longſt the ſhore, and to beate the Frenchmen with her ſhot, but a linckſtoke fell into a barrell of powder, and ſet it on fire together with the veſſell, ſo that the ſuddenly ſanke, and all that were aboord in her were loſt, ſauing 15. that ſaued themſelues by ſwimming.

A Galiaſſe of Newhauen burnt.

The 21. of July, the Conſtable of France, and many other Lords of France came to the Abbey of Gyanille, where the Marſhall Briſſac was lodged, who had the generall charge in the army, before the comming of the ſaid Conſtable.

Conſtable of France came to the ſiege of Newhauen.
